Lumumba, President Dismiss Each Other; U.N. May Call Council

The Atlanta Constitution
Tues 9-6-60
p. 1

Kasavubu Asks U.N. to Take Over

The Atlanta Constitution
p. 1

From Press Dispatches

LEOPOLDVILLE, The Congo—Moderate President Joseph Kasavubu and pro-Russian Patrice Lumumba ordered each other ousted from office Monday night in a political clash that threatened to plunge the Congo deeper into anarchy and civil war.

Tues-9-6-60

Kasavubu struck first and in his capacity as chief of state went on the air over Radio Leopoldville to denounce Lumumba as the cause of "fratricidal war" and a would-be dictator trying to stifle civil liberties. He proclaimed himself "in personal union."

Atlanta Ga.

Lumumba, who has been leaning toward Soviet help to tighten his grip on the country, sped to the radio station and in three vituperate radio appeals, while surrounded by loyal soldiers, he denounced the President and said Kasavubu is no longer chief of state.

"HAS RIGHT"

Lumumba, not even Chief of State Kasavubu, has the right to dismiss the government of the people, elected by the people, which today has the confidence of the people," said Lumumba.

The confusing exchange set off these developments:

1. President Kasavubu called on the United Nations to take over the entire responsibility for law and order. The immediate reaction of U.N. authorities was that Kasavaubu "has given us a legal mandate to act."

2. U.N. sources indicated Monday night that the Security Council may be called into session again if the confused developments in Leopoldville prove to have caused a major upset.

KEEPS IN TOUCH

3. U.N. Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold was keeping in constant touch with U.N. military and civil officers in the Congo.

4. President Kasavubu proclaimed Joseph Ileo, moderate president of the Senate, as the new premier.

The Atlanta Constitution

Premier Lumumba never has been confirmed in office by the Parliament and Kasavubu, under the constitution, has the right to declare him out of office. But whether either one had the actual power to throw out the other remained the big question.

Tues-9-6-60

In the South, Kasavubu's Abako Party is supreme. Lumumba draws support for his National Congolese Movement from the north, especially around Stanleyville.

Lumumba, who also heads the armed forces, vowed he would win his goal of a united Congo.

"As minister of defense I am ready to die as a soldier under the flag," he said.

Ending his broadcast, he stalked from the studio, only to return 30 minutes later to repeat that Kasavubu—once his rival for the premiership—no longer was chief of state.

After a third harangue on the air, Lumumba called a cabinet meeting at his troop-guarded residence. His parting radio shot was to call Kasavubu a "valet of the imperialists." He said the parliament would meet Tuesday to deal with Kasavubu, although Kasa- Joseph Ileo, another moderate, as new premier.

Kasavubu's immediate whereabouts were unknown. There were reports his radio statement had been recorded.

In the hot, still night air, it was impossible to tell who was running the chaotic country.

United Nations forces were out on patrol in Leopoldville. But in New York, a U.N. spokesman said the situation was so "fluid" that there could be on U.N. comment at this time.

Fierce fighting continued in the interior between Lumumba's troops and Baluba tribesmen.

In Brusssels, Belgian foreign minister Pierre Wigny hailed Kasavubu and denounced Lumumba as being unable to ensure "domestic tranquility."

Beilef that a secret council session might be necessary was expressed by unofficial sources in New York following press reports received here that President Kasavubu had asked the U.N. to take over the administrtion of the country.

Such a situation, as a U.N. official was reported to have said in "new mandate" if the wolrd5cau Leopoldville, would require a "new mandate" if the world organization's powers were to be broadened. The mandate could come only from the council, which sent the United Nations forces to Africa at the governemnt's request.

If, however, Premier Lumumba maintained control, as some late indications here seem to show he might have done, his request for U.N. assistance and his agreement with Secretary Hammarskjold over its operations presumably would stand. While the council might wish again to review the situation, an immediate meeting probably would not be required.

Congo Capital Seized by U.N.

The Atlanta Constitution
p. 1
Wed, 9-7-60

By WILBUR G. LANDREY

LEOPOLDVILLE (UPI)—United Nations forces seized control of Leopoldville Tuesday and shut down the airport in a move that halted the unauthorized Soviet airlift of Premier Patrice Lumumba's army troops to Kasai Province to battle Baluba tribesmen.

The U.N. forces, moving to maintain "peace and security" in the Congo, acted as Lumumba's police fired a volley of 200 shots from Sten guns and automatic weapons into 2,000 followers of President Joseph Kasavubu demonstrating against Lumumba.

Atlanta

Two demonstrators were killed and "many" injured as the power struggle between Lumumba and Kasavubu exploded into violence. The crowd scattered and Lumumba's troops moved in and clubbed stragglers with their rifle butts.

SHUT OFF RADIO

U.N. troops also shut down Leopoldville Radio shortly before Lumumba was to take to the air again to blast Kasavubu. The unprecedented U.N. action threatened an early showdown between the world organization and the volatile Lumumba.

Lumumba and Kasavubu have been trying to "fire" each other since Monday night and Lumumba had planned to use the radio to rally his followers. In a speech earlier Monday he denounced Kasavubu as a "traitor," announced he had "fired" him again and warned the U.N. not to help Kasavubu.

The closing of the airfields to all but U.N. traffic stranded Lumumba's army commander, Gen. Victor Lundulu, in Luluabourg from where he had directed the civil war against the half-naked Baluba tribesmen fighting the Congolese army with bows and arrows.

STOPS SOVIET AIRLIFT

A Soviet Ilyushin transport was to have brought Lundulu here Tuesday afternoon but the U.N. action prevented it. The U.N. action also stopped the Soviet airlift of troops from Luluabourg to Bakwanga where heavy fighting is reported.

The entire Congo situation was a picture of confusion and anarchy. However, it was apparent the United Nations was moving with more decision than at any time since its troops arrived in the Congo. Andrew Cordier, assistant to U.N. Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold, was calling the signals.

The Atlanta Constitution

At Leopoldville Airport U.N. forces drove trucks and placed oil drums on the runway, removing them only for U.N. traffic. The action came after a Soviet Ilyushin plane took off without authorization last night and three more left this morning.

Wed. 9-7-60

Lumumba immediately asked for an explanation about the closing of the airfield. He was expected to react with even more anger to closing of the radio station which went off the air half an hour early at 1:30 p.m. and did not reopen as scheduled later.

Ghana U.N. troops ringed the station and demanded a special pass from anyone who tried to enter. Lumumba talked his way into the radio station Monday night when he rejected his ouster by Kasavubu and said he was still in power. It appeared the U.N. forces were prepared to stop him if he tries again.

A U.N. spokesman said: "In response to duties that the United Nations has under the Security Council resolutions for the maintenance of peace, security, law and order, it decided to exercise even more effective control over air traffic from these airports considered important to the United Nations operation. For the same reason we also made arrangements that temporarily Radio Leopoldville will not be on the air."

A spokesman insisted the United Nations is not taking sides in the dispute between Kasavubu and Lumumba but that its Security Council mandate requires it to keep law and order as asked by Kasavubu.

The fighting in Leopoldville broke out when Kasavubu supporters marched through the streets with shouts of "Long Live Kasavubu" and "Down With Lumumba." They entered the street where Lumumba lives behind heavily guarded doors and police opened fire without warning.

Two persons fell dead and others were wounded. The Congolese army and police moved in, clubbing stragglers and firing at some of the persons already in flight. The police smashed abandoned bicycles and arrested any demonstrators they could catch.

Despite Lumumba's warning to the United Nations the blue-helmeted U.N. troops were guarding Kasavubu's residence.

Ebullient Envoy in Congo

The New York Times

Clare Hayes Timberlake

New York

ONE of the most interested observers of the parade of Congo Army troops in Leopoldville yesterday was a slightly built man who has represented the United States in the turbulent Congo since it gained independence from Belgium last June. Friends of Clare Hays Timerlake say they are sure he has enjoyed every minute of his stay in the Congo. They describe him as a man who is so much in love with life that he begrudges that part of it he has to spend sleeping.

Man in the News

The adage about early to bed and early to rise does not apply to him, they say. He often gets up early to go fishing or sailing or duck shooting. But he would much rather sit up late talking politics or telling stories or singing than go to bed early.

Angry Soldiers Calmed

During the riots in Leopoldville recently a crowd of mutinous soldiers gathered in front of the United States Embassy howling for a photographer who had somehow incurred their wrath. Against the advice of his colleagues Mr. Timberlake walked outside, spoke to the soldiers through an interpreter, and succeeded in calming them.

At the State Department later someone remarked on his courage. "That wasn't courage," he replied. "I knew that if they wanted to they could break right in through the big plate glass windows, and I did not want them to break those windows."

The United States Embassy at Leopoldville, built a few years ago as a consulate, is one of the State Department's proudest architectural achievements in Africa.

Mr. Timberlake is slender and favors non-diplomatic sports jackets and plaids. He always wears a bow tie.

On the rare occasions when he wears a hat he wears one with a snap brim and cocks it over one eye.

Born in Michigan fifty-three years ago, he has been in the Foreign Service thirty years. He has served in Europe, Asia, Latin America and Africa.

His first diplomatic experience in Africa was as Vice Consul, later Consul, for Aden and the French Somali coast from 1940 to 1943.

Leopoldville is Mr. Timberlake's first ambassadorial post. Some diplomats in the Congo say a man with more experience ought to be in such a difficult post. Nevertheless, everyone in the Congo praises Mr. Timberlake for making himself accessible to almost all callers.

Associated Press

His door is always open

He lives in a villa on the bank of the Congo River a few blocks from the residence where Patrice Lumumba, the deposed Premier, is under guard. On his way to and from the embassy Mr. Timberlake must make a detour because the street is blocked by United Nations and Congolese troops guarding Mr. Lumumba.

Diplomacy in the Congo

Mr. Timberlake, who served in 1948 as Consul General in Bombay and in 1950 as Counselor in New Delhi, fondly remembers his service in India.

He is a personal friend of Rajeshwar Dayal, Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold's special representative in the Congo. During one of the recent Congo crises Mr. Timberlake was asked whether he had talked politics with the man he calls "Raj."

"We swapped Indian cooking recipes, "the United States Ambassador replied.

Everywhere he and his wife, the former Julia Meehan, have left a trail of friends and stories about their ebullient ways. Mrs. Timberlake participates with him in some of his outdoor pursuits, particularly sailing.

They have five children ranging in age from 14 to less than a year. Two boys, the oldest, are at school in the United States.

The girls flew to Leopoldville with their mother to join Mr. Timberlake early in October.

KASAI CHIEF GIVES A WARNING TO U.N.

The N.Y. Times

Kalonji Threatens Congo Strife if 'Massacre' of His Tribesmen Is Not Halted

New York, N.Y.

By PAUL HOFMANN

Special to The New York Times.

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo, Nov. 12—The leader of secessionist South Kasai threatened today to order another military offensive unless the United Nations forces halted what he described as a massacre of his Baluba tribesmen by their traditional enemies.

Albert Kalonji, political and tribal chief of the Kasai Balubas, charged that the Lulua tribe and other groups supporting Patrice Lumumba, the deposed Premier, were terrorizing Balubas in the northern and eastern parts of Kasai.

"I will again call out my volunteer army to liberate my Baluba brethren in the entire territory from the borders of the Mining State [South Kasai] to Port Francqui," Mr. Kalonji warned.

Lawlessness Continues

Meanwhile, reports of lawlessness continued arriving from Stanleyville, capital of Oriental Province. Slavomir Brzak, Czechoslovak United Nations civilian officer there, reported to the world organizations headquarters here yesterday on turbulence in the province. Brig. Indar Jit Rikhye of India, acting United Nations chief in the Congo, termed the situation in Stanleyville serious. The Congolese army is completely out of hand there, he said.

The independence of South Kasai was proclaimed by Mr. Kalonji Aug. 9. The separatist state was to have its capital in Bakwanga, diamond-mining center southeast of Luluabourg, capital of Kasai. Port Francqui is a town on the Kasai River important as the point where the railroad to Katanga takes over from boat transport.

Mr. Kalondji accused the United Nations and Brigadier Rikhye of having "betrayed" him by allowing the Luluas, Kaniokas and other hostile tribes to persecute Balubas. A cease-fire negotiated by the United Nations last September to end savage tribal fighting in Kasai is "nul and void," Mr. Kalonji declared.

U. N. Officials WWorried

United Nations officials tended to take a serious view of Mr. Kalonjis' threat to resume tribal warfare. An official of the world organization remarked that the Balubas did not ordinarily bluff.

Tribal fighting in South Kasai

European

THREATENS REPRISAL: Albert Kalonji, who said his Baluba tribesmen were being terrorized by enemies on Congo's Kasai Province.

flared again late last month. Brigadier Rikhye declared that a state of civil war existed in Kasai and alleged that it had been aided and abetted by Belgian officers and gunrunners.

The Kalonji "volunteer" army was estimated to consist of between 2,000 and 5,000 men, many of them wearing armbands or other badges of recognition.

The United Nations forces in South Kasai have been reinforced lately by Ghanaian troops. A Malayan battalion at present in the Leopoldville area is scheduled to be moved to Kasai Province later this month.

Show of Devotion

Mr. Kalonji, who is the paramount Kasai Baluba leader, was surrounded by five tribal chiefs in full regalia who claimed to represent 1,500,000 tribesmen in Kasai. They said they had come to Leopoldville to show their devotion to Kalonji and demonstrate their determination to fight.

Col. Joseph D. Mobutu, chief of the army regime, said today that he had ordered the arrest of Cleophas Kamitatu, a Lumumba supporter, because he had spirited away secret documents and made them available to the United Nations. The documents in question were files of the police, of Leopoldville Province of which Mr. Kamitatu is President. United Nations officials denied any "involvement." Mr. Kamitatu was detained by troops Thursday.

Mr. Kamitatus' Bambala tribesmen, in his native Kikwit area, about half-way between Leopoldville and Luluabourg and in the capital, warned that "big trouble" would start if Col. Mobutu did not stop harassing Mr. Kamitatu. Yesterday tribesmen rioted in protest against the arrest.

Lumumba Army Believed Driving Into Katanga

Premier Tells U.N. To Get Out

The Atlanta Constitution

From Press Dispatches

Premier Patrice Lumumba Thursday won the backing of the Congo Senate for his policies and was reported to have sent invading troops into secessionist Katanga Province.

p. 1

Lumumba followed up his Senate confidence vote by demanding

Fri. 9-9-60

U.N.'s Dag Hammarskjold fires warning at Belgium. Page 2.

Atlanta

that the United Nations withdraw from the Congo unless it returns to him control of the nation's airfields and Leopoldville Radio.

INVASION REPORTED

Later, reports reaching Elisabethville, the Katanga capital, said an estimated 200 to 300 Congolese troops had invaded the province, which declared its independence from the Congo in July.

The reports, which could not be officially confirmed, did not say whether the Lumumba forces ran into opposition from troops of Katanga Premier Moise Tshombe. Tshombe has mined roads and bridges leading into Katanga and promised that his hastily trained army would defend the province to the death.

An armed conflict in the area could touch off a full-scale Congo civil war.

ATTACKED IN NORTH?

The reports said the invaders launched their attack from the Congo rovince of Kivu, entering the northern part of Katanga near Kongolo, a Congo river town more than 400 miles north of Elisabethville.

Lumumba has been threatening to invade Katanga for several weeks, but he made no mention of any immediate plans in Thursday's speech to the Senate.

At Leopoldville, Premier Lumumba consolidated his parliamentary backing with a 41-2 confidence vote from the Senate Thursday and hinted he is ready for a showdown with the United Nations.

HEADS WILL ROLL

"Heads will roll now," shouted a Lumumba supporter.

The lanky, left-leaning premier wooed the senators from noisy hostility to virtually unanimous support in a 2½-hour speech pegged to accusations against Belgium and U. N. operations in the Congo.

"Freedom! Freedom!" they roared approvingly when the vote was announced.

The Senate vote, like an Assembly vote Wednesday, disapproved President Joseph Kasavubu's actions Monday in decreeing dismissal of the premier and naming the Senate's moderate president, Joseph Ileo, to form a new government.

It strengthened Lumumba's hand in dealings with Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold, who wants the surly and poorly disciplined Congolese army disarmed to clear the way for U. N. soldiers to carry out their mission of restoring order.

The Atlanta Constitution

The vote came about 12 hours after Hammarskjold called in New York for Security Council action to halt the flow of outside aid to the warring factions. TTIS CALL PRESUMABLY WAS D Stilt Rto Lumumba and Belgianb for rebellious Katanga Province.

Fri 9-9-60

HAD UPHILL FIGHT

Lumumba had an uphill fight in the seven-hour session of the seven-hour session of the young nation's mercurial and inexperienced lawmakers.

Screaming senators barred him from speaking until Foreign Minister Justin Bomboko, who countersigned the Kasavubu decree dismissing Lumumba, had his say.

Bomboko accused the Lumumba regime, which is backed by Soviet-bloc transport planes, trucks, arms and technicians in its fight against secessionit, of "creating a tate of anarchy."

PLEADS FOR ORDER

The foreign minister pleaded for re-establishment of order and legality "to keep out international prestige." He left the speaker's stand to thunderous applause.

Virtually all the other speakers accused Lumumba of swinging the Congo into the Soviet orbit.

The hostile mood melted soon after Lumumba began talking.

He dominated the situation easily by blaming the Congo's present disorders on Belgium, which freed this equatorial African territory June 30, and on the United Nations, which has rushed military and technical help to save it from collapse.

Halt Aid to Congo, U.N. Tells Belgium

The Atlanta Constitution

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP)—Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold Thursday delivered a stern warning to Belgium that interference in the internal affairs of the Congo was a violation of Security Council decisions binding upon all U.N. members.

The warning was addressed to Ambassador Walter Loridan, Belgian U.N. delegate, as the Council prepared for emergency discussions to clarify the U.N. role in the troubled African country.

Fri. 9-9-60

Hammarskjold was under sharp attack from Congo Premier Patrice Lumumba, from the Soviet Union and from Yugoslavia. He in turn was pressing for new Council steps to halt the flow of outside aid to the warring factions.

Atlanta

In a statement criticizing outside aid early Thursday, Hammarskjold did not mention Russia by name. But observers said there was no doubt that was whom he meant when he said "outside help."

U.N. officials said the Council probably would meet Saturday in a session which might last into the night.

BELGIAN AID

In his latest communication to the Belgian government, the secretary-general said he had received confirmed reports that nine tons of weapons were unloaded Wednesday from a Belgian Sabena Airlines plane at the Elisabethville airport in the secessionist province of Katanga.

Hammarskjold asked the Belgian representative to tell him whether the Belgian government had authorized the sending of weapons to the provincial authorities.

"Should this be the case," Hammarskjold said, "the secretary-general would consider it necessary to make a formal serious protest."

CONGO INVITES

U.N. officials announced Hammarskjold had received a cable from Lumumba inviting the Security Council to meet in Leopoldville. There was no comment, a spokesman said.

During the afternoon Hammarskjold conferred with Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Vasily Kuznetsov and Yugoslav Ambassador Dobrivose Vidic, both of whom have been critical of U.N. policies in the Congo.

Under a drumfire of criticism from Moscow radio and the Soviet Tass agency, Hammarskjold insisted anew that the U.N. operation in the Congo must remain nonpartisan and proposed disarming non-U.N. military units in the country as a step toward restoring order.

Yugoslavia's delegation, on orders from President Tito, moved into the picture at noon Thursday demanding an urgent council meeting on the Congo. Yugoslavia is not a council member.

The Yugoslavs charged that not only were the Belgians continuing their aid to Katanga's rebellious Premier Moise Tshombe but that the U.N. neutrality force helped Tshombe and another rebel, Albert Kalonji, in Kasai's Mineral State.

p. 2

CLAIMS INTERFERENCE

Moscow, in broadcasts to the West, charged that Hammarskjold's 16,000-man force in the Congo interefered in its internal affairs and thus helped Lumumba's foes. In familiar terms, presaging the Soviet statement in the Council, Soviet propaganda organs said "U.S. ruling quarters and other Western powers" were using the U.N. flag to mask an imperialist effort to blow up the Congo from within.

They had been calling Tshembe a stooge of Belgian policy.

The latest broadcasts said Congo President Joseph Kasavubu, foe of Lumumba, had become an instrument of imperialist policy.

KASAVUBU TO CALL CONGO'S LEADERS TO TALKS ON UNITY

The New York Times
New York
Fri. 11-18-60
P. 1

Agrees to Role for Lumumba in New Government That Parley Would Set Up

By THOMAS J. HAMILTON
Special to The New York Times.

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y., Nov. 17 — Joseph Kasavubu, President of the Congo, announced today that he would soon call a conference of "all Congolese leaders," including tribal chiefs, to form a government of national unity.

Mr. Kasavubu said the conference would "define the basic principles which should govern the Congolese state." He added that he would agree to the inclusion in the government of Patrice Lumumba, whom he dismissed as Premier last September, if that was the will of the conference.

Mr. Kasavubu called the news conference on the eve of a General Assembly meeting that is to decide whether to seat him and his appointees as the Congo's delegates.

The Soviet Union, Ghana, Guinea and other supporters of Mr. Lumumba are expected to try to adjourn the Assembly before it can take action. A close vote is expected.

The Congo chief of state said he would not agree to a visit to Leopoldville by an African-Asian conciliation committee unless his delegation was seated by the Assembly. The committee would try to resolve the differences between the factions in the Congo.

Committee Elects Head

The conciliation committee met today and elected Jaja Wachuku, Nigerian Minister of Economic Development, as chairman. It agreed to assemble in Leopoldville Saturday morning, Nov. 26.

He was noncommital when asked if he would give his consent to the work of the conciliation committee if his delegation was seated. He replied that Congolese authorities would examine "the usefulness and necessity" of sending such a committee only after that. According to the United Nations Charter, he said, the committee could be sent only with the agreement of the Congo.

Mr. Kasavubu read a passage from the letter he sent earlier this week to Rajeshwar Dayal, Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold's special representative in the Congo, in which he refused to accept the conciliation committee.

Group's Trip Postponed

In the letter, Mr. Kasavubu warned that a visit by the committee without the consent of his government "would constitute a precedent whose danger and significance cannot be overlooked by anyone."

Athough Mr. Kasavubu indicated that his Government would not use force to prevent the conciliation committee from going to the Congo, he warned that the committee would encounter "risks" if it went there without his Government's consent.

Mr. Hammarskjold's advisory committee on the Congo, the parent organization of the conciliation committee, decided last night to postpone the committees departure until Tuesday in the hope of obtaining Mr. Kasavubu's consent.

The Congo President said he had not received an answer from Mr. Dayal to his letter protesting against the fact that plans had been drawn up to send the committee to Leopoldville without consulting him.

The advisory committee, composed of the fifteen African and Asian members of the conciliation committee, plus Ireland, Sweden and Canada, instructed Mr. Dayal last night to reply to Mr. Kasavubu's protest.

He declined to say whether he thought that the conciliation committee was weighted against him.

In his letter to Mr. Dayal, Mr. Kasavubu suggested that the task of solving the Congo's governmental crisis be taken from the conciliation committee and entrusted to the heads of the twenty-five African states, which would bring in his champions among African members of the French Community.

The United States and Britain are anxious to have the Assembly seat Mr. Kasavubu before the conciliation committee goes to the Congo.

On Nov. 9 the supporters of Mr. Lumumba succeeded in adjourning debate on the issue after they saw that they did not have the votes to seat Mr. Lumumba's rival delegation.

New States Hold Key

The West's chances of victory tomorrow depend on whether the newly independent states of Africa—and in particular nearly a dozen former French colonies—give their support to Mr. Kasavubu.

Fulbert Youlou, president of the French community's Congo Republic, arrived today to strengthen the supporters of Mr. Kasavubu.

Giving his first account of the constitutional developments that followed his dismissal of Mr. Lumumba, Mr. Kasavubu conceded that Mr. Lumumba would normally have been allowed to maintain a caretaker administration until a new Government had been formed.

He charged, however, that Mr. Lumumba, by refusing to accept dismissal, had violated the Congo's Fundamental Law, or constitution.

Mr. Kasavubu said that Joseph Ileo, whom he named to succeed Mr. Lumumba, had not been able to present himself to Parliament for the necessary vote of confidence because of "military pressure." He added that he had named a group of commissioners headed by Justin Bomboko to fill the vacuum.

Mr. Kasavubu said his relations with Col. Joseph D. Mobut, Congolese chief of staff who currently exercises authority, were those of any chief of state with his army chief of staff.

The New York Times

TO MOVE FOR UNITY IN THE CONGO: President Joseph Kasavubu at news conference yesterday. At left is Justin Bomboko, chief commissioner in the Congo.

Overtime in Africa

North American Newspaper Alliance

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y.—It looks as if the UN's so-called "African Year," a term diplomats have been applying to 1960 since early in 1959, will go into overtime.

The Security Council has been seized by problems in Africa all year.

South African apartheid, and the resulting Sharpeville massacre, was the first African item on the Council's agenda. Recently, Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold regretfully announced he would be unable to fulfill terms of the resulting council resolution, which asked that he visit South Africa to see what he could do about improving human rights.

Then there was the Congo. Since the resolution which created a Congo "police force" late in July, the Council has met several times to consider fresh developments. There is no guarantee that it will not be forced to meet on the Congo again—Perhaps even before the General Assembly convenes Sept. 20.

SANDWICHED between intermittent meetings on South Africa and the Congo, the Council has met to approve U.N. membership applications by Cameroun, Togo, the Mali Federation (Senegal and Sudan), the Malagasy Republic (Madagascar), Somalia, the (former Belgian) Congo, the (former French) Congo, Upper Volta, Ivory Coast, Dahomey, Central African Republic, Gabon, Niger and Chad.

Nigeria and Mauretania, slated for independence Oct. 1 and Nov. 27, respectively, may also be approved before the 15th General Assembly session closes.

South Africa and the Congo probably will both be featured in the coming Assembly session. There will be other African problems to settle, too.

One is the problem of what to do about the shattered Mali Federation. The Security Council already has approved Mali's membership application, thus recognizing it in effect as a sovereign entity.

Now the federation has split into its two components—Senegal and Sudan. The Senegalese president, Mamadou Dia, has submitted his government's application for U.N. membership.

MEANWHILE, Mobido Keita, president of Mali and at the same time president of Sudan, has called on the Security Council to send military forces to whip Senegal back into the federation.

The U.N. has to make up its mind whether Mali is one country or not. If it is, it would be impossible to grant Senegal's membership application, and difficult to send troops there for any purpose.

The only loophole would be that, if Mali's dismemberment affected other states, the U.N. might consider it a danger to world peace and treat Mali as an international problem. In any event, Mali can't escape being tossed into the Assembly's lap.

ANOTHER PROBLEM is the old familiar one of Algeria.

The Algerians' six-year struggle for independence looked like it was coming to a peaceful close this summer, with rebel representatives negotiating truce terms with De Gaulle in Paris. But the talks broke down when France refused to recognize the rebels' provisional government.

Last fall, a General Assembly resolution demanding action was defeated when President De Gaulle promised "self-determination" through a referendum, the rebels called for a U.N. over the terms of that referendum, the rebels called for a UN supervised vote. It will have to be considered by the General Assembly.

Mauritania, the name of another problem with French roots, is one of France's former territories in northwest Africa.

President De Gaulle plans to cut it loose in November, despite a long-standing Moroccan claim that the area rightly belongs to them. Morocco plans to plead its case before the General Assembly.

THE STATUS OF other territories:

Ruanda-Urundi — Belgian-administered U.N. protectorate adjoining the Congo.

Kenya — British colony, no date set for independence.

Tanganyika — U.N. protectorate under British rule, due for independence soon.

Uganda—British protectorate, no independence date set.

Angola—Portugese territory.

Mozambique — Portugese territory.

An African "year" at the UN?

The General Assembly will be lucky if it settles even current African problems by 1970.

Lumumba Kicked Out, Kasavubu Tells U.N.

The Atlanta Journal & Constitution

Rebel Named to New Regime; Confusion Shrouds Congo

Atlanta Ga.

Sun. 9-11-60

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y., Sept. 10 (UPI)—Moderate president Joseph Kasavubu formally notified the United Nations Saturday that he has formed a new government and fired pro-Russian Patrice Lumumba as premier.

Kasavubu, who announced in a Leopoldville radio broadcast last Monday that he had ousted Lumumba—only to be confronted with Lumumba's declaration that he was still in power—cabled Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold that Senate President Joseph Ileo, another moderate, had been named premier of the new government.

The cabinet included Albert Kalonji as interior minister.

Kalonji is the Baluba tribal leader who has set up an independent "mining state" in the Congo's Kasai Province with himself as premier.

It was not immediately clear whether the government was the same named by Kasavubu last Monday or a new one he had organized since then. Nor was it immediately clear whether his cablegram was sent from Leopoldville or from a point outside Lumumba territory.

* * *

THERE WAS NO WAY of telling whether Kasavubu would be more successful in this effort to oust Lumumba than he was on Monday. Only Friday, Lumumba declared himself chief of the Congo state with near-dictorial powers. But in the meantime, the Congolese senate had nullified the mutual firings of Kasavubu and Lumumba.

The situation was as confusing on the diplomatic level, with Russia supporting the Congo and Lumumba himself charging again in Leopoldville that the U.N. was guilty of "flagrant" interference in internal Congolese affairs.

Kasavubu's message to Hammarskjold was received as the Security Council debated a request by Lumumba's governmnet to delay Saturday's scheduled crisis session of the council until a Congolese delegation could reach here.

* * *

THE LUMUMBA request was strongly seconded by Russia, which demanded in addition that the U.N. Congo command immediately surrender control of the Leopoldville radi and Congolese airfields.

P. 6-A

It was the seizure of the airfields by the U.N. Congo command that put a crimp in the airlift of Lumumba's troops in Soviet planes to jungle fronts for action against rebel units.

Atlanta Ga.

Lumumba's Soviet-supported request to stall further council action was relayed by Rajeshwar Dayal of India, Hammarskjold's representative in Leopoldville, from "the central government of the Congo."

Hammarskjold had said the situation was so confused the U.N. did not know who it should deal with.

In a report to the council spell-out the political, economic and military chaos in the Congo, Hammarskjld made it clear that the U.N. command considered that there was the no responsible government in the country, due to the political feud between Lumumba and Kasavubu.

U.N. Guns Turn Back Lumumba

The Montgomery Advertiser

Montgomery Ala.

Ghanians Thwart Attempt To Seize Leopoldville Radio

Mon. 9-12-60

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo (AP) — A show of United Nations machine guns Sunday thwarted an attempt by Patrice Lumumba to seize the Leopoldville radio.

Blue-helmeted Ghana troops took positions in foxholes dug around the radio station building as Lumumba, the deposed Congolese premier, led about 20 armed soldiers toward it.

"I called you here to help," Lumumba shouted to Ghana Lt George Short, an Englishman.

"I will fire if you don't leave," Short replied calmly.

"Excellency, don't risk your life," screamed Serge Michel, Lumumba's press advisor who was sent to the Congo by the Algerian National Liberation Front.

HAND OVER RIFLES

As Lumumba turned around half a dozen bewildered Congolese soldiers handed their rifles to grinning Ghanians.

Their arms were returned later and sullen-faced, they drove off in a truck, after staring at the Ghanians for about half an hour.

Gen. Victor Lundula, the ex-sergeant who is supposed to command "the Congolese national army," watched the incident, biting his lips. Later he drove off in an official car flying the blue Congo standard.

One of Lumumba's prime points of ire at the United Nations has been the U.N. seizure of Leopoldville's radio station. He urgently wants it back so he can talk to the Congolese people and exercise his persuasive brand of oratory.

For two days Lumumba has been threatening to seize control of the station closed by the United Nations last Tuesday to prevent inflammatory statements.

DIRE PROMISES

Saturday night Michel told newsmen, "You will see what the Congolese army can do." He also promised, "The airport will be ours." He said United Arab Republic paratroopers guarding sprawling Ndjili Airport "are with us all the way."

Earlier, a U.N. military team had moved out to enforce a truce in the civil war in Katanga and Kasai provinces.

The radio station takeover attempt resembled a Sunday picnic rather than a potentially explosive incident. Scores of newsmen and Europeans stood on the broad Boulevard Albert to watch the Ghanians deploy. Several European women paraded in tight slacks in front of the British-made Bren machine guns and the cordon of troops.

"You are laughing now," shouted a civilian Congolese official to newsmen. "But one day we will kill you all with our bare hands."

KEPT GUARD ARMS

It could not be determined how the troops Lumumba led to the radio building got their arms. The United Nations announced Saturday, after paying the Congolese soldiers' overdue wages, that from now on the arms will be stocked "to be issued only when necessary."

Apparently a number of Congolese soldiers kept their arms for guard duty. There are approximately 2,500 Congolese soldiers in Camp Leopold.

Meanwhile, a U.N. military team moved out to enforce a truce in the civil war in the Kasai-Katanga area.

A Picture Of Paralysis

The Montgomery Advertiser

No wonder the United Nations is belted by all sides in the Congo—its mission is so imperfectly understood that Hammarskjold keeps the road hot getting Security Council approval for every fresh action.

Montgomery Ala.

Thus Hammarskjold lacks the authority to decide whether U.N. forces should relinquish control of the Congo airports and radio stations, and asks the Security Council for a decision.

Mon. 9-12-60

The Congo brawl is no place to look for logic and consistency, but the U.N. seems to be committed to vacillation. The airport seizure is an example. Hammarksjold obviously felt that the U.N. had authority to take control in the first place; he seems in doubt as to whether the U.N. can retain control.

P. 4-A

In all its existence, the U.N. has never confronted such a hydra-headed monster as the Congo, and never have its imperfections appeared so obvious.

Summoned to the Congo by Lumumba, the premier, the U.N. proceeded with the expectation of government cooperation. It swiftly encountered obstruction, and that has been the story since. The U.N. has succeeded in antagonizing virtually every party to the Congo dispute. So that today the U.N. force in the Congo, possibly cowed by its unpopularity, is the picture of quaking indecisiveness.

The fault is not entirely Hammarskjold's; it lies with the U.N.'s exalted view of sovereignty—ordinarily a proper and admirable consideration, but ludicrous in the case of the Congo. Sovereignty is earned, not conferred—and if the Congo has earned sovereignty or any other constructive quality of government, it is not discernible.

Russia's suggestion that the Security Council fly to the Congo is not offered with the hope of resolving the conflict, but it is not a half-bad suggestion in any case. Perhaps having seen the impotent bystander role which its forces are playing, the Security Council might contrive some new purpose and authority for its part in the Congo. Neither is visible at the moment.

United Nations Backs Belgians?

By CHARLES P. HOWARD
(Special to AFRO)

LEOPOLDVILLE, The Congo — "There is no longer a bit of doubt but that the United Nations high command here in the Congo is in full cooperation and support of the Belgian, Kasavubu and Tshombe forces and have, throughout, completely ignored the legally - elected representatives of the Central Government."

Responsible African leaders made this statement here last week for the AFRO. Deriding the claim that President Kasavubu was properly authorized to remove Premier Patrice Lumumba, they cited the new nation's constitution.

The constitution, they said, does authorize the removal of the premier by the president. However, this action must receive a vote of confidence from Parliamant — both the Senate and the Chamber of Deputies.

As it is, the Parliament building has been closed to everyone by the forces of Col. Joseph Mobutu.

The 74 Deputies and 40 senators met, however, with Prime Minister Lumumba and addressed a memorandum to "All the member countries of the United Nations, the Province governments of the Republic of the Congo, the presidents of the provincial assemblies and to the people of the Congo."

* * *

THE MEMORANDUM states: "Members of the Congolese Parliament, deputies and senators duly elected and representatives of the Congolese people, energetically protest the inaction of the United Nations in the face of the menace that faces the Congo."

The members of parliament said that President Kasavubu wants to set up "an oppressive and dictatorial regime. . . against the decisions taken by the parliament and the wishes of the people."

The memorandum reviews the efforts of parliament to reconcile Kasavubu and Lumumba after expressing "renewed confidence" in the deposed premier.

They charge that President Kasavubu "could not overthrow the government legally because the parliament did not have confidence in him. . ."

The memorandum charges that the president then tried another method — that of inviting to a conference persons with "no political mandate."

The memorandum then blames disruption of the Congo government on "the aggression of Belgium of which our country was the object."

The parliament recommends that its two chambers be allowed to function right away and denounced the conference called by Pesident Kasavubu as being destructive of national unity."

* **

AFTER THIS strong statement, Premier Lumumba, who still occupies the official residence, issued a statement naming members of a new cabinet.

Col. Mobutu immediately arrested 12 Lumumba adherents — members of the new cabinet included.

Mobutu, called the "strong man" of the Congo, indicated a willingness to let Parliament reconvene if enough members turn against Lumumba.

This would insure, of course, a vote of confidence in President Kasavubu's removal of the premier.

* * *

DR. STURE LINNER, who heads the United National civilian operations program, reported:

"The United Natons' chief job lies in the civilian operation. Confusion handicaps our operation mightily.

PATRICE LUMUMBA
Ousted by military, fights to regain power.

JEAN BOLIKANGO
Leader of anti - Lumumba Puna Party, some of whose members are accused of trying to assassinate Lumumba.

JOSEPH KASAVUBU
Accused of joining with Lumumba's political enemies to oust him.

"The Congolese who appear in the headlines are not representative of the real Congolese."

He added: "We (the United Nations) are here at the invitation of the Congolese Government and our over - riding job is to train Congolese to run the government."

He concluded: "A real, constructive job could be done if we had the cooperation of the politicians. It is a real problem to deal with three governments — each afraid of the other."

AFRO UN Correspondent flies to Congo Republic

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. — Charles Preston Howard Sr., AFRO United Nations correspondent, was aboard Premier Patrice Lumumba's private plane Wednesday night when it took off with the UN Congolese mission on its return to Leopoldville, the Congo Republic capital.

While in Africa, Mr. Howard, a seasoned newsman, will cover the summit meeting of African nations. He also plans to visit secessionist Katanga province, observe the independence celebrations of Nigeria and interview President Tubman of Liberia. He has been covering the United Nations for the AFRO for two years.

Mr. Howard will give AFRO readers an eyewitness account of history - making events on the dark continent.

You can leave Congo, UN told

The Afro-American

Baltimore, Md.

—IN A NUTSHELL—

- Lumumba orders UN forces out of Congo Republic
- By land and air, Congolese troops move into Kasai Province to halt fighting
- UN gives five million dollar credit to Congo; funds will pay for imports to new nation
- UN silent on latest Congo demand that military forces be withdrawn

Sat. 9-3-60

By CHARLES HOWARD SR.
AFRO Special Correspondent

LEOPOLDVILLE, The Congo — Premier Patrice Lumumba said Friday he wants the 17,000 United Nations troop here to get out of the Congo as soon as the last of the Belgian troops leave.

"We don't want to replace the Belgian military occupation with a United Nations occupation," he said, and added, "We will assure order with our own troops and police."

The statement represents a sudden reversal in Lumumba's attitude toward the United Nations. Just four days previously he had dropped his demand that the UN revise its military operations here. He had asked that white UN troops be replaced by African forces.

A timetable set by UN Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold calls for the last of Belgian soldiers to depart by Monday.

* * *

MEANWHILE, LUMUMBA ordered Congolese troops into Kasai province to curb tribal warfare there and avert a secessionist movement.

The government requisitioned virtually all available planes of Air Congo to form an airlift between Leopoldville and Lulabourg, center of continuing tribal warfare.

Steel - helmeted Congolese soldiers board the planes for the trip as Col. Joseph Mobutu, chief of staff of the Congolese Army, described the situation as "a national emergency."

Meanwhile, about a thousand Congolese troops were marching on the "Mining State" in the Kasai Province, according to a senior Belgian army officer. He said Premier Lumumba's troops were spotted by Belgian air force reconnaissance plans southeast of the Kasai capital of Lulabourg.

The troops were advancing on the "Mining State" recently proclaimed by Albert Kalonji, an ally of Katanga Premier Moise Tshombe. The two secessionist leaders claim a federal system is already working between the two territories.

A UN diplomat said this week that a credit to the Congo Republic has rescued the 14,000,000 people under Lumumba from a desperate economic situation.

The credit, made available under the United Nation's Assistance Program, was advanced to the UN by the United States as a part of the American conribuion oward Congo's rehabiliation. The money does not have to be repaid.

It is to be used, as an official statement issued at UN Headquarers makes clear, for essential imports for which the shippers were not willing to be paid in Belgian Congo francs.

The five million dollars was "Designed to assist the Republic of the Congo in meeting its most immediate needs for the import of merchandise", the UN announced.

Congo 'strong man' a tool'—Nkrumah

The Afro-American

Baltimore, Md.

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y.— Col. Joseph Mobutu, so-called new "strong man" of the Republic of Congo, on Friday was branded a "mutineer" who is acting as a tool of "imperialist intrigue."

JOSEPH MOBUTU

The blunt label was applied by President Kwame Nkrumah of the Republic of Ghana during a speech before the General Assembly.

The Ghanian President insisted that Patrice Lumumba still is the legal premier of the Republic of Congo.

* * *

JOINING NKRUMAH in support of the regime of Lumumba were five other African nations, all of which insist that he be restored to power.

The Mobutu coup de'etat Nkrumah called the "fake Mobutu episode." He said Mobutu had prevented a reconciliation between Lumumba and President Joseph Kasavubu, who is sympathetic to the West.

* * *

MOBUTU IS still in control in the Congo Republic.

However, he is displeased because UN troops have prevented his arrest of Premier Lumumba, at his home, under the guard of Ghana and Guinea troops.

Mobutu arrested Antoine Gizenga, Vice Premier under Mr. Lumumba, and Maurice Mpolo, Lumumba's Minister of Sports.

Sat. 10-1-60

Mobuto seized control of the Army, "Neutralized" the Kasavubu - Lumumba Government, ordered Russian advisers of Lumumba out of the country.

Because of support from other African states, Lumumba was again a major part of the Congo picture over the week end.

* * *

THE CHRONOLOGY of the week's struggle between Lumumba and Mobutu follows:

* * *

SEPT. 15: Lumumba threatened twice with lynching by soldiers at Camp Leopold. Rescued by Ghana UN troops, then by Congolese police and placed under house-guard.

Mobutu, in command at Camp Leopold, ordered Lumumba placed in an Army truck and taken away from Announced intention to the camp.

"neutralize" the "politicians" to stem chaos and disorder in the Congo.

* * *

SEPT. 16. Lumumba silent. Order for expulsion of Soviet and Czechoslovakian Embassy staffs issued by Mobutu under President Kasavubu's signature.

SEPT. 17. Lumumba reported dead, attempting to flee country and hiding in an embassy.

SEPT. 18. Lumumba reappears, places self under protection of UN troops and moved back into official residence. Revealed to have hidden for past two days in Guinea Embassy at Leopoldville.

SEPT. 19. Lumumba offered a cabinet post in Kasavubu Government, remains silent. Reported to have agreed that he would not attempt to fly to New York for UN Assembly meeting, but would abide by UN decision on future of Congo.

through window arrested by Mobutu soldiers.

Mobutu appears in tacit agreement with proposal for setting up of government with Kasavubu as President, Joseph Ileo as Premier and Lumumba as a member of the cabinet.

SEPT. 20. Lumumba says he's still Premier.

Mobutu sets up Congolese technical commission to supersede both the ousted regime of Lumumba and proposed Government of Premier - designate Joseph Ileo.

SEPT. 21. Lumumba asks stronger UN guard around his home.

SEPT. 22. Lumumba received verbal backing of Guinea President Sekou Toure, who tells as Indonesian audience, "Patrice Lumumba's Government is the only legitimate government in the Congo. The Guinea people will continue to fight alongside the Congolese."

18a 1960 CONGO

Accuse Congolese of 'Living It Up' at Barclay

The Pittsburgh Courier

Hotel Denies Collusion Charges

By ALFREDO GRAHAM
(Courier Staff Writer)

Pittsburgh Pa.

NEW YORK — The management of the Barclay Hotel which housed the Congolese delegation to the United Nations found itself hotly denying charges leveled missions that they assisted the Daily News with information concerning the expensive tastes of the Congolese.

Sat 5-3-60

The News published photographs of hotel tabs in a story last Wednesday ridiculing the Congolese for "living it up."

P. 20

A spokesman for the hotel told the Courier that at no time did the hotel seek to intrude on the privacy of any of its guests.

He said the attitude of the News could have been due to a brush-off they got from the delegation.

■

NEWSMEN from the paper were told brusqely that the Congolese would give a statement only to the New York Times.

"Naturally, the newsmen were peeved at this and the slight received could have been responsible for their attitude," he said.

African and Asian missions to the United Nations feel that it was in poor taste for the newspaper to infer that Africans are unused to dining in luxurious circumstances. "They took a liberty," a hotel spokesman said.

Richard Winters, public relations man for the hotel, told the Courier that there was definitely no collusion between the hotel and the newspaper resulting in the publication of the story. He said the hotel was especially keen on accommodating the Congolese, so much so that they had a special Congolese flag made and flown on the occasion of the arrival there of Premier Lumumba and his entourage. He said the Hotel management is very incensed about the whole thing.

■

HE SAID letters from Henry Cabot Lodge and the State Department bear out the fact that they did everything to make the Congolese guests comfortable and there was no attempt to discourage Africans from using their facilities.

Public relations for the hotel is handled by the firm of Martial and Company at 29 East 61st St.

Mr. Winters said the matter has caused the hotel deep concern as they received scores of letters and phone calls about it.

In turn they have expressed their disapproval to the News and demanded the return of hotel tabs which the newspaper was able to secure. Nobody at the hotel gave it to them and they got hold of the chits through the ingenuity for which newspapermen are well-known, the public relations firm said.

OLD BUDDIES—Congo Deputy Premier Antoine Gizenga, left, was embraced by W. M. Q. Halm, Ghana's Ambassador to the United States, when he was in Washington, D.C., recently. Mr. Gizenga and other members of the Congo Government attended an emergency session of the United Nations Security Council in New York City, but the plane was diverted to the Washington area because of bad weather.

The Pittsburgh Courier

BIG STICK — The big stick of a Ghana policeman, a member of the United Nations' force in the Congo, helps keep Congolese crowds on the move in Leopoldville during a demonstration. The Africans were protesting the centralized government of Premier Patrice Lumumba.

Sat 5-7-60

Guarded by African Troops in Leopoldville

Lumumba's Out But He's Still 'In'

LEOPOLDVILLE, The Congo—Although President Joseph Kasavubu announced the "dismissal" of Premier Patrice Lumumba three weeks ago, he as yet has not even been able to remove Lumumba from his official residence.

Five nations — Ghana, Guinea, Morocco, Sudan and the United

Mpolo Gizenga

Arab Republic—have come to Mr. Lumumba's aid. The five African nations have been alternating spending time in talks with both Mr. Lumumba and Mr. Kasavubu in conciliatory visits.

The diplomats representing the five African nations have been intensifying pressure on Mr. Kasavubu to maintain Mr. Lumumba as premier.

IT IS REPORTED that in their visits to Mr. Kasavubu they are pressing the contention that Mr. Lumumba was the Congo's one irreplaceable politician and that no lasting solution to the Congo crisis was possible without him.

For the first time Moroccan, Tunisian and United Arab troops joined the Ghanaian and Sudanese detachments guarding Mr. Lumumba's residence where he has been holding out with a faithful few aides.

The Ghanaians who originally held guard alone have been bitterly criticized by Col. Joseph Mobutu, chief of staff of the Congo army which took control on Sept. 14.

HE CHARGED that the Ghanaian units of the United Nations force have prevented Mr. Lumumba's arrest.

Antoine Gizenga, vice president under Lumumba, and Maurice Mpolo, Lumumba's minister of sports, were arrested after Lumumba forces made a futile attempt to wrest control of the city's garrison from Colonel Mobutu recently.

Mr. Mpolo, wearing a general's uniform at the time of his arrest, said he had been named a general by Lumumba in July, but had never tried to command.

Lumumba Has Strong Hand

By CECIL GREGORY
(Courier Press Service

Patrice Lumumba, Prime Minister of the Congo, brought a strong hand with him as the latest found in the African game got under way at the United Nations Sunday night.

In the pot was Katanga Province and its pro-Belgian leader, Moise Tshombe, who prior to the current crisis was a bankrupt trader.

For his hand Patrice had a King, Mohammad V of Morocco, and a pair of Jacks in Gamal Abdel Nasser of the United Arab Republic.

There was a possibility of M. Lumumba drawing a third jack in Kwame Nkrumah as the Security Council began to shuffle the deck. And in the African cards he could draw from, there didn't seem to be a joker in the deck.

M. Lumumba's hand came close to being pat when Morocco expressed "complete agreement" with the UAR and Guinea who have advocated the formation of an African army in the Congo.

King Mohammed expressed his point of view in telegrams sent to Guinea and the UAR. In the event the UN fails to stabilize its position in the Congo, most observers feel that this trio is set to coordinate its actions.

All three have expressed their opposition to a divided Congo which is what Katanga has been seeking.

Both Dag Hammarskjold and Dr. Ralph Bunche, the architects of UN policy for the Congo have expressed their dismay and dissatisfaction over the treatment accorded UN personnel in Leopoldville which culminated in the beating up of Canadian troops by Congolese forces at the Congo capital's airport.

ON THE Congo side of the ledger has been the admission by certain UN officials that certain Belgians were wearing UN armbands in the Leopoldville area.

Mr. Lumumba was considerably miffed over the fact that Mr. Hammarskjold did not consult with him when he went to the Congo. Instead, Mr. Hammarskjold flew straight to Elizabethville and began talks with Tshombe. This has been interpreted as a snub by Congolese leaders, many of whom are of the opinion that the UN cannot be trusted and is favoring Belgian financial interests.

MOISE TSHOMBE AND DAG HAMMARSKNOLD

. . . in Patrice's hand two jacks and a king

M. Lumumba has also been bitterly critical of the fact that white troops have been utilized by the UN and charges that they have fomented much of the trouble by tending to favor the Belgians.

Thus, the UN is faced with a dilemma. Should it withdraw from the Congo and leave the way open for war between Elizabethville and Leopoldville? Or should it remain with the knowledge that confidence in its activities has been shaken?

In possible consideration of the poor relationship which evidently exist between Dr. Ralph Bunche and Premier Lumumba. Mr. Hammarskjold appointed Rajeshwar Dayal of India t become the top UN official in the Congo.

Both Russia and the Congo have been attacking Dr. Bunche as an American "tool" or "spy." Dr. Bunche is expected to be relieved of his post around Sept. 1.

Nkrumah Offers African Plan for Congo

By Mary Hornaday

Special Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

United Nations, N.Y.

A six-point program to end the Congo impasse, based on recognition of the Lumumba-Kasavubu government, has been presented to the United Nations by Dr. Kwame Nkrumah, President of Ghana.

In an address devoted three-fourths to African problems and one-fourth to general world affairs, the African leader plunged into the UN's present No. 1 political crisis with proposals that brought cheers and applause from the increased African bloc in the 15th General Assembly.

He proposed:

1. "Clear positive directions" to the United Nations Command in the Congo to support Mr. Lumumba's regime throughout the country simultaneously with reorganization of the force to include only forces of the independent African states now serving in the Congo.

2. Full support by the United Nations of the central government as "the legitimate government of the Congo."

3. Disarming of all "private armies," including Belgian-officered forces in Katanga, and reorganization of the Congolese National Army.

4. Reversion to the Security Council's first resolution on the subject as the basis for restoring law and order in the Congo.

5. Guarantee by the United Nations of the territorial integrity of the Congo in accordance with the provisional constitution agreed at the time of independence."

6. Channeling of all financial aid and technical assistance to the Congo through the United Nations guaranteed and supervised by a committee of independent African states appointed by the Security Council."

Though he was harsh in his criticism of United Nations handling of the Congo crisis, President Nkrumah did not display personal animosity toward UN Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold.

"In proposing these recommendations," he told the Assembly, "I wish to take this opportunity of expressing my personal appreciation of the way the Secretary-General has handled a most difficult task, and my own personal belief in the ideals of the United Nations Charter which constitutes in our time the strongest bulwark for international peace and security."

At the same time he insisted that "the Congo is an acute African problem which can be solved by Africans only" and warned that unless leadership in a solution is turned over to the independent African states, another Korea could develop.

In other portions of his speech, the United States-educated African leader called for:

1. A permanent seat for Africa in the UN Security Council.

2. Encouragement by the UN of a nuclear-weapon-free zone in Africa.

3. Ending of the "tactical isolation" of Communist China from the United Nations.

Other Points Touched

Wearing colorful African robes to the UN podium, President Nkrumah ventured away from the African scene only briefly, dealing with questions of disarmament, South Africa, Southwest Africa, China, and Algeria. On all of these he took the general African-Asian line. He also called for general elections in Korea and Viet Nam as soon as possible, and asked the UN to set up machinery in the Middle East to make war there—either cold or hot—impossible.

Where the United Nations made its big mistake in the Congo, President Nkrumah declared, was in trying at the same time to preserve law and order and to be neutral between "legal authorities" and "law breakers."

He protested that Ghanaian troops sent into the area by the UN at the request of Premier Lumumba were employed to prevent him "from performing the most obvious functions of his office—for instance, using his own radio station."

Stern Measures Asked

He called on the General Assembly to go over the head of the Security Council, making it "absolutely clear that the United Nations contingents in the Congo Republic have an overriding responsibility to preserve law and order which can only be done by supporting, safeguarding, and maintaining the legal and existing parliamentary framework of the state."

In addition, he demanded that the UN deal "sternly" with all types of military mutineers in the Congo and continue to work for the ousting of all Belgian troops. He ruled out all possibility of UN trusteeship over the area, declaring, "the Congo is independent and sovereign."

Action Stirs Behind Congo Scenes

Secret Negotiations for Stability

By John Hughes

Staff Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

Léopoldville, Congo

Ambassadors and representatives of Africa's independent states now are engaged in an intense round of secret diplomatic activity in Léopoldville in an attempt to reconcile the Congo's two rival political camps led by President Kasavubu and Premier Patrice Lumumba.

African delegations have held a string of meetings in the past few days, some with Mr. Lumumba, and are scheduled to meet with Mr. Kasavubu later Sept. 27.

Ghanas President Nkrumah has a particular interest in Mr. Lumumba, for he advised him long before Congo's independence and considers him the likeliest Congolese politician to cooperate in his own plans for Pan-African unity.

With independence looming at the end of this week for giant Nigeria, which has shown little enthusiasm for Mr. Nkrumah's United States of Africa dream and which may challenge his current influence, this Pan-African unity planning is assuming new urgency for Mr. Nkrumah.

Puzzling Ally

There are some grounds for believing Mr. Nkrumah became alarmed at Mr. Lumumba's close cooperation with the Communists after independence. It may be he now is competing with Guinea in recognition of Mr. Lumumba, for although Guinea is ostensibly a close ally of Ghana puzzling little Guinea has hewed far closer to the Communist line than Mr. Nkrumah probably would like to see, on the basis of his own past record of international neutrality.

Meanwhile, whatever the outcome of the negotiations, there now is a pressing need for some form of political settlement of Congo's crisis so that the new nation can get to grips with the less sensational but perhaps basically more important problem of the country's deteriorating economic position.

Behind day-to-day political maneuvers, this is a country whose financial and economic resources are withering away for lack of economic direction and stability. Sixty per cent of the central government's income comes from taxes on mining of copper in the breakaway Province of Katanga. Until Katanga's position is cleared up this income, of course, is not forthcoming, and public finances are in a perilous state with many government servants in doubt where their next pay check is coming from.

Foreign exchange reserves which stood at $338,000,000 in 1956 but which dropped with the flight of Belgian capital to $87,000,000 by 1959, last month stood dangerously low at $35,000,000 which is about enough for one month's imports.

According to estimates, the unemployment total in this capital city of Léopoldville will reach 70,000 in the next few days out of a male working total of 130,000.

The United Nations plans to spend $100,000,000 on the first year's operations in the Congo, as compared with the organization's previous highest aid program of $2,000,000 in one year to India.

Teachers Needed

Although the $100,000,000 includes military operations, it is obvious the UN is giving other aid freely here. But even so its operations are complicated by the impossibility of finding a government which can conclude contracts with teachers, and so forth, which the UN is going to import for the Congo.

Thus, although there are Congolese for primary schools there is a virtual breakdown in the secondary schools, formerly run by 2,000 Belgian teachers but 1,600 of whom have returned to Belgium, leaving but 400 teachers to cope with secondary schooling in a country of 14,000,000 Congolese.

Similarly there are no courts, magistrates, judges, or punishment for crime, and there is a breakdown in various governmental departments.

Although there has been a collapse in secondary industry, one gets the impression that if only the Congo could get some political stability the economic outlook would be brighter.

Also the country retains its rich mineral resources and has a basic framework of rail, road, and river transportation.

Col. Joseph Mobutu has installed a commission of university men to help get the economy running again, but two of these have been beaten up, presumably by pro-Lumumba forces.

Peril Seen in Ghana-Guinea Moves

By Arnold Beichman

Written for The Christian Science Monitor

A clash between Congo Government troops and Ghana-Guinea troops under United Nations command has become a distinct possibility, according to sources close to the Congolese delegation to the United Nations.

The possibility is envisioned following an expected rupture in diplomatic relations within the coming week between the government of President Kasavubu and the two West African countries. So incensed has the Kasavubu regime become against the activities, both political and military, of Ghana and Guinea in the Congo that it is reported as virtually certain that their embassies will be ordered to leave Léopoldville.

Force Considered

Thereafter, UN Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold would be asked to order the Ghanaian and Guinean troops out of the Congo. If they refused to leave, the command would be given by Col. Joseph Mobutu, Chief of Staff of the Congo Army, to eject them by force if necessary.

It is reported by persons in a position to know the facts that President Kasavubu and Colonel Mobutu are working closely together and that they have agreed on the necessity to oust Ghana's and Guinea's diplomatic representation from the Congo. One of Colonel Mobutu's first actions, when he set up his caretaker government with Mr. Kasavubu's full approval, was to ask the Soviet and Czechoslovak embassies to close up shop and leave immediately.

In the opinion of the Kasavubu government, Ghana and Guinea have become the surrogates of Soviet policy in the Congo, and, instead of following UN military orders they are following a unilateral Ghana-Guinea policy which seeks to reestablish Patrice Lumumba as Premier.

Propaganda Drive

The two countries are held responsible for a propaganda campaign that a reconciliation between Mr. Kasavubu and Mr. Lumumba is in the offing. This forecast, it was stated categorically by persons in a position to know the situation in Léopoldville, is without foundation. In fact, it is said that Mr. Lumumba will be rearrested in a matter of days at the direction of the Congo chief of state.

The Kasavubu government, it is reported, believes that the Congo has become a pawn in the struggle for African leadership by President Nkrumah of Ghana. With the scheduled independence of Nigeria Sept. 30, it is argued, Ghana's influence in Africa would be very much reduced because Nigeria will immediately become the biggest country in population and thus probably the most influential in Africa south of the Sahara.

Therefore, it is held by Kasavubu adherents, President Nkrumah and President Touré of Guinea are pressing for the restoration to power of Mr. Lumumba so that they can create an alliance with a potentially second major African country.

Even more serious is the belief of the Kasavubu government that Guinea is today a Soviet base in Africa and that to permit Guinean troops and diplomats to remain in the Congo is to endanger what little stability obtains in the country.

Congo Ripples Lap Ghana

The Christian Science

By John Hughes

Staff Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

Léopoldville, Congo

Upon the eve of Ghanaian President Nkrumah's address to the United Nations General Assembly, a new spat appears brewing in the Congo between the leaders of the military coup on one hand and the governments of Ghana and Guinea on the other.

Thurs. 9-22-60

The Congolese charge the Ghanaians and Guineans with meddling in Congolese internal affairs and with attempting to overthrow leaders of the coup and restore to power Premier Patrice Lumumba, whom both Guinea and Ghana have been supporting to date.

The coup's leader, Col. Joseph Mobutu, who has survived three assassination attempts since last week, is protesting to the UN over the role of Ghanaian troops, who are guarding Mr. Lumumba at the latter's official residence.

Plot Charged

It is reported that Colonel Mobutu has attempted to exercise a warrant for Mr. Lumumba's arrest but has been prevented by the Ghanaian guard, whose officers are alleged to have challenged the validity of the warrant in a country where the legality of any one governing group at any one moment is somewhat in doubt.

Meanwhile, spokesman of the pro-Mobutu party led by Albert Kalonji, Kasai Province leader, has charged discovery of a Lumumba plot against Colonel Mobutu implicating the governments of Ghana and Guinea. Edouard Mavindi has told correspondents that a document discovered in Mr. Lumumba's briefcase by Capt. Moissa Kamus, one of Colonel Mobutu's staff officers, involves the Ghanaian and Guinean Governments in a Lumumba plan to overthrow the Mobutu regime.

Speaking for his party, Mr. Mavindi demanded immediate withdrawal of the Ghanaian and and Guinean Embassies and troops. This demand, it is being widely speculated, has the tacit support of Colonel Mobutu himself.

Ghanaians Withdrawn

Just how much there is to all this in the current atmosphere of political intrigue and dabbling by foreign nations who have access and influence in the Congo remains to be seen. But already the UN command has withdrawn some Ghanaian troops guarding Mr. Lumumba and has replaced them with

Mobutu Protests

Sudanese so that the garrison is now 50-50 Ghanaians and Sudanese.

Across the road Colonel Mobutu's Congolese Army troops wait watchfully. It also is reported that the UN, picking a delicate path through the maze of internal Congolese politics, is also planning to withdraw the Ghanaians completely from Léopoldville and reassign them to eastern Kasai Province leaving the garrison work in the capital to troops whose governments are less conspecuously involved politically in the Congolese situation.

Disagreement in Ranks

To many it seems a pity that the Ghanaian troops, who had been superb and have won probably the best reputation of any of the UN forces here should assume the character of pawns in political maneuvering.

Many Ghanaian troops and African officers disagree strongly with their government's pro-Lumumba line. Some of them in private say their government has been badly advised by the Ghanaian Embassy in Léopoldville. They find President Nkrumah's continued support for Mr. Lumumba extremely difficult to understand.

Of course they are soldiers whose outlook is confined only to incidents they personally have witnessed. But in those which they have seen Mr. Lumumba at work they are singularly unimpressed, and they declare they will have much to talk about when they return to Ghana.

Meanwhile, despite the alleged maneuvering by Guinea and Ghana, the new governing commission installed by Colonel Mobutu is quietly moving into its task. It has taken over the administrative offices occupied by earlier officials and is attempting to encourage the return of preindependence industrialist employers who left the Congo during the riots.

Ghanaians Reply

By Reuters

Léopoldville, Congo

Ghanaians, charged by the United Nations with carrying out ousted Congolese Premier Patrice Lumumba's request for protection, have denied that they had resisted any lawful attempt to arrest him.

"We have a difficult job here," said one top Ghanaian. "We are soldiers and have obeyed orders; now we are being kicked by both sides."

In Elisabethville, the capital of breakaway Katanga Province, the UN annouced Sept. 22 that fresh orders have been issued to UN troops there to resist any repressive measures by Katanga gendarmerie against the civilian population.

18a 1960

CONGO

U.S. and the Congo

The New York Times

Washington Depends on U. N. While Shaping Own Program for Africa

P. E H Sun. 8-21-60

By DANA ADAMS SCHMIDT

WASHINGTON, Aug. 20—In the Congo crisis the United States is caught in the familiar dilemma between the forces of an old, and in this case dying, colonialism and a most difficult young state—complicated to an exceptional degree by the intrusion of the Soviet Union, which seeks to exploit the difficulties to its own advantage.

New York Times

Belgium, like the other main colonial powers of Africa —Britain, France and Portugal—is allied with the United States in NATO. Furthermore, her reputation as a colonial power has in the past been good. If she erred in not providing the Congolese with sufficient higher education or experience in administration, she excelled in providing them with a healthy economy and a base of about 100,000 primary school students. Finally, she went the limit in attempting to launch the new state under the friendliest of auspices.

All this the United States Government knew.

It could not for a moment, therefore, give credence to charges, when disorders flared up in the Congo, of Belgian double-dealing.

This is not to say that Washington is unaware that the intentions of the Belgian Government and the conduct of Belgian troops and of local officials were not always the same. The advantage to great mining interests, mainly Belgian, but also British and American, of a separate Katanga ruled by a pro-Western Premier, is evident. But any conniving to bring it about appears to have been done locally.

Emerging Africa

On the other hand, the United States Government is acutely aware of the need to make friends and influence governments in Africa. These nations and their plans and dreams represent the future; the colonial governments represent the past. In the long run, it is only by cooperating with the African governments and peoples that the United States can hope to keep Communist influence in the continent in bounds. And this Administration has learned by experience in Asia and the Middle East since 1953 that even a government that declares a policy of "positive neutralism" can be a useful barrier to Soviet penetration.

That would explain some of the elaborate consideration and courtesy Washington showed the captious Premier Patrice Lumumba of the independent Congo. A few weeks after his army had run wild he came here with demands that the United States help him to throw out the Belgians and prevent the secession of Katanga Province. Washington heard him out but made no commitments.

For the State Department thinks United States interest is best served at this point by avoiding the underlying dilemma of the United States' role in Africa, by insisting on neutrality and non-involvement in the specific issues troubling the Congo and other African states.

In the United Nations, the United States has found a ready vehicle for its policy.

Following up the United States Air Force's support of the brilliant deployment of United Nations troops in the Congo, Under Secretary of State Dillon has now asked Congress for a contingency fund of $100,000,000, much of which, he says, might be used through the United Nations to help the Congo. President Eisenhower has confirmed that this is the idea.

New Departure

If Congress agrees and the program to support the United Nations is carried out, it will constitute a new departure, not in kind but in quantity. The United States has supported lots of United Nations funds, but it usually kept the United States role in the United Nations subordinate to bilateral United States programs. Now the United Nations would have pride of place.

It may well be that the experience in the Congo will have lasting effects on the United Nations and on Africa, and on the United States' relationship to both. But in the long run the United States will be under pressure also to develop its bilateral political and economic relations with Africa.

In the past, the United States has willingly played second or third fiddle to Britain and France in Africa, on the ground that the European powers' interests far exceeded ours.

U. S. Investment

This is, of course, still true. The American investment in Africa is about $1,000,000,000, of which one third is shipping under the Liberian flag. By comparison Belgium has an investment of $4,000,000,000 in the Congo.

The United States' small aid program for Africa is overshadowed by that of the European countries, which during the last year provided their African dependencies with more than $500,000,000 in economic support.

But every African leader who comes to the United States maintains that this country should assert itself economically, politically and morally.

All over the continent there is a demand for opportunities to study at American or at least American-type institutions. The point is that the 10,000 African students in Britain and 10,000 in France represent too small an elite in the population of 220,000,000 Africans.

Beyond that the educated non-Communist Africans — and very few are interested in communism—men such as Tom Mboya of Kenya, Julius Nyerere of Tanganyika, and President Nkrumah of Ghana, show regard for American political ideals. They expect the United States to live up to those ideals.

Little in The Nashville Tennessean

"I'll huff and I'll puff—"

Domestic Problem

The United States' role is, however, limited by its own racial problem, which may prove more troublesome than financial limitations. This fact must be borne in mind in bringing larger numbers of Africans to this country, or we may send them back with lifelong resentments—as has occasionally happened in the case of Arabs, Indians and others.

As the United States is drawn into a larger bilateral role in Africa and is tempted to offer advice to the whites and blacks there, it may be worth pondering a haughty remark recently made by an African visitor.

"We won our independence in five years," he told American Negro friends. "You have not achieved equality in 100 years."

STRUGGLE IN CONGO

The New York Times

Tribal Ties Are Strongest Force In the Shifting Power Contest

New York

By HENRY TANNER

Special to The New York Times.

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo, Sept. 24—It is one of the many anomalies of the Congo crisis that throughout the three months of its duration (it feels like three years) the Congolese people, in contrast to everybody else, have played practically no role. Swedes and Ghanaians, Soviet technicians, Indian generals and United States fliers have been actors in the drama—but not the Congolese man-in-the-street.

The fight to reach and to mobilize that man-in-the-street has been a major element in the confused political situation here since July 25.

Sun. 9-25-60

Patrice Lumumba and a few others braved bayonets and cocked guns trying to get control of the national radio, and the deputy secretary general of the United Nations risked his reputation keeping them out of the station. The radio, of course, is by far the most important means of information and propaganda, as in all African countries where distances are vast, roads few and newspapers limited to a few thin sheets in the capital cities. A politician's voice in Leopoldville may be heard in the army barracks of Oriental Province and in the thatched huts of villages in Kasai. Nevertheless reporters have found that the impact of the radio on the population was practically nonexistent, at least in the region of the capital.

Speeches Don't Inflame

The "inflammatory" speeches of which the United Nations was afraid simply failed to inflame. Premier Lumumba several times warned that if the "plotters" from Belgium and the United Nations continued to obstruct his moves the African city would descend on the center of the capital and sweep all the intruders away in one angry gesture. The African city never moved, and except for a few days in early July, foreigners—whites as well as Africans—were able to circulate freely among the friendly people of the city.

Mr. Lumumba's opponents found it equally difficult to "mobilize" public opinion. When Jean Bolikango, once a candidate for the Presidency, a powerful tribal chief and influential member of the lower house of Parliament, was arrested by Premier Lumumba, reporters drove out into the African city expecting protest marches or at least excitement. All they found was half a dozen angry party workers at the seat of Mr. Bolikango's party and a few members of the party's youth movement who unfolded banners they promised to carry at a mass demonstration in the afternoon. The demonstration never took place.

Bolikango Freed

Mr. Bolikango, more efficient than most politicians in most places, was freed on the following day by a group of a hundred or so soldiers of his tribe who drove up to his place of his confinement with jeeps, armored trucks and mounted machine guns.

The Congolese, to judge from contacts this reporter has had, are a passive people, not easily aroused and—at least in the cities—also a people among whom the concept of "legality" has surprising force.

Almost the entire population of Leopoldville belongs to the Bakongo tribe, of which President Joseph Kasavubu is a chief, and to the Abako party of which the President is the head. Almost without exception the men who work as clerks in the city's stores and in the city administration are bitterly opposed to Mr. Lumumba and said so, privately, even when he was riding high.

Cables Blocked

After Mr. Lumumba's dismissal by President Kasavubu, when the President remained closeted in his suburban residence unable to wrest the levers of power from the deposed Premier, he wrote a simple letter to the telegraph office declaring that Mr. Lumumba and five ministers henceforth would not be allowed to send cables abroad. For days the letter was lying on a desk in the cable room where the operators, and also the Lumumba-appointed directors, could see it. As far as could be made out, the President's order was effective—enforced at considerable personal risk by the young operators.

In spite of this unanimity of the capital population, there had been no serious attempt to mobilize the masses against Mr. Lumumba. During the entire period of his Premiership there were only two demonstrations against him—both easily dispersed by police and military police firing over the heads of the crowd and charging it with rifle butts.

What then are the elements of politics in the Congo?

Tribal loyalties and regional interests appear to be the most powerful factors.

Mr. Lumumba, beaten in Leopoldville, this week was believed to retain a good deal of strength in "his" province, Oriental, and in "his" city, Stanleyville.

In Kasai Province two tribes—the Balubas and the Luluas—remain at loggerheads. And since Mr. Lumumba had backed the Luluas hard, and since the Luluas now are afraid that the new government might bring the Balubas back, Mr. Lumumba's strength is believed to remain great also in that province.

Tribal Battles Fierce

It is in the context of tribal fighting, moreover, that the Congolese seem to shed their apathy most readily. They may be impervious to political agitation, but on the tribal warpath they become intoxicated, savage fighters, burning villages, killing and maiming men, women and children.

On a recent swing through Kasai Province, this reporter was struck by the fact that every single member of the tribes, including old invalids and small children, appeared to be caught up with equal intensity in tribal divisions. In Baluba country he was expected to greet villagers with the V-for-victory sign introduced by Albert Kalonji, head of the independent "Mining State," and in Lulua country the expected greeting was an outstretched forefinger. Pity any absent-minded traveler who got the two greetings mixed up!

Mr. Lumumba, for all his obvious faults and demagoguery, is one of the few politicians in the Congo who has been trying to operate not on a tribal basis but in the context of a modern nation.

The only others who are likely to do so in the present situation are the articulate young nationalists—students and university graduates—who constituted the "College of High Commissioners" this week and took over as a caretaker government at the request of Colonel Mobutu, the country's strong man.

All others—Kasavubu, Bolikango, Kalonji and President Tshombe of Katanga—appear to be operating in a tribal context. Any stability they might be able to produce would rest on a balance between tribes and between regions, the balance which Mr. Lumumba had destroyed by trying to establish a dictatorial central regime.

Army Remains Key

But no politician or group of politicians can hope to give the Congo a semblance of stability witthout controlling the army which remains the only real lever of power.

The army too, of course, is rent by tribal divisions, a problem the Belgians sought to solve by never having a man stationed in the region of his own tribe and by giving soldiers a living standard that was far above that of the villages they came from. The United Nations, aware of the key importance of the army, has initiated a technical assistance program intended to give the army unity, discipline and, above all, an esprit de corps.

A New Role for the U.S.

The Christian Science Monitor

To The Christian Science Monitor:

The time is fast drawing upon us when the United States must make an important decision regarding its foreign policy toward the underdeveloped areas of the world. The Congo crisis has made it increasingly clear that if the emergent nations of Africa are to survive they must be supported economically and politically by countries such as the United States.

Boston Mass.

The question immediately arises as to what specific role the United States is to play in the African scene. As the free-world's leader we can ill afford to allow nations that have territorial interests in Africa to adopt a policy of complete indifference in regard to the future political aspirations of their wards.

Portugal and Belgium are two examples of this type of nation. Portuguese Angola and Mozambique are two areas that will eventually feel the impact of nationalism. This is especially true in the case of Angola, which is contiguous with the now independent Congo.

It is obvious that the Portuguese have no intention of preparing these people for the eventual responsibilities connected with independence. Although Portugal maintains that Angola and Mozambique are integral parts of itself, it is quite clear that it has neither the economic nor military potential to sustain these claims in the event that nationalism should raise its head. It is only a matter of time before this nationalism will arise in the violent manifestations now being observed in the Congo unless something is done.

I feel that the United States as the guarantor of world peace and freedom has the right to protest most vigorously to nations such as Portugal in regard to their colonial areas. We should impress upon them the necessity for prompt action in the adaptation of a liberalizing policy. This should be followed up by offers of economic assistance and educational aid. Native youths of these areas must be educated in the free democratic Western countries.

Elvin W. Sill, Jr.

Arlington, Va.

The Christian Science Monitor
Boston, Mass.
Wed. 10-12-60
p. 4

Associated Press Wirephoto

UN Troops Guard Lumumba

Deposed Congo Premier Patrice Lumumba, arrow, hands on hips, stands on balcony of his house in Léopoldville with members of his family and some of his friends as Ghana troops of the United Nations forces stand guard in the foreground.

Congo Threatens Action Against UN

The Christian Science Monitor
Boston, Mass. p. 4

By the Associated Press

Léopoldville, Congo

The Congo's leaders have threatened new sanctions against the United Nations as the international body refused to bow to their ultimatum to hand over deposed Premier Patrice Lumumba.

The College of Technical Commissioners theoretically running the country threatened Oct. 12 to break relations with the United Nations and to stop UN broadcasts on Léopoldville Radio.

The announcement was made by information commissioner Albert Bolela who charged "the United Nations makes fun of our national army."

"If they intend to impose their trusteeship on us, let them say so," Mr. Bolela told a news conference.

Situation Deteriorates

UN officials continued going about their tasks, but the relationship between the Congo's provisional government and the international organization was deteriorating from hour to hour.

Few observers dared to forecast what the next day may bring, and no one seemed to see a way out of the deadlock.

Scores of Mr. Lumumba's supporters, barred from visiting him, took out their anger on white motorists.

Europeans driving by his luxurious villa ran into a hail of stones from a crowd of Congolese massed in the area. No serious injuries or damage was reported in these and other sporadic incidents, but hostility toward white residents apparently was on the rise.

Residence Surrounded

While opposing troops armed with machine guns faced each other around the Lumumba residence, the Congo's ruling government commission pondered the next move in its efforts to arrest the ousted premier.

The commission Oct. 11 threatened an army uprising unless UN forces hand over Mr. Lumumba.

The UN command declined to deliver Mr. Lumumba on the grounds that under the Congo's temporary constitution, Parliament must approve the arrest of one of its members. UN officials said they would honor the arrest warrant if the Parliament approved it.

The UN officials also said they could not abandon their neutrality in an internal affair. Central figures in the Congo Government, an announcement said, were being given UN protection regardless of how they stood in relation to each other.

Rajeshwar Dayal, the Indian officer heading the UN command, asked Mr. Hammarskjold for instructions Oct. 10. There has been no word that new instructions were sent, but UN sources in New York said Mr. Dayal had standing instructions to guard the leaders of all factions without favoritism.

Meanwhile in Brussels, the Belgium Radio reported that the Belgian technical-aid mission to the Congo's breakaway Katanga Province is being closed.

Services to Continue

Various Belgian technical cooperation services will continue operating in the secessionist province, however.

The radio said Katanga Premier Moise Tshombe and Belgian officials had agreed that the mission has accomplished its main objectives.

Mr. Tshombe — whose government has been supported by Belgian aid—threatened Oct. 9 to reverse his policy of favoring Belgian interests in Katanga after blaming Brussels for the Congo's troubles.

He charged that Belgium had been pressing for a unified Congo "to serve the special interests of certain Belgians and Belgian groups.

"They are undeniably the cause of the troubles in the Congo since independence," he added.

UN Writes Congo Aid Saga

The Christian Science Monitor
Boston, Mass. p.

By John Hughes

Staff Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

Léopoldville, Congo

One of the most significant chapters of the United Nations story is being written here in the tropical Congo, far from the UN's modern headquarters on the banks of New York's East River.

Sat. 10-15-60

Some 450 UN civilian officers, and nearly 20,000 troops from many lands under UN command, are engaged in the biggest single UN operation in the history of the international organization.

Scope of the Congo operation can be judged by the estimate that it will cost $100,000,000 for the first year's working. This is in striking contrast to the UN's previous biggest aid program to any single country—$2,000,000 in one year to India.

The Congo figure of $100,000,000 of course includes the cost of the UN's military operations in the Congo. To many, the assembling of a UN army, made up of colorful units from 30 different countries, has seemed the most dramatic aspect of the UN's Congo program.

Congolese Warned

However, of far greater long-term importance is the UN's techical-assistance program to the Congo. Many UN officials, viewing the current economic chaos, believe this program may keep the UN in the Congo for 30 or 40 years.

Over-all head of UN Congo operations is India's Rajeshwar Dayal, who is special representative of UN Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold.

For him and his staff there are many apparent frustrations. The main one is the political uncertainty caused by the presence of a number of rival governments. This has made well nigh impossible the task of finding a representative government with which to negotiate the contracts and agreements under which the UN would recruit and bring in foreign specialists and technicians on a long-term basis.

Mission Criticized

Mr. Dayal's Swedish chief of the technical assistance program, Dr. Sture Linner, already has warned the Congolese of the "big panorama of disaster" which looms unless they resolve the political crisis and tackle the Congo's pressing economic problems.

In this confusion the UN mission has been attacked, on the one hand, for inactivity while the economic situation deteriorates, but on the other it is under more or less continuous attack from one Congolese political faction or another for "interference" in Congolese political affairs.

Confronted with this situation the UN has moved little beyond the first, emergency, stage of its technical-assistance program. This is to plug the immediate gaps caused by the departure of the Belgians with replacements of foreign specialists. Thus the UN has sped in Swiss to keep the radio working, Canadians to control the air traffic, and health teams from many lands, for example.

UN Out to 'Lose Its Job'

The second and long-term stage is to train Congolese to do all these specialized jobs. As one UN officer, echoing the voices of colonial spokesmen in various other African lands, put it: "Our aim is to work ourselves out of our jobs here in the shortest possible time."

For the moment, however, the UN is mainly concerned with keeping the Congo's essential services ticking.

But there are many constructive aspects of the UN's Congo operation. Some of the small countries which have sent troops and aid to the Congo have literally scraped the bottom of the barrel at home to do so. Some have sent virtually their entire armies to the Congo leaving but a few staff officers at headquarters at home. Others are themselves hard pressed by problems and shortages. Even a big country like India makes sacrifice when it diverts aid to the Congo which its own people sorely need.

States Blossom

Then there has been the blossoming of many African states as they assumed international responsibilities for the first time in the Congo. In answering the call for help from another African land some of these have found new stature and dignity for themselves.

Then, too, there has been the international cooperation among the troops of many nationalities, both white and nonwhite, now serving in the Congo, and the Congolese themselves confronted by the arrival of strangers from many lands. For the most part there has been remarkably little friction.

Of the UN's 450 officers in the Congo who are civilian employees, about 150 are engaged directly in the technical-assistance program. Another 150 are engaged on administrative duties, and the remaining 100 are more or less on the personal staff of Mr. Dayal.

UN Chief Holds Congo Stance

United Nations, N.Y.

By William R. Frye

United Nations Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

United Nations Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold has quietly notified the Kremlin that he will follow through with his present Congo policy until or unless the UN General Assembly tells him to alter it.

This simple gesture of rock-ribbed defiance was Mr. Hammarskjold's answer Sept. 26 to the furious assault launched against him last week by Soviet Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev. He received an ovation from the 96-nation Assembly when he finished his brief statement.

Mr. Khrushchev enigmatically pounded his desk with his fists, a gesture variously interpreted as fury and as approval.

Meanwhile UN diplomats, sifting the probable motives for Soviet diplomacy, believe Mr. Khrushchev has a twofold purpose in attacking the person and institution of the Secretary-General.

Double Goal

His minimum objective, it is said, is to force a modification of Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold's policies in the Congo, thus clearing away the principal roadblock to Soviet subversion in Africa.

His maximum objective is believed to be to destroy the United Nations as an effective peacemaking instrument. The Secretary-General, with a peace force at his disposal, has become the principal operating organ of the world organization.

Whether Mr. Khrushchev succeeds or fails will depend in considerable part, diplomats here believe, on the attitude of Africans and of neutralists such as Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru of India, President Nasser of the United Arab Republic, and President Tito of Yugoslavia, all three of whom now are here at UN headquarters.

President Tito has indicated he would like to see uncommitted states join to form a buffer between the great powers. A round of conferences began over the weekend, apparently with that objective, among others, in view.

If the neutralists, acting in concert or separately, were to give all-out support to Mr. Hammarskjold, this backing—together with that of the West, which is assured—might well enable him to ride out the storm, despite the formidable pressure of Moscow.

If, on the other hand, the neutralists waver, it is thought virtually certain that sooner or later Mr. Hammarskjold will feel obliged to resign.

No Change Likely

A distinction is being drawn between the institution of Secretary-General and the man holding the job. The institution could not be abolished and replaced with a three-man directorate, as Mr. Khrushchev has demanded, without amending the UN charter.

Since Charter amendments may be vetoed by any of the five great powers, no such change is considered possible.

Mr. Hammarskjold the individual, however, is more vulnerable. His predecessor, Trygve Lie, found it impossible to continue long in office when he lost the support of the Soviet bloc and of certain other segments of the membership.

If Mr. Hammarskjold were to be forced to resign, however, it would be all but impossible to replace him under present circumstances. Moscow, trying to force acceptance of its three-man directorate, could and presumably would veto all proposed candidates.

Thus, either the post would be vacant or Mr. Hammarskjold would continue as a kind of lame duck — in either case causing serious disruption to UN activities, and affecting the institution as well as the man.

To avoid such a catastrophe, there may be great temptation for Mr. Hammarskjold to compromise with the Soviet Union in the Congo, modifying his policies and thus giving Mr. Khrushchev his minimum objective.

The pressure in this direction is heightened by the fact that several ostensible neutralists, including Yugoslavia, Ghana, Guinea, and the U.A.R., themselves favor a different line of UN conduct in the Congo. They favor positive UN support of Patrice Lumumba.

This, in Western eyes, would reopen the Congo — and hence much of Africa — to Soviet influence. Mr. Lumumba is regarded as highly susceptible to Soviet advice; indeed, some consider him irrevocably "Moscow's man."

No Buckling

The diplomatic problem the West faces is, therefore, so to buttress Mr. Hammarskjold as to counteract pressures for a change of policy in Mr. Lumumba's direction.

The Secretary-General, in his statement to the Assembly Sept. 26, indicated he has no intention of buckling under the pressure. He insisted that he had faithfully and impartially carried out the instructions of the Security Council and the General Assembly, adding that if the Assembly wanted him to do any different-ly, it should give him new instructions.

"This is your operation, gentlemen," he said. "It is for you to indicate what you want to have done.

"As the agent of the organization I am grateful for any positive advice, but if no such positive advice is forthcoming . . . then I have no choice but to follow my own conviction, guided by the principles [of "independence, impartiality, and objectivity"] to which I have just referred."

Volley Returned

The statement placed the ball squarely back in Mr. Khrushchev's court. If the Kremlin wants a substantive change in Mr. Hammarskjold's policy, the Secretary-General said in effect, then it must get a majority for that new policy in the Assembly. This almost certainly will be impossible for Mr. Khrushchev to do, in the judgment of most observers.

Mr. Hammarskjold also, more mildly, rebuked Africans and others who have portrayed support of Mr. Lumumba as "impartiality." A guiding principle laid down by the Security Council, he said, is that "the United Nations force is not under the orders of a government requesting its assistance and cannot be permitted to become a party to any internal conflict, be it one in which the government is engaged or not."

Mr. Lumumba demanded UN help in suppressing dissident elements in Katanga and Kasai Provinces. It was Mr. Hammarskjold's refusal to involve the UN in a Congolese civil war that originally brought him under leftist fire.

Diefenbaker Blasts Mr. K's Proposals

By a Staff Photographer

Canada's Diefenbaker

By the Associated Press

United Nations, N.Y.

Canada has accused Soviet Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev of conducting a "giant propaganda drama of destructive misrepresentation" aimed at undermining the United Nations.

Prime Minister John G. Diefenbaker told the UN General Assembly Sept. 26 that President Eisenhower had tried to open the door to international conciliation and world fellowship, "but Mr. Khrushchev tried to shut that door."

Canada supports insulated Africa: Page 10.

Toure Bids U.N. Seat Lumumba Aide

The New York Times

President Sékou Touré of Guinea at the General Assembly

By DAVID ANDERSON

Special to The New York Times.

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y., Oct. 10—Guinea moved today to seat provisionally a representative of Patrice Lumumba of the Republic of the Congo in the General Assembly. President Sékou Touré of Guinea introduced an enabling resolution to this effect. He urged that it be adopted immediately lest the United Nations appear "ridiculous" for denying recognition to a delegation "which is perfectly valid."

The seat has been emptly since the opening of the Assembly session when two rival Congo spokesmen arrived. They are Foreign Minister Justin Bombako, on behalf of President Joseph Kasavubu, and Thomas Kanza, sent here by Mr. Lumumba. It was decided to seat neither and to refer Credentials Committee.

Rule Is Basis for Plan

The Guinean resolution was based on a rule providing for the provisional seating of a disputed delegation "until the Credentials Committee has reported and the General Assembly has given its decision."

"We insist that the seat of the Republic of the Congo be occupied by the representatives accredited by the central Government, invested and supported by the Congolese Parliament," President Touré said. He said such a course was legitimate and unobiectionable "as long as this investiture is not given to any other central Government by Parliament."

Earlier in his speech in the Assembly's general debate, M. Touré said it was "perfectly clear that the only one responsible for the conduct of the fate of the Congolese people is the Government of Mr. Lumumba."

Tunisian Defends U. N.

Mongi Slim of Tunisia defended the Congolese and the United Nations for its handling of the Congo crisis.

Mr. Slim paid tribute "honestly and objectively" to Secretary General Hammarskjold for his "untiring revotion." He said radical charges in the present executive organization were unjustifie dand even dangerous.

Tunisia, he continued, opposes alignment with any blocs, specifically with the Asian-African nations here. His country, he said, would preserve complete freedom of action.

The union is seeking a two-year contract with wage increases of 3½ per cent each year. It is asking a supplemental unemployment benefits plan, continuation of the cost-of-living escalator, a union shop and improved vacation and holiday schedules.

General Electric has offered a retraining program for employes who lose their jobs because of lay-offs and plant closings. It has also proosed improvements in pension and insurance plans.

It has offered a 3 per cent wage increase immediately and another 3 per cent in April, 1962, plus improved fringe benefits or a reopening of wage talks in 1962.

Wages before the strike ranged from $2.30 to $2.40 an hour, according to the union.

Guinea endorsed a plan advanced by President Kwame Nkrumah of Ghana for changes in the Secretariat but did not name the author. M. Touré contended, "We should like to make a suggestion which seems to us to take very broadly into account the concern of the Soviet Union, while safeguarding desirable harmony at the head of the executive." He then recommended three Deputy Secretaries General whose political persuasion would be east, west and neutral.

U Thant of Burma and Dato Nik Ahmad Kamil of Malaya each supported the United Nations intervention in the Congo. They agreed that a bad situation had been saved from becoming worse.

U Thant noted that the United Nations forces "had neither the mandate nor the responsibility to cope with the growing internecine strife among the Congolese."

The two Asian speakers approved of Mr. Hammarskjold's tenure in office and objected to radical changes in the Charter.

STUDENT LEADERS STABILIZING CONGO

Foreign Diplomats Agree 'High Commissioners' Are Solving Problems

By PAUL HOFMANN

Special to The New York Times.

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo, Oct. 9—Foreign diplomats here were willing to concede today that the caretaker Government of students and university graduates might well represent the best chance of returning a measure of stability to the Congo.

These professional observers of statecraft appeared to be abandoning their initial incredulity and were watching as the group of young men asserted themselves while the Congo's political leaders remained in a sullen stalemate.

The youthful High Commissioners describe themselves as the "intellectual leaders" of this country of 15,000,000 Africans. They are indeed—although the High Commissioner of Health is just a student of medicine.

The fifteen-member College of High Commissionerers set up by the Congo Army three weeks ago and sanctioned by President Joseph Kasavubu, is quietly encouraging the return of foreign technicians to key jobs in this country. A number of Belgians are unobtrusively drifting back with the students' approval.

Eager for Advice

The United Nations, with nearly 20,000 troops and hundreds of civilian experts here, has started working with the students. Foreign embassies have established liaison with them and are finding the High Commissioners cooperative and often eager for advice.

The young commissioners look solemn and embarrassed as they go about the staggering task of bringing some order to the Congo after the three months of turmoil that followed the country's independence from Belgium June 30.

They have started by tackling the most urgent administrative problems. with austerity as their watchword. Their first step was the announcement Friday of a currency reform. They were also said to be preparing action against unauthorized money-changers and other profiteers who swarm about Leopoldville.

Salary Cuts Planned

The students have made known their intention of reducing the salaries of top-ranking Congo officials who received spectacular raises from Patrice Lumumba, the first Premier.

Work programs are planned to reduce the wide spread unemployment. The United Nations has made $7,000,000 available to the caretaker Government for this purpose.

The students are working on new foreign trade regulations, curbing luxury imports. Leopoldville apparently faces a Spartan life under the intellectuals and prospects are that the inventories of many businesses will not be restocked in the near future.

Characteristically, the group is much concerned with higher education. The students hope to send envoys to the United States to seek funds to keep Congolese schools going. Foreign educators have been urged to keep on teaching in the schools here.

Most of the members of the group are products of Lovanium College, the gleaming university that the Roman Catholic Church opened near Leopoldville six years ago. Lovanium is the Congo's only university.

TOURE BACKS NKRUMAH

Guinea's President Supports Ghanaian's Stand on Congo

Special to The New York Times.

RABAT, Morocco, Sept 25—President Sékou Touré of Guinea gave support tonight to proposals on the Congo Crisis made by Ghana's President, Kwame Nkrumah before the United Nations General Assembly.

President Touré said Guinea's position on the Congo "conformed to the spirit" of the program presented Friday by Ghana's President. Mr. Nkrumal urged that Patrice Lumumba be recognized as the only legal head of the Congolese Government and that United Nations troops in the Congo be comprised only of Africans. Mr. Lumumba has refused to accept as legal President Joseph Kasavubu's attempt to replace him.

Mr. Touré arrived here tonight after a Far Eastern tour. He is scheduled to take off tomorow morning, for Conakry, Guinea's capital, where he will remain for forty-eight hours before joining Guinea's delegation at the United Nations.

Training Personnel for the Congo

To the Editor of The New York Times:

If the Belgians are not going to return to the Congo there will be a great shortage of personnel there which the U. N. may be asked to make up. Plainly the French-speaking countries have not resources sufficient to supply all the persons needed. The U. N. will look to the United States. From the response of some Negro friends and the greatly increasing Negro interest in Africa, I feel that many Negroes would volunteer to go under contract to the Congolese Government if the United States were to back them.

Might not the United States Government set up a program to teach any volunteers French, and then to subsidize their fares and perhaps guarantee jobs on their return? Something of this nature is necessary if the United States is to compete with Russia in any African countries other than those where English is spoken. D. M. Last.

New Haven, Conn., Sept. 16, 1960.

POLICEMEN REBEL IN LEOPOLDVILLE

City Officials Jailed in Brief Mutiny Over Lack of Pay—Blow to Lumumba Seen

By HENRY TANNER

Special to The New York Times.

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo, Oct. 8—This capital's police force of 1,500 men staged a half-day mutiny this morning and thus added to the political isolation of deposed Premier Patrice Lumumba.

Angry policemen rounded up the city's Mayor, his principal deputies and the Interior Minister of the Provincial Government, all of them political friends of Mr. Lumumba. They locked up almost all of the thirty officers of the force.

Mutineers with rifles and Sten guns drove to the villa of Cleophas Kamitatu, President of the Provincial Government, and announced that they were going to arrest him. The President had fled. He is a key man among Mr. Lumumba's followers.

For several hours jeeploads of heavily armed policemen patrolled city streets in search of the missing President and police officers they might have missed in their early-morning arrests.

Lack of Pay Reported

A policeman who was asked who had ordered the arrests replied, "Our anger." He said members of the force had held continuous meetings beginning Thursday night and then had decided to mutiny. "We are hungry," he said. "We have not been paid for a month."

At Camp Lufungula, a sprawling police compound in the city's African quarter, excited mutineers occupied the administration buildings and the entrance. The entire camp was in an uproar and for a while it looked as if the situation might get out of hand.

Then, in the early afternoon the milling crowds of uniformed men calmed down and finally dispersed just as unaccountably as they had turned angry and rebellious.

In midafternoon a spokesman for the mutineers told newsmen that the mayor and other prisoners had been released after they had promised higher wages and the prompt delivery of overdue back pay for the entire force.

The mutiny had political implications even though apparently it started simply as a wage demand by the policemen, who earn average monthly salaries of $25.

Force Backed Lumumba

The city police force was one of Mr. Lumumba's few remaining pillars of power.

The force was thought to be personally loyal to Mr. Kamitatu, who in turn came out strongly for Mr. Lumumba in the deposed Premier's conflict with President Joseph Kasavubu.

After Col. Joseph D. Mobutu, army strong man, assumed power, his move was counterbalanced by the fact that the police force, which controls the city's African section, remained faithful to Mr. Lumumba. On several occasions police units broke up anti-Lumumba meetings only to be chased a half hour later by Colonel Mobutu's men.

Mr. Kamitatu, moreover, fought Mr. Kasavubu's followers within the provincial and city government. Ten days ago, he removed one of President Kasavubu's followers from the office of mayor and replaced him with his own candidate, Daniel Kansa, a supporter of Mr. Lumumba.

The short-lived mutiny was taken as proof that neither Mr. Lumumba nor Mr. Kamitatu could count on the city police. The position of Colonel Mobutu and Mr. Kasavubu has been strengthened as a result, observers said.

Still Holds Residence

Mr. Lumumba is still holding out in the Premier's official residence. He sends daily letters to ambassadors and to the United Nations. Yesterday he issued a mimeographed communiqué announcing the formation of a new Government."

But his moves appear to be more and more removed from reality. His links with his followers outside the protective ring of United Nations guards surrounding his residence seem to grow more and more tenuous, as the caretaker Government of students and college graduates gradually assumes the practical tasks of administering the country.

The caretaker Government was named by Colonel Mobutu and formally installed by President Kasavubu.

Today Mr. Lumumba's "new government" was ignored by all concerned—by "ministers" who were on the list as well as by Mr. Lumumba's enemies.

A spokesman for the caretaker Government told newsmen they were free to accept statements from any politician, including Mr. Lumumba.

Mr. Lumumba canceled a news conference he had called for this evening.

The New York Times p. 3
Sun. 8-14-60

KATANGA'S FLAG WAVES FOR U. N. HEAD: Dag Hammarskjold, right, as he was greeted Friday at the airport at Elisabethville by Premier Moise Tshombe, center. Mr. Hammarskjold led United Nations troops to the area.

Swedish Troops of U. N. Begin Duties at Elisabethville Airport

The New York Times
P. 3
Sun. 8-14-60

Hammarskjold Maps Further Replacing of Belgians—New Contingents Are Due Tomorrow and Tuesday

ELISABETHVILLE, the Congo, Aug. 13 (AP)—United Nations forces began taking over police duties from Belgian troops in Katanga Province tonight under a formula worked out by Dag Hammarskjold, United Nations Secretary General.

Mr. Hammarskjold met with Moise Tshombe, President of Katanga, and the Belgians who supported the secessionist, to plan a procedure for withdrawal of the Belgian troops from Katanga as quickly as United Nations forces can take over.

In the first step of the changeover, a company of Swedish United Nations troops paraded on the apron in front of the terminal building at Elisabethville airport. Belgian troops on guard drew up facing the Swedes.

A Swedish officer approached the Belgian commander, informed him of the agreement, and the Belgian saluted. The Belgian ordered his men to withdraw. They marched off, climbed into trucks and returned to their billets in town.

More to Be Flown In

The airport guard duty was the first United Nations assignment, in this provincial capital, but the duties will multiply as Belgian soldiers begin pulling back to their bases and more United Nations forces are flown in Monday and Tuesday.

Having brought United Nations troops to Katanga, where Mr. Tshombe once said they would have to fight their way, Mr. Hammarskjold turned to his next problem—getting the Belgian troops out quickly.

In the Congo capital of Leopoldville, Premier Patrice Lumumba has been insisting for weeks that the Belgians quit Katanga at once. He has accused them of starting the separatist movement in Katanga in an attempt to dismember the republic.

To Leave For Leopoldville

A communiqué said Mr. Hammarskjold would head back for Leopoldville tomorrow, but would stop at the big Belgian base at Kamina, in northern Katanga, "for discussions about arrangements for the withdrawal of Belgian forces from Katanga."

There are 4,000 Belgian troops in Katanga. About half are a lower Congo naval base southwest of Leopoldville. At the height of the crisis, Belgium had 10,500 troops in the Congo.

The two companies of Swedes that accompanied Mr. Hammarskjold here yesterday will be reinforced by Irish, Moroccan and Ethiopian contingent. An advance United Nations party will arrive tomorrow to arrange for handling the flow of reinforcements.

The Belgians were summoned by Mr. Tshombe to maintain order after the Congo Army mutinied against its white officers and went on a rampage of anti-white terrorism in the Congo early last month. This was shortly after the Congo became independent of Belgium.

Texts of U. N. Communiques in Katanga

Special to The New York Times.

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y., Aug. 13—Following are the texts of three communiqués issued today b ythe United Nations mission in Elisabethville, the Congo, the first two on meetings between Secretary General Dag Hammerskjold and officials of Katanga Province and the third on a meeting between United Nations and Belgian military representatives:

The New York Times

Communique No. 1

The participants in the talks have made a tour d'horizon regarding the problems arising under the Security Council resolutions of 14 July, 22 July and 9 August. In that context special attention has been given to the modalities for the deployment of the United Nations Force within Katanga in accordance with the resolutions.

Sun. 8-14-60

Note has been taken of the principle of non-interference in internal affairs which applies to the activities of such a force and which has been explicitly stated by the Security Council regarding the operation in the Congo in its resolution of 9 August.

The Secretary General has in this context explained the report which he presented on the 12th of August to the Security Council in elaboration of the principle of non-interference as applied to any United Nations presence.

Communique No. 2

The military representatives who accompany the Secretary General have made arrangements for the speedy deployment of the United Nations Force and discussed with the Belgian military representative immediate withdrawal of the Belgian troops to the bases on arrival of the United Nations contingents.

Two Swedish companies are already on the spot, having come with the Secretary General yesterday. The rest of the first contingent of the United Nations Force will arrive at Elisabethville as well as at other places Monday and Tuesday, the 15th and 16th of August; an advance party to provide the necessary preparations will arrive in Elisabethville tomorrow.

The Secretary General will leave Elisabethville tomorrow with several members of his party. On his way to Leopoldville he will stop over in Kamina for a first-hand acquaintance with the situation and for discussions regarding the modalities for the Belgian withdrawal from the bases.

Communique No. 3

After discussions between the military representatives of the United Nations and of Belgium, it has been decided that the relief of the Belgian troops in Katanga by United Nations troops will begin today, Saturday, 13 August 1960, at 5 P. M. local time. From that hour, guard duties and the protection of the airport at Elisabethville will be carried out by Swedish elements of the United Nations force.

TRIBES FAN CONGO STRIFE

The N.Y. Times
New York N.Y.
Nov. 11-13-60

Along With Political Leaders and Foreign Powers They Endanger U. N.'s Effort at 'Reconciliation'

By PAUL HOFMANN

Special to The New York Times.

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo, Nov. 12—The highest officials of the United Nations here advocate a "fresh start" to unblock the stalled constitutional machinery of the Congo. They hold that a reconciliation between the feuding Congolese factions and politicians is possible now.

The reconciliation in Congolese politics as envisaged by these officials—mainly the Indians—would allow the national Parliament to reconvene. The legislative assemblies have been suspended since Col. Joseph Mobutu proclaimed his military "coup" two months ago.

Western observers here, though not happy about the Mobutu regime and the Congolese army which is the unruly foundation of its shaky power, are afraid the reopening of Parliament would lead quickly to another government headed by Patrice Lumumba, the great spellbinder of the Congo.

Mr. Lumumba's return to power would mean, in the opinion of these observers, a return also of the Soviet and Czech diplomats and agents, whom Colonel Mobutu ousted. Despite the deposed Premier's recent assertions that he is anti-Communist and for "positive neutralism", his name is linked by many Congolese and foreigners here with a policy that would make the Congo a battlefield of the cold war.

Visitor Reaction

Visitors to this capital who sample the opinions of the strident local politicians, try to talk to the bewildered inhabitants of the African city, and learn of the disconcerting and ofter alarming reports from the interior of this huge country, will be at a loss to understand the professed optimism of the United Nations as to the chances of a general reconciliation. Rather, it seems, civil war would by now be raging all over the Congo were it not for the presence of the world organization's military force.

In the factional mosaic of Congo politics two main patterns stand out: regionalism and tribalism. Great statesmanship and probably considerable time will be required to "reconcile" such deep cleavages and create some sort of unity.

The foremost regional problem of the Congo republic is of course Katanga. With this province, rich in copper, cobalt and other precious minerals, the Congo is an important industrial power with a favorable trade balance. Without Katanga the Congo is a producer of palm oil and other agricultural commodities unless and until she finds enough capital to exploit the mining possibilities of Kasai, the hydroelectric potential of the Congo cataracts and other untapped resources.

Moise Tshombe, President of Katanga, and his government in Elisabethville have shown some sympathy for the Mobutu regime, rather like an alliance from state to independent state. The Tshombe group, notoriously backed by powerful Belgian interests, makes it quite clear it would never collaborate or be willing to be "reconciled" with Mr. Lumumba, who stands for a strong central government.

In South Kasai an independent state is promoted off and on by Albert Kalonji. He violently opposes Mr. Lumumba and is critical also of Colonel Mobutu.

In Stanleyville, capital of Oriental Province, Lumumba forces have banded together with followers of Antoine Gizenga, a pro-Communist, in a local junta that terrorizes a wide area.

Lumumba followers are strong also in various pockets in the province of Leopoldville, particularly in the north and in the Kikwit area east of the capital. The Lower Congo, west and south of Leopoldville, is the stronghold of President Joseph Kasavubu and his political-tribal machine, the Abako.

Tribal Forces

The Abako is a good example

The New York Times

Rajeshwar Dayal, chief of U .N. Congo forces.

of the enormous importance of tribal traditions, rivalries and aspirations in Congo politics. Mr. Kasavubu started his public career as an advocate of the "right of the first occupant"—meaning that immigration by members of other tribes should be curbed in the area assertedly belonging to those who speak the Lower Congo tongue, Kikongo.

Mr. Lumumba belongs to the Batetela tribe, a group that allegedly played a sinister role in the slave traffic and in more recent times is prominent in commerce of all kinds. Batetelas have a reputation for being mobile, mercurial and voluble. Mr. Lumumba enjoys much sympathy among the Bangalas, a catchall name for various tribes that spread from the north into Leopoldville.

In the capital's African city Bangalas are all those "who arrived by boat" that is from upstream. They are often opposed to the Lower Congo tribe of the Bakongos which is organized in Mr. Kasavubu's Abako. But far from all Bangalas are pro-Lumumba. A prominent Bangala leader, Jean Bolikango of Equator Province in the north, is a Lumumba opponent.

The fierce, gifted Baluba people, split into several groups and scattered over a wide area, represent a dynamic and dangerous force in Kasai and Katanga.

Mr. Kalonji is a chief of the tribe who dreams of a Baluba State comprising parts of Portuguese Angola where members of his ethnic group live.

Rifts in the Army

Tribal loyalties cut through the Congolese army. Soldiers belonging to ethnic entities that now are rallied behind Mr. Lumumba are reluctant to obey orders from Colonel Mobutu. The chief of the military regime and President Kasavubu are ostentatiously cool to each other but collaborate in keeping Mr. Lumumba from seizing power again. Both Colonel Mobutu and Mr. Kasavubu back the council of young university graduates and students who act as a caretaker government in Leopoldville.

The United Nations has grudgingly collaborated with Colonel Mobutu, although reprimanding him and his undisciplined army from time to time. The United Nations says it deals with the caretaker government "on technical matters."

At the same time the United Nations wittingly or unwittingly strengthens Mr. Lumumba's hand. Such an effect was achieved also by the world organization's harsh criticism of the role that it asserted Belgian advisers were playing in the military regime and the caretaker government.

United Nations officials have not yet clearly indicated how they propose to bring about the "reconciliation" in the Congo and how soon.

AFRICAN NATIONS WARN LUMUMBA

New York Times

Delegates at Parley Indicate Abuse of U.N. Staff Can Halt Further Support

Times 9-1-60

By THOMAS F. BRADY

Special to The New York Times.

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo, Aug. 31—The delegates of thirteen African states warned Premier Patrice Lumumba today in a private meeting that such incidents as the beating of eight Americans and two Canadians last Saturday "must come to a halt."

The implication was that if the Congo Army and police continued to mistreat white United Nations personnel Mr. Lumumba could no longer count on pan-African support.

Dr. Sadok Mokkadem, Tunisian Foreign Secretary and dean of the delegates, acted as the spokesman at the meeting, just before the final public session of the pan-African conference, which opened last Thursday.

Asked what Mr. Lumumba's reaction to the warning had been, a delegate said, "It was a wise reaction."

Tunisian Quits Dinner

The Tunisian delegation has shown itself the militant champion of the United Nations throughout the conference. Last night Dr. Mokkadem walked out of a dinner given by the Congo Senate to show his displeasure over an editorial yesterday in the pro-Lumumba newspaper, Congo.

The editorial charged that Mongi Slim, Tunisian Ambassador in Washington and head of the Tunisian delegation to the United Nations, had supported Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold against Mr. Lumumba to put the Secretary General "in debt." It said "the payment would be made" when the United Nations considered the demand of the Algerian nationalist Provisional Government for a United Nations referendum on self-determination in Algeria.

Reliable Tunisian sources said Dr. Mokkadem had gone to the dinner solely to announce the Tunisian position, which was that there would be no final session of the conference and no final resolution unless the Congolese apologized. The Tunisians were understood to have had the support of the Algerian nationalist delegation.

Editorial Called Ridiculous

A North African said the editorial was "doubly ridiculous" because the Tunisian action in the Security Council had been approved in advance by the Congo delegation. This North African, who is not a Tunisian, said "the Congolese ask up to be statesmanlike in their behalf at the United Nations so they can come home and make demagogic statements about us."

Justin Bomboko, the Congo's Foreign Minister, called at the Tunisian Embassy this morning to make a formal apology for the editorial. He is reported to have said the editorial was written by a Frenchman from Brazzaville in the French community's Congo Republic across the Congo River and that it did not represent the Government's views.

Conference delegates met late this afternoon to hear a report by M. Slim on the last Security Council meeting. They then appointed a committee to call on Andrew W. Cordier, the Secretary General's executive assistant, tomorrow to discuss means of smoothing relations between the United Nations and Premier Lumumba.

At the final session of the conference today Premier Lumumba made a speech paying homage to "the magnificent work" of the United Nations in the Congo.

He added, however, that divergences of opinion between his Government and Mr. Hammarskjold were attributable to "the fact that in all their activities in the Congo the representatives of the United Nations have never consulted us as the resolutions of the Security Council recommended."

He said the incidents would have been avoided if a spirit of cooperation had existed between United Nations representatives and Congo officials.

Shortly after the conference session opened, Dr. Mokkadem said Tunisia "supported without reserve the action decided by the Security Council" and believed that this action "must continue as long as the risks of foreign interference on the African continent remain." He asserted that the United Nations' action was in the interests of the Congo and all Africa.

This statement appeared to go directly counter to Mr. Lumumbas' demand that United Nations troops withdraw from the Congo after Belgian troops had departed.

U.N's Action Endorsed

The United Nations action here was endorsed in the final resolution of the conference.

The resolution expressed "regrets that some incidents have troubled the collaboration and cooperation that must be wholehearted between the Congo Government and the United Nations." It urged that measures be taken to prevent their repetition.

The resolution also:

¶Recomended a conference of African heads of state in time to send their views to the United Nations General Assembly, which convenes Sept. 20.

¶Declared African assistance to the Congo should be increased and harmonized with all other aid, including that of the United Nations.

¶Condemned "secessionist and colonialist movements aimed at dividing the Congo" and declared the central Government to be the only legitimate and legal authority in the Congo. The resolution called on all Congolese leaders to preserve unity.

In his talk, Mr. Lumumba asserted "We want no foreign military base in the Congo, even if it is to be controlled or managed by the United Nations." This was an allusion to the base at Kamina in Katanga, which the United Nations has taken over from the Belgians.

It was announced today that no more planes from Leopoldville could land at Kamina.

M'Hammed Yazid, chief of the Algerian nationalist delegation, called on the Western powers to reconsider their policy if they want to create conditions of free cooperation with Africa. He said they must stop being bankers and suppliers of arms to colonialists.

"Those who give arms to the Belgians and French are known," he said. "They are those who sometimes give us milk and flour for our children while they give our enemies weapons to exterminate our people."

M. Yazid's statement was part of an Algerian nationalist campaign against the North Atlantic Alliance. The rebels contend that United States military assistance to France permits France to continue the war in Algeria.

The newspaper Congo published a formal full-column apology today from Gen. Victor Lundula, head of the Congo Army, for the beating of the Americans and Canadians in Stanleyville.

Arrests Made in Beatings

LEOPOLDVILLE, Aug. 31 (AP)—The Congo Army commander said today a number of Congolese civilians had been arrested on charges of starting the panic that resulted in a mob attack on eight United States airmen and two Canadians Saturday.

Gen. Victor Lundula said those arrested would face military trial. He said rumors and false orders had contributed to the incident.

Fighting Continues in the Congo

The New York Times Sept. 1, 1960

Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold protested that Belgium was keeping troops at bases at Kitona (1) and Kamina (2). Fighting between Congo Army units and Kasai dissidents was reported in the Bakwanga area (3).

Black Star

Albert Kalonji, who said he had regained Bakwanga.

KATANGA THREAT HANGS OVER BASE

The New York Times

U.N. Unit at Kamina Airfield Reinforced—All Congolese Planes Are Barred

Times 9-1-60 p. 3

ELISABETHVILLE, the Congo, Aug. 31 (UPI)—The Katanga Government threatened today to put the huge former Belgian military base at Kamina out of action if the United Nations did not guarantee that Congo army troops would be barred from landing there.

The threat was made in a communiqué issued by President Moise Tshombe of Katanga. The Katanga leader fears that the base, which is only lightly held by the United Nations's Thirty-third Irish Battalion, could be captured by troops of Premier Patrice Lumumba and used to subdue the secessionist province.

Following the threat, the United Nations rushed 100 Swedish troops to Kamina to strengthen the garrison.

A United Nations spokesman in Elisabethville, Ian Berendsen of New Zealand, announced the Swedish movement and confirmed that the United Nations had "neutralized" the base after taking it over from the Belgians.

Base Restricted to U. N.

Mr. Berendsen said neither Mr. Tshombe's nor Mr. Lumumba's troops would be allowed to use the base, which is stocked with arms and ammunition left by the Belgians. He said the large Kamina airfield would allow only United Nations planes to land.

About 1,000 Belgian technicians still were running the base. Mr. Berendsen refused to say whether they now were considered United Nations employes.

The Katanga government said it had no quarrel with the neutralization, but insisted on being free to control administration and justice at the base.

The communiqué insisted that the neutralization must mean "the complete ban on the arrival there of anyone other than the forces of the United Nations."

It said that if these conditions were not guaranteed, Katanga "reserves the right to insist on respect for its sovereignty and it will not hesitate if necessary to proceed to render the base useless."

Kasai Fighting Continues

The commander of the Katanga army, Maj. Roger Crevecoeur, reported fighting between Congo army troops and Baluba warriors of Albert Kalonji was going on around Bakwanga in Kasai Province. Bakwanga is the capital of Mr. Kalonji's self-proclaimed Mining State, which has declared its secession from the rest of the Congo.

Major Crevecoeur said radio messages indicated that the Balubas had captured the Bakwanga airfield and that the Lumumba troops were running short of ammunition and supplies. Frequent appeals for planes to fly out wounded have given the impression that fighting was becoming heavier, he said.

He said none of Premier Lumumba's troops had penetrated into Katanga.

In cablegrams to President de Gaulle of France and Under Secretary Ralph J. Bunch, of the United Nations, Mr. Kalonji has contended that Czechoslovak officers were leading the troops of Premier Lumumba. He urged the United Nations to send neutral officials to make an on-the-spot check of the situation.

Mr. Kalonji's small army was said to include about sixty former Belgian colonials who have formed a volunteer corps.

Kalonji Reports Gains

ELISABETHVILLE, Aug. 31 (AP)—Albert Kalonji declared today that his troops had recaptured his capital, Bakwanga. Bakwanga, an industrial diamond center, fell to the troops of Premier Lumumba's central Government last Saturday.

Mr. Kalonji based his claim on radio reports received from "known and friendly voices" broadcasting over the Bakwanga radio station. He said his army had retaken Bakwanga, Luputa, Ganyika and Mwena Bitu, all previously reported occupied by Congo army troops.

Mr. Kalonji and his Premier, Joseph Ngalula, charged that Premier Lumumba's men had "looted, pillaged, raped and massacred" during their occupation.

Nkrumah's Help To Lumumba Told

The Atlanta Constitution

Atlanta, Ga.

By MICHAEL GOLDSMITH

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo (AP)—Col. Joseph Mobutu's government commissioners Wednesday published what they called Ghana President Kwame Nkrumah's intimate advice to Patrice Lumumba on how to regain and hold power over the Congo.

Thurs. 9-29-60

They said the advice was in a four-page letter on Ghana government stationery to "My dear Patrice" and apparently signed by Nkrumah on Sept. 12, seven days after Lumumba was fired as premier by President Joseph Kasavubu.

P. 10

Nkrumah presently heads the Ghana delegation at the U.N. General Assembly in New York.

The letter advised Lumumba to make use of his enemies as well as of the United Nations to reestablish his power and eliminate them later.

The commissioners' spokesman, Mario Cardozo, issued photocopies of the letter, which he denounced as an attempt of "blacks to colonize blacks."

Cardoza indignantly declared that the commissioners would not tolerate Ghana interference in the Congo's affairs and said the people of this country considered themselves as Congolese first and Africans afterward.

"COMPLETELY GENUINE"

Asked about the letter, A. N. Welbeck, Ghana charge d'affaires in Leopoldville, said: "The letter is completely genuine. I brought it to Mr. Lumumba myself."

Mobutu, 29, has demanded immediate withdrawal of Ghana troops from the U.N. Congo forces. The Congo strongman has charged that both Ghana and Guinea favored the Communist-backed Lumumba in the Congo's power struggle.

Mobutu first voiced these demands last week, charging that the two African nations were meddling in the Congo's internal affairs. Together their troops constitute almost 20 per cent of the 16,400-man U.N. force.

INCREASES DEMANDS

Two incidents involving Ghana troops earlier this week led to Mobutu's increased demands that they get out of the Congo.

Mobutu last Monday reported that 60 of Lumumba's supporters kidnaped two of Mobutu's government commissioners in full view of a Ghana troop detachment, then drove them out of town and beat them severely.

Mobuto also objected to an incident Sunday when Ghana soldiers gave Lumumba an armed escort on a drive through the capital. Many Congolese interpreted the escort to mean U.N. endorsement of Lumumba's attempt to regain political power.

The U.N. Command said it would ask for an explanation of both incidents. It stressed at the time that there was no indication the Ghana brigade was taking any independent action outside the U.N. mission.

Military Chief Says Army Taking Control Of Congo During Strife

The Montgomery Advertiser Montgomery, Ala.

Thurs, 9-15-60

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo (AP)—The chief of staff of the Congolese army said Wednesday night the army is taking control to save the Congo.

Col. Joseph Mobuto said the army will rule until the struggle for power is settled between president Joseph Kasavubu and Premier Patrice Lumumba.

In the shifting fortunes of the Congo, Mobuto has been a Kasavubu man.

Mobuto asked full U.N. support. He also appealed for the cooperation of Congolese and foreign technicians.

Mobuto said it still was not clear what the positions of Kasavubu and Lumumba would be, but he called for the army to carry on and save the nation. His announcement was made in a brief radio broadcast.

FLEEING HOME

There were reports that Lumumba was fleeing to his home town of Stanleyville, but these accounts could not be confirmed.

The announcement by Mobuto came shortly after Joseph Ileo, who was named premier by Kasavubu to replace Lumumba, claimed the army was swinging its support to the president.

Ileo also told newsmen Kasavubu had removed Gen. Victor Lundula from his post as army commander, replacing him with Mobuto.

The support of the army has been seen as a possible decisive factor in the fight between Kasavubu and Lumumba for leadership. But the army has been badly split along tribal lines and has been marked by a widespread lack of discipline and control.

FORMER SERGEANT

Lundula was a former sergeant under the Belgians and became a general and commander after the Congo received its independence June 30.

Meeting in secret with reporters in his apartment in downtown Leopoldville, Ileo said most newly promoted senior Congolese officers pledged their loyalty to Kasavubu at a meeting called by the president.

"The outcome in the Congo depends on the army and police," Ileo said.

Lumumba earlier broadcast an appeal for unity and turned to Parliament for a new vote of support.

Parliament was called to vote on a retroactive constitutional amendment aimed at invalidating Kasavubu's Sept. 5 decree removing Lumumba as premier and appointing Ileo, a moderate, in his place. Tuesday, a lightly attended rump session of Parliament, packed with Lumumba's supporters and guarded by pro-Lumumba troops, voted him dictatorial powers.

SUMMONED LEADERS

Kasavubu, meanwhile, summoned numerous political leaders, including some of Lumumba's own ministers, to meet with him at his official residence.

It appeared that some responsible leaders on both sides were still trying hard to patch up the quarrel between Lumumba and Kasavubu.

While these intensive political maneuvers went on in Leopoldville, reports from Elisabethville, Katanga, said Baluba tribesmen, spurred on by witch doctors had overrun the tin-mining center of Manono.

Airplane pilots and refugees reaching Elisabethville said there had been a two-day battle, with hundreds of Balubas pouring into Manono, 400 miles north of Elisabethville. One unconfirmed account said 70 tribesmen had been killed.

TOWN IN FLAMES

The reports said the Balubas were fighting the police garrison in Manono and one said the town was in flames. Two planes flew out the wives of African policemen and some white men and women.

The government of secessionist Katanga Province has asked the U.N. Command for permission to send more troops to Manono, but the request so far has been turned down.

In his radio address in Leopoldville, Mobuto gave no details on what his next step might be.

Since the Congo became independent Mobuto has appeared to be a moderate who appreciated the dangers facing the new nation. He took a major role in the negotiations with the United Nations over the control of Leopoldville airport.

The United Nations, apparently acting under pressure from President Kwame Nkrumah of Ghana, Tuesday reopened the Leopoldville radio station, taken over by U.N. troops Sept. 6 to prevent inflammatory broadcasts.

The first to broadcast was Jean Bolikango, information minister in the Ileo Cabinet. He was able to broadcast because pro-Kasavubu troops had relieved the Ghana U.N. forces. Bolikango appealed for the people to rally around Kasavubu. Several hours later the pro-Kasavubu troops yielded without violence to police supporting Lumumba.

LUMUMBA SPEAKS

Lumumba then showed up and recorded a speech that was broadcast Wednesday. Far from being inflammatory, he called on the army "to devote yourself body and soul to the service of your people and your republic."

Lumumba accused Bolikango of having tried to incite the population to rise against "the legal government of the republic" and added: "There is only one government of the Congo and that government defends your interests with all its strength."

In Accra, the Ghana government, which had declared U.N. recognition of the Ileo regime would create a crisis, said it welcomes "the solution of the problem of the use of the Leopoldville radio station proposed by the Congolese Parliament and accepted by the U.N. secretary-general."

Belgium Told To Shut Off Katanga Aid

Montgomery Ala.

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP)—Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold Thursday delivered a stern warning to Belgium that interference in the internal affairs of the Congo was a violation of Security Council decisions binding upon all U.N. members.

The warning was addressed to Ambassador Walter Loridan, Belgian U.N. delegate, as the Council prepared for emergency discussions to clarify the U.N. role in the troubled African country.

SHARP ATTACK

Hammarskjold was under sharp attack from Congo Premier Patrice Lumumba, from the Soviet Union and from Yugoslavia. He in turn was pressing for new Council steps to halt the flow of outside aid to the warring factions.

U.N. officials said the Council probably would meet Saturday in a session which might last into the night.

In his latest communication to the Belgian government, the secretary-general said he had received confirmed reports that nine tons of weapons were unloaded Wednesday from a Belgian Sabena Airlines plane at the Elisabethville airport in the secessionist province of Katanga.

Hammarskjold asked the Belgian representative to tell him whether the Belgian government had authorized the sending of weapons to the provincial authorities.

"Should this be the case," Hammarskjold said, "the secretary-general would consider it necessary to make a formal serious protest."

U.N. officials announced Hammarskjold had received a cable from Lumumba inviting the Security Council to meet in Leopoldville. There was no comment, a spokesman said.

During the afternoon Hammarskjold conferred with Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Vasily Kuznetsov and Yugoslav Ambassador Dobrivoje Vidic, both of whom have been critical of U.N. policies in the Congo.

Under a drumfire of criticism from Moscow radio and the Soviet Tass agency, he insisted anew that the U.N. operation in the Congo must remain nonpartisan and proposed disarming non-U.N. military units in the country as a step toward restoring order.

Yugoslavia's delegation, on orders from President Tito, moved into the picture at noon Thursday demanding an urgent Council meeting on the Congo. Yugoslavia is not a Council member.

Red Move Into Congo Collapses

The Montgomery Advertiser Montgomery Ala.

Soviet Group Beats Humiliating Retreat; Lumumba Disappears

Sun, 9-18-60

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo (AP)—Soviet officials beat a humiliating retreat from the Congo Saturday, crowning with failure the Communists most daring attempt to penetrate the new nations of central Africa.

The Communists flew home under the loaded guns of Congolese soldiers and on orders from Col. Joseph Mobutu, the emerging Congolese strongman. He expelled them after seizing power Wednesday from Patrice Lumumba, the goateed firebrand who used his power to give the Russians a strategic foothold here for a brief and chaotic period.

Lumumba has disappeared. Reports circulated—without any confirmation—that he is dead.

SLIPPED OUT

Whatever his fate, his departure from the Congolese political scene brought the collapse of Soviet military and economic penetration of the Congo.

Lumumba has not been seen since he slipped out of the armed protection of the U.N. troops from Ghana sometime Friday.

Late Saturday, however, a Lumumba aide posted on a bulletin board of a downtown hotel a communique purporting to have come from Lumumba.

The communique was a copy of a protest Lumumba was said to have sent to the U.N. Command Friday alleging U.N. interference in the Congo's internal affairs.

SIGNATURE ILLEGIBLE

Although the wording of the protest was similar to that used by Lumumba in the past, the signature on the communique was illegible.

U.N. officials confirmed they had received a protest Friday.

It said U.N. Ethiopian units at Stanleyville had closed the airfield and prevented troops loyal to Lumumba from reaching Leopoldville to put down a rebellion fomented by a group of army officers it said were in the pay of foreigners.

In another development the Leopoldville radio added to the confusion by broadcasting a call to senators and deputies to meet in an emergency session Sunday "in the presence of the government." The broadcast did not say which government.

WILD RUMORS

Wild rumors about Lumumba's fate swept through Leopoldville but could not be substantiated by responsible sources.

The most recurrent rumor had it that Lumumba was taken out of town by Congolese soldiers and shot down.

Two facts lent some credence to the reports of Lumumba's death:

Never before in his brief but stormy career as a world figure has he remained silent and invisible for successive days. Only last Thursday infuriated soldiers of the Baluba tribe tried to lynch Lumumba at Camp Leopold II, blaming him for casualties among their families during recent bloody fighting in Kasai Province.

Other reports had it that Lu-mumba was in hiding in the Guinea or Ghana Embassy, had been smuggled out in a Soviet plane, or had fled to Stanleyville, the center of his stauch tribal support.

Among those who believe Lumumba dead are members of the coup to start the administrative pro-Western government appointed by President Joseph Kasavubu. This government, headed by Joseph Ileo, failed after Mobutu's machinery rolling again.

FLAG HAULED DOWN

The only sign of Mobutu's coup were heavily armed, steel-helmeted soldiers in strategic positions throughout the capital—particularly around the national Parliament where they prevented the pro-Lumumba majority from meeting in emergency session Friday.

The Czechoslovak Embassy, one of the two Communist legations here, was the first to haul down the flag and the first to leave. Departing on two small Soviet planes, they said they were heading first for Stanleyville to pick up several score Soviet "technicians."

The United Nations also was looking for Lumumba. Any announcement of his fate would have to be handled gingerly by the Congolese or the United Nations. Lumumba has strong backing in Stanleyville, and the U.N. has only token strength to keep order in that city.

Lumumba had called on the United Nations to help restore order in the Congo after a troop mutiny early in July. A predominantly African force was organized within hours by Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold and now numbers about 18,000 troops.

Witch Doctors Egg On Balubas In Katanga Province Uprising

The Montgomery Advertiser

ELISABETHVILLE, the Congo (AP)—A Baluba uprising in the interior of rebel Katanga Province was reported spreading Thursday.

Fri. 9-16-60

A Katanga government spokesman said that, despite cease-fire orders, this was accompanied by an invasion by 300 of Patrice Lumumba's troops from Kivu Province in the north.

Page 2

He said the troops moved in along a railway line toward Kongolo, their first major objective, and Katanga forces have started defensive action.

The Belgian radio said a U.N. observation plane was shot at and made a forced landing near Kongolo.

The interior uprising is staged by Baluba warriors egged on by witch doctors and following leaders who prefer Lumumba to Katanga's secessionist premier, Moise Tshombe. Some are armed with old rifles, others with battle axes and bows and arrows.

From direct advices and the government spokesman's account, these are the main trouble spots:

Manono—The U.N. commandeered planes for an attempt to withdraw 70 white persons reported trapped in that tin mining town 400 miles north of Elisabethville by drunken raiders who lost 15 men in the initial attack Tuesday night. Twenty-two Belgians and 140 Congolese escaped aboard three planes Wednesday.

Luena—800 persons, Belgians and Katangese, were said to be trapped at a coal mine and awaiting Katanga army units from Kamina, the old Belgian base 100 miles to the northwest. Two white railway officials were kidnaped by tribesmen. A Belgian broadcast said U.N. troops were guarding mine staff members and their families at the Luena clubhouse.

Bukama—A native chief, his son and three Katanga policemen were killed by a band of 400 Balubas who overran that town, 20 miles west of Luena.

Lubanda—Mali U.N. troops deployed to hunt for two Belgian missionaries reported missing.

The Katanga government protested to the United Nations that the Irish U.N. troops in Manono had failed to protect houses, shops and other property from rebel looting.

The Irish unit gave protection to Katanga police and troops and Belgian civilians when the Balubas entered and organized the evacuation of refugees.

The spokesman said, however, the rebels were allowed to set fire to an administration building and to gasoline stocks.

Activities Behind Scenes

Congo May Get Government of 'National Union'

Washington Post

By Russell Howe

Special to The Washington Post

Washington, D.C.

LEOPOLDVILLE, Sept. 12 While everybody waits to see if de jure Premier Joseph Ileo and his policy of moderation or de facto Premier Patrice Lumumba and his policy of racism and procommunism win out in this most crucial of all African countries, what is going on behind the scenes will probably lead to a solution that will astonish the watching world.

Tues. 9-13-60

If what nearly all the Congo's leaders are now working for transpires, it will be proved once more that Africa is different politically from other continents.

p 38a

Ileo, with the backing of United Nations brass on the spot, presumably of the Security Council of most embassies here and of nearly all free African states, is trying to establish his position as the country's effective as well as official head of government.

Lumumba Near Hysteria

Lumuba, who is living in a state of ecitement bordering on hysteria is going from crisis to crisis liek a chess player whose minor and some major pieces are disappearing with every move but who with few slick ploys can still avoid checkmate.

His astonishing performance at Radio Leopoldville yesterday, when in shirtsleeves and with a dozen soldiers he tried to seize the place by force, is remarkably eloquent of the man's courage, impetuosity and naive irrealism.

One can read at least three meanings into the warning cry of his far-leftist adviser, Serge Michel, who pulled him out of the Sten gun's mouth yith the phrase: "Excellency do not expose yourself."

He was met by cool British sublieutenant of the Ghanaian army, who threatened shoot him if his men resisted being disarmed. To Western eyes, he suffered a crushing prestige blow. You could not make a fool of yourself on such a scale in a really Twentieth Century country without resigning.

Act of Courage

But in local Congolese eyes it would seem he acted with laudable courage. He won not mocking laughs but sympathy. For the unpremierlike impotent race which sent him on this mad errang corresponds to a mood every Congolese understands, and the sublieutenant, one of the rare white heroes in this struggle to save the black nation from its own fused in the African mind with the antithhesis of the white Ghanaian eyes, Joseph Ileo, in a press conference last night, appeared a sober, pragmatic, responsible leader which is something the Congo clearly needs.

But in the eyes of the Congo's political caste, Ileo seems colorless Lumumba is still the man who went o jail for the Congo's freedom—a man who shares and therefore understands their own deficiencies.

Apathy Rules

In Leopoldville itself, President Kasavubu's bailiwick, Lumumba is not particularly popular. But neither is he as hated as might be supposed. Apathy, indifference and even a sort of fascinated admiration for his satanic skill in playing with politics and power tend to blunt the edges of any hostility he inspires in the sedate simplicity of Congolese mentality.

All the same, it would be impossible for Lumumba to drive through the African district ii an open car.

Surprising conclusions that all this is adding up to as intimates of both men agree and even insist—is a government of national union in which Ileo and Lumumba will very likely join hands and in which rebel leaders like Jean Bolikango, Albert Kalonji and probably even Moise Tshombe of Katanga also will bury the hatchet, gory as it is with the innocent blood of the Baluba people of Kasai and the Abako demonstrators here.

Lumumba's vanity rather than his idealogy could alone prevent him participating in this half-defeat and save the country.

Another impoderable is the Russian element. Russians are in Lumumba's corner, although it is true their faith in their champion is far from total.

There are African card carriers here, some of whom are ministers and all of whom are woring for the realization of a communist state—but no real Communists The Russians are aware you cannot trust an African be a Communist first and an African second as you can trust a Togliatti, a Thorez or a Browder be a Communist before all else.

"These Congolese Marxists could slip through our fingers like water They're not worth the full treatment." a Communist diplomat remarked to this correspondent recently.

If the straight pro-Lumumba solution is possible with money alone. the Russians can pull Lumuba's chestnuts out of the fire

Taking Advice

Although Lumumba is usually famous for not taking advice when advice is necessary, he certainly is listening now to Russian ideas about strategy to avoid a defeat. The Soviet Embassy has become to some degree Lumumba's back office. It is from there alone he could be kept on the pinnacle.

But even if he holds onto office it seems likely that Lumumba will never be quite as powerful again as was, say, last week or last month. Lumumba's principal undoing will probably have been racism.

It is remarkable how this satanic figure's psychotic racial prejudices have been received unfavorably though the race-conscious are too ashamed to admit it.

His fellow Congolese for most part wisely see the European whom Lumumba so passiontely despises as a highly exploitable agglomeration of gangliae and grey matter, a sort of universal harvester that talks.

Lumumba 'Interned' 3 Hours, Then Set Free

The Washington Post

Washington, D.C.

By Michael Goldsmith

LEOPOLDVILLE, Sept. 12 (AP)—The Congolese army interned Patrice Lumumba for three hours today and then freed him. The power struggle between the Congo's left-leaning Premier and its moderate President, Joseph Kasavubu, remained unresolved.

Kasavubu, as chief of state, named a new 23-man Government to replace Lumumba's Red-backed regime and halt what Kasavubu has called a drift toward chaos and communism. Kasavubu's Premier-designate is Senate President Joseph Ileo.

9-13-60

Whatever the outcome, the Congo is certain to remain an issue in the cold war. The Russians have backed Lumumba with a fleet of planes, 100 trucks and scores of technicians, all sent in outside U. N. channels.

he first announcement of Lumumba's detention was made by his own chief of security, Charles Muzungo.

Surrounded in Villa

About 200 soldiers of the Congolese army, being swiftly coordinated with U. N. forces, made the arrest. They met no resistance when they surrounded Lumumba's villa overlooking the Congo River.

"I do not want any bloodshed," said Lumumba, who became government chief when Belgium freed the Congo June 30. "I will come with you."

He was taken to Camp Leopold II, headquarters of the Capital's 3000-man garrison. He made the trip in a baggage-laden government limousine, accompanied by his wife and two children. Members of Lumumba's staff and a second limousine, with his belongings followed soon afterward.

About three hours later Lumumba reappeared in downtown Leopoldville. He demanded that he be allowed to speak over Radio Leopoldville, which the U. N. Congo command controls.

Though the U. N. had put the station back in service this morning after silencing it for a week, Lumumba was told it could not be used to air his views. U. N. Ghana troops, armed with machine guns, said they had orders to fire if he tried to get into the station again.

Lumumba had sought yesterday to seize the station. He was turned back at gunpoint then by a British lieutenant of the Ghana forces.

Explanation Lacking

There was no explanation for today's surprising change of events. Fifty cars with Europeans gathered around the radio station. Congolese soldiers in camouflaged vehicles chased them away.

Earlier today it had appeared that the United Nations had the situation firmly in hand.

Gen. Victor Lundula, the former sergeant who commands the Congo's 20,000-man army, had a talk with Swedish Maj. Gen. Carl von Horn, U. N. military commander in the Congo. A U. N. spokesman said they discussed reorgnization of the Congolese forces and continued cooperation between the Congolese and U. N. armies.

Then Kasavubu conferred with the U. N. special representative in the Congo, Rajeshwar Dayal of India.

U. N. Security Council postpones Congo debate pending clarification of new, confusing developments. Page A4.

Events in Congo show again that African politics are unlike those of any other country, with even Communists subject to changing influences. Page A28.

U.N. Agrees to Debate U.S. Plan for Africa; Panama Assails Canal

Assembly To Argue Congo, Too

The Atlanta Constitution
Atlanta, Ga.
Thurs. 9-29-60

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (UPI). The United States Wednesday night won General Assembly consideration for President Eisenhower's five-point plan to develop Africa and insure its independence.

The General Assembly Steering Committee also voted, with U.S. support, to put the Congo question on its agenda for a new and full debate.

COUNTERS KHRUSHCHEV

The Eisenhower plan, the American answer to Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev's attempt to grab power in Africa, was put up for debate without Russian objection.

The 21-nation steering committee also accepted Khrushchev's sweeping call for independence for all the world's remaining "colonial territories."

But Soviet delegate Valerian Zorin immediately demanded that this and other Khrushchev propaganda items be considered by the Assembly without first being threshed out in a standing committee.

DEMANDS DEBATE

He said the colonial issue, charges of American aggression, and the Congo question should go before the full body immediately. At the same time he objected to any move to do this with the Hungarian and Tibetan questions.

Normally, the most exhaustive debate takes place in committee, before the final formal Assembly debate on committee recommendations.

The United States first opposed the Congo action because the Soviets had presented it as a "threat to the political independence and territorial integrity of the Congo."

It gave its support when the title was changed to "The question of the Congo."

U.S. Ambassador James J. Wadsworth introduced the Eisenhower African plan with the United States under attack by the Communists as an "almsgiver."

Panama launched a separate attack, charging it had been "deprived" of natural rights in the Panama Canal zone by U.S. policies.

The stage thus was set for three major scraps.

Panama, who only last week was granted the right by the United States to fly its flag alongside the Stars and Stripes in the Canal Zone, presented a series of complaints and demanded major revisions in the Canal Zone Treaty of 1903. Panama said it would not be content until its flag waves "over the whole extension of the Panamanian Isthmus" and the United States stops "discriminating" against Panamanian Canal Zone workers.

President Eisenhower's five points on Africa were:

1. A pledge by all U.N. members to respect African nations' rights to choose their own way of life.

2. Preparation to help Africa maintain its security without wasteful and dangerous competition in armaments.

3. Support of all for the $100-million aid program to the Congo suggested by U.N. Secretary Dag Hammarskjold.

4. U.N. aid to help newly developing African countries shape their long-term modernization programs.

5. All-out U.N. effort to help African countries launch educational activities.

While the policy debate proceeded in the Assembly these developments highlighted the Assembly which Canadian Prime Minister John G. Diefenbaker has called a "circus and drama of personalities:"

1. Australian Prime Minister Robert G. Menzies and New Zealand Premier Walter Nash, alarmed by Soviet verbal attacks on their part of the world, decided to attend the Assembly's "summit session."

2. Youthful King Hussein of Jordan, the first reigning monarch to come here especially for a General Assembly session, arrived.

3. The African membership took another boost with the Security Council's recommendation of Mali and Senegal for admission.

Lumumba's Police Battle Congo Mob

Atlanta Constitution
Atlanta, Ga.
Fri. 8-26-60

By ANDREW BOROWIEC

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo (AP)—Rifle fire and screams of anti-Government mobs Thursday marked the opening of the Leopoldville conference of independent African nations.

Steel-helmeted Congolese police fired over surging crowds clamoring for the death of Premier Patrice Lumumba, host to 11 African governments who answered his appeal for an all-African meeting.

An honor guard, lined up in front of the modernistic Palace of Culture, broke ranks and charged the demonstrators gathered around a dusty square.

As the rifles cracked and police smashed into the crowds with gunbutts, loudspeakers boomed Lumumba's keynote address.

"Gentlemen, you are now making contact with Congolese reality," he said." There is no compromise between liberty and slavery."

Shielded from the tumult by the palace's thick walls, about 50 African delegates listened to Lumumba. They looked grim. From conversations later, it was clear they were shocked.

REPORTER ROUGHED UP

Congolese police and troopers under the command of Col. Joseph Mobutu, army chief of staff, roughed up reporters and photographers covering the riot.

Cameras were seized, some to be returned later, films were destoyed.

Newsmen were pushed around, kicked and slapped.

Russell Howe, a special correspondent of the Washington Post, was slapped in the face by several Congolese soldiers when he refused to give up his camera.

CLUBBED WITH RIFLES

Three Congolese swooped down on AP correspondent Andrew Borowiec when he tried to telephone from a specially set up press room. They slapped the phone from his hand and pushed him outside under a hail of blows from their rifle butts.

Lumumba's chief press aide, a leftist expatriate Frenchman named Serfe Michel, watched the scene pale-faced.

"I cannot help you," he said.

The rioting broke out when Lumumba rode in an open car with Foreign Minister Justin Bomboko to open the conference. A crowd of perhaps 8,000 watched. Goats wandered about the grass and dust.

There was some applause and shouts of "savior."

But soon several thousand supporters of the opposition Abako party roared out: "Death to Lumumba."

Placards raised over the heads of the crowd demanded the resignation of "Lumumba's Fascist government."

"Long live a federated Congo," said a hoisted banner in defiance of Lumumba's efforts to impose tight unity.

It was then that the police and troopers charged.

They were met by a hail of stones.

"Murderers," shouted the crowd, falling back.

At least two policemen were led away, apparently injured.

A score of rioters, some bleeding, were thrown into police trucks.

Atlanta Journal and Constitution
Sun. 8-28-60 p. 4 E

SEPARATISM IN THE CONGO—The strongest separatist movement is in Katanga Province (shaded area), with 1,700,000 natives. In diamond-rich Kasai (2,150,000 people), some tribal leaders want to establish a "mining state." There are also active separatist movements in Equator (1,800,000 persons) and in an area around Leopoldville (which province has 3,200,000). Congo Premier Patrice Lumumba's main strength is in Oriental Province (2,500,000). The Kivu area (2,250,000) has been relatively quiet.

CONGO CRISIS

Turning Point: Africa Growing As U.N. Power

Atlanta Journal & Constitution
Atlanta, Ga.
p. 4 e

By WILLIAM R. FRYE
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y., Aug. 27—A responsible Western diplomat described the Congo crisis this past week as "the turning point of the century." How close he came to the truth was apparent to all who knew what happened—and to all who knew what might have happened. Sun. 8-28-60

U.N. people really held their tack breaths when Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold flew back from the Congo under bitter attack from Premier Patrice Lumumba.

The U.N. cannot legally maintain armed forces on the territory of a country where it is not welcome, unless it is suppressing aggression. But to have purchased Lumumba's welcome at his stated price—help in quelling the Katanga revolt—would have been to put the U.N. in the role of a colonialist oppressor, shooting Congolese who opposed Lumumba, whipping them into line, deciding the country's political destinies.

THIS HAMMARSKJOLD absolutely refused to do. He said he would pull the U.N. out first—even if that meant that Lumumba would call the Russians in.

Nor would he turn the U.N.'s guns onto Lumumba and whip him into line, despite extreme provocation from Lumumba and formidable pressure from within the U.N. command itself. Lumumba was trying to make his quarrel with the U.N. appear to be a quarrel with the U.N.'s white troops only. If Hammarskjold had struck out at him, the U.N. might have been forever discredited in Africa as an agency of the white man.

He stood fast—and won. He did it by rallying African support notably from Tunisia, Liberia, Morocco, and the U.A.R. With them on the side of the majority, Lumumba and the Soviet Union felt obliged to retreat, at least temporarily.

IT WAS unquestionably a hint of things to come. The U.N. General Assembly, which in many ways is a mirror of the outside world, is on the verge of becoming Africa-dominated, in the sense that this fall Africa will be the largest and most influential single continental bloc.

On many issues, its 23 votes (out of 97) will hold the balance of power.

If this force is applied on behalf of the West, it will give the West back its control of the U.N. and create formidable pressure on the Soviet Union—pressure which could change the whole shape of the world.

If Africa allies itself with neutralist Asia and the Communists, the West will find itself in a harried minority. This is one of the things that make the Congo crisis so crucial.

THERE ARE many straws in the wind, if one studies the Congo scene carefully. Here are some:

● Soviet influence. The Kremlin has made disturbing headway in some parts of Africa, notably the Congo and Guinea. But it has also had setbacks. The Soviets delivered a load of unmilled flour to the Congo, only to find that there were no available facilities to mill it. They dumped tons of cement for Ghana on a dock and left it in the rain uncovered. It hardened into an unusable mass. Soviet "aid" quickly lost much of its appeal.

● Racism. Discrimination on the basis of color has begun to appear in Africa—discrimination by black against white. White men in the Congo have been roughed up, had dirt thrown at them, and otherwise made targets of antagonism.

Many responsible African leaders deplore this trend and are working against it. Several delegates spoke out against it this past week in the U.N.

SCARS OF colonialism. Much of the difficulty between the U.N. and Lumumba has arisen from the bitter Congolese hatred of anything Belgian.

Even Egyptians have been assaulted as "dirty Belgians." Lumumba, exploiting this hatred to strengthen his personal position, even objected to Swedish U.N. troops on the ground that King Baudouin's mother, Queen Astrid, was a Swedish princess.

● Pride. Westerners have no idea how deep the yearning for recognition goes in Africa. "I will tell you what is at the bottom of the Congo crisis," Lumumba told a news conference this past week. "The nations are jealous of our power and our greatness."

Even Hammarskjold, who is one of the world's most skilled diplomatists, failed to pay sufficient attention to this factor. He went to Katanga Premier Moise Tshombe directly from New York without first touching base anew with Lumumba, in person. (He had explained his plans in writing.) Lumumba's pride was hurt—and he exploded.

IGNORANCE. In dealing with the Congo, many Westerners forget that just outside the main cities are tribes which engage in cannibalism and in eschipapa, a ceremonial "trial" of "witches" in which the accused drink poison, surviving if "innocent."

Prior to independence day June 30, Congolese bought "independenec tickets" from sharpers who said the tickets would enable them to take over Belgian houses and automobiles on July 1. Credulous Congolese also bought "independence boxes" containing nothing but dirt.

In such circumstaces as these, the U.N. is trying to rescue the Congo.

"It's the turning point of the century," the diplomat said. "Black versus white; the cold war in Africa."

The WORLD in Focus

Some of the complexities of a fast-moving world are put into proper perspective in "The World In Focus," designed for your own background and informed discussion.

SUNDAY, AUG. 28, 1960

4-E

Text of U. S.-British Resolution on Congo

The N.Y. Times

Special to The New York Times.

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y., Dec. 18—Following is the text of a draft of a joint British-United States resolution on the Congo that is being circulated among delegations here prior to submission to the General Assembly:

New York

The General Assembly,

Recalling Resolution 1474 (ES-IV) adopted at its emergency special session on 20 September, 1960, and the Security Council resolutions of 14 July, 22 and 9 August, 1960;

Nyn 12-19-60

Noting with anxiety the continued existence of unsettled conditions in various parts of the Republic of the Congo which have involved acts of lawlessness and of violence against either persons of both Congolese and non-Congolese nationality, including personnel of the United Nations,

p. 4

Mindful of the obligations and responsibilities assumed by the United Nations to assist in the restoration and maintenance of law and order for the purpose of securing the maintenance of international peace and security, and of safeguarding civil liberties and the political independence and territorial integrity of the Republic of the Congo,

Recognizing that the aforementioned obligations and responsibilities are still an urgent United Nations concern and that all necessary action should be taken to assure the continuation and success of the United Nations operation in the Congo in accordance with the pertinent resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council and the purposes and principles of the charter of the United Nations.

1. Requests the Secretary General to continue to discharge the mandate entrusted to him by the United Nations in accordance with the resolutions of the Security Council and the General Assembly referred to above and to continue to use the presence and the machinery of the United Nations to assist the Republic of the Congo in the restoration and maintenance of law and order throughout its territory;

2. Further requests the Secretary General to continue his vigorous efforts to insure that no foreign military or paramilitary personnel are introduced into the Congo or are in the Congo in violation of the pertinent resolutions of the Security Council and Resolution 1474 (ES-IV) of the General Assembly;

3. Calls upon all states to refrain from the direct and indirect provision of arms or other materials of war and military personnel and other assistance for military purposes in the Congo during the temporary period of military assistance through the United Nations, except upon the request of the United Nations through the Secretary General for carrying out the purpose of this resolution, Resolution 1474 (ES-IV) of the General Assembly and the resolutions of 14 July, 22 July and 9 August, 1960, of the Security Council, and also to refrain from direct or indirect measures that might facilitate such action on the part of others;

4. Requests the Secretary General, with due regard to Paragraph 4 of the Security Council resolution of 9 August, 1960, to do everything possible to assist the Chief of State of the Republic of the Congo in establishing conditions in which Parliament can meet and function in security and freedom from outside interference;

5. Declares that any violation of human rights in the Republic of the Congo is inconsistent with the purposes that guide the United Nations action in the Congo and expects that no measures contrary to recognized rules of law and order will be taken by anyone against any persons held prisoner or under arrest anywhere in the Republic of the Congo, and requests the Secretary General to continue his efforts to assist the Republic of the Congo in insuring respect for these rules and for civil and human rights for all persons within tehe country;

6. Expresses the hope that the International Committee of the Red Cross will be allowed to examine detained persons throughout the Republic of the Congo and their places and conditions of detention and otherwise to obtain the necessary assurances for their safety;

7. Expresses the hope that the forthcoming round-table conference to be convened by the Chief of State and the forthcoming visit for the purpose of conciliation to the Republic of the Congo by certain representatives appointed by the Advisory Committee will help to resolve internal conflicts by peaceful means and to preserve the unity and integrity of the Congo;

8. Requests all Congolese to lend practical cooperation to the United Nations in order that the purposes that guide the United Nations operation in the Congo can be fruitfully achieved;

9. Calls on all states to cooperate in giving effect to this resolution.

LUMUMBA BACKER ESCAPES REGIME

The N.Y. Times

General Lundula Makes Way to Stanleyville, a Center of Ex-Premier's Forces

New York

By PAUL HOFMANN

Special to The New York Times.

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo, Nov. 26—Gen. Victor Lundula, a supporter of the deposed premier, Patrice Lumuba, has slipped out of Leopoldville where he was under surveillance by the army regime and has turned up in Stanleyville.

Stanleyville is the capital of Oriental Prince and a center of pro-Lumuba sentiment.

p. 30

The general's move was viewed here as an effort by Mr. Lumumba to strengthen his control over the dissident Congolese army faction in Stanleyville.

Nyn 11-27-60

Prominent figures in the Oriental capital are Louis Lumumba, a brother of the deposed Premier, and Antoine Gizenga, a Communist sympathiser who was Vice Premier in the regime deposed by President Joseph Kasavubu.

Named by Kasavubu

General Lundula, a former sergeant in the forces maintained by the Belgians, was appointed to his rank by President Kasavubu before he revealed himself to be a supporter of Mr. Lumumba.

He had been watched by the forces of Col. Joseuh D. Mobutu, the present Congo Army Chief of Staff, who set aside the politicians and established a commission of young intellectuals and university graduates to stabilize the Government.

The general was able to evade this surveillance, however, and make his way to Stanleyville.

Eight days ago, two army battalions loyal to Colonel Mobutu attempted to overrun the pro-Lumumba forces there and arrest Mr. Gizenga.

The action failed and Colonel Mobutu has charged that United Nations forces interfered with his men.

The United Nations has reported that a contingent of Ethiopian troops in Stanleyville gaven "protection" to Mr. Gizenga for a period of about forty hours—from Friday to Sunday of last week.

Now, reports from Stanleyville indicate, Mr. Gizenga and the pro-Lumumba forces are once again in control of the city of about 40,000 population.

General Was Ousted

President Kasavubu dismissed General Lundula from the army command after Colonel Mobutu's military coup and he has made no overt political moves since then.

Asked about General Lundula a few days ago, Colonel Mobutu said that the former army commander was in retirement and would eventually return to his native village in Kasai Province.

A source close to the officer said that General Lundula and his family traveled by boat for eight days on the Congo River to reach refuge in Stanleyville.

The source said that the general would be recognized there as commanding general of the army.

His flight caused no obvious concern in the regime, although it was viewed as an attempt by Mr. Lumumba, who is still isolated in his official residence here behind a guard of United Nations soldiers, to muster all his forces.

Loyalty Sought

The regime, m an appeal today over the Leopoldville radio, asked the Congolese to demonstrate their devotion to President Kasavubu when he returns to Leopoldville tomorrow from New York and the United Nations.

Mr. Kasavubu arrived today in Brazzaville, across the river in the former French Congo, but he remained as a guest for independence day celebrations.

He is expected in Leopoldville at 3 P. M. tomorrow and, after welcoming ceremonies, is expected to receive a report on plans for around-table conference of all Congolese political leaders.

Moise Tshombe, president of secessionist Katanga Province, has agreed to participate in the meeting if it is held in his capital city, Elisabethville.

Mr. Kasavubu was said to have renewed his efforts for the round-table meeting in an attempt to avoid the intervention here of a United Nations conciliation commission of African and Asian nations.

United Press International

MAKES SURPRISE TRIP: Gen. Victor Lundula, deposed chief of Congolese Army. He went to Stanleyville, a pro-Lumumba area.

Lumumba in Jail Tests Mobutu Skill

The Christian Science Monitor
Boston, Mass.

By Geoffrey Godsell

Assistant Overseas News Editor of The Christian Science Monitor

Patrice Lumumba in jail presents an even bigger problem than he did during the weeks when he was sheltering in the official residence of the Congolese Premier behind a protective screen of United Nations troops. Now that Congolese Army leader Col. Joseph Mobutu has Mr. Lumumba in his hands, the all-important question is: What will he do with him?

Mon. 12-5-60

Unattractive and dangerous though he may seem to the West, there is little doubt that Mr. Lumumba is to the more radically inclined younger African nationalists an African nationalist hero. To this generation of Africans in all parts of the continent, the most immediate aim is to rid their continent of direct Western political control and influence. This is understandable when one recalls that they identify the humiliation and exploitation which they feel they have suffered during the past century as coming exclusively from the Western world.

The confusing and at times almost ludicrous course of events in the Congo has tended in the eyes of many younger Africans to separate the sheep from the goats among the various figures who have emerged on the Congolese political scene. This process of separation has marked out Mr. Lumumba more and more as the one African among them — and African Western hostility to him has strengthened this image of him.

UN Vote Noted

Western favoring of President Kasavubu and Colonel Mobutu—particularly Western insistence on the seating of Mr. Kasavubu's delegation at the United Nations — has, to many Africans, further tarnished those two men as potential if not actual stooges of the West, as the agents through whom Western political control will return to the Congo.

It will not have escaped their notice that in the past couple of months many Belgians have in fact returned to the Congo, some of them to become advisers to the commissioners who, in name at any rate, are governing the Congo with the approval of Mr. Kasavubu and Colonel Mobutu.

The physical maltreatment of Mr. Lumumba—some of it under Colonel Mobutu's eyes — when he was brought back to Léopoldville will probably enhance Mr. Lumumba's status as a hero or martyr and prove harmful to his Congolese foes.

And of course if Colonel Mobutu now meted out summary or severe punishment to Mr. Lumumba, the danger is that the latter might become an even greater hero or martyr. And there is little doubt that the West would find itself getting much of the blame for what had happened to him.

If he were detained indefinitely—either at Thysville, about 100 miles from Léopoldville, where Colonel Mobutu has removed him, or at some more remote spot—he could become a kind of mystic leader, as the detained Jomo Kenyatta has to African nationalists in Kenya.

Soviet Role Involved

One has only to look at pictures of Mr. Lumumba in the hands of his captors to realize that he himself feels neither cowed nor defeated. As an orator and intriguer he has shown that he has singular abilities; and in Africa these qualities seem to have unusual power over an assembly or crowd.

Mr. Lumumba's unattractiveness to the West is all the greater because of his willingness—until Colonel Mobutu strode on stage—to accept Soviet aid and of continued Soviet sponsorship of his cause.

But to many Africans this is not reprehensible, for to them help is acceptable from any quarter when an African nationalist has his back to the wall —as they see it—in the face of the most immediate danger of all, maintenance or return of Western political control.

African nationalists, even those opposed to the Balkanization of their continent, are unlikely to be impressed by reports that Mr. Lumumba had planned to set up a breakaway Congolese government in Stanleyville which would have been immediately recognized by Communist countries and those states of Asia and Africa which support him. To many African nationalists such a government would have been the legitimate African government of the entire Congo.

I'm Congo Boss, Lumumba Aide Says

The Miami Herald

LEOPOLDVILLE, The Congo (AP) — A leftist lieutenant of deposed Premier Patrice Lumumba proclaimed himself ruler of the Congo Tuesday, raising fears of civil war in this troubled land.

12-14-60

From Lumumba's old stronghold of Stanleyville in the Northeast Congo, Antoine Gizenga cabled United Nations Secretary - General Dag Hammarskjold he had assumed the premiership.

GIZENGA

The deputy premier in Lumumba's old regime also announced that the capital of the Congo henceforth would be Stanleyville instead of Leopoldville.

Gizenga's proclamation is expected to have little effect in areas beyond his control, but his allies in the Soviet and African blocs are expected to rally to his cause in the U.N. and may extend diplomatic recognition.

Miami Fla.

It was Gizenga's rebellious regime in Oriental province that threatened to round up and behead white hostages unless Lumumba was released from army prison in Thysville east of Leopoldville.

12-14-60

This threat was dropped when the U.N. intervened.

President Joseph Kasavubu and Col. Joseph Mobutu, heading the pro-Western regime in Leopoldville, ignored the ultimatum.

The U.N. mission in the Congo immediately notified foreign diplomats in Leopoldville of Gizenga's challenge to the Congolese government.

Many fear Gizenga's bid for power could start new warfare between Mobutu's army and the Communist-supported provincial government at Stanleyville. Mobutu boasts strong support in Equator province, to the west of Oriental province. He has reinforced his troops in Equator.

The U.N. mission is not expected to recognize Gizenga's proclamation now.

Western diplomats said they have expected such a move by Gizenga ever since Lumumba was captured trying to reach Stanleyville and was brought back to Leopoldville.

Congo Transport Curb Scored; U. N. Sees a Peril to Operation

Military Aide Declares Plan of Regime Is a Violation of Earlier Accords

The N.Y. Times

By PAUL HOFMANN

Special to The New York Times.

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo, Dec. 8 — The United Nations Command denounced today what it described as an attempt by Congolese authorities to paralyze its operations here by interfering with transport.

Brig. Indar Jit Rikhye of India, military adviser at United Nations headquarters here, disclosed that the Security Department of the Congolese regime had ordered the company that handles most of the United Nations' transport not to move any strategic materials, including vehicles, without previous authorization by the Congolese authorities.

"This is the most serious challenge to the United Nations operations in the Congo since they started," Brigadier Rikhye declared.

The United Nations command, the Indian said, will refer the matter to the Security Council unless an agreement is reached by Tuesday, when a shipment will be attempted in a test case.

Move Called Illegal

The United Nations officials contend that they are operating in the Congo exclusively on orders and under the authority of the Security Council and General Assembly. They view the Congolese attempt to control shipments as a violation of the original accords between the Government of Leopoldville and the United Nations Command.

Meanwhile, the 20,000-man United Nations force in the Congo is in a phase of regrouping as a result of new commitments in various troubled areas.

Brigadier Rikhye indicated that the United Nations Command would meet any reduction in its force by cutbacks "in nonessential areas."

He appeared to have little hope for reinforcements to fill gaps in the force threatened yesterday. Yugoslavia, Ceylon and the United Arab Republic indicated that they would withdraw contingents.

Company Called Monopoly

The company charged with almost all United Nations transport by river, road and rail is Otraco, termed by Brigadier Rikhye a "semi-state transport monopoly." The Congolese plan to control all United Nations movements by Otraco except those involving food and medicines. Belgian interests are prominent in the Otraco combine.

According to Brigadier Rikhye the Congolese Security Department had given many reasons for its move. The Brigadier said none was relavent, "except the question of the priority of transports essential to the civilian sector."

However, the United Nations official said, Otraco representatives declared that civilian needs had not been affected by United Nations transports.

Brigadier Rikhye disclosed that the Ethiopian garrison of the city of Stanleyville was being reinforced by troops from other parts of Oriental, or Eastern, Province following outbreaks of violence against Europeans and United Nations personnel there.

Associated Press

Brig. Indar Jit Rikhye

Forces supporting Patrice Lumumba, the imprisoned former Premier, have invaded Equator Province near the river town of Bumba. An ordnance issued here yesterday imposed martial law on Oriental Province.

At the end of a two-day visit to Leopoldville, three United States Democratic Senators emphasized American support for the United Nations in the Congo.

Senator Frank Church of Idaho said the United Nations was "the proper agency to cope with the Congolese problem at this time."

The other Senators are Frank E. Moss of Utah and Gale W. McGee of Wyoming. All are members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

Meanwhile, Edward Kennedy, brother of President-elect John F. Kennedy, said the new President would use his prestige to obtain recognition of full civil rights for all American Negroes.

Edward M. Kennedy, accompanying the Senators as a consultant, is expected to make a special report for the President-elect on his fifteen-day tour of nine African countries.

Clash in Katanga Repeated

ELISABETHVILLE, the Congo, Dec. 8 (AP)—Rebel tribesmen and Katanga policemen clashed in northern Katanga Province yesterday, leaving at least thirty-five dead, reports reaching here said today.

The Katanga Government said thirty rebels had been killed. Other reports said five Katanga policemen had been slain and four wounded.

The fighting broke out near the town of Kongolo, long harassed by Baluba tribesmen hostile to the secessionist Katanga regime.

Mission Arrives in Lagos

Special to The New York Times.

LAGOS, Nigeria, Dec. 8—A Senate fact-finding mission accompanied by Edward M. Kennedy, brother of the United States President-elect, arrived here today from the Congo.

On the mission are Senators Church, Moss and McGee.

At the airport, Mr. Kennedy said President-elect Kennedy "has a special place in his heart for new nations of Africa and that is why I am here."

The four Americans will meet Nigerian leaders tomorrow. They are scheduled to arrive in Ghana Sunday.

SOVIET CHARGES U.N. CHIEF ASSISTS FOES OF LUMUMBA

The N.Y. Times

New York

Zorin Tells Council Assassins Led by Mobutu Receive Aid From Hammarskjold

Trib. 12-9-60

BELGIAN ROLE ASSAILED

Brussels Says It Will Not Call Citizens Home—Transport Curb in Congo Assailed

By THOMAS J. HAMILTON

Special to The New York Times.

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y., Dec. 8—The Soviet Union charged today that Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold had fully associated himself with "the bands of hired assassins, directed by Mobutu," who had arrested Patrice Lumumba, deposed Premier of the Congo.

Valerian A. Zorin, the Soviet representative, told the Security Coucil that Mr. Hammarskjold, instead of taking action to liquidate the forces of Col. Joseph D. Mobutu, Congolese chief of staff, had asked them to "observe some kind of appearance of respectability in this dirty business."

[In Leopoldville, the United Nations command said an order by the Congolese regime would paralyze transport.]

Cites Plea on Red Cross

The Soviet representative made his charge in the Security Council in characterizing the Secretary General's recent request that representatives of the International Red Cross be permitted to check on the conditions under which Mr. Lumumba is being held.

Mr. Zorin, whose ninety-minute speech took up almost the entire meeting of the Security Council, urged the adoption of a Soviet resolution calling for the immediate release of Mr. Lumumba and his supporters and his restoration as Premier.

The Soviet proposal would also instruct the United Nations' Congo force to "disarm the terrorist bands of Mobutu" immediately. It would call upon Belgium to withdraw "Belgian military, paramilitary and civil personnel from the Congo" at once.

Belgium, in a memorandum submitted to the Council, charged that a report submitted Nov. 2 by Rajeshwar Dayal, Mr. Hammarskjold's special representative in the Congo, contained "tendentious judgments based upon a series of purely subjective allegations and interpretations, ambiguous innuendoes, unfounded insinuations and arbitrary interpretations of the decisions and resolutions of the United Nations."

The memorandum said Mr. Dayal had implied that the principal source of the disorders in the Congo was "increasing evidence of the return of Belgian nationals into many phases of public life."

It repeated an earlier offer to send a special representative to New York to clear up "any misunderstanding" between Belgium and the Secretary General.

Withdrawal Opposed

"The Belgians who have returned to the Congo have done so in accordance with the wishes and often at the express invitation of the Congolese authorities," the memorandum said. It added that they would be withdrawn only at the request of the local authorities.

"Belgium cannot be prevented from helping to restore prosperity in the Congo in the manner desired by the Congolese authorities," the memorandum declared.

Meanwhile, Joseph Kasavubu, President of the Congo, protested to Mr. Hammarskjold against the protection given to Mr. Lumumba by United Nations forces in Leopoldville before the deposed Premier took flight.

Mr. Kasavubu said it was unthinkable for the United Nations to "allow an accused person under its protection to continue his nefarious and subversive activities."

The system of "unwarranted protection" must be ended if there is to be "fruitful and effective collaboration" between the United Nations Congo force and Congolese authorities, Mr. Kasavubu declared.

However, Mr. Kasavubu said that the following charges had been placed against the deposed Premier:

Usurpation of public powers; assaults on individual freedom accompanied by physical torture; attacks against the security of the state; organization of hostile bands for purposes of devastation, massacre and pillage, and inciting soldiers to commit offenses.

Mr. Kasavubu asked "what more" was desired by the delegations that had urged him to intercede in behalf of Mr. Lumumba.

"Must we in turn investigate the treatment the members of the opposition in Ghana are receiving, ascertain what has become of General Naguib in Egypt and recall the victims of the Hungarian insurrection?" he asked.

In a second communication, Mr. Kasavubu said Mr. Lumumba had been "arrested, not abducted" and that "two physicians have been able to visit this man and have concluded that he is in a satisfactory state of health."

Mr. Kasavubu did not refer to Mr. Hammarskjold's request that Mr. Lumumba be treated under "due process of law" or to the request regarding visits by International Red Cross representatives.

Mr. Kasavubu indicated that every effort would be made to grant Mr. Lumumba a fair trial.

U. N. Chief Clarifies View

Mr. Hammarskjold limited himself today to the brief statement that he had not mentioned the return of Belgians to the Congo in his speech last night because he had no factual information to add to Mr. Dayal's report of Nov. 2.

Last night, in a forty-minute defense of his Congo policy, the Secretary General said that if the United Nations force was withdrawn, "I fear everything would crumble."

Without mentioning earlier Soviet charges that he had been a "lackey" of the North Atlantic powers and demonstrated his "servility," Mr. Hammarskjold said:

"There have been no shifts in policy or changes of approach, nor have we been 'lackeys' of anybody or shown 'servility' to any interest."

The Secretary General insisted that if the United Nations supported Mr. Lumumba's return it would be violating the United Nations Charter and would also violate earlier Security Council resolutions on the Congo.

Mr. Hammarskjold said that nobody should be surprised by the fact that United Nations operations in the Congo had been attacked in succession "by leading personalities in the Congo of various factions, and by public opinion or Governments from the East to the West."

Denies Shift in Policy

The Secretary General conceded that mistakes "of course" had been made, but he emphasized that there had been no change of policy "implying a departure from the aims and principles proper to the organization." He repeated the reply he made to attacks by Premier Khrushchev earlier in the Assembly session: "I would rather like to see the break on this principle than a drift on compromise," he said. "What is now laid at the door of the United Nations as a step of the failure of the Congo political leaders of the Congo national assistance for the creation of normal political life within the country," Mr. Hammarskjold declared.

He conceded that these were "harsh words," but he said the United Nations too often was the unparalleled interpretage of its people to take advan-used "as a whipping boy by those who wish to unburden themselves of their own responsibilities."

The aim of the United Nations' Congo operation, he said, is "to achieve the withdrawal of Belgian troops" and to "maintain proper protection for life and property."

Brussel Shuns Katanga Move

Special to The New York Times.

BRUSSELS, Belgium, Dec. 8—Foregin Minister Pierre Wigny indicated today that Belgium had no intention of recognizing Katanga Province as independent from the Republic of the Congo.

His statement was made during the presence in Brussels of Moise Tshombe, President of Katanga, who declared the province independent in July.

Mr. Tshombe has been received by King Baudouin and presented with a decoration. He gave the King a wedding present of two blocks of malachite, a rare mineral. King Baudouin will marry Doña Fabiola de Mora y Aragon Thursday.

M. Wigny, addressing a club of politicians and diplomats, called the Katanga problem a question of interior Congolese politics. He said he "refused energetically" to take a position on the question.

However, M. Wigny said, "Tshombe has proved the sincerity of his position and has reinforced it."

The New York Times

STAFF CONFERENCE: Dag Hammarskjold, left, Secretary General of U. N., chatting with Georgi P. Arkadyev, Under Secretary General, before yesterday's session.

Chronology of Violence in Congo Since June 30

(By The Associated Press)

Here is a chronology of major events affecting the Congo in the last six months:

June 30—Congo independent after 80-year Belgian rule; Joseph Kasavubu first president, Patrice Lumumba first premier.

July 5—Congolese troops mutiny at Thysville, seize their Belgian commanders, harass Europeans.

July 8—Congolese troops terrorize Leopoldville; thousands of Europeans flee; Belgian paratroops move into Elisabethville over Lumumba protests.

July 11—President Moise Tshombe of Katanga Province (Elisabethville) accuses Lumumba of Communist tactics, declares province independent; Leopoldville government appeals for U. N. help.

July 15—First U. N. troops airlifted by U. S. Air Force into Congo; Lumumba threatens to call in Soviet troops if Belgian troops stay.

July 22 — Lumumba goes to Washington seeking friendship and aid.

July 26—U. N. Secretary-General Hammarskjold flies to Belgium and the Congo.

Aug. 3 — Tshombe mobilizes troops to keep U. N. forces out of Katanga.

Aug. 9—Belgian ambassador expelled; Lumumba threatens Katanga invasion with his own troops; rioting in Leopoldville; Lumumba's car stoned.

Aug. 11—Hammarskjold arrives again and sends U. N. troops into Katanga.

Aug. 20—Kasavubu's Abako party vows to get rid of Lumumba.

Aug. 27—U. S. Air Force airlift crew beaten by raiding Congolese.

Sept. 5—Kasavubu fires Lumumba, who refuses to quit premiership; national assembly rules both can stay.

Sept. 7—President Eisenhower warns Soviet Union to keep hands off Congo.

Sept. 14—Col. Joseph Mobutu, chief of staff, takes over government by army rule, orders Soviet diplomats and technicians out, names college of commissioners to head government.

Sept. 15—Congolese soldiers try to lynch Lumumba.

Sept. 17—Soviets leave Congo quietly after burning embassy papers.

Sept. 18—Lumumba places himself under U. N. protection.

Sept. 20—Overwhelming confidence vote in U. N. assembly for Hammarskjold's Congo policies.

Sept. 23 — Soviet Premier Khrushchev at U. N. assembly demands Hammarskjold ouster over Congo policies; move defeated.

Oct, 11—U. N. command defies Mobutu order to surrender Lumumba.

Nov. 9—Irish U. N. patrol of nine men wiped out by tribesmen in Katanga.

Nov. 22—Mobutu troops attack U. N. guard at Ghana embassy, force Ghana charge d'affaires out of Congo as enemy; Kasavubu delegation wins U. N. seat.

Dec. 2—Lumumba caught trying to flee to Stanleyville stronghold, returned to Leopoldville in manacles.

Mobutu Insists U. N. Oust Ghana and Guinea Troops

Charges Interference in Congo's Affairs —Students Take Over Ministries —Lumumba's Arrest Is Sought

By HENRY TANNER

Special to The New York Times.

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo, Sept. 21—Col. Joseph D. Mobutu, the Congo Army leader, disclosed tonight that he had asked the United Nations to withdraw Ghanaian and Guinean troops from the country.

He said that he had made request to the United Nations mission here in a letter Sunday. He was still waiting for a reply from Rajeshwar Dayal, Secretary Dag Hammarskjold's personal representative here, he said. Colonel Mobutu did not spell out the reasons for his request except to say that the two contingents had "interfered in internal affairs of the Congo." Proof of the interference was found in "documents recently discovered," he added.

[Reuters reported from Leopoldville that Colonel Morutu said that it would "be a question for our General Staff" if the United Nations did not honor the reqeust. He was quoted as saying that documents had been discovered involving "Communists and Guineans and President Kwame Nkrumah of Ghana.]

Ghana has about 2,500 troops in the Congo forces of the United Nations; Guinea has about 600 in the interior and a few stationed here.

The Ghanians have played a key role in the United Nations intervention. When the United Nations assumed control of radio stations and airports shortly after the dismissal of Patrice Lumumba as Premier by President Joseph Kasavubu, the Ghanians were assigned as guards. For the last ten days, Ghanians have been guarding the official residence where Mr. Lumumba is holding out against his opponents.

Guinea's soldiers in the capital have been in evidence only as sentries in front of the residence of Gen. Lansane Diane, their commander. Mr. Lumumba and several of his closest associates were understood to have found refuge in the general's house for several nights when they were threatened with arrest.

Today, for first time, soldiers from Sudan were added to the Ghanaians guarding Mr. Lumumba's residence. United Nations sources repeated their report that the guards had orders not to obstruct Mr. Lumumba's arrest if a legal warrant was produced.

Colonel Mobutu's powers appeared to be growing as the youthful members of the "College of High Commissioners" took over the modern administration building that houses most Government ministries.

Moving under the cover of a column of armored vehicles, they also took charge of the radio station and, finally, occupied the officers that had previously belonged to Mr. Lumumba.

Mr. Lumumba and a few of his adherents were still holding out in his residence, less than fifty yards from the offices occupied today by the "College of High Commissioners."

Mobutu Complains

Colonel Mobutu, who assumed power a week ago to "neutralize" feuding politicians, complained today that Ghanaian troops had prevented Mr. Lumumba's arrest. Colonel Mobutu said that his officers had produced a legal warrant, signed by the Attorney General.

President Joseph Kasavubu was understood to have addressed a similar protest to President Nkrumah of Ghana.

The colonel's complaint appeared to be a departure from previous agreements. He stated before that he had no intention of arresting Mr. Lumumba.

Today he also moved against two of Mr. Lumumba's key advisers, Serge Michel, a Frenchman working for the Algerian Porvisional Government in Tunis, and Mme. Andrée Blouin, who is traveling on a Guinean passport.

Colonel Mobutu expelled them from the country.

Mr. Michel had been serving as a press secretary to Mr. Lumumba. Mme. Blouin was understood to have been an adviser to Mr. Lumumba and Anicet Kashamura, Mr. Lumumba's Information Minister and one of the most radical members his cabinet.

[Mme. Blouin, who makes a glamorous appearance, first attracted notice in Leopoldville as an adviser to Deputy Premier Antoine Gizenga. Formerly she was an adviser to Sékou Touré, now President of Guinea. Both men have pronounced Leftist leanings. Mme. Blouin is said to be of Belgian and African parentage.]

The move into the ministerial offices today was interpreted as a new, important step toward consolidation of Colonel Mobutu's strength. The "College of Students and University Graduates" was his idea. He announced in his first public statement a week ago his intention to turn the country over to a youthful elite.

The troops who escorted the group were darwn from the reinforcements that Colonel Mobutu brought to Leopoldville from Thysville during the last few days.

They came from highly trained and well-equipped units stationed on the Congo River at Thysville.

Their training was evident in the businesslike way that they moved their armored vehicles into position and trained their bazookas and heavy guns on the windows and doors of the office buildings.

The unit, showing control and discipline under Colonel Mobutu, was the army group whose mutiny at Thysville in early July touched off the entire sequence of events that has rocked the Congo two months.

Radio Appeal to Workers

The "College of High Commissioners" made a radio appeal later in the day, urging civil servants to return to work. Several hundred had returned by mid-afternoon and the soldiers, who had been guarding the building, were sent away.

Later in the afternoon the commissioners met for their first business session and adopted what was later described as a public works program to be launched next week.

There are 80,000 unemployed i nthe Leopoldville area, according to official estimates. The commissioners issued an appeal for a cease-fire to forces of Albert Kalonji, head of the secessionist state of South Kasai.

In another development today, a spokesman for the United Nations announced that United Nations forces had been forced to open fire twice during the last five days in conflicts near Luluabourg, capital of Kasai Province. Tribesmen suffered casualties in one of these incidents, he said.

The first incident occurred near the town of Lalenda, south of Luluabourg, last Friday.

The United Nations spokesman said that Kanyoka tribesmen there had ripped up railroad tracks and clashed with Liberian troops of the United Nations.

The second incident occurred yesterday near Gandrajika, east of Luluabourg a column of tunisian troops was said to have been ambushed by followers of Mr. Kalonji.

ECONOMIC CONTROL DECREED FOR CONGO

Interim Government's First Move Is to Put Curbs on Money and Trade

By HENRY TANNER

Special to The New York Times.

LEOPOLDVILLE, The Congo, Oct. 7—The Congo's caretaker Government of students and university graduates published legislation today establishing a National Monetary Board and imposing strict controls on currency and exports and imports.

The legislation was the first concrete step in economic policy by Congo authorities since the proclamation of independence more than three months ago.

The Monetary Board will include two foreign banking experts and four Congolese. A Swiss banker has been named chairman, according to informed sources.

The board is to draft bills for creation of a Congo national bank and the printing of new currency. It will set out "general principles" on monetary policies and lay down rules for new private banks.

The legislation was signed by President Joseph Kasavubu and Justin Bomboko, chairman of the "College of High Commissioners" that is acting as the Caretaker Government.

Antoine Ndole, High Commissioner for Finance, also signed.

A key provision is that the chairman and members of the monetary board will be named by the chief of state "after consultations with the Secretary of the United Nations."

This provision was fiercely attacked by the deposed Premier, Patrice Lumumba, when it appeared in a draft bill several weeks ago. Mr. Lumumba cited it as an example of President Kasavubu's "subservience to foreign imperialists" and called it an act of "high treason."

It was one of Mr. Lumumba's principal arguments when he sought Parliamentary backing in his conflict with the President.

Lumumba Thwarted Again

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo, Oct. 7 (Reuters)—Col. Joseph D. Mobutu, the army leader, thwarted a fresh attempt today by the deposed Premier, Patrice Lumumba, to return to power.

Lumumba, who occupies the Premier's residence here, circulated a press statement this morning announcing a new Cabinet.

But Colonel Mobutu's forces moved in swiftly and arrested twelve prominent pro-Lumumba followers. Some of them were listed as new Cabinet ministers.

The army leader then declared that the newly announced government did not exist.

Diplomats interpreted today's developments as a sign that Mr. Lumumba's position was becoming increasingly weak.

Pictorial Parade

ACTS IN THE CONGO: Col. Joseph D. Mobutu, the army leader. He caused the arrest of twelve followers of Patrice Lumumba, deposed Premier of Congo.

AIDE OF MOBUTU BEATEN IN CONGO

The N. Y. Times

Lumumba Followers Attack Finance Chief Appointed by Military Regime

New York, N.Y.

By PAUL HOFMANN

Special to The New York Times.

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo, Oct. 14—A member of the military regime's governing commission was attacked and injured tonight by a mob of Lumumba followers.

The official, Albert Ndele, High Commissioner of Finance, received a head injury, but a physician said he was not in serious condition.

Two of Mr. Ndele's assistants were kidnapped by the youthful assailants. Mr. Ndele was escorted home by a detail of Congolese police that was rushed to Leopoldville's leading hotel, where the attack occurred.

United Nations personnel did not intervene. One bewildered Ghanaian soldier of the United Nations force stood by passively as the followers of Patrice Lumumba, the deposed Premier, assaulted Mr. Ndele.

Ndele Holds Conference

The attack followed a news conference in which Mr. Ndele strongly attacked communism.

"We not only fight colonialism but we will fight also communism," he declared. "There are certain nations that cause horror in us."

Mr. Ndele noted, however, that the Congo was ready to establish correct diplomatic relations with all countries. The main subject of Mr. Ndele's news conference was the dire financial situation of the Congo.

Mr. Ndele is a member of the governing commission appointed by Col. Joseph D. Mobutu and President Joseph Kasavubu. The commission was named after Colonel Mobutu, Chief of Staff of the Congo Army, assumed power in the name of the army Sept. 14. The colonel acted after Mr. Lumumba refused to bow to his dismissal as Premier by Mr. Kasavubu.

Mr. Ndele noted today that the Congo meets another critical deadline tomorrow. More than 20,000 soldiers and police men and about 200,000 other workers in the public service expect to be paid by a military regime that has no funds, no credit and almost no revenues.

The United Nations assured the governing commission today that the Congo would be able to fulfill its Oct. 15 obligations, at least in essentials.

U. N. to Supply Funds

The United Nations apparently has no choice but to provide funds for Colonel Mobutu's regime. Another payless Saturday, it is believed, would mean more trouble.

Last Saturday the Leopoldville police mutineed and locked up municipal and provincial officials for several hours. They demanded back pay and raises. If a similar crisis arose in the army and other state services, where wages and salaries are due tomorrow, the situation would be more serious.

Unemployment, too, is a crucial problem. Henri Raymond of the International Labor Office said here today that most of Leopoldville's many jobless were "near the starvation level."

Mr. Raymond, a labor expert who is advising the United Nations here, said there were nearly 60,000 unemployed in the Congo capital. This accounts for about half of the unemployed in the country.

Mr. Raymond said United Na- were preparing work programs with a view ofemploying a maximum number of Congolese.

Colonel Mobutu celebrated his thirtieth birthday today by ordering the withdrawal of some of his troops surrounding Mr. Lumumba's official residence.

President aKsavubu's office released the text of a message to Secretary General Hammarskjold, in which Mr. Kasavubu protested the United Nations veto of Mr. Lumumba's arrest. Mr. Kasavubu said in the message that Mr. Lumumba was wanted not only for misuse of political powers, but also for other offenses, such as personal vendettas.

Aide Reports Katanga Is Organizing Services

Evariste Kimba

The Government of Katanga in the former Belgian Congo, a province that has dependent of the new Repub- declared itself a republic inlic of the Congo, is organizing governmental services, Evariste Kimba said yesterday.

Mr. Kimba, who was designated Foreign Minister of Katanga by Moise Tshombe, its popularly elected President, said the Government was printing money in Switzerland and passports in its capital of Elisabethville.

He also declared it had opened offices in New York and Brussels where foreign trade is promoted and commercial documents are validated. Soon these will be required for trade and travel in Katanga, he said.

Mr. Kimba is 34 years old, 6 foot 1 inch tall and athletically built—he used to play soccer for St. Boniface Institute in Elisabethville. He held a two-hour news conference to mark the opening of the Katanga Information Services ta 609 Fifth Avenue near Forty-ninth Street.

18a 1960

CONGO

London Sees Rebuffs on Congo As Major Setback to Moscow

The New York Times

New York Post 9/11

Blow to Soviet Efforts in Africa Noted but West Is Warned of Overconfidence —Germans Cite Propaganda Loss

Times 9-22-60

Special to The New York Times.

LONDON, Sept. 21—The rebuffs suffered by the Soviet Union in the Congo and at the United Nations are regarded here as major setbacks in Moscow's attempts to bring Africa within its influence.

Yet British newspapers and officials are warning that it would be premature to crow.

The officials feel that the situation in the Congo is still so unsettled that almost anything could happen there. They have also come to feel, however, that the growth of the Asian-African group in the United Nations need not represent a threat to the West.

While this group of nations may vote as a bloc on so-called colonial questions, British officials believe that its members will show a wide divergence on other problems. They are reasonably confident, for example, of obtaining support from the bloc for the Western disarmament position.

Slow Recovery Foreseen

The expulsion of the Soviet Ambassador and other Soviet diplomats from the Congo is seen as an extremely humiliating blow from which it will take the Soviet Union a long time to recover.

The British also regard the 70-to-0 vote by which the United Nations General Assembly backed the Asian-African resolution supporting Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold as a blunt warning to the Soviet Union to keep its hands off Africa.

The Daily Telegraph described the action in the Assembly as a diplomatic rebuff for Premier Khrushchev "far more humiliating than any physical buffeting he received from the hostile dockside crowds on his arrival in New York to attend the new Assembly session."

Common Interest Noted

"What he finds himself up against, quite contrary to anybody's expectations, is the emergence of a common diplomatic interest between the Western powers and the Afro-Asian bloc," the newspaper said.

"Neither Britain and America nor the uncommitted countries of Africa and Asia wish to see the 'cold war' introduced into the African continent. Both consider that the best way of preventing this dread eventuality is to limit all outside intervention in the Congo to the United Nations."

The Daily Telegraph said that Mr. Khrushchev, "blinded by ideology," could not believe the capitalist powers could actually favor this course.

For the time being, it added, the Soviet Premier is not only in the wrong but is quite clearly seen to be so, and this has not been the case since the Hungarian tragedy.

The Yorkshire Post said that quite without Western assistance the Communists were busy digging their own graves "about the citadels and camps of African nationalism."

U. S. Ambassador Praised

Writing from Leopoldville, the Congo capital, Donald Seaman, a correspondent for The Daily Express, said the Russians had been outsmarted, humiliated and completely outgeneraled there.

For that he gave the United States Ambassador, Clare H. Timberlake, the chief credit. He said that Mr. Timberlake had the scalp of the Soviet Ambassador, Mikhail D. Yakovlev, dangling from his diplomatic belt.

"You will travel many miles and find few men so single-minded," Mr. Seaman wrote. "He is the typical all-American diplomat: shirt-sleeved, easy to call on, no stuffiness or formality."

'Telling Blow' Is Seen

LONDON, Sept. 21 (Reuters)—The West German newspaper Deutsche Zeitung said today the United Nations vote supporting Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold "not only struck the Soviet Union a telling blow but also very largely destroyed Khrushchev's propaganda ideas before the Assembly proper started."

Yet the Neue Rhein Zeitung, published in Essen, saw danger in the hostile reception given Mr. Khrushchev and other Communist leaders, spotlighting the need to protect the Communist bosses.

Chinese newspapers carried only brief reports on the United Nations vote on the Congo, without editorial comment. But Jenmin Jihpad, the official organ of the Chinese Communist party, headlined its report: "United Nations emergency session winds up discussion of the Congo problem—United States continues to use the United Nations to interfere in the Congo."

The East German news agency A. D. N. asked Mr. Hammarskjold to intercede with the State Department to allow East German reporters to attend the General Assembly meeting.

The East German Foreign Minister, Lothar Bolz, said yesterday that the United States had not yet given visas to two East German reporters who are to cover the Assembly.

France Regrets 'Propaganda'

Special to The New York Times.

PARIS, Sept. 21—The French Government expressed regret tonight at what it termed the "propaganda, sensation and overbidding" going on at the United Nations General Assembly session in New York.

This view was announced by Louis Terrenoire, Minister of Information, after a Cabinet meeting presided over by President de Gaulle.

Because of such detrimental characteristics of the Assembly session there is "a risk of gravely falsifying the debates and resolutions," M. Terrenoire said.

The Cabinet welcomed the entry into the world organization of eleven former French colonies in Africa as independent states.

M. Terrenoire said France had decided to support the entry "as soon as possible" of the Mali, meaning the Republic of Sudan, and the Republic of Senegal into the United Nations. He did not use the expression "Mali Federation," which, until Aug. 20, was the title of the union between Senegal and Sudan. On that date Senegal seceded from the federation.

Victory Termed 'Precarious'

LONDON, Sept. 21 (UPI)—The Paris newspaper Figaro said today that Premier Khrushchev's defeat in the United Nations was no better than a "precarious victory" for Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold.

Figaro said Mr. Khrushchev could make the Secretary General's position "untenable" merely by declaring in public that he had lost confidence in Mr. Hammarskjold.

SOVIET INFLUENCE IN CONGO DOUBTED

The New York Times

Observers Term Result of Technicians' Two-Month Penetration Negligible

New York

Special to The New York Times.

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo, Sept. 21—Reports from the interior tonight indicated that the withdrawal of Soviet technicians from the Congo might be nearing completion.

Herald 9-22-60

As far as was known here, all of the seventeen Ilyushin twin-engine turboprop planes that the Soviet Union gave to the Government of Patrice Lumumba have left, heavily loaded with equipment and propaganda material that had been brought in during the two-month period of Soviet penetration.

The equipment that has been evacuated included arms and ammunition, according to unconfirmed reports.

Observers here expressed the opinion today that the net result of the two-month Soviet penetration was negligible. The Russians and the Czechs, having sent an estimated total of 450 technicians into the country, were still laying the foundation for the operation when they were expelled.

None here knew even approximately into what categories their technicians fell. Many of them apparently worked with the Congolese Army.

Since the army, under Col. Joseph Mobutu, has turned against the Communists, and since it is virtually impossible for a white man to hide his identity in the country, it was not believed that many of these technicians would be able to remain even if they had orders to do so.

The most effective area of Soviet penetration probably was propaganda, experts said today. Soviet "technicians" distributed thousands of pamphlets, including one savagely attacking the role of the United States in Africa. It is reported that the pamphlets are being confiscated now.

Practical technical and political work at the grass-roots level of the village, for which the Russians undoubtedly were prepared and equipped, could be carried out only with the approval and support of the Congolese Government. Mr. Lumumba apparently was willing to give this support. His successor as Premier seems certain to refuse it.

18a 1960

CONGO

MOBUTU ADAMANT ON GHANAIAN AIDE

The N.Y. Times

But Welbeck Says Again He Will Stay Unless Accra Orders Him Home

New York N.Y.

By PAUL HOFMANN

Special to The New York Times.

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo, Nov. 20—Col. Joeph D. Mobutu, head of the Congo's military regime insisted today that Nathaniel A. Welbeck, head of the Ghanaian Embassy, leave the Congo tomorrow morning.

After a conference with Brig. Inder Jit Rikhye, Colonel Mobutu repeated his earlier charges that Mr. Welbeck had interfered in the Congo's internal affairs. Brigadier Rikhye is acting for Rajeshwar Dayal, Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold's special representative in the Congo. Mr. Dayal is in New York.

The colonel repeated his demand for Mr. Welbeck's ouster as Mr. Welbeck said again that he would "stay put." Mr. Welbeck, who has the rank of minister and who is President Kwame Nkrumah's special representative in the Congo, repeated that only Mr. Nkrumah could recall him. He said he was still awaiting instructions from Accra.

An aide at the Ghanaian Embassy hinted that tentative inquiries had been made to arrange transportation for Mr. Welbeck if Mr. Nkrumah ordered him to leave. The aide said a special plane would be sent from Accra.

Ouster Stand Clarified

The embassy official stressed that the Congo army regime wanted to expel only Mr. Welbeck and not the entire embassy staff. A first announcement by the army regime last Friday said the Congo had broken diplomatic relations with Ghana.

Lovelace Mensah, a secretary of the Ghanaian Embassy, was still in custody of the Congo Army today on a charge of having acted as courier between Patrice Lumumba, the deposed Premier, and Left-wing Congolese plotters.

The Ghanaian Embassy was notified of the decision to hold Mr. Mensah until next Friday when he is to be escorted to a commercial airplane bound for Accra. The Congo Foreign Ministry does not recognize the diplomatic status Ghana claims for Mr. Mensah.

New Unrest is Noted

Mr. Welbeck's residence was guarded today by a reinforced detail of United Nations troops consisting of Ghanaian policemen and Tunisians. It was made clear that the United Nations guard would prevent Congolese soldiers from entering the embassy grounds.

Diplomatic tradition makes diplomatic premises extraterritorial and inviolable.

Meanwhile, foreign observers viewed renewed unrest in Stanleyville, capital of Oriental Province and a Lumumba stronghold, as being linked to the Congo-Ghana dispute. They recalled that documents found in Mr. Mensah's possession when he was arrested near Mr. Lumumba's residence Tuesday included a letter from Stanleyville.

The letter was said to have been signed by Antoine Gizenga, a pro-Communist supporter of Mr. Lumumba. Under the influence of Mr. Gizenga and his friends the Stanleyville police have been terrorizing the city for several weeks.

United Nations headquarters here received a report from Stanleyville today that the police had broken a truce agreement and were "roaring around town."

---

4 in Baluba Tribe Seized

ELISABETHVILLE, The Congo, Nov. 20 (AP)—United Nations troops have arrested four Baluba tribesmen said to have taken part in the masacre of thirty-three fellow tribesmen in the Katanga town of Manono.

A United Nations spokesman said today the United Nations investigation into the massacre, which took place five days ago, was proceeding smoothly.

The southern Katanga town of Luena was reported still besieged by tribesmen.

Associated Press

MILITARY DISPLAY IN CONGO: Armored cars of Congo Army rolling down Albert Boulevard in Leopoldville Thursday during parade staged by Col. Joseph D. Mobutu, head of country's military regime. U. N. officials congratulated him on discipline of his troops.

Two U.S. Aides Are Beaten After Car Kills Congolese

Special to The New York Times.

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo, Nov. 20—A group of United States Embassy personnel narrowly escaped being lynched by an infuriated African crowd this morning after their auto had knocked down and killed a Congolese man.

Two men in the car were beaten and knifed. They are Chief Warrant Officer Clyde St. Lawrence of New Bedford, Mass., who had been driving, and Frank Carlucci of Bear Creek, Pa., Second Secretary at the embassy. Both were taken to a hospital.

Mr. St. Lawrence, who is a member of the staff of the United States military attaché here, suffered injuries and shock. His condition was reported as not serious. Mr. Carlucci was treated for gashes on his shoulder, loss of blood and bruises.

On the diplomatic scene, the Congo's dispute with Ghana continued as Col. Joseph D. Mobutu, head of the Congo's military regime, insisted that Nathaniel A. Welbeck leave by tomorrow morning. Mr. Welbeck, head of the Ghanaian Embassy, said again that he would "stay put" unless President Kwame Nkrumah ordered him home.

Attaché Rescues Wife

Among those involved in the car accident were Lieut. Col. Edward Dannemiller, United States military attaché in the Congo, and his wife. The colonel helped Mrs. Dannemiller to safety aboard a passing bus as the mob closed in on Mr. St. Lawrence and Mr. Carlucci.

About a mile from the airport the car knocked down a young Congolese who was erratically pushing a bicycle across the highway. The man died instantly.

The car swerved off the road into a ditch. Within a few minutes thirty or forty Congolese were at the scene. The irate crowd turned on the driver and Mr. Carlucci. At least one man attacked them with a knife.

Mr. Carlucci said he probably owed his life to an unidentified Congolese who shielded him.

After a struggle Mr. St. Lawrence was wrested from his attackers. A passing car stopped and took him to the Roman Catholic hospital near Ndjili Airport.

Mr. Carlucci was able to board a bus that was on its way to the airport. From there he was taken to the United Nations Hospital in Leopoldville.

Among several persons who called on Mr. Carlucci there later was Brig. Inder Jit Rikhye of India. Brigadier Rikhye is acting as Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold's special representative in the Congo while Rajeshwar Dayal is in New York.

Congolese authorities apparently left it to the United States Embassy to investigate the circumstances of the accident, to identify the victim and to get in touch with his family.

Congolese officials seemed unimpressed either by the accident or by the near-lynching. Leopoldville traffic takes a high toll and—as elsewhere in Africa — mob scenes are a standard sequel to accidents.

In some areas of sub-Saharan Africa, drivers are officially warned not to stop if they have injured or killed a person accidentally. They are instructed to proceed and report to the nearest police station.

Victim Tells of Attack

LEOPOLDVILLE, Nov. 20 (AP)—Frank Carlucci told today how a screaming African mob beat and knifed him after a car in which he and United States Embassy personnel were riding, accidentally killed a Congolese man.

"We were driving along a two-lane highway when a cyclist showed up and attempted to cross it," Mr. Carlucci said.

"We tooted, the man stopped and then turned back after he was in the middle of the road. The car turned in the same direction, rammed into him and plunged into a ditch. The cyclist was killed instantly.

"I shouted to Dannemiller, 'Get your wife out of here before they get at her!'

"The Dannemillers got out and somehow pushed through the crowd unhurt. The crowd was going after the driver, St. Lawrence, hitting him and slashing him with knives as he fled."

Mr. Carlucci said that some Congolese had attempted to rescue him as the mob struck at him with fists and knives. He said one had shouted: "Come to my house, I will protect you!" He managed to flee aboard a bus.

Miss Alison Palmer of Amityville, L. I., a United States Vice Consul, drove by minutes after the incident. She said she saw Mr. St. Lawrence running along the road bleeding.

"I threw the door open and helped him inside," she said. "He kept saying, 'We must go back to rescue the others.'"

She said she decided to drive him to the hospital immediately because he had lost so much blood.

LUMUMBA SEIZED IN CONGO; MOBUTU ORDERS HIM TRIED; U.N. URGES FAIR TREATMENT

EX-CHIEF JEERED

The N.Y. Times

Troops Display Bound Prisoner, Who Is Called a Rebel

New York

Sat. 12-3-60

By PAUL HOFMANN

Special to The New York Times.

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo, Dec. 2—Patrice Lumumba, his hands tied behind his back, returned here tonight as a prisoner of Col. Joseph D. Mobutu, head of the army regime.

Mr. Lumumba, the deposed Premier, had been a fugitive since Sunday. He was reported to have been arrested by Colonel Mobutu's forces in Port Francqui in nothwest Kasai yesterday.

He arrived at Ndjili Airport near Leopoldville shortly before 5 P. M. today in a DC-3 Belgian aircraft that had left here this morning with six Congolese military policemen aboard.

[Secretary General Dag Hammarskold of the United Nations sent a message asking Congolese President Joseph Kasavubu to insure that "due process of law" was followed in the treatment of Mr. Lumumba.]

Mobutu Looks to Trial

The former Premier was taken from the airport by truck. Congolese rushed into the streets, booing and cursing Mr. Lumumba as the soldiers displayed their prisoner in triumph.

Colonel Mobutu said it was up to the judiciary" to decide Mr. Lumumba's fate. He indicated that the deposed Premier would be brought to trial. A warrant signed by President Joseph Kasavubu early in October charged Mr. Lumumba with having misused his powers as Government chief by persecuting political opponents and having them subjected to atrocities.

[Colonel Mobutu said Mr. Lumumba would be tried for having incited the army to rebellion and other crimes, The Associated Press reported.]

Mr. Lumumba and other prisoners boarded the plane in Port Francqui, where they were held by Congolese gendarmerie. The United Nations said it had ordered its Ghanaian forces in the area to "refrain from any interference whatsoever."

P. 4

A strong army force secured Ndjili Airport this afternoon. After landing, the aircraft taxied to the far end of the runway and Mr. Lumumba, surrounded by Congolese soldiers, was led to an open truck.

Mr. Lumumba was wearing faded blue trousers and an open-necked white shirt with sleeves tucked up. He was bareheaded. The truck was followed by other military vehicles. The second vehicle was filled with soldiers.

Mr. Lumumba kept his head bowed and did not look at the soldiers, who laughed and jeered. In the truck he sat on the floor, his head between his knees. His face appeared dust-stained, but he bore no signs of mistreatment.

Four other bound prisoners, including a woman, were led from the aircraft. Their identity was not disclosed.

The motorcade reached the outskirts of the capital in fifteen minutes and skirted the African city.

Taken to Headquarters

Mr. Lumumba was taken to Colonel Mobutu's headquarters at Binza on the western outskirts of Leopoldville. Congolese army detachments encircled the suburban area where Colonel Mobutu lives and works, barring excited crowds of Africans who were shouting death threats against Mr. Lumumba.

It was assumed the former Premier would spend at least the night as the personal prisoner of the army chief of staff.

While announcing Mr. Lumumba's arrest, Colonel Mobutu said earlier that the gendarmes of Port Francqui had warned him by telephone that they would shoot the former Premier unless he was flown out today.

According to Colonel Mobutu, the deposed Premier was captured while he was on his way by a circuitous route to Stanleyville, capital of Oriental Province. Stanleyville is controlled by Mr. Lumumba's followers.

U. N. Charges Brutality

Later, the United Nations issued a report charging that brutality had been suffered by many of the more than 1,000 "Europeans" in Stanleyville. The victims, it was said, included United Nations personnel who had been rounded up by Lumumba supporters this week. The term European in Africa covers foreigners in general.

According to some reports, some Americans suffered beatings in Stanleyville.

United Nations officials, recalling that their troops had protected Mr. Lumumba while he was in his residence in Leopoldville, said they were in no way responsible for his movements thereafter.

'Really Compromised'

Commenting on Mr. Lumumba's arrest, Colonel Mobutu said, "This time he is really compromised."

Colonel Mobutu said Mr. Lumumba would not be tried until Alphonse Songolo was freed. Mr. Songolo, a member of Parliament, was arrested in Stanleyville in October after having turned against Mr. Lumumba.

An International Red Cross inspection team reported that he had lost an eye and suffered other injuries as a result of beatings while a prisoner.

The New York Times Dec. 3, 1960

CAPTURED IN FLIGHT: Ex-Premier Lumumba was returned to Leopoldville (1) following his arrest at Port Francqui (2). A Baluba raid on Luena (3) was repulsed by U. N. troops.

Colonel Mobutu said three Lumumba followers had been arrested in Port Francqui. They were Anicet Kashamura, pro-Communist Minister of Information; Joachim Masena, former Minister of Labor, and Georges Grenfell, former Minister of State.

Joseph Okito, vice president of the Senate and a Lumumba supporter, was also arrested in the area, Colonel Mobutu disclosed. He confirmed that Maurice Mpolo, a pro-Communist aide of Mr. Lumumba, had been detained in another part of the country and was being brought to Leopoldville by army escort.

Europeans Rounded Up

The United Nations report on Stanleyville was released after the return of a Ghanaian liaison officer who had been sent there to make an inquiry.

The report said the turbulence broke out when provincial authorities proceeded to check the credentials of all Europeans with a view to expelling all who lacked a newly issued identity document.

Early Sunday, the report said, all Europeans in Stanleyville were brought at gunpoint to the military camp.

"Many were ill-treated, slapped and kicked by the soldiery during this process," it said. "The gendarmerie entered the Catholic church and forcibly removed priests and nuns awaiting the celebration of mass. A woman member of the United Nations staff was threatened with a loaded machine gun while explaining her identity."

Prisoners Kept in Sun

Persons of all ages and both sexes, the report said, were kept waiting in the sun for up to seven hours and many were again ill-treated, slapped and kicked.

More than seventy, including four women and a child, were kept in a small unventilated room without food and water, it was said.

According to the report, Stanleyville authorities agreed to relinquish the prisoners to the United Nations on condition that they would leave the country.

The United Nations said it had rejected responsibility "for enforcing a police measure like deportation" and suggested that the Europeans be flown to Usumbura, capital of Ruanda-Urundi, the Belgian trust territory east of here.

"Agreement was, however, reached," the report concluded, "that to prevent further maltreatment some United Nations troops would be posted inside the prison until a final decision was taken regarding the detainees.

"These troops have been in position and have succeeded in preventing any further maltreatment. However, the local authorities in Stanleyville have not carried out their agreement and at present refuse to hand over to the United Nations the persons concerned, of whom seven still remain in prison."

Associated Press Radiophoto

CAPTURED AND RETURNED: Patrice Lumumba, deposed Premier of the Congo, leaves plane at Leopoldville airport under Congolese guard. His hands are manacled.

A Katanga Province spokesman placed the number of African workers in Luena, 150 miles northwest of here, had been killed.

Nations troops captured today "hundreds" of Baluba tribesmen who attacked the coal-mining township of Luena, 3,000. A United Nations spokesman said there were no Moroccan casualties. He said six United Nations sources reported here.

It was believed the tribesmen had sought to take Luena for food and ammunition.

In another development, the

Balubas Seized in Attack

ELISABETHVILLE, Congo Dec. 2 (Reuters)—A force of 350 Moroccan United

United Nations announced the murders by tribesmen of two missionaries about 600 miles northwest of here Nov. 23.

The missionaries were identified as Edward Hodgson, 62 year old, of Preston, England, and Elton G. Knauf, about 50, from New Zealand. Both were affiliated with the Congo Evangelical Mission.

The United Nations spokesman said African Christians had reported that the missionaries had been tortured and killed. Their bodies were not recovered.

Appeal by U.N. Reported

Special to The New York Times.

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y., Dec. 2—Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold asked President Joseph Kasavubu of the Congo today to insure that "due process of law" was followed in connection with Premier Patrice Lumumba.

A member of the forty-five-nation Asian-African bloc said Mr. Hammarskjold had told a three-man delegation about a telegram he had sent to Leopoldville in connection with Mr. Lumumba's arrest.

The three-member delegation was chosen by the larger group to express its concern over the "turn of events" in the Congo, the source said.

Mr. Hammarskjold assured the delegation, from India, Liberia and Cameroon, that he would send another telegram tonight conveying the delegates' concern over Mr. Lumumba's safety.

NINE DIE IN CONGO AS TROOPS FIGHT LUMUMBA BACKERS

The N. Y. Times

Many Injured in Clashes in Town Said to Be a Haven When Ex-Premier Fled

New York

U. N. ACTION IS ORDERED

Moroccan Units Told to End Violence—Army Says It Replied to Tribal Attacks

Mon 12-5-60

By PAUL HOFMANN

Special to The New York Times.

LEOPOLDSVILLE, The Congo, Dec. 4—At least nine persons were reported killed and many injured in clashes between followers of Patrice Lumumba, the imprisoned former Premier, and Congolese Army units in the town of Kikwit during the last forty-eight hours.

The area of Kikwit, 250 miles southeast of the capital, is a pocket of pro-Lumumba sentiment in Leopoldville Province. The deposed Premier is believed to have found assistance and refuge there during the first days after his escape from his guarded residence here last Sunday night.

The forces of Col. Joseph D. Mobutu army Chief of Staff, were able to capture Mr. Lumumba only when he reached western Kasai last Thursday. On Friday, tough commando troops of the Congolese Army closed in on Kikwit and started rounding up presumed supporters of Mr. Lumumba.

Many Civilians Flee

According to information reaching the United Nations command here, the army detachments disarmed the provincial police in Kikwit and caused many civilians to take to the bush. At least two persons were said to have been killed in fighting in Kikwit. Friday and at least seven Saturday. More casualties occurred today, according to rumors here.

Moroccan soldiers of the United Nations force stationed in Kikwit have been ordered to prevent further violence.

A spokesman for the army regime asserted that the troops had been sent to Kikwit after attacks by armed Bangongo and Bambala tribesmen, who are followers of Mr. Lumumba, on other tribal groups. The regime also charged that Kikwit had provided an armed escort for Mr. Lumumba on his flight toward Kasai Province.

Mr. Lumumba is now a prisoner in the garrison town of Thysville, eighty-five miles southwest of here. He was transferred there from Leopoldville by a military convoy Friday night.

Troops Accused of Looting

Cleophas Kamitatu, President of Leopoldville Province, sent a letter to Colonel Mobutu today requesting the head of the military regime to halt "aggression of the armed forces against unarmed and unprotected citizens" in Kikwit. Mr. Kamitatu is a member of the Bangongo tribe from Kikwit and a follower of Mr. Lumumba. He was held by Colonel Mobutu as a personal prisoner for three days last month and eventually agreed to have his provincial police collaborate with the army in the capital.

Mr. Kamitatu declared today that commando troops had looted the provincial police camp at Kikwit and fired this morning at Red Cross ambulances that attempted to recover the bodies of persons slain in the streets.

A small group of Kamitatu followers improvised demonstrations in front of the United Nations headquarters here for the second consecutive day. They shouted protests against Mr. Lumumba's arrest and against the army action in Kikwit.

New York

At least two members of Lower Congo tribes that are generally opposed to Mr. Lumumba were beaten by the demonstrators as they happened to pass by on bicycles. One was saved by United Nations guards from what looked like a probable lynching.

From Oriental Province, a center of pro-Lumumba sentiment, came threats today of reprisals for the former Premier's arrest.

A cablegram from Stanleyville, the provincial capital, to President Joseph Kasavubu demanded Mr. Lumumba's release within forty-eight hours. If he is not set free, the city of Leopoldville will be attacked and "no stone will remain on the other," said the message, which was signed, "Population of Oriental."

Reports from Stanleyville said that Bernard Salumu, former secretary to Mr. Lumumba and a Communist sympathizer, was virtually the head of a ruling junta there. Mr. Salumu was believed to have eclipsed Louis Lumumba, the former Premier's brother, and Antoine Gizenga, pro-Communist former Deputy Premier.

The New York Times Dec. 5, 1960

CLASH IN THE CONGO: Government troops fought dissidents at Kikwit (1). A secessionist move was made at Stanleyville (2).

The United Nations said today that the four Belgians still detained in Stanleyville would be flown tomorrow to Usumbura, the capital of the Ruanda-Urundi trust territory. Other European refugees from Stanleyville arrived here by plane yesterday with tales of brutalities suffered from pro-Lumumba gendarmes.

The military regime says Mr. Lumumba planned to go to Stanleyville and proclaim it the provisional capital of the Congo. Several African and Asian governments were preparing to open diplomatic missions accredited to the "national government" of Mr. Lumumba in Stanleyville, the army administration alleges.

Dr. Mourad Ghaleb, Ambassador of the United Arab Republic, left Leopoldville with members of his staff today following President Kasavubu's request last Thursday for their withdrawal. Mr. Ghaleb was accused by the army regime of having conspired with Mr. Lumumba. In a parting statement, the Ambassador said his Government wanted only to "aid the Congo to achieve its total independence."

The United Nations was still unable today to deliver a note from Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold to President Kasavubu on Mr. Lumumba's status. The message arrived yesterday, but Mr. Kasavubu was reported to be absent from Leopoldville.

It was thought here that the world organization would insist that representatives of the International Red Cross be allowed to visit the former Premier in prison.

STANLEYVILLE, the Congo, Dec. 4 (UPI)—A former secretary of the deposed Premier, Patrice Lumumba, moved today to take over the East Congo as independent territory. He sealed the frontier of Oriental Province in an apparent attempt to hold hundreds of Europeans as hostages.

Bernard Salumu, aged 31, a Leftist who has visited the Soviet Union, Communist China and Czechoslovakia, declared himself "commissioner of the eastern district." He named a former clerk, Jean-Foster Manzilala, 30, as president of the provincial government.

"We are seceding from the Leopoldville regime," Mr. Salumu declared. "We have been promised aid from other African and European countries."

Some observers doubt that Mr. Salumu has the power he thinks he has. They say he shows none of the spell-binding appeal possessed by Mr. Lumumba.

Chaos prevails in Stanleyville. Unruly Congolese soldiers twice slapped Daphne Parks, the British Embassy's second secretary, when she arrived from Leopoldville on a diplomatic mission.

Scores of Europeans remain in jail. All have been forbidden to leave without the express permission of Mr. Salumu, who passes on each request individually. Few are allowed to leave the area.

The Lumumba Problem

The problem of the Republic of the Congo first reached the United Nations on July 14, when Premier Lumumba asked for assistance. By order of the Security Council, Secretary General Hammarskjold instantly began to send the assistance. After a little more than a month the number of Belgian troops in the new republic has been cut to a little over 3,000 and evacuations are continuing. Meanwhile, the Congo is being offered medical, economic and administrative aid.

Now Premier Lumumba, who seems able to take three sides of the same question in as many minutes, accuses Mr. Hammarskjold of "blackmail." This charge, which followed some violent insults to U. N. personnel, seems in Mr. Lumumba's mind to rest on Mr. Hammarskjold's refusal to use U. N. troops to suppress the secession movement in Katanga Province.

The Security Council was scheduled to meet this afternoon to deal with these startling developments. It will meet under lurid Soviet charges against U. N.'s Canadian technicians and Soviet threats of intervention. It will take up the dismal controversy of the conduct of Ghanaian troops in the face of violence from Lumumba's so-called "Force Publique." Wisdom and statesmanship will be needed if the Lumumba problem, which is also a problem of other new nations torn by factionalism and personal ambitions, is to be peaceably solved. This is one of U. N.'s supreme tests.

A Rebuke to the Soviets

After two days of debate, the United Nations Disarmament Commission, that was called together at the request of the United States to consider the Soviet break-up of the Geneva disarmament talks, has in effect sustained the American position and has administered an implied rebuke to the Soviets.

The commission urges—and, unless immediate action is taken, asks the General Assembly to back its stand—that "continued efforts be made for the earliest possible continuation of international negotiations" to achieve general and complete disarmament under effective international control. As the Disarmament Commission now contains all United Nations members, there is no doubt that if necessary the General Assembly will take like action at its session in September.

It will be noted that the commission's resolution does not call for "new" negotiations nor for a new body for such negotiations; and, as the Soviet delegate noted, it does not even mention a summit meeting at the Assembly's session, urged by Premier Khrushchev to propagandize anew his fraudulent schemes for total disarmament within four years without adequate controls. On the contrary, it calls first of all for "continuation" of international negiotations, for which the Geneva Conference was called, and it urges "continued efforts" for such continuation, such as the Western powers made in trying to get the Soviets back to the conference table. Beyond that it again emphasizes that all disarmament must be "under effective international control," which the West wants to install from the start but which the Soviets seek to evade.

The commission's action may not change Soviet policy, but the world should now have a clearer idea as to who it is that sabotages all disarmament efforts.

Congolese Bid U. N. Yield Lumumba or Face a Fight

The New York Times

New York Times 10-11-60

By The Associated Press.

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo, Oct. 10—The ruling group of Congolese leaders demanded tonight that the United Nations hand over Patrice Lumumba or face a fight with the Congolese Army. The group charged that the United Nations forces were preventing the arrest of the deposed Premier.

The ultimatum gave the United Nations until 3 P. M. tomorrow to comply.

Rajeshawar Dayal, resident head of the United Nations operation in the Congo, sent a cablegram to Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold asking for instructions. [The United Nations in New York had no immediate comment.]

The ultimatum was issued by the technical commission that was appointed last month by the Congo's military strongman, Col. Joseph D. Mobutu, to run the Government until the end of the year. The statement was approved by President Joseph Kasavubu.

[Mr. Lumumba challenged Colonel Mobutu to a duel Monday, Reuters reported. He strode onto the balcony of the Premier's official residence, which was guarded by Ghanaian soldiers of the United Nations Command, and shouted: "I challenge Mobutu to a duel. Let him choose his weapons and we will see who is the strongest."]

Bomboko Gives Warning

Justin Bomboko, chief of the governing commission, said a warrant had been issued for Mr. Lumumba's arrest. He warned that if the United Nations did not permit the arrest to be carried out tomorrow, "the Congolese Army will meet its responsibilities."

"If the population has to combat the United Nations it will do so," Mr. Bomboko Said.

The Move came after weeks of mounting tension in the Congo's capital and increased efforts by Mr. Lumumba to seize power again.

The ultimatum followed an attempt by Mr. Lumumba yesterday to whip up support for himself in a surprise tour of Leopoldville bars. The 34-year-old former Premier toured the city in a limousine with an escort of Ghanaian and Moroccan soldiers of the United Nations force who have been guarding his villa since his ouster. He declared that he was taking power again.

Col. Mobutu retaliated today with immediate action to nip Mr. Lumumba's bid for support. A cordon of Congolese troop was posted around the former Premier's residence, with orders to keep Mr. Lumumba away from his supporters.

The colonel went personally to Mr. Lumumba's residence on the banks of the Congo River and told a Congolese officer: "Nobody must go in or out."

After Colonel Mobutu left, Mr. Lumumba stormed out onto a balcony and shouted:

"I am not a prisoner. I am still master. The people are still with me."

Lumumba Calls for a Duel

LEOPOLDVILLE, Oct. 10 (Reuters)—Patrice Lumumba challenged Colonel Mobutu, the military strong man, to a duel today.

Ghanaian soldiers guarded the ousted Premier from a cordon of Colonel Mobutu's troops as he strode onto the balcony of his residence, stood in shirt-sleeves with his hands on his hips and shouted:

"I challenge Mobutu to a duel. Let him choose his weapons and we will see who is the strongest."

Colonel Mobutu had driven up to the residence earlier and told reporters: "If he wants a trial of strength, I will give it to him. Nobody enters or leaves this house from now on."

A shot was fired into the air and several supporters of Mr. Lumumba bundled into a truck when Colonel Mobutu's troops appeared at the residence.

Justin Bomboko, head of the Governing Commission who was Foreign Minister in the original Lumumba Government, voiced an ultimatum on the arrest of the former Premier.

"If tomorrow the United Nations does not give up Lumumba, the Congolese Army will accept its responsibilities," he declared at a news conference.

"If the United Nations fights, the Congolese Army will fight them," he added.

Mr. Bomboko said the "certain African countries" had dictated the United Nations attitude, and he envisaged a rupture of a diplomatic relations with Ghana.

"There is no question of United Nations tutelage here," he declared. "We chased out the Belgians and wew ill chase out the United Nations, if necessary," he said.

'NKRUMAH' LETTER GUIDED LUMUMBA

The New York Times

Note Told Ousted Premier How to Use His Enemies —Forgery Is Charged

New York

The text of a letter addressed to Patrice Lumumba, deposed Premier of the Congo, over the name of President Kwame Nkrumah of Ghana has been made available by diplomatic sources in New York.

Herald Tribune 9-10-60

The letter contains advice to the Congolese leader about how to weather the political storms besetting the Congo, how to deal with the United Nations and how to use his enemies to his own purpose.

Although the letter, dated Sept. 12, was declared authentic in Leopoldville, capital of the Congo, by Nathaniel A. Welbeck, Ghanaian chargé d'affaires, it was branded last week as a false document by Kwaku Boateng, Ghanaian Minister of Information and Broadcasting. Mr. Boateng accompanied Mr. Nkrumah to the United Nations General Assembly session.

It originally was made public by Col. Joseph D. Mobutu, army Chief of Staff, two weeks after he took control in the Congo Sept. 14.

Disavowed in New York

Asked about the letter at the time, Mr. Welbeck said it was "completely genuine." He added: "I brought it to Mr. Lumumba myself."

However, Mr. Boateng said in New York that he and the President had studied the text carefully and that they disavowed it. He said the signature had been forged and he expressed the belief that the document had originated in Elisabethville, capital of secessionist Katanga Province. The Ghanaians have strongly supported Mr. Lumumba in his campaign, now at a standstill, against the Katanga regime of President Moise Tshombe.

The letter advises Mr. Lumumba, who was deposed by President Joseph Kasavubu last month, to go slow in handling his political enemies. "The time will come to deal with them," it says.

In view of the multitude of problems, "you cannot afford, my brother, to be harsh and uncompromising," the letter continues.

Detailed Instructions Given

"Do not force Kasavubu out now. It will bring too much trouble. Do not make an issue of his treachery now or even Tshombe's treachery," it suggested, adding that the situation demanded "tactical action."

The "Dear Patrice" letter contains detailed instructions for Mr. Lumumba to follow "to safeguard your position and save the unity of the Congo."

The purported Nkrumah letter ranged from advice on how to set up a cabinet to a suggestion that Mr. Lumumba make a radio appeal for the Congolese people to settle their differences. It would have an "electric effect," the letter said.

As for the Security Council and the United Nations, the writer said, "leave that to me." You can be sure, Mr. Lumumba was told, that "on any issue I shall mobilize the Afro-Asian bloc and other friendly nations to support you."

"Whenever in doubt consult me," the letter writer said. "Brother," the letter added, "we have been in the game for some time now and we know how to handle the imperialists and the colonialists. The only colonialist or imperialist I trust is a dead one."

The Congolese leader was advised to be patient and moderate in attempting to regain power.

Urged to Work With Foes

The letter suggested these specific points:

Work with "your bitterest political enemies in order to give you time to consolidate your position."

Do not "push the United Nations troops out until you have consolidated your position, and then you can ask them to leave." Mr. Lumumba was warned that he would not be able to cope with the confusion that would follow a United Nations withdrawal.

"Quickly establish your administration so that people may feel secure that they will get work to do." The note pointed out that the United Nations was in the Congo "with plenty of funds to help you." It warned that hungry people might respond to anyone who would give them " 'bread and games,' as the ancient Romans put it."

Mr. Lumumba was warned that "if you fail, you have only yourself to blame." He was told that his policy to "do away" with his enemies now would fail. "Remember," the letter said, "the forces pitched against you are legion. But the odds are in your favor and you will succeed if only you handle the situation carefully and tactfully."

LUMUMBA RETURN TO POWER HINTED IN CONGO PARLEYS

The New York Times

Mobutu Talks With Premier and Kasavubu in Effort to Reconcile Foes

New York Herald Tribune

Sun. 9-25-60

By HENRY TANNER

Special to The New York Times.

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo, Sept. 24—Patrice Lumumba will make spectacular comeback within two or three days, high-ranking African diplomats predicted tonight.

The diplomats belonged to group of representatives of five African countries who have been exerting constant pressure on President Joseph Kasavubu to make peace with Mr. Lumumba and retain him in the office of Premier. These diplomats felt certain tonight that their "conciliation" efforts were about to bear fruit.

Their show of optimism coincided with an unexpected visit to Mr. Lumumba by Col. Joseph D. Mobutu, army "strong man," who assumed power ten days ago.

Would Impose Conciliation

Colonel Mobutu appeared at the Premier's official residence at 3 P. M. with an army escort of two jeeps, one with a mounted 75-mm. Recoilless cannon. He stayed with Mr. Lumumba for an hour.

After the meeting Colonel Mobutu said he had seen both the President and the Premier in an effort to get a "conciliation" between the two men.

"If necessary I shall impose a consiliation," the colonel said.

It was regarded as signficant that Colonel Mobutu, who is known to be a friend of Mr. Kasavubu and whose recent public statements have been moving closer to those of the chief of state, had returned to a position of neutrality between the two men.

This morning Colonel Mobutu ordered the release of Antoine Gizenga and Maurice Mpolo, two close collaborators of Mr. Lumumba, who were arrested yesterday after an alleged attempt to stage a mutiny against Colonel Mobutu in the city's army garrison. Mr. Gizenga was a Vice Premier in the Lumumba Government. Mr. Mpolo was Minister of Youth and Sports. A third man, Maj. Pakasa, who tried to assassinate Mobutu last Sunday, was also released.

Army Reported Restive

When newsmen asked Colonel Mobutu the reasons for the clemency, he replied: "I am above all a Christian. These men came to kill me. I am releasing them so that tension will ease."

Friends of Mr. Lumumba, however, had a different explanation for the change in Colonel Mobutu's attitude. The colonel, they said, was faced with increasing restiveness among soldiers in his garrison.

There is no way for outsiders to judge the situation at the military camp. It is understood, however, that United Nations troops at the camp received an order yesterday from Gen. Carl Carlsson von Horn, United Nations commander, to assure the safety of Colonel Mobutu. Mr. Kasavubu and Mr. Lumumba also are under United Nations protection.

Lumumba's Friends Pleased

At the Premier's official residence, where Mr. Lumumba had been holding out surrounded by a diminishing group of friends, activity appeared to pick up again today.

Mr. Mpolo and other figures in the Lumumba Government, who had not been seen for several days, showed up. They were smiling, evidently in high spirits.

"Things are on the right track now," one of them told newsmen. Another made it clear that he felt African pressure here and in United Nations General Assembly has reversed the situation in Mr. Lumumba's favor.

More reserved observers recalled that once before African diplomats thought they had obtained agreement from Mr. Kasavubu to withdraw his "dismissal" of Mr. Lumumbu. Later Mr. Kasavubu declared, "Lumumba has been dismissed and remains dismissed."

The President's office announced last night that Ghana's embassies abroad were no longer acting as diplomatic representatives for the Congo. Ghana has been playing a key role in the five-nation group that has been pressing for "conciliation." The others are Guinea, Morocco, Sudan and the United Arab Republic.

A Tunisian representative has been present at the meetings as an "observer." Tunisia also has been representing the Congo's interests in some countries and continues to do so.

Meanwhile, the voice of Albert Kalonji, President of the independent Mining State in southern Kasai, was heard on the national radio here last night for the first time since he launched his secessionist movement early in August.

Mr. Kalonji praised Mr. Kasavubu and sharply attacked Mr. Lumumba, whom he held responsible for the division of the congo. He dec lared that, following an appeal by Colonel Mobutu, he had given an order to his followers to cease combat against the Congo army in Kasai.

LUMUMBA EASES U. N. STAND A BIT

Drops Demand for Removal of White Troops—Renews Call for Neutral Team

By THOMAS F. BRADY

Special to The New York Times.

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo, Aug. 20—Premier Patrice Lumumba abandoned today his demand for the withdrawal of all European troops from the United Nations force.

His action came on the eve of a new emergency session of the United Nations Security Council in the continuing Congo crisis. The Council will meet tomorrow to consider Mr. Lumumba's bitter dispute with Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold over the latter's course of action in secessionist Katanga Province.

The Premier also took the trouble to apologize for "incidents between the Congolese Army and Canadian technicians" Thursday. Three Canadians were beaaten and one of them clubbed into unconsciousness by Congolese troops at the Leopoldville airport.

On these two points the Congo Premier retreated from the position he had held all week. Nevertheless, as his daily news conference went on, he began to emphasize stridently the other demands his Government is making on the Security Council.

At first his manner was markedly different from yesterday, when he called the beating of the Canadians "banal" and angrily demanded the "immediate withdrawal of all white troops."

As the questions went on today, however, he returned aggressively to the attack. He insisted that the United Nations must send a team of neutral observers to supervise Mr. Hammarskjold and declared that if his demand was not met the Congo would "dispense with the services of the United Nations." He has made this threat several times before.

Congo Not 'Racist'

Smilingly he asked correspondents to tell the world that the Congo was not "racist."

"When a European complains of his treatment by Africans," he went on, "one must understand that it is the fault of the European."

"I will tell you what is at the bottom of the Congo crisis," he said at a later point. "The nations are jealous of our power and our greatness."

He announced that his cabinet had authorized him beginning tomorrow to turn to any nation of the world for direct aid "of all iknds" outside the framework of the United Nations.

Asked if he would begin with the African nations, to which he has always previously said he would appeal exclusively for military aid, he replied: "I no longer make any distinction."

There is reason to believe he has been warned by several African countries that they would not act outside the United Nations. President Habib Bourguiba gave such a warning publicly yesterday in Tunis.

Of the Bourguiba statement, Mr. Lumumba said: "I have great respect for Bourguiba's ideas and opinions. But he is not in a position to know what is going on here behind the scenes. He needs to be enlightened. I must try to explain the situation to him."

Concerning the white troops, Premier Lumumba charged that some white officers—he cited the case of a Swede who had tried to liberate a Belgian taken into custody by Congolese troops—had worked with the Belgians. If the United Nations investigates these cases and "shows its impartiality, the rest of the white troops can stay," he said.

'Psychological Problems'

"We make no distinctions by color, but there are psychological problems for whites," he added.

"United Nations white troops have behaved like Belgians," he went on. "They want to substitute United Nations colonialism for Belgian colonialist. The United Nations must withdraw as soon as they have assured the withdrawal of Belgian troops. We do not want United Nations occupation either.

"I am sure the United Nations understands its role and is aware of the danger. The United Nations is a neutral organization and cannot colonize the Congo. This is the atest move to reconquer Africa. latest move to reconquer Africa."

Mr. Lumumba repeated a previous demand that all Congolese airports be policed by Congolese forces. The Congolese were forced to withdraw from the Leopoldville airport after the beating of the Canadians.

The Premier said also that he had once again demanded that the United Nations put a plane at the central Government's disposal to fly its representatives to Elisabethville, capital of Katanga, but had been turned down.

The refusal was based on previous Hammarskjold memorandum interpreting the Security Council resolutions as excluding such use of United Nations transport. Mr. Lumumba had already taken exception to this interpretation and he repeated his objections.

Other events of the day included a declaration by Vital Moanda, Vice President of the association of the lower Congo, that his party would try to vote censure of Mr. Lumumba's policies when parliament meets at the end of the month.

"If we do not succeed in getting Lumumba out of office by parliamentary means, then we will use other, super means," Mr. Moanda said.

The association, known as Abako, is the party of the Bakongo peoples of the Lower Congo basin and dominates Leopoldville Province. Its nominal head is Joseph Kasavubu, Chief of State, who has recently become politically mute.

Lumumba's Decline

When United Nations troops first went into the chaotic Congo last July, a U. N. officer predicted, "Time and only time will help this country resolve its difficulties."

Last week, after three months of time, the crisis appeared farther than ever from solution. There is no effective Congolese Government. Politically, there is a stand-off involving President Joseph Kasavubu; Patrice Lumumba, whom he deposed as Premier but who still lives in the Premier's house and claims the job, and Chief of Staff Col. Joseph Mobutu who announced the "neutralization" of both Mr. Kasavubu and Mr. Lumumba. Each of the three appears to have enough armed force behind him to prevent the others from setting up a government but not enough to govern effectively himself. The Congolese army is fragmented along tribal lines. The secessionist disputes, involving the rich province of Katanga and part of Kasai, are still unresolved.

Economy in Chaos

The Congo's political anarchy has resulted in economic chaos. Production in many areas has virtually halted; communications have been paralyzed; half the work force in Leopoldville, the capital, is unemployed; food is short and epidemics of smallpox and bubonic plague threaten the country.

In that situation, the only force standing between the Congo and total disintegration is the U. N.'s army of troops and technicians. Almost 18,000 U. N. soldiers from twenty-eight nations are dispersed throughout the country, exercising police functions and trying to forestall tribal warfare. About 145 U. N. civilians are trying to run the Congo's vital services and to get its economy functioning again—an almost impossible task in the face of the country's political and tribal disputes and its lack of trained Congolese administrative personnel.

Situation Fluid

Last week the political confusion mounted. A group of pro-Lumumba members of the Congolese Parliament (which Colonel Mobutu suspended last month) announced they had turned against Mr. Lumumba because when he was in power he had negotiated the deals under which Russia sent aid to his regime directly, instead of through the U. N. Mr. Lumumba countered by proclaiming that he still was Premier and announcing his appointment of a new government. Colonel Mobutu arrested several of the new appointees and others said they would not serve under Mr. Lumumba. President Kasavubu appeared to have joined forces with Colonel Mobutu.

But the situation is still so fluid that correspondents in Leopoldville are unwilling to write off Mr. Lumumba as a national figure. Whatever may be his weakness in the Congo, he still has the strong backing of the Soviet bloc and many of the Afro-Asian nations. Thus the prospect is that when the U. N. Assembly starts debating the Congo situation later this month, the pressures for U. N. recognition and support of Mr. Lumumba will be strong. Some neutral observers predict that the outcome might be U. N. support for a coalition government including Mr. Lumumba, Mr. Kasavubu and Colonel Mobutu.

The Congo's Unknown Soldiers

The Christian Science Monitor

Again Mr. Hammarskjold has spoken in the General Assembly about the United Nations Congo operation. And again all that he said deserves the support of the Assembly.

The difficulties the UN faces in the Congo are indeed, as the Secretary-General pointed out, very much like those of a rescuer of a drowning man. "You try to save a drowning man without prior authorization," Mr. Hammarskjold said. "You do not let him go even when he tries to strangle you."

Boston, Mass.

That is because the rescuer recognizes that not the whole man, but only some of his reactions, his panic and momentary misunderstanding of the rescuer's actions, are the authors of the resistance to rescue. In the case of the Congo the resistance similarly has come from factions.

Not only the now deposed Premier, Patrice Lumumba, but his Katanga antagonist, provincial President Moise Tshombe, and indeed even Col. Joseph D. Mobutu, who has mainly used his military authority as a stabilizing factor, have at one time or another opposed the UN rescue operations.

Also in this drama there has been another character, waving a hammer and sickle on the shore and urging that the privilege of saving the sinking Congolese nation be reserved for the Soviet Union.

Now beyond the demands of rescue for the potential victim's sake, the UN has other impelling obligations in the Congo. These are obligations to the nations which, as Mr. Hammarskjold noted, have already made large sacrifices to go to the aid of the Congo—not with self-seeking, opportunistic motives but out of that enlightened self-interest which is tantamount to loyalty to the UN ideal.

The UN has the further obligation to serve the interests of world peace. This, as the first few days of the Congo crisis showed, could be jeopardized by the kind of intervention which would take place in the absence of UN forces on the ground.

There must be further sacrifices by other nations for the Congo. The civilian program now required will cost $150,000,000 for the first year. So it behooves the political leaders who are trying to ride to power on the wild wings of crisis to show more humility in the light of the aid that other peoples must give to the Congo.

As Mr. Hammarskjold has said:

"In the confusing fights . . . among political dignitaries of that country, an impression has grown that few have realized that to lead and to govern is not a privilege to be sought for but a burden of responsibility to be assumed. It is not those names which we read about in the papers which are tied to the painstaking efforts to maintain a minimum of order . . . to forestall epidemics . . . to feed the hungriest. . . . No, that work has been undertaken by many who are nameless, by Congolese officials who are never mentioned. . . . May I pay tribute to these men and to what they have done to give life and sense to the independence of the Congo.

Something like that could also be said for the personnel of UN forces and for the direction of the UN operation in general. Not the privilege of ruling but the burden of responsibility has motivated this from the Secretary-General down through all levels of responsible UN personnel.

Journalists Sound Alarm In South Africa

The Christian Science Monitor

By the Associated Press

Johannesburg

The South African Society of Journalists, in a statement issued Oct. 13, expressed alarm at what it said "appears to be a pattern of intimidation of journalists and threats to freedom of the press here" by the Nationalist government.

The statement said the society is concerned at the fact that court proceedings have been instituted against a number of editors, publishers, and reporters.

It added: "Specifically it is a matter for alarm that two journalists have been sent to prison for refusing to disclose sources of information demanded by the police" under terms of the Criminal Procedure Act, although "it is well known to the police and others that the journalists would be betraying one of the basic principles of journalistic ethics all over the world —determination not to dishonor a confidence by disclosing such information given in confidence."

Some English-language newspapers here, which are in opposition to the Afrikaner-controlled Nationalist government of Prime Minister Hendrik F. Verwoerd are claiming they and their staffs are being increasingly harassed by the government's policy, especially during the bitter political campaign which ended in the Oct. 5 referendum.

This gave the Verwoerd government a mandate to proclaim South Africa a republic divorced from the British Crown.

Some editors have expressed fear of increasing pressure.

The journalists' society said Brian Parkes, a Johannesburg reporter, and Patrick Duncan, editor of the Cape Town periodical Contact, have been imprisoned for refusing to disclose confidential sources of information used in their reports.

Still the Congo

The difficulties and frustrations confronting the U. N. in the Congo are immense. It is supposed to keep the administrative machinery going although there is no effective Congolese government. It is trying to establish law and order while the Congolese army and police frequently ignore it. It has sought to remain aloof from internal struggles although they dominate the country's political life.

New York

As a result of the confusing sequence of events since independence last June, there is no responsible Congolese group with which the U. N. can deal. The deposed Premier, Patrice Lumumba, still lives in the Premier's house under U. N. guard. The Congolese President, Joseph Kasavubu, seldom ventures out of his official residence. The current "strong man," Col. Joseph Mobutu, heads a "caretaker" regime of young men but they have scarcely begun to take up their enormous tasks. Colonel Mobutu's power rests largely on his control of part of the army. For many weeks, however, his control appeared to be dwindling.

Marauding Troops

Last week for three days bands of screaming Congolese soldiers, some of them drunk, terrorized the population of Leopoldville, molesting African women and attacking men. Colonel Mobutu disclaimed responsibility for the "disorderly elements." On Wednesday the U. N. command told the colonel it would tolerate no more violence and demanded that the Congolese soldiers be withdrawn from Leopoldville and confined to barracks. Otherwise, U. N. officials hinted, the U. N. would disarm the army. Colonel Mobutu reasserted his control over the troops and pulled them out of the city. Since then Leopoldville has been quiet. But the feeling of many observers is that the colonel's position is shaky and that, unless he receives backing from the U. N., he may not remain "strong man" for long.

The U. N. move was in line with a gradual stiffening in its attitude toward Colonel Mobutu. When he took power last month he suspended the Congolese Parliament, evidently because he feared that it would support Mr. Lumumba. Now the U. N. command wants Parliament to convene. It also refused to permit Colonel Mobutu to arrest Mr. Lumumba and yesterday it overruled a Mobutu order which would have forced several newspaper correspondents who had criticized him to leave the Congo.

The U. N. Command's position of opposition to Colonel Mobutu appears to be a reversal of Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold's original position of neutrality in Congolese internal disputes. That policy had been sharply attacked by the Soviet bloc and by many Afro-Asian nations which support Mr. Lumumba. Last August, in an effort to still the criticism, Mr. Hammarskjold established an advisory committee with representation for all nations contributing troops to the U. N. Congo force.

Fifteen Afro-Asian Nations

The committee now comprises eighteen members, fifteen of them Afro-Asian. At least seven of the Afro-Asians have been pressing for the ouster of Colonel Mobutu and the return of Mr. Lumumba. Some other, Western-oriented committee members, however, oppose action by the U. N. to restore Mr. Lumumba to power. They point out that he could not marshal enough strength to run the country when he was in power. Moreover, they are convinced that Mr. Lumumba would turn to the Soviet bloc as he did when he was in power last summer. They also point out that he has frequently defied the U. N. Accordingly, they have been pressing Mr. Hammarskjold to retain his neutrality policy.

In line with a General Assembly resolution last month, the committee yesterday designated its Afro-Asian members as a conciliation committee to go to the Congo soon and try to help all factions reach "a speedy solution of all their internal conflicts." The Congo's political future may depend to a large extent upon what actions the committee takes.

UN Prestige at Stake in Congo

Pittsburgh Courier

(Special to The Courier)

LEOPOLDVILLE, Congo—With the hardly omnipotent prestige of the United Nations at stake in the crisis over Congo's balky province, Katanga, Dag Hammarskjold began talks last week-end with the self-style premier, Moise Tshombe.

The chaotic situation which has prevailed in Katanga is not quite as violent as it was when Belgian forces, aided by bombers, defeated Congolese troops in pitched battles to buttress the rump regime of Tshombe.

Pittsburgh, Pa.

■ This has not set well with the independent African nations. Least of all with Prime Minister Kwame Nkrumah who has rattled the sword and has already announced that Ghana will take an active military role in the situation if the UN fails in its duty. In fact, rumors are rife here that Ghanaian troops have already been alerted for possible action in the situation along with those of their sister republic, Guinea.

8/20/60

Critics of Tshombe, and there are legions of them here these days, point out that the Katanga situation was an "out and out" effort of the Belgians to sever from the Congo its key revenue producing area while at the same time managing to salvage for white investors the bulk of their colonial empire.

■

THIS WAS very well conceived as the Congo needs Katanga more than Katanga needs the Congo.

■ Most of the Belgian economic activity has been centered in this area since 1911. Although Katanga was a part of the Congo territory, its rich copper mines are linked to the east coast by the railroads of Northern and Southern Rhodesia which carried the rich copper ore to the seacoast on the Indian Ocean at the Mozambique port of Beira.

The trains, in addition to carrying the ore from Katanga brought coal from the mines at Wankie in Southrn Rhodesia to the big furnaces of Elizabethville.

It was not until 1931 that the Benguela railroad acorss the Portuguese Territory of Angola provided Kantanga with more direct access to Europe at Lobio Bay.

■ On this basis, critics here charge that the attempt to sever Katanga from the Congo was made by the Belgians. If the attempted coup had come off they claim that Katanga's western border would have been sealed and her copper and revenue would have moved through he Rhodesias and Angola to Belgium.

But, the thorny problem facing the United Nations is whether or not Mr. Hammarskjold can reconcile what westerners claim are the legitimate interests of Belgian businessmen with the conflicting interests of Congo nationalism which is being coupled to an anti-European outlook.

■

UN PRESTIGE is now at stake with the free African nations. It is already at stake within those areas which are soon to become independent, such as Nigeria.

One of the most significant things about the Katanga controversy is the fact that prominent Nigerians and East Africans have not as yet been heard on the subject of Katanga.

The Azikiwes, Mboyas, Nyrerres and Awolowos have been silent. In view of the outspoken sentiments of Messrs. Nkrumah and Toure, the silence of these important moulders of African personality and African opinion, will have an important bearing on the talks in Elizabethville.

Most Congoese observers here feel that it is very significant that Mr. Hammarskjold was accompanied to Elizabethville by some 200-odd Swedish troops. One wag quipped, "Tshombe respects white faces."

Pittsburgh Courier Pittsburgh, Pa. Sat. 8/20/60 P.8

TROOP INSPECTION—President Joseph Kasavubu of the Congo, second from right, inspects Congolese Army unit at Leopold camp in Leopoldville. He wears the uniform of a lieutenant general. With him is Col. Maurice Mpolo, acting chief of staff of the Force Publique, as the new republic's military arm is known.

Bunche Try Fails To Pave Way for UN in the Congo

Pittsburgh Courier Pittsburgh Pa. Sat. 8/13/60

(Special to The Courier)

LEOPOLDVILLE, Congo—Now faced with its most crucial situation since the Suez crisis, the United Nations was busy deliberating over just what to do about the "hard-nosed," self-style Premier of Katango Province, Moise Tshombe.

P.2

For the first time in the illustrious diplomatic career of Dr. Ralph J. Bunche, the UN's ace "troubleshooter," had failed to outtalk someone.

Dr. Bunche, a suave, cool, calculating and disarming diplomat, had failed to sway Mr. Tsombe from his avowed intention of resisting the entrance of UN troops into the area which has been the focal point of much of the unrest surrounding the birth of the free Congo.

■

TO BE SURE, Dr. Bunche had tried hard with Mr. Tsombe. An outwardly calm worker who betrays his innermost tension by the rapid-fire manner in which he smokes cigarettes, Dr. Bunche had come to Elizabethville, presumably to pave the way for the "peaceful" entry of UN troops into Katanga.

But now, Mr. Tsombe, buttressed no doubt by the pledge of support from his industrialist backers, is in open defiance of the United Nations and the public opinion of free Africa. Most significant, no nation has seen fit to recognize Katanga, and some 83 nations have indicated their unwillingness to do so at this writing.

The Katanga situation, Congolese critics declare, is the fault of the United Nations. Many here declare, "If this were Hungary or Korea, this situation would not be allowed to prevail."

But, to Bunche's credit, he tried hard to avert the crisis which now faces the Congo. Sources who are "in the know" here predict that the UN delay in taking action in the situation has resulted from behind-the-scenes moves being taken to "pressure" Belgium into getting her troops out of the Congo at a faster pace.

■

THE KATANGA crisis has also proven embarrassing to the Western bloc in the UN because of the Soviet's cry for action. The Russians have already challenged Hammarskjold to hove into Katanga or send in some UN troops who will take action.

Observers here feel that the Katanga situation will be rectified within the next 10 days insofar as the entrance of UN troops into Elizabethville is concerned. As far as Mr. Tsombe is concerned, his name will be "Mud" throughout free Africa after his Katanga nation is placed in oblivion.

It is well to point out too, that Dr. Bunche, acting in the role of mediator, did not have the right to take or make decisions. When he found out that Mr. Tsombe was unwilling to talk over the situation from a point

Ike praises UN efforts toward peace in Congo

Baltimore, Md. Oct. 8-20-60

The United Nations' "determination, under the Secretary General's tireless effort" to bring peace to the Congo won the praise Wednesday of President Eisenhower.

At the opening of his news conference the Chief Executive also welcomed the steps the Belgian Government "has taken and said it will take in conformity with the Security Council resolutions."

P. 5

President Eisenhower recalled Belgium's contributions to the development of the Congo and said he hoped "loyal cooperation" with the United Nations by all concerned would enable continued cooperation between the Belgian and Congolese peoples and make possible continued contributions to the new Congolese state by Belgian civilians.

Crisis in Congo Proves Magnet Hastening Return of Foreigners

The New York Times

Profit-Seekers, King-Makers Attempt to Capitalize on Nation's Insecurity—

New York Sty

Strangeness Becomes Commonplace

Thurs. 10-6-60

By A. M. ROSENTHAL

Special to The New York Times

P 18

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo, Oct. 4—The crisis in the Congo has turned into a magnet for a strange collection of foreigners that has come to dominate the tone of the city.

In its furious early days, the Congo crisis swept from the city most of its foreigners—the Belgian officials and business men. Some are returning now—up to 1,000 a week—but the European residental areas are still great gloomy stretches where only an occasional watchman's light burns.

But suddenly, the same crisis that drove Belgians in panic from the city has turned Leopoldville into a place full of foreign tongues and foreign faces and foreign uniforms.

Indonesians In Town

Most of the foreigners in town were brought here by the United Nations. The newest are the Indonesians in camouflage uniforms that look like paintings of autumn leaves. They wander through the city buying chocolate bars and soap powder and ivory statues and all manner of things to take with them to their patrols in the hinterland.

Nothing is really startling in Leopoldville anymore because strangeness and foreigners have become a part of the city. A Swede sits down and bangs a hot piano in a night club, a Swiss policeman wanders through Government offices, a Pakistani colonel strolls in the railroad yard with a Danish captain and a Ghanaian in a clumpy toga shouts a clipped English "hyar, hyar" at a speech in French by a Guinean general.

Moving through the city are other foreigners, for whom the crisis means a chance for a little profit.

Tall Hausa tribesmen come in from Nigeria and set up market in the city streets to sell mass-produced drums and fetishes to the eagerly buying soldiers of the United Nations. They do a fine business, but at sundown every trader takes time out to spread his thin, worn carpet and pray to Allah.

There are the men of the shadow world of business who know the money to be made in the black market that comes with the insecurity of crisis. You find them all over the Congo—here in Leopoldville and near the southern tip of the Congo in Elisabethville.

In Elisabethville a rangy adventurer from Northern Rhodesia announces loudly at the hotel bar that he has made a killing in blue jeans—"bought up every one in town and shipped them down to Rhodesia; listen if you know your way around you can make a packet; there's lots of money in pianos, everybody here is selling them cheap."

An American in a button-down collar comes to Leopoldville and in a city where businesses are shuttering he opens shops—the "Afro-Negro Bar" filled to stifling every night. United Nations officers and other foreigners shout politics at each other in a shattering din that buries every indiscretion. In the next room a Nigerian jazz band is rocking out "When the Saints Go Marching In."

In the streets, soldiers are on patrol and in their houses politicians are in guarded seclusion. In the bar that has turned into one American's gold mine, the noise comfortingly blankets all fears.

The town is full of foreigners looking for Congolese to advise—a Paris-trained lawyer from the Ivory Coast, a young American in the industrial diamond business, a Frenchman in the secret police business, and Tunisians, Moroccans, Guineans, Ghanaians in the king-making business.

A handful of Congolese mix with the foreigners—the politicians, the students turned administrators suddenly giddy with new vistas. The rest of Leopoldville just watches.

p. 18

The New York Times Thurs. 10-6-60 P. 18

The New York Times

GHANA PRESIDENT SPEAKS IN HARLEM: Kwame Nkrumah, at microphone at front addresses crowd outside Theresa Hotel, Seventh Avenue and 125th Street.

18a 1960 CONGO

Congo's Mobutu Growls at Nkrumah

The Christian Science Monitor

By John Hughes

Staff Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

Léopoldville, Congo

Ghanaian President Nkrumah's dream of pan-African unity is taking a severe buffeting in this newest and biggest black African state of the Congo.

Boston, Mass.

The Congo's current military ruler, Col. Joseph Mobutu, has been provoked by alleged Ghanaian "meddling" in Congolese affairs to declare a state of virtually open diplomatic warfare upon Ghana.

Wed. 9-28-60

So angry is Colonel Mobutu that he has fired off a strong note of protest to the United Nations demanding withdrawal from the Congo of troops from Ghana, as well as Guinea, whose goverment he also charges with interference in Congo affairs.

Colonel Mobutu voiced his criticism of Ghana at a conference with a small group of newsmen at his military stronghold in Léopoldville's principal Army camp Sept. 25.

Four newspaper correspondents, including myself and an American television cameraman were permitted to enter Colonel Mobutu's headquarters to witness for ourselves Colonel Mobutu's refutation of earlier charges by Ghana's Ambassador to the Congo that Colonel Mobutu was in hiding and in political eclipse.

After three assassination attempts upon his person within the space of a week, it is certainly true that Colonel Mobutu is guarded by awesome Congolese Army commandos armed to the teeth and deployed around his headquarters. Only after stringent security checks and several extensive searches for weapons, were we permitted to penetrate the ranks of machine-gun-wielding guards to keep our appointment with Colonel Mobutu.

Then the conference was held under the watchful eyes of further bodyguards with machineguns.

However, it is clearly evident that Colonel Mobutu is not in hiding or on the political run.

Rather did he declare, that with army reinforcements, he now is stronger than ever to act. He himself had just finished typing a strong letter of protest to UN Congo representative Rajeshwar Dayal over earlier actions of Ghanain the Congo.

Colonel Mobutu's concern stemmed from the earlier surprise Sunday afternoon parade through Léopoldville streets by Premier Lumumba in a motor convoy guarded by jeeploads of Ghana troops. Colonel Mobutu says Ghanaians under UN command are deputed to guard Mr. Lumumba only in unofficial residence, and not to assist him in a parade for propaganda purposes through the city.

Colonel Mobutu also is furious over the actions of Ghana's acting ambassador to the Congo, Nathaniel Wellbeck, who accompanied Mr. Lumumba on his swift zoom around the city, then joined in an impromptu news conference upon their return to Mr. Lumumba's house. In a speech sounding extraordinarily indiscreet for a diplomat, Mr. Wellbeck criticized Colonel Mobutu and said he was misguided and ill-advised, and now in hiding. Mr. Wellbeck admitted he had been advising Mr. Lumumba and forecasting a reconciliation within 48 hours between Mr. Lumumba and political rival President Kasavubu.

Colonel Mobutu charges all this is "manifest and flagrant interference" in Congo affairs. Thus he has demanded withdrawal of Ghana troops, who, ironically, are the cream of the UN command, and many of whom, in conversation with this correspondent, indicated they opposed their own government's pro-Lumumba line.

However, they now become innocently involved in a political clash between their own President Nkrumah and the Congo's Colonel Mobutu. The basis of the disagreement between the young Congolese military leader and the Ghanaian leader of African independence is Mr. Nkrumah's steadfast championship of Mr. Lumumba despite the latter's dismissal from the premiership by President Kasavubu.

Mr. Nkrumah perhaps believes Mr. Lumumba, who is personally known by him, will conform more readily to his own dreams of pan-African unity. He constantly upheld Mr. Lumumba's claim to Congo political leadership, despite actions which have been widely criticized.

Mr. Nkrumah's argument is that he is upholding the legitimate government of the Congo elected by the people, while Colonel Mobutu argues Nkrumah is meddling by attempting to reinstate Mr. Lumumba after the latter had been neutralized by a military coup d'état. Meanwhile earlier in the weekend Colonel Mobutu as a sort of intermediary, visited both Messrs. Kasavubu and Lumumba later declared he would retain the premiership in any reconciliation and reshuffling.

Colonel Mobutu, however, told us that while he favors conciliation to end the rivalry between Messrs. Kasavubu and Lumumba, this does not mean revival of the "old system."

"Everything must be revised. The same old government with Messrs. Kasavubu and Lumumba could be disastrous. We must have a new government with a broad, national base. "National and political leaders must decide Mr. Lumumba's fate."

Mobutu Installs Team

The Christian Science Monitor

Readers

Léopoldville, Congo

Congo strongman Col. Joseph Mobutu said late Sept. 21 he had asked the United Nations to withdraw Guinean and Ghanaian troops from the Congo.

Boston, Mass.

By John Hughes

Staff Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

Wed. 9-28-60

Léopoldville, Congo

The government of the Congo now has been assumed by a band of African "young Turks" who have taken over under the protective umbrella of Col. Joseph Mobutu and his Congolese Army.

These are men mostly in their twenties and early thirties whom Colonel Mobutu promised as a sort of supreme governing commission when he staged a military coup d'état last week.

The aim is that, ruling by virtual decree and without parliament, this commission should neutralize the two existing rival governments of the Congo, reduce chaos, and restore some degree of stability and perhaps foreign confidence in the country.

This is what the new authority hopes to do at best, and it already has given indication of its stern intentions by barring newsmen from contact with Congo's other governments upon the threat of arrest and expulsion.

At worst, however, if the new governing commission is unsuccessful it would only add to Congo confusion by providing yet another government to the list among those who claim to be running the country but whose areas of influence and authority are blurred by overlapping and rivalry.

Lumumba Denied Visa

[Civil servants apparently loyal to Patrice Lumumba were ousted from government offices Sept. 21 by Colonel Mobutu's soldiery, the Associated Press reported.

[But, according to Reuters, Colonel Mobutu's men made no attempt to take over Mr. Lumumba's residence. Mr. Lumumba was inside, behind a protective guard of Ghanaian soldiers.

[Mr. Lumumba called in the African ambassadors in Léopoldville Sept. 20 and asked them to guarantee his protection.

[But Colonel Mobutu, said to resent Ghanaian protection of Mr. Lumumba, was reported conferring early Sept. 21 with legal advisers to see how the arrest of Mr. Lumumba could be carried out.

[The United States embassy announced it has refused to grant Mr. Lumumba's request for a visa to the United Nations. A United States spokesman said visas could not be granted to Mr. Lumumba and his supporters as official delegates pending clarification of the "confused situation."

[The spokesman pointed out that Mr. Lumumba and his men could apply for tourist visas, but it was noted this would take some time. Mr. Lumumba announced his intention early this week of attending the current UN General Assembly session in New York.]

Success of the new commission hinges on the Congolese Army whose support is vital for enforcement of the new unit's authority. The government, dependent upon Army backing, naturally poses all sorts of dangers of military autocracy, but, on the other hand, few observers are impressed by the chaos wrought in the Congo by the present application of pseudo-democracy among people whom the Belgians for so long had insulated from all forms of political experience and expression.

Congo Reins Shift

Fulfills Pledges

A significant thing about formation of the new commission is that it is yet another fulfillment of the promise by Colonel Mobuto, who appears to be one of the few Congolese leaders to follow through with a program once announced. He said he would eject Soviets and Czechoslovaks, and he has done it. He said he would neutralize Parliament, and he has done it. He said he would appoint a governing commission of students, and he has done it.

Associated Press Wirephoto

Justin Bomboko

Picked to head Congo Government.

The young members of the new governing commission may seem a slender hope for the Congo to pin its hopes on, but in a country starved of Congolese with a higher education they represent the few with academic discipline and widened horizons behind them. The president of the commission is to be Justin Bomboko, Foreign Minister in the Ileo government who currently is the leader of the Congolese delegation in the United Nations. His deputy is Albert Ndele, who has shown a flair for financial management.

Right away the new commission faces grave challenges. The UN, for example, has confirmed yet another atrocity, committed this time in northern Katanga by gendarmerie of Katangan Premier Moise Tshombe against Baluba tribesmen. The UN says 68 men, women, and children were found shot with their hands tied behind them in the one village alone of Lueuna in northern Katanga. This is another savage reminder of the depth of tribal feelings and animosity in the vast country which had little opportunities for growth of national consciousness.

Meanwhile, there have been reports of an Army mutiny at Coquilhatville in the northern Congo province of Equateur among soldiers of the Force Publique, said to be discontented by lack of pay and food. This mutiny, however, apparently was not influenced by political motives.

Accord Asserted

Meanwhile, Colonel Mobutu is understood to be undertaking a careful screening operation among his troops in Léopoldville, allowing freedom to patrol with arms only to trusted troops loyal to himself.

Announcement of the new ruling commission coincided with a press conference called by Mr. Lumumba, who displayed a document signed by himself and President Kasavubu which he alleged reconciled these two antagonistic leaders and ended Congo's political crisis.

In fact, the document would restrict the powers of the Premier, and although providing for some degree of administrative cooperation between lower levels of the Kasavubu and Lumumba camps to get administrative machinery of the country working again it contains little tangible evidence of reconciliation.

U. N. CHIEF WARNS KATANGA OF FORCE

The N.Y. Times

Threatens to Let Troops Use Weapons to Protect Tribe From Province's Police

New York

By A. M. ROSENTHAL

Special to The New York Times.

ELISABETHVILLE, the Congo, Sept. 21—The United Nations threatened today to use force to protect the civilian population of the Secessionist Province of Katanga against "repressive operations" by the state police and soldiers.

Times 9-22-60

The warning, sent by Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold to President Moise Tshombe of Katanga, represented a reversal of the policy established for the 4,000 United Nations troops in dealing with clashes between authorities and rebellious Baluba tribesmen.

Until now, United Nations soldiers in trouble spots have confined themselves largely to guarding their headquarters, protecting European refugees and fleeing Katanga officials and sending out patrols.

Officials of the United Nations command at this capital of Katanga indicated that fresh orders were being given to United Nations soldiers, who had been under instructions not to use their weapons, except in cases of direct self defense. Soldiers of United Nations contingents here—Swedish, Irish, Senegalese Sudanese, Ethiopian and Moroccan—will now apparently be expected to take action to put down disorders.

68 Tribesmen Slain

Mr. Hammarskjold's warning, bitterly resented by some Katanga officials, was issued as a result of the killing of at least sixty-eight Baluba tribesmen in the coal-mining city of Luena, about 250 miles north of Elisabethville.

The trouble in Luena was started by Baluba tribesmen, fanatically opposed to Mr. Tshombe because he is a son-in-law of the chief of the Lunda Tribe, a traditional enemy of the Baluba.

Ethiopian officers at Luena said that 500 Balubas, armed with bows and arrows and bicycle chains, forced the closing of a coal mine Sept. 13, killed two of Mr. Tshombe's supporters and rejected Ethiopian pleas to disperse.

Two days later about 125 of the Katanga state police pulled into Luena on a special train. Ethiopians said that the police opened fire on a large crowd of Balubas, chased down others and shot them in sight of United Nations soldiers.

Village Huts Burned

The next day Katanga patrols burned down huts in neighboring villages. Two trucks were loaded with Balubas, with their hands tied, and driven out of town. The trucks were later found empty, abandoned by the side of road.

Mr. Hammarskjold's protest, one of his most sharply worded, said that the police action at Luena had been inexcusable, that it had to be condemned by the United Nations. Mr. Hammarskjold said that it was the duty of the United Nations force in Katanga to protect the civilian population.

"The duty in this case is in no way restricted by the rules of non-intervention applied by the force in relation to domestic conflicts," he added. "Any repetition of repressive measures of this kind referred to in this protest will therefore be resisted by the United Nations force and immediately reported.

Atrocities Denied

Official spokesmen for Katanga denied that there had been any atrocities. They said that the Baluba tribesmen had been harassing towns and villages throughout the province and that United Nations soldiers had been unable or unwilling to deal with them. Belgians here commented angrily that the United Nations troops had taken no steps to stop the Baluba rioters, but were now threatening to take action against the Katanga forces for dealing with them.

The Secretary General's warning pointed up a problem that has frustrated United Nations officers here since from the start of the emergency operation. That problem is keeping order with a small force in a huge country that is thrown into almost daily spasms by tribal feuds when all sides know that the weapons are not to be used except in self-defense.

United Nations officers saiy it is like watching a mob fight without being able to step in until someone attacks them.

The United Nations officers here are painfully aware that they are resented by many Belgian settlers and business men.

Almost every day, in Elisabethville newspapers, there are sharp articles attacking the United Nations for its "do-nothing attitude." Barbed letters to the editor come close to accusing United Nations soldiers of cowardice.

It was expected here that this antagonism would increase unless United Nations troops received orders to take action against the Baluba rioters in addition to protecting the tribesmen from the police.

Warning Issued at U. N.

Special to The New York Times.

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y., Sept. 21—Secretary General Hammarskjold has warned that the United Nations force in Katanga will use their guns to protect civilians from police brutality.

Teh warning was cabled to Moishe Tshombe, President of secessionist Katanga Province after an incident at Leunena in n which sixty-eight Baluba ribesmen were reported slain.

KATANGA DENIES CHARGE

Rebuts Nkrumah on Origin of Letter to Lumumba

The N.Y. Times

A representative here of secessionist Katanga Province denied Tuesday a charge by Preesident Kwame Nkrumah of Ghana that Katanga had manufactured a letter to Patrice Lumumba, deposed Premier of the Congo, over Mr. Nkrumah's name.

New York

An aide to Mr. Nkrumah, in repudiating the letter, said in New York last week that he thought it had originated in Elisabethville, capital of Katanga.

Times 10-13-60

Evariste Kimba, who describes himself as Foreign Minister of the Republic of Katanga, issued the denial. He said Mr. Nkrumah had enough problems at home to preclude his representing himself as a defender of the Congo.

The letter, dated Sept. 12, suggested methods by which Mr. Lumumba could consolidate his position and make use of his enemies. It was made public by Col. Joseph D. Mobutu, Chief of Staff of the Congolese Army, who took control Sept. 14.

Congo Army Chief, Katanga Leader Palsy-Walsy After Surprise Meeting

The Montgomery Advertiser

Montgomery Ala.

ELISABETHVILLE, Katanga (AP)—Col. Joseph Mobutu, Congo army strongman, and President Moise Tshombe of secessionist Katanga province held a surprise meeting Sunday and reached what was called an agreement of mutual friendship and respect.

There were few details and neither would say exactly why Mobutu flew here from Leopoldville for the meeting. But a Katanga government spokesman said Mobutu had come to seek Tshombe's backing for his temporary government in the central capital of Leopoldville.

"Tshombe is now a power to be reckoned with in the Congo and Mobutu realizes it," the spokesman said.

More tribal trouble was reported, meanwhile, in Katanga. A government official said the entire population of the central Katanga town of Luena—about 1,500 persons—took refuge from marauding Baluba tribesmen in the town's only convent.

He said Ethiopian United Nations troops and detachments of Katanga police had thrown a cordon around the convent and "will protect the population at all costs."

One white officer was killed and 11 were injured Saturday in fighting in that area with tribesmen hostile to Tshombe.

The meeting between Mobutu and Tshombe came as a complete surprise in Elisabethville. The army leader flew here unexpectedly from Leopoldville and met nearly five hours with Tshombe at the president's home. Both men said they had a satisfactory round of talks that would lead to closer contacts between the central Congo and this breakaway province.

Tshombe termed the talks "most agreeable."

"We did not reach any decision on the future of the Congo," he said. "I mean I could hardly talk to Col. Mobutu about things like that. He is not a politician. But we will respect Col. Mobutu's military administration until the end of the year. Then some form of government must be inaugurated in Leopoldville. I am not yet prepared to attend a round-table conference of Congo leaders with the position as it is today."

Mobutu flew back to Leopoldville on a regular scheduled passenger flight.

A Mobutu aide said earlier, "Col. Mobutu has come here to plead with Mr. Tshombe to help him settle the chaotic state in the country. Mobutu may offer Tshombe a high governmental post."

There was no word on that point after the meeting between the two men.

A Katanga spokesman earlier declared Mobutu was "crawling" to Tshombe.

After their talks, interrupted only by a lunch break, Tshombe and Mobutu met with reporters on the lawn of the president's home. Tshombe smiled and talked freely, but Mobutu appeared disconsolate and made only a few terse comments.

Mobutu said, however, they had discussed generally the situation in the Congo and the talks were conducted "with utmost friendship and cordiality."

Later, both men smiled and waved while posing for photographers at Elisabethville airport.

Ghana Letter To Lumumba Gives Advice

The Montgomery Advertiser

Montgomery, Ala.

LEOPOLDVILLE the Congo (AP) — The Congo government commissioners made public Wednesday an intimate letter from Ghana's President Kwame Nkrumah advising "my dear Patrice" Lumumba how to manipulate enemies and friends to regain and hold power over the Congo.

They handed out also copies of letters they said Lumumba wrote to the Soviet Union and Red China asking for heavy arms, food, personnel and volunteers.

The commissioners serving under strongman Col. Joseph Mobutu emphasized that the four-page Nkrumah letter on Ghana government stationery reached here seven days after Lumumba was fired as premier by President Joseph Kasavubu. It was dated Sept. 12.

LETTER GENUINE

Ghana quickly acknowledged that the letter carrying Nkrumah's advice to Lumumba was genuine.

Nkrumah is in New York attending the U.N. General Assembly, campaigning for an all-African handling of the Congo problem and promoting—without success so far—the idea of a big African-Asian neutral bloc on the international scene.

(There was no immediate comment from the Ghana delegation in New York after it learned of the publication of the Nkrumah letter in Leopoldville.)

The letter advised Lumumba to make use of his enemies as well as of the United Nations to reestablish his power and eliminate them later.

The commissioners' spokesman, Mario Cardozo, issued photocopies of the letter, which he denounced as an attempt of "blacks to colonize blacks."

Cardozo indignantly declared that the commissioners would not tolerate Ghana interference in the Congo's affairs and said the people of this country considered themselves as Congolese first and Africans afterward.

Mobutu Gets Full Support Of Kasavubu

The Montgomery Advertiser

Montgomery, Ala.

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo, (AP)—President Joseph Kasvubu threw his prestige squarely behind Col. Joseph Mobutu's commission government Thursday and set the stage for a possible reconciliation with secessionist Kantanga province.

Kasavubu summoned foreign diplomats to his mansion overlooking the Congo River rapids and announced his endorsement of the commission of 27 college graduates named by Mobutu Sept. 20 to run the Congolese government until the end of the year.

CALLS FOR CONFERENCE

At the same time Kasavubu called a round-table conference of all the nation's squabbling politicians, including former president Patrice Lumumba and Lumumba's bitterest critic, Katanga's President Premier Moise Tshombe. He said the Congolese Army will protect all participants.

The presidential announcement swept from the political scene the shadow government of Sen. Joseph Ileo, named by Kasavubu Sept. 5 to replace the Communist-leaning Lumumba.

Lumumba never accepted his removal. And the Ileo government was never able to function.

Ileo was present and accepted the decision as the president read his announcement to the diplomats of 17 nations, including the United States, nearly all West European countries, India, Japan, Tunisia and Liberia.

AFRICANS ABSENT

The diplomatic representatives of Ghana, Guinea, Morocco, Yugoslavia and the United Arab Republic were conspicuously absent from the meeting.

Ghana Charge D'Affaires A. N. Wellbeck told newsmen the pan-African group continues to regard Lumumba as the only rightful premier.

Lumumba himself had his aides spread word that he would be delighted to take part in the round-table conference—as premier.

Gang Whips Congo Veep; Lynch Fails

The Montgomery Advertiser

Montgomery Ala

Mat 10-15-60

Pro-Lumumba Crowd Pounces On Ndele After Hotel Talk

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo (AP)—A crowd of pro-Lumumba youths pounced on the vice president of the Congo's provisional government commission Friday, beat him mercilessly as he left a hotel news conference, and tried to lynch him.

The attack on Albert Ndele, one of the most promising of the young commissioners, came soon after Congolese troops were called off their guard watch of ex-Premier Patrice Lumumba's residence. This left Lumumba free to resume political agitation.

SERIOUS INJURIES

Two unarmed Moroccan officers were near the assault scene. A lone Ghana soldier of the U.N. force, on duty outside the exclusive Memling Hotel, watched the screaming attack with his automatic rifle slung on his shoulder.

He lowered it toward the fist-swinging youths near the end, making them scatter, as Ndele reeled from serious injuries and a deep head wound that drenched him in blood.

George Whitman, a New York commercial diamond merchant, helped Ndele back inside the hotel.

NEW ECONOMY

There was no immediate explanation for lifting the guard that has kept Lumumba a political prisoner. Col. Joseph Mobutu, the army commander who took leadership away from Lumumba last month and set up the government commission, was celebrating his 30th birthday at his villa in Camp Leopold II.

No members of Mobutu's army were in sight as Ndele left the hotel for his car. The commission vice president is also a member of the Monetary Council that runs the new nation's economy. He is a cleancut university-educated man respected by most Western diplomats here.

WITHOUT FLINCHING

Ndele had just told reporters his people and most Afro-Asian nations approved Mobutu's action last month in expelling Soviet and Czech diplomats and technical experts.

"This regrettable act. . .became necessary because of the intolerable and unprecedented (Communist) interference in our internal affairs," Ndele said.

"We will fight without flinching not only against colonialism but also against communism. Communist ideas horrify us and we will never accept them under any circumstances.

Congo Leaders Threaten To Sever Ties With U. N.

The Montgomery Advertiser P-2-A

Montgomery Ala

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo (AP)—The Congo's young leaders threatened to break relations with the United Nations Wednesday because the world body still refuses to turn over deposed Premier Patrice Lumumba. P-2-A Few observers dared guess what would happen next in the stalemate. Hostility toward whites increased and relations between the provisional Congo government and the United Nations grew worse by the hour.

The College of Technical Commissioners, appointed by army chief Col. Joseph Mobutu to run the government, threatened to halt U.N. broadcasts over Leopoldville radio. Times, 10-13-60

"The United Nations makes fun of our national army," said Information Commissioner Albert Bolela. "If they intend to impose their trusteeship on us, let them say so."

Europeans driving past Lumumba's mansion, which encircling soldiers have made his prison, met a hail of stones from angry Lumumba followers.

The luxurious riverside villa is the center of a swarming beehive. Around the house is a ring of U.N. Ghana machine-gunners, there to guard Lumumba and stop any try at serving him with an arrest warrant.

Around them is a second ring, made up of Congo army troops. They also want Lumumba bottled up, while the government commission and the United Nations decide what to do about the deposed premier. The commission wants him arrested for illegal political activities.

Beyond these rings are scores of Lumumba supporters, denied access to their favorite. It was this crowded mass that hurled stones at passing cars, inflicting no serious injury or damage.

The lengthing of the crisis and lack of any decision on Lumumba's fate appears to have raised the former premier's prestige among many Congolese.

Thus far, Lumumba appears to many as a powerful personality given full U.N. protection while defying the young commissioners

It is generally believed Lumumba will try to whip up support at the first opportunity.

By remaining entrenched in the official premier's residence, Lumumba can cling to much of the prestige of that office. The residence—formerly occupied by the Belgian governors general—is a powerful symbol in the public imagination.

But as long as Lumumba remains there, Mobutu's men can isolate him. They can keep his telephone cut, censor cables sent out in his name and effectively block his political action.

Western diplomats fear that, as long as he remains a free man under U.N. protection, Lumumba can block all compromise efforts by refusing to accept any political solution that does not re-establish him as premier.

HALF-HEARTED U.N. GESTURE

Sympathy Extended Congo Official

The Montgomery Advertiser

Montgomery Ala

By MICHAEL GOLDSMITH

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo (AP)—The United Nations Saturday expressed half-hearted sympathy to Albert Ndele, vice president of the Congo's provisional government who was beaten and stabbed Friday while a U.N. Ghana soldier looked on impassively. Times, 10-16-60

Tension rose in the city after the newspaper Courrier d'Afrique published a front-page photograph showing a gang of pro-Communist youths hacking away at the bleeding Ndele with the Ghanaian standing nearby. P-2-A

U. N. spokesman Paul Jankowski of Poland told a news conference, "The United Nations deeply regrets active violence and we express our sympathy to the victims of such violence."

Asked whether this referred explicitly to Ndele, Jankowski replied, "I am authorized to express sympathy." When newsmen pressed him, Jankowski said, "I cannot understand why so much fuss is made about an isolated incident."

Ndele, one of the most capable members of the government commission, was recovering from deep knife wounds in the back of his head.

Still bleeding and in pain, he told newsmen from his hospital bed that the civil police force was aiding supporters of deposed Premier Patrice Lumumba in a campaign of terror against the goverment commission.

The police—unlike the army—apparently remains loyal to Lumumba and has been completely inactive in efforts to keep order in the city. This and the passivity of some U. N. troops appeared to encourage the gangs of young Lumumba supporters to increasing acts of violence intended mainly to intimidate Lumumba's political opponents.

Jankowski told his news conference that armed U.N. patrols in the African quarters had been strengthened to avert renewed outbreaks of violence, but a tour of the city late Saturday failed to uncover more than a few isolated soldiers.

With law and order rapidly breaking down in the capital, the United Nations refused to provide a military guard for the 28 members of the government commission. Jankowski said the U.N. Command does not have enough troops in Leopoldville to provide a bodyguard for "all politicians and members of Parliament."

He also declined to reveal what orders were given to U.N. soldiers on patrol in the city. "This is an internal military matter," he said.

Military sources said the patrols have instructions to intervene if they see anyone being molested "provided it is not a routine altercation" among Congolese civilians.

Some U. N. officers privately were severely critical of these vague instructions which required unsophisticated African soldiers to evaluate street disorders.

Lumumba's Special Dragon

The Christian Science Monitor

Emergence of Patrice Lumumba as "pretender" to the Congo premiership after a short period of hibernation brings with it a certain amount of sound and fury against the United Nations operation in his country. Mr. Lumumba is reported as saying he will chase the UN forces out.

Boston Mass

In the past he seemed to think that anytime he, as the head of the Congolese government, asked the UN to leave, it would have to do so. But just as the starting of the operation in the Congo had to be authorized by the Security Council so the termination of that operation should be.

If a majority of the Council members, or any of its permanent members, consider that the operation is necessary to safeguard world peace, it may well continue even against the protests of factions in the Congo. Withdrawal of UN forces would in all probability open up the Congo once more to unilateral intervention by one or another—indeed probably several—big powers. Where such competition would lead no one knows, but it would not be peaceward.

Mes, 10-11-60

Also, it would not be independence-ward for smaller African nations who might thus be caught in the cold war. This consideration would surely prompt the cold-war neutrals everywhere, and the new nations in Africa, to support the UN. Surely they would back any new Security Council resolution that might be needed to insure the UN's position in the Congo.

Lumumba Returns To Politicking

The Christian Science Monitor

By the Associated Press

Léopoldville, Congo

Congolesea troops holding Patrice Lumumba a prisoner in his residence have been withdrawn. and the deposed Premier has gone back to politicking.

There was no immediate explanation for the end Oct. 14 of the four-day blockade that the Congo Army's commander, Col. Joseph Mobutu, said would be maintained indefinitely. Colonel Mobutua had said the troops would arrest Mr. Lumumba if he dared leave his house.

Mr. Lumumba's advisers and supporters called on him without being molested amid indications the ex-Premier may be preparing another attempt to seize power.

Boston Mass

"Perhaps the Prime Minister will organize a little parade one of these days soon," one adviser, an Egyptian, told newsmen.

Mes, 10-14-60

Colonel Mobutu was at his own villa in Camp Léopold II celebrating his 30th birthday and not immediately available for explanations.

Intention Stated

The Congolese Army commander told newsmen Oct. 13 he had no intention of fighting with the United Nations over the future of Mr. Lumumba.

He thus overrode his own provisional government who had served an ultimatum Oct. 11 that they would order Congolese troops to attack UN soldiers protecting Mr. Lumumba unless he was handed over for arrest. The UN command rejected the ultimatum.

But Colonel Mobutu sought to demonstrate Oct. 13 that he was still in control and could arrest whomever he pleases.

He summoned newsmen to the Léopoldville airport to meet a plane from Stanleyville, capital of Oriental Province, where Mr. Lumumba has had strong support.

Supporters Aboard

Four Lumumba supporters were aboard the plane in custody of half a dozen police and Mobutu officers. The prisoners included Jean Pierre Finan, the provincial Governor, and Captain Fataki, commander of the Stanleyville military camp.

Captain Fataki was handcuffed, and all four prisoners looked frightened and haggard. They were loaded into a military truck and taken off to prison in Léopoldville.

Newsmen asked a British major commanding Ghana UN troops at the airport whether he was going to intervene and free the prisoners.

"I have orders to intervene only if they are beaten up," the major replied.

Asked why UN forces had prevented Mr. Lumumba's arrest, he said, "Look, I am only a simple soldier."

Injuries Reported

[Reuters reported that about a dozen persons were injured Oct. 14 by police breaking up a demonstration of some 300 pro-Lumumba Congolese near Léopoldville's United Nations building.

[The police used rifle butts, sticks, and their boots to disperse the demonstrators, followers of Mr. Lumumba who also were parading in support of the UN.

[The demonstration sought to counter an anti-UN demonstration Oct. 13 by supporters of President Kasavubu.

[The latter accused the United Nations of interfering in the Congo's internal affairs by protecting Mr. Lumumba.

[Demonstrators handed out leaflets Oct. 13 denouncing Rajeshwar Dayal, Indian diplomat in charge of the United Nations' Congo operations, as the "No. 1 Communist agent for Africa."]

Lumumba Aides Reported Arrested

The Christian Science Monitor

Boston Mass

By Reuters

Léopoldville, Congo

Col. Joseph Mobutu, Congolese strongman, announced Sept 23 that he has arrested two top supporters of ousted Premier Patrice Lumumba.

The colonel said Mr. Lumumba's Deputy Premier, Antoine Gizenga, and his Minister of Youth and Sport, Maurice Mpolo, were arrested Sept. 23 following discovery of a plot against Colonel Mobutu himself Sept. 18.

Colonel Mobutu said both men are "in prison somewhere."

Asked what plans he had for Mr. Lumumba who still claims to be premier, Colonel Mobutu said: "Nothing for the moment."

Mr. Mpolo, a stanch member of Mr. Lumumba's Congolese National Movement was regarded as Mr. Lumumba's righthand man.

Mr. Gizenga, leader of the African Solidarity Party, allied with Mr. Lumumba, was regarded as a leftist.

Colonel Mobutu said Sept. 23 he had ordered the expulsion of leftist Mrs. Andrée Blouin, a woman of mixed French and African background, who was a close friend of Mr. Gizenga and an adviser to Mr. Lumumba's Cabinet. He also ordered expulsion for leftwinger Serge Michel, Mr. Lumumba's press officer.

Colonel Mobutu claimed he had found documentary evidence of a plot to restore Mr. Lumumba "involving Communists and Guinean President Kwame Nkrumah of Ghana."

He asked for the withdrawal of Ghanaian and Guinean UN troops, but UN sources said Colonel Mobutu's demand would have to be countersigned by President Kasavubu.

The Army chief—appointed by Mr. Kasavubu 10 days ago—complained that the Ghanaian forces were preventing the lawful arrest of Mr. Lumumba, who remains in the Premier's residence and still claims the premiership.

The Ghanaians, ordered by the UN to carry out Mr. Lumumba's request for protection, flatly denied they had resisted any lawful attempt to arrest him.

"We have a difficult job here," said one top Ghanaian. "We are soldiers and have obeyed orders—now we are being kicked by both sides."

[The Associated Press reported that Ghanaian troops guarding Mr. Lumumba were reinforced Sept. 22 with Sudanese, which may help to correct a widely held impression among anti-Lumumba Congolese that the Ghanaians were saving him from arrest because he is or was a personal friend of President Nkrumah.

Colonel Mobutu, who has taken over the government buildings for a "technical commission" of university students and graduates he appointed to run the country until the end of the year, had trouble with his own troops Sept. 22.

Several hundred unarmed Congolese soldiers marched on his home at nearby Camp Léopold after holding a meeting to protest against irregular pay.

Congolese gendarmes fired over the heads of the soldiers before they got near the house of their commander in chief and they fled in disorder without casualties.

Mobutu Praised

By Reuters

Paris

Two members of the Congolese UN delegation representing Patrice Lumumba said here Sept. 22 that Col. Joseph Mobutu had rendered a "precious service to the nation" and avoided the "spilling of innocent blood" by taking power.

Thomas Kanza and Jacques Lumbala said they considered Colonel Mobutu had no intention of setting up a military dictatorship in the Congo.

In a statement issued on their way back to Léopoldville after being recalled from New York, the two men said Colonel Mobutu's intervention "provoked a certain discontent on the part of some Congolese leaders who are not the least important."

They added that by "neutralizing" Mr. Lumumba and President Kasavubu, Colonel Mobutu would probably succeed in resolving the problem of breakaway Katanga and Kasai Provinces.

UN Guards Maintain Vigil At Lumumba Residence

The Christian Science Monitor

By Reuters

Léopoldville, Congo

United Nations guards remained around the official residence of ousted Premier Patrice Lumumba Oct. 10 despite a declaration the previous night that he had no further need of military protection.

The Congolese leader toured the capital Oct. 9 proclaiming that he was taking over effective control again after "my 30 days of voluntary exile."

Cries of "uhuru" (freedom) greeted Mr. Lumumba on his tour.

But it was not immediately clear what action he planned to take to back up his statements.

Has spent the last month in his official residence despite his dismissal as Premier and his "neutralization" by Army Chief Col. Joseph Mobutu, who made a move to assume control of the 100-day-old republic in September.

Mr. Lumumba still claims to be Premier and to have nationwide backing, but his reception Oct. 9 appeared to some observers to spring more from enthusiasm from a hard core of supporters than from any mass sympathy with Mr. Lumumba.

Mr. Lumumba, smiling and looking confident, said during his tour of the city the United Nations and the whole of the Western world was opposed to him.

Pointing to his four guards, he declared: "The Army is behind me—I would be greeted like a king if I went to Camp Léopold (Army headquarters)."

At one stage of his tour Mr. Lumumba said Colonel Mobutu wanted to send Army cadets to Britain "to become Fascists."

Colonel Mobutu declared at the beginning of October he wanted cadets to be trained in Britain, but the request has been turned down by the United Nations.

UN Action in Congo Urged

The Christian Science Monitor

By Peter Lyne
Parliamentary Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

London

Britain, with its still-extensive interests in Africa, is shocked and exasperated by the chaos in the Congo.

As Premier Patrice Lumumba and President Kasavubu continued their shuttlecock game of firing each other, the Briton who has been most closely connected with recent Congo happenings spoke out forcefully.

He is Maj. Gen. Henry T. Alexander, chief of staff of the Ghanaian Army, who went into the Congo with the Ghanian forces under United Nations control in July.

General Alexander is currently in England on leave and to attend a staff officers' conference.

He welcomed President Kasavubu's dismissal of Premier Lumumba. That was just before the news flash came through Sept. 6 that the Congo Cabinet after an all-night meeting Sept. 5 had stripped Mr. Kasavubu of all his functions for allegedly commiting "an act of high treason."

According to General Alexander, Mr. Kasavubu "is a very steady man who must have been very concerned at the way the Congo situation has been handled by Mr. Lumumba."

General Alexander would be glad to see Mr. Lumumba removed from office.

In an interview published here in the liberal News Chronicle, General Alexander expressed his deep concern over the situation in the Congo. He said the UN has lost the initiative.

He said "the whole aim of calling in the UN was to keep the cold war out of Africa. But UN lack of initiative has allowed the cold war to grow to serious proportions in the Congo, which was what African leaders wanted to avoid."

UN Planning Urged

According to General Alexander, there should be a permanent UN military planning staff in New York. African states should be encouraged to have part of their armed forces equipped to act quickly if the need arises, which the General said is likely elsewhere in Africa.

In his view, the restrictive terms of reference for the UN troops in the Congo had made them a less effective force than the police force. He criticized the West for its slow reaction to events in Africa. In contrast, he said, the East had acted with speed and was now well installed in the Congo. If this continued, he said, the West would lose throughout Africa.

Stronger UN Role

Acute concern about Congo happenings and their possible repercussions elsewhere in Africa is expressed in a number of British newspaper editorials.

Some insist that the UN must intervene to preserve freedom in the Congo no matter how dangerous, costly, and lengthy such intervention might prove to be.

But there is another section of opinion in Britain which sympathizes with French President de Gaulle's pronouncement that the UN has shown itself incapable of fulfilling the task and that the chief Western powers should have undertaken defense of liberty in the Congo.

Congo Chief Held, Freed In 2 Hours

The Montgomery Advertiser

Lumumba Refused Use Of Radio By U.N. Troops

Mont. Ala. Tues. 9-13-60

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo (AP) — Patrice Lumumba came roaring back through the streets of Leopoldville shouting, "Victory," from a military jeep Monday night, only two hours after he was arrested and then freed.

The ousted premier sped to Leopoldville radio station after a tour of the African communes but was not allowed to speak.

What happened at Camp Leopold, where Lumumba had been taken by army troops, could not be learned immediately.

Lumumba was in custody less than two hours. When he reached the radio station he said. "I am not arrested. The people are with me."

U.N. WEAKENING

There were reports—all unconfirmed—that troops of Lumumba's Batatela tribe had managed somehow to free him from Camp Leopold.

The United Nations position meanwhile appeared to be weakening.

Reports circulated here that the United Arab Republic had decided to withdraw its U.N. forces, including a paratroop battalion that had just arrived. In Cairo a government spokesman contended the U.N. had violated the Congo's sovereignty by seizing the radio and airfields.

There were rumors — unconfirmed — that Ghana might also withdraw its U.N. force. While a U.A.R. withdrawal probably would not affect the U.N. operation greatly, the Ghana force has been a mountain of strength to the U.N. in preserving order.

RADIO GUARD

But it was the steadfast U.N. guard at the radio station that turned Lumumba back again. The radio station guard was greatly strengthened and barbed wire was strung after Lumumba's visit.

Six or seven military jeeps loaded with armed soldiers in camouflaged helmets came racing through the city with Lumumba, sirens sounding.

Lumumba occasionally raised his voice above the din through a loudspeaker to shout, "Victory, Victory."

ALL CONFUSION

But whether it was a victory or not could not be determined in the confusion.

Lumumba had been taken out of his residence by armed soldiers. He was followed by his wife and children and a car piled high with baggage. Two hours later he was free again.

In all the excitement, the power struggle between the left-wing ex-premier and the Congo's moderate president, Joseph Kasavubu, remained unresolved.

Kasavubu's premier-designate is Senate President Joseph Ileo.

KASAVUBU VICTORY

Montgomery, Ala.

Congolese Army, U.N. Call For Cease-Fire

The Montgomery Advertiser

Sun. 9-11-60

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo (AP)—A cease-fire was ordered Saturday in the Congo's bloody civil war. It came amid fast-moving—although still cloudy—political developments in the crisis-crippled African nation.

A U.N. spokesman said the cease-fire directive was issued by the Congolese army in cooperation with the United Nations. The action was seen as a victory both for the U.N. Command and Congo President Joseph Kasavubu, who apparently has won the support of the unruly Congolese army from Premier Patrice Lumumba.

NEW GOVERNMENT

If obeyed the order will wreck Lumumba's military campaign to crush his secessionist foes in Kasai and Katanga provinces.

Kasavubu has proposed to solve the Congo's problems by turning over to the U.N. forces the responsibility for keeping order and by calling for talks with dissident leaders of the breakaway provinces.

(In a message to U.N. headquarters in New York Saturday Kasavubu said a new Congo government had been formed excluding Lumumba. Kasavubu earlier had named Joseph Ileo as new premier. In his U.N. report he said Justin Bomboko had been named foreign minister and Albert Kalonji, one of the secessionist leaders of the anti-Lumumba forces, minister of interior.

(In a telephone interview with South African newspapers in Durban and Johannesburg, Kasavubu was reported as saying he had dismissed Lumumba because of atrocities committed in Kasai Province by central government troops. The report quoted him as saying he also had dismissed five of Lumumba's ministers "because they are Communists.")

The United Nations announced the Congolese army order after scraping up cash to meet long-delayed payrolls for the restless and poorly disciplined troops that garrison Camp Leopold II in the capital.

It was assumed similar orders are being issued by Katanga's Premier Moise Tshombe and Kalonji, a Kasai Baluba chieftain. The two are Lumumba's opposition afield. A report of a clash between Congolese troops and Katanga soldiers with two dead near the Kivu-Katanga border, however, sent a patrol of U.N. Irish troops to investigate.

A change in the military atmosphere in the capital was apparent even before announcement of the cease-fire order.

DISPUTED POSITION

The U. N. action came shortly after Lumumba, whose position as premier is in dispute, had told newsmen there was a danger the Congo crisis may set off World War III.

He said he wanted to avoid this turn of events, although he has accepted Soviet-bloc planes, trucks and technical help to prosecute his war against political rivals.

He demanded that the United Nations stop Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold and his aides from what he called their interference in the Congo's internal affairs.

DISCIPLINE RAGGED

Discipline remains ragged in the 20,000-man Congolese army, whose July mutiny opened a rampage of murder, rape and looting. The ex-sergeant who commands it, Gen. Victor Lundula, complained only Saturday that "nobody gives a damn about us."

But if the cease-fire order is generally heeded, it will put an end to the shooting in both mineral-rich Katanga and in Kasai, where Kalonji's forces have been fighting — sometimes only with bows and arrows—for a self-proclaimed independent "mineral state." The Congolese troops, armed with modern weapons, have destroyed whole villages.

Along with the ceasefire came a U. N. move which apparently ended, at least for the present, any friction between U. N. and Congolese troops in Leopoldville. The United Nations announced it had begun paying Congolese army troops in Leopoldville.

Soviets Back Lumumba, Ask U.N. Meet in Congo

The Atlanta Constitution P12

Atlanta Jrn.

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (UPI) — Russia Friday night supported a proposal by Congolese Premier Patrice Lumumba that the Security Council meet "immediately" in Leopoldville.

Sat. 6-10-60

Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Vasily V. Kuznetsov, who—despite a Moscow demand for an immediate council meeting — had opposed a crisis session of the council on the Congo Friday night, offered a formal resolution at the start of the session at 7:46 p.m. e.s.t The session was called to deal with the deteriorating U.N. position in the Congo.

Lumumba Thursday urged Secretary - General Dag Hammarskjold to have the council hold its next Congo session in Leopoldville so the members could "see for themselves the situation existing in the republic of the Congo as a result of the U.N. authorities' interference in the Congo's domestic problems."

MORE OBJECTIVE

Kuznetsov said a Leopoldville meeting would "make it possible for the members of the council to have a more objective and more thorough understanding of the situation."

It would aid the proper implementation of the council's resolutions, enhance the prestige of the United Nations and manifest recognition of "the ever increasing role of young African countries in international affairs."

Although Kuznetsov put forth a formal resolution, it was regarded by diplomatic observers as a stalling tactic, perhaps to give Lumumba time to send a Congolese delegation here.

NEW REPORT ASKER

Hammarskjold requested Friday night's meeting and was ready to make a new reoprt to it on the Congo. The council was expected to adjourn shortly after Hammarskjold's statement, delayed by Kuznetsov's move.

Hammarskjold, under Congolese and unified Communist fire, sought Friday night's meeting to deal with the deteriorating U. N. position in the Congo.

Hammarkjold himself, in the opinion of diplomatic observers, was in the most precarious position of his 7½-year career as the world organization's chief executive. His policies for the U.N. Congo operation were under increasingly bitter fire from Lumumba and from the Communist block which showed a unity of Russia and Yugoslavia in charging that U.N. forces had been guilty of "intervention" in internal Congolese affairs.

GUINEA THREATS

In the Congo itself, Guinea troops were threatening to quit the United Nations and support Lumumba. Civil war was developing in the two-month-old African state.

Lumumba was demanding, with Russian support, that the U.N. force relinquish control of Leopoldville radio and surrender control of Congo airfields — which would give him free rein to fly troops into the secessionist interior provinces of Kasai and Katanga aboard Russian-supplied airliners.

Council Temporarily Shelves Congo Crisis

Montgomery Advertiser

Montgomery, Ala.

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP) —The U.N. Security Council decided Monday to put the Congo crisis on the shelf temporarily in the hope the situation in the chaotic African republic would be clarified.

Sun. 9-13-60

Despite Soviet opposition, the council voted, 9-2, for a U.S. proposal to adjourn subject to the call of President Egidio Ortona of Italy.

P. 8A

The Soviet Union immediately requested a new meeting, but informed sources said there would probably be none before Wednesday.

U.S. Ambassador James J. Wadsworth said in a statement after the meeting: "There is not much point in talking until you have a sound basis of information on which to speak."

LACK OF CLARITY

In the 15-minute council session Wadsworth called the delegates' attention to press dispatches reflecting "additional confusion" in the Congo. He proposed that, "in view of the lack of clarity in the situation," the council adjourn.

Valerian Zorin, Soviet deputy foreign minister, declared the proposal was not consistent with the council's interest in the Congo situation. But Wadsworth's motion was approved with only the Soviet Union and Poland voting no.

Zorin then introduced a formal motion that the council meet again at 8:30 Monday night, but Ortona ruled that the council was adjourned and a request for a new meeting must be made either by request to him or Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold.

The adjournment put off for the time being a sharp East-West clash over the struggle for power in the Congo between Soviet-supported Patrice Lumumba and President Joseph Kasavubu.

RIVAL DELEGATIONS

Just as the council ended its brief session, the U.N. announced that rival delegations from the Congo were expected in New York Monday night. One represents Kasavubu and the other Lumumba.

Zorin is expected to demand that the council hear the delegation representing Lumumba. Any such demand will be opposed by the United States and other Western powers.

A U.S. spokesman said the move to delay debate had nothing to do with arrival of the Congo delegations.

The council's task was complicated further by announcement in Cairo that the United Arab Republic has decided to withdraw its battalion from the U.N. forces in the Congo.

A U.A.R. spokesman charged that the U.N. violated Congo sovereignty by seizing control of Congolese airports and radio broadcasting facilities.

Zorin called on Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold before the council met. A U.N. spokesman said it was a courtesy visit that lasted about a half-hour.

In advance of the council session Hammarskjold disclosed he had received an appeal from Congo President Kasavubu that the United Nations reorganize and train the national army under the president's supreme command as chief of state.

In a cable to the secretary-general, Kasavubu asked that the United Nations provide also for speedy formation of both army and provincial police units and assist in reactivation of the Congo's legal system.

He requested transport and protection be provided for Moise Tshombe and Albert Kalonji, leaders of dissident Katanga Province, who have been invited by Kasavubu to a national conference in Leopoldville.

The United Nations made plain that while radio Leopoldville was reopened, restrictions would still be applied to broadcasts.

SEIZURE DEFENDED

A statement distributed here defended seizure of the station as necessary to maintain peace and security, and said it was now possible to relax restrictions.

"But as the situation is still not quite normal," the statement added, "it is incumbent on all to exercise due restraint...

"An appeal is addressed to all patriotic sons of the Congo to refrain from using this national means of communications in a manner that may cause incitement to violence or result in the shedding of innocent blood."

Lumumba showed up at the radio station late Monday after being held by the Congolese army for three hours. He demanded to be permitted to speak. Ghana troops, a part of the U.N. force in the Congo, said they had orders to fire if he tried to get into the station.

Lumumba Gets Congo Vote Of Confidence

The Montgomery Advertiser

Montgomery, Ala.

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo (AP)—The Congolese Parliament, with a majority of its members absent, voted Tuesday night that Patrice Lumumba should run the government with full powers. As with most recent Congo maneuverings, this apparently clarified nothing in the anarchic situation.

But the action was hailed by Lumumba as legal and as a mandate to "arrest any person causing trouble."

Such trouble-makers in Lumumba's view presumably include President Joseph Kasavubu and his supporters who have formed a new government to supplant the Lumumba regime.

LUMUMBA VICTORY

"I did not ask for full powers," Lumumba declared. "It is the Parliament which has offered it because of the gravity of the situation."

"Full powers do not mean that we will assassinate everybody tonight," said Anicet Kashamura, Lumumba's minister of information.

Despite the fact the official vote count did not tally with the number of members present and newsmen's counts showed a quorum to be lacking, the vote represented, at least temporarily, another victory for Lumumba and his leftward slide into the Soviet bloc.

REFUSED TO QUIT

Most opposition members refused to show up for the session. Helmeted Congolese army soldiers with rifles kept watch over the proceedings and machine guns were set up in the lobby.

The vote followed a speech by Lumumba, who was fired as premier by Kasavubu eight days ago but has refused to quit.

Lumumba accused Kasavubu of fomenting an army rising and credited himself with preventing a civil war he said was on the point of breaking out Monday when he was arrested by Kasavubu supporters.

"I was to be assassinated," Lumumba said. He said that when the army found out about his arrest, "it was ready to descend on the city and kill all the whites." "war was about to break out yesterday. I stopped it," he shouted.

Following the session Lumumba drove to the Leopoldville radio station. Although he claimed the radio station was held by his soldiers, at a late night hour it was in the hands of a Congolese civilian police detachment which took it over peacefully from Kasavubu forces but whose allegiance was unclear. A small U.N. Ghana detachment also was still at the station.

Soviets Accuse Dag Of Africa Violations

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP) —The Soviet Union accused Dag Hammarskjold Tuesday of personally violating Security Council resolutions by taking action regarded as unfriendly toward Congo Premier Patrice Lumumba.

Valerian A. Zorin, Soviet deputy foreign minister, asked for an immediate session of the Council to air the charges against the U.N. secretary-general, but he failed to get one.

He made the request in a letter to Italian Ambassador Egidio Ortona, Council president, that left no doubt Moscow will champion Lumumba's cause before the 11-nation Council.

Lumumba Backed by Parliament

The Atlanta Constitution

Atlanta, Ga.

By United Press International

The Congolese Parliament Tuesday voted "full powers" to Premier Lumumba in his struggle for power with President Kasavubu as the U.N. Security Council called an emergency meeting on the Congo for Wednesday morning.

Wed. 9-14-60

The announced Parliament vote was 88 for Lumumba, 25 against and three abstentions.

P. 1

The Security Council, in calling the meeting for Wednesday, rebuffed Soviet demands for an immediate session.

Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Velerian A. Zorin, in an attempt to force U.N. Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold's hand on the Congo, had demanded a crisis meeting Tuesday, charging that the United States, Belgium, their North Atlantic Treaty Organization allies and the U.N. command in the Congo was "openly attempting to replace one set of colonialists by another."

Egidio Ortona of Italy, president of the Security Council this month, announced the Council will meet in private at 11 a.m. He said it would draft its annual report to the General Assembly and then adjourn to the Security Council chamber to resume its debate on the Congo at the request of Russia and Yugoslavia.

CONFUSING VOTE

P. 10

Like everything else in Congo these days, the Parliament vote was confusing.

Atlanta, Ga.

Chamber President Joseph Kasongo, who presided at the joint session, said there were 116 members present—five more than a quorum. But reporters counted only 94 members at the session.

The "full powers" vote came after a 20-minute speech by Lumumba and after a series of speakers had pleaded for the premier and the president to get together and settle their differences by negotiation.

P. 10

COMPROMISE URGED

A "reconciliation commission" had urged compromise and suggested direct talks between the two rivals after a day of see-saw developments in which neither man had appeared able to marshal enough strength to oust the other.

The powers granted to Lumumba were so broad they were not specified or limited in any way. There was no indication what they might be.

Most of Lumumba's opponents were not present—either refusing to attend the session or unable to come from some of the troubled areas of the Congo.

U.N. RELEASES RADIO

The vote came at the end of a day in which the U.N. troops pulled out of Radio Leopoldville and Lumumba's troops took over after the Kasavubu forces were unable to hold it.

The victorious Lumumba, who was arrested by the army and released Monday, drove straight from the Parliament to the radio and was promptly admitted. The United Nations had barred him from entry twice since the weekend when it was holding the station.

Parliament will now meet Wednesday morning to vote changes in the fundamental law which will make it impossible for the president to name or fire ministers without parliamentary consent.

The vote also is expected to be made retroactive to Sept. 1 in order to invalidate Kasavubu's firing of Lumumba earlier. Lumumba also had fired Kasavubu but neither had made the firing stick.

The United Nations announced Tuesday they were reopening all Congo airports to peaceful traffic as well as turning back control of the radio station. An Elisabethville dispatch said the U.N. forces were maintaining a ban against secessionist Katanga troop reinforcements flying to trouble-torn areas of the province.

As the Security Council acted in New York, rival Congo delegations of President Kasavubu and Premier Lumumba were in town and laying plans to put their cases on the Congo's constitution crisis before the council when it meets.

The delegations of Guinea and Ghana, both steadfastly behind Lumumba in the long-running political crises in the Congo, were keeping under wraps. Thomas Kanza and a four-man delegation sent here by Lumumba.

GUNPOINT PERSUASION

U. N. Defied By Katanga

Montgomery Advertiser

Montgomery, Ala.

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo (AP)—Katanga province defied the United Nations Friday and sent planes aloft to help combat the Congolese army spearhead Premier Patrice Lumumba has sent into the rebel province fromthenorth.

Sat. 9-10-60

Gunpoint persuasion of U.N. Swedish guards to permit the takeoff of two military aircraft from Elisabethville, Katanga's capital, knocked a hole in the U.N. Command order closing all Congolese airports to non-U.N. traffic. Two more Katanga army light planes defied the ban later in the day.

Lumumba, who doesn't like the order either, has demanded that the United Nations yield control over the airports and Radio Leopoldville or leave the country.

GUINEAN SUPPORT

He drew Guinean support in his fight against the U.N. Guinea's Congo mission, headed by Tibou Tounkara, announced it has proposed to President Sekou Toure the withdrawal of the Guinean battalion from Maj. Gen. Carl von Horn's 16,000 - man U.N. Command. The battalion, totaling 750, is based north of Leopoldville in Equator Province.

Tounkara said the withdrawal was proposed because of what he called U.N. support of President Joseph Kasavubu in the governmental feud that flared Monday. Kasavubu declared Lumumba fired, and Lumumba declared Kasavuvu fired. Parliament voided both decrees and said they should keep their jobs. In the interval the U.N. took over Radio Leopoldville and closed the airports.

"Guinea cannot be an accomplice to an action directed against an African nation," Tounkara told a news conference.

President Toure, a professed neutralist whose nation has edged toward the Communist bloc since winning freedom from France in 1958, is now in Red China after a visit to Moscow.

Guinean troops still were under U.N. command Friday night, a U.N. spokesman said, and there were reports that the proposal to withdraw the units was being reconsidered.

Kasavubu meanwhile issued his first communique since he took his dramatic action to unseat Lumumba Monday. The communique said the unfavorable votes in Parliament could not annul the president's revocation of Lumumba's powers. It declared Lumumba has been dismissed and remains dismissed.

The communique added that Joseph Ileo, Senate president and the man picked by Kasavubu to be the new premier, now must, under the fundamental law governing the Congo, present his government to Parliament for approval.

Kasavubu has remained behind the closely guarded doors of his residence on the edge of Leopoldville since Monday night.

MINISTERS FIRED

(The Belgian radio said Lumumba has fired his foreign minister, Justin Bomboko, and the minister-resident in Belgium, Albert Kelvux. They countersigned the decree by which Kasavubu sought to oust the premier.)

Militarily, the Congo crisis centered, in this 71st day of the territory's life as a free nation, at the frontier of Katanga and Kivu province.

Both are eastern neighbors of battle-torn Kasai, where secessionists are fighting Congolese army units.

U.N. Mali troops based at Kongolo, 30 miles south of the border, said 300 or more of Lumumba's infantrymen crossed the frontier river of Luika from Kivu Thursday.

NO FIGHTING

Katanga government sources said the invaders evidently intended to move on Kongolo, but failed to get any vehicles across the river and that their advance was stalled. No fighting was reported.

The regime of Premier Moise Tshombe, who declared mineral-rich Katanga independent of the central government in July, said it had to get planes in the air to meet the invasion threat, centered about 450 miles north of Elisabethville.

"It is impossible for Katanga to remain passive," a government communique said. "The invasion of the country has to be stopped by all means at its disposal."

Katanga army men — Negro soldiers and white officers — forced the U.N. Swedish guards at gunpoint to permit the takeoff of the first two small planes, each carrying two men and some supplies. The Swedes were reported to have helped in removing obstacles on the runway.

A U.N. spokesman, Jan Berendsen, announced a formal protest has been made to the Katanga government. He said Katanga forces in another case attempted to send off men and supplies in a twin-engine plane but were dissuaded.

Tshombe's government had previously protested to the United Nations that the U.N. decision to ban non-U.N. flights has no legal basis. The government sincerely wants to cooperate with the U.N., it said, but can not do so in the present circumstances.

Lumumba's Foes Woo Africans

The Christian Science Monitor

Boston, Mass

By Arnold Beichman

Special Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

New York

Representatives of anti-Lumumba forces in the Congo are planning to visit leaders of those African countries, whose troops are today patroling the turbulent Republic, in an attempt to wean support away from the erratic Congolese Premier.

Sept. 9-10-60

It has been authoritatively learned that in the next several days Congolese politicians will go to Ghana, Guinea, and Senegal in the hope of securing the backing of President Nkrumah, Touré, and Senghor for the power-seking alliance of President Kasavubu and Joseph Ileo, Congolese Senate President, whom Mr. Kasavubu has named as the new "Premier."

Jabs at UN Resented

These anti-Lumumba spokesmen, several of whom come from his own Mouvement National Congolais (Congolese National Movement), will stress the danger to the existence of the Congo if Mr. Lumumba continues in power. They will argue that Mr. Lumumba's struggle to remain Premier means inevitable Soviet intervention on a massive scale. They will also state categorically that the time for compromise with Mr. Lumumba is past.

It is believed that some of these arguments will find a sympathetic audience because there has been a growing conviction in Africa that Mr. Lumumba's vertiginous policies are hardly likely to contribute to the Congo's eventual stability.

Huge Cost Noted

What has particularly upset some African countries have been Mr. Lumumba's attacks on the United Nations and Secretary-General Dag Hammerskjold.

While African countries, whose officials recently attended a Lumumba-convened conference in Léopoldville, have sided with Mr. Lumumba, he was criticized to his face—by the Tunisian delegation for one—for his anti-UN propaganda.

Another cause of African concern has been the realization that protracted instability in the strife-torn Congo means huge expenditures of money and effort by the UN and member nations both of which would be channeled to more constructive ends in Africa if the civil war could be ended and peace restored.

Authoritative sources feel that the final decision over the Congo's future will have to be made by the nine African countries involved in the UN occupation of the former Belgian colony — Ethiopia, Ghana, Guinea, Liberia, Morocco, Senegal, Sudan, Tunisia, and the United Arab Republic.

Together their troops number 13,240 out of the almost 17,000 now in the Congo under the UN banner. But more importantly, they represent a moral force which, it is felt, even the Soviet Union would hesitate to disregard.

Congolese Prodded

By Reuters

Elisabethville, Congo

Moise Tshombe, leader of the breakaway Congolese Province of Katanga, has sent a message to the people of the Congo asking them to help him overthrow Premier Patrice Lumumba "before it is too late."

Mr. Tshombe assailed Mr. Lumumba's government at a press conference Sept. 5 for "atrocities" committed in the Bakwanga area of Kasai Province and accused the Soviet Union of helping to prepare an attack on Katanga.

Mr. Tshombe said the United Nations could not remain impassive toward the "abomination" committed by Mr. Lumumba's troops in Bakwanga.

He also charged that the UN was running the risk of creating unsupportable racial discrimination by giving its protection only to whites in the Congo. This could lead soon to very dangerous racial hatred, he said.

Mr. Tshombe said that anti-Lumumba forces in Kasai had captured armaments and vehicles and that Mr. Lumumba's troops no longer held the bridge over the Lubilash River, which forms the border between Kasai and Katanga. This was now in the hands of anti-Lumumba troops, Mr. Tshombe said.

Mr. Tshombe said that a company of Mr. Lumumba's troops had left for Kasongo, in Kivu, and that another company was moving toward Tshota in northern Kasai.

Lumumba's case saddens Americans but remedy looms at United Nations

The Afro-American Baltimore, Md.

By JEWELL MAZIQUE

Colored people of the U.S. are becoming increasingly saddened by the handling of Mr. Lumumba of the Congo. And, the Premier's reference last week to some twenty per cent of their ancestry coming from the Congo after half their number on northern owned ships had been drowned in the Atlantic, really upset them. (See this column in AFRO of August 6).

We do not know which one of our grandmas and grandpas made the smuggled trip from the mouth of the Congo river to southern plantations in the 18th and 19th centuries.

* * *

SECONDLY, colored Americans entertain no hopes of their "ships' coming in" from the Katanga, the Kasai and Kivu Provinces bearing diamonds, gold, uranium, cooper, cobalt. Nor are colored Americans expecting any dividends from the interest paid on a loan floated by Belgium in the U.S. for the Congolese in April, 1958.

Hence, if Lumumba does not "come across" with the expected interest on that fifteen million of $393,750 by Oct. 1, it will not mean one penny less out of our pockets.

Note: We are informed that through the money ought to be in the hands of the agents — Dillon Read and Co. by Sept. 26, and the Congolese government has been given ample notice to forward it) the several Congolese governments have not been heard from.

* * *

THIRDLY, since the two hundred million dollars owed the Belgium citizens (none colored or even remotely related to colored Americans) colored Americans have no stake in that debt either. Because these two loans were without the backing of the Belgian government, both the Belgium and American stockholders want assurance they will be paid off. Why, they cannot even sell these "valuable" notes at a respectable price. For as Paul Hefferman said in the New York Times recently "In guaranteed Belgian market these bonds are now being quoted at distress prices."

Maybe colored Americans ought be concerned about the $119,000,000 which the World Bank (largely supported by U.S. taxpayers money) loaned the Congo but they are not. Taxes are so high already that extensive loans long ago exceeded Afro-Americans' ability to compute amounts. Even if this money were loaned Belgium for developing plantations and supplying the European Common market, to guarantee raw materials such as cotton and food to maintain the status quo in Europe, colored Americans are still disinterested. In fact, they sympathize with the striking Congolese, who are determined not to pick cotton and tap rubber trees at starvation wages the balance of their lives.

* * *

WE HAVE gotten tired, too, of picking cotton and tapping turpentine trees in the Deep South. So Mr. Lumumba's government with Mr. Lumumba running it has our unadulterated sympathy.

We wish him Godspeed and trust he can get all the unwelcomed visitors out of his country. That is all Afro - Americans have to offer for we like the Congolese have worked hard but remained outside the big European money market.

COLORED AMERICANS are about unanimous in their vote against Tschombe — the Quisling Uncle Tom of the Katanga — and those Africans who work with him including Kalonji of the Kasai Province. Tschombe's working with Roy Welensky of the Rhodesias, who is presently calling up white paratroop units to wipe out Africans as promised by him as, he says, "Europeans wiped out Red Indians in the U.S.," is more than our most deserving home - grown "Uncle Toms" can stomach.

Kalonji's dispatching a delegation to the Union of South Africa for ammunition and other help to attack his own people is the lowest an African has yet stooped.

* * *

FOR ALL THIS. Mr. Lumumba gets Afro - Americans' votes even if there is no money attached. Besides the Yankee dollar is getting more and more so it will not spend everywhere and goodwill may seen be needed, especially in Africa. Who in his right mind, with just one drop of African blood, could join an army led by Mr. Tschombe against helpless Africans with Belgian officers, Welensky troops and South African support? Maybe the purchasers of the 1958 loan but not sensible American colored people.

PATRICE LUMUMBA

Lumumba due in U.S.

The Afro-Am. Baltimore, Md. Sat. 9-24-60

(SPECIAL TO THE AFRO)

LEOPOLDVILLE — Reported missing presumed killed or lynched by his political foe, Patrice Lumumba showed up Sunday morning vowing to tak control again.

"I will replace the Congoles delagation, now in New York he said.

A swiftly - moving chain of events in the 11 - week-old nation left the situation in doubt as crisis supplanted crisis.

* * *

ONE AND THEN another of the three claimants to rule the Congo - Lumumba, President Joseph Kasavubu and Mobutu moved to the forefront.

But as the confusion lifted, one factor became apparent.

For the present, Mobutu was in control.

Fired a little over two weeks ago by Lumumba from his post of Chief of staff to Gen. Victor Lundula, whom Lumumba had also ousted as commander of the Congolese Army, the 29 - year - old Mobutu staged a coup d'etat on Wednesday, seizing control of the Army.

Though denounced by Lumumba as having been "corrupted by imperialist forces," the colonel, who six months ago was a Leopoldville newspaper editor, soon showed that he was in a much stronger position than either Kasavubu or Lumumba.

MOBUTU DISSOLVED parliament and ordered the staff of the Russian and Czechosolovakian embassies to leave tht Congo in 48 hours.

They left.

UN forces and Congolese troops commanded by Mobutu were reported to have broken up two attempts by the Balubas to lynch the Premier while he was under guard at the Leopoldville garrison.

In his last public utterance Lumumba demanded that the UN forces protect him.

SHORTLY AFTERWARD Congolese military policemen escorted Lumumba through a holtile, jeering mob.

It was presumed that Lumumba was taken by the Congolese to his home, where he was placed under house arrest.

On Saturday, however, Lumumba was reported missing, perheaps dead.

Neither confirmation nor denial of these reports could be obtained.

Lumumba's luck runs out after 75 turbulent days

The Afro-American Baltimore, Md.

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo —The man whom Premier Patrice Lumumba said was under arrest Thursday morning was the same man who saved him Thursday afternoon from a mob of soldiers seeking to attack him.

The man was Col. Joseph Mobutu, a new "strong man" in the chaotic Congo.

The incident started when Lumumba went to Camp Leopold II in an effort to arouse the soldiers against Col. Mobutu.

Sat 9-24-60

With him was Gen. Victor Lundula. The soldiers, reportedly disturbed over news of unrest in the provinces, rushed toward the pair shouting "Kill, kill!"

* * *

LUMUMBA MADE a beeline to the officers' mess where United Nations troops from Ghana were in charge. The Ghana troops protected him from the attackers for seven long hours. They did not try to harm the Ghanans but had machine guns trained on the doorway waiting for Lu- command in the Congo.

They are Ghana, the United Arab Republic, Sudan and Guinea.

The threat is symptomatic of the anger that was bound to follow when UN tactics obviously switched to favor Belgians, their Uncle Tom and Western backers.

Radio Leopoldville was shut down in the face of Premier Lumumba, while a radio across the river in French Brazzaville carried the appeal of President Kasavubu in the struggle between him and the premier.

Equally flagrant, the UN closed all airports, but allowed two Belgian planes to take off from the rebel province of Katanga under Moise Tshombe, who plays the role of the Belgian good thing.

However, all planes of the Republic of the Congo were grounded at gunpoint by UN soldiers and police.

* * *

A SIMILAR patern of partiality showed when representatives of opposing factions headed for UN Headquarters in New York. The Kasavubu group found an immediate exit by air, but Lumumba representatives were held up.

The UN acts this way, contrary to the vote of confidence given Premier Lumumba by Parliament early in the power struggle.

Judging from reports by press and radio, UN action seems to be justified under pretence of maintaining "law and order," a term we all are familiar with in this country, thanks to the duplicity of segregationists.

We are also familiar with the "comic - opera" aspects of the Congo Parliament as reported in our daily newspapers.

EVERY YEAR our country is treated to a comic opera by Congress over civil rights legislation. It went on for days on end during the past legislative season.

Two or three senators, caught in their pajamas for roll call during the filibuster, looked like characters out of a production of "A Midsummer Night's Dream," written and cast by beatniks.

It took the Congo Parliament only six hours to vote in the power showdown after argument and debate. It's a brief and decent period of time by comparison with the performance of Congress on questions as to whether colored Americans will enjoy their constitutional rights.

PRINCIPAL CHARACTERS are King Lears driven not only by personal vanity and arrogance, but by desperation to invest money under 17th century profit - logic in African countries.

American news reports for the most part would be laughable if they in themselves did not portray a tragic drama going on in our country.

All the while, the Soviet goes along putting itself on the side of the people against their colonial rulers, present and past. On the side of the people in their needs and desires to develop their countries.

The factual record is so, regardless of what you and I think of communism and the Soviet Union. And, indeed, it is the record of Soviet success that spurs more and more blind desperation.

* * *

PRESIDENT EISENHOWER warned the Soviet Union about its unilateral action in the Congo, though we of the United States have committed some, if not as much, in ohe form of supplying technicians and airlifts outside of the UN command, to say nothing of actions by private individuals.

But the President said in his press statement not a mumbling word about interference on the part of Belgians, who more than any other group, are responsible for conditions turning from bad to worse in the Congo.

Mr. Eisenhower was as silent about the nefarious doings of Belgians as he has been in the past about those of segregationists and the issue of civil rights.

These questions are related if only because Belgians are white and the Lumumba regime is colored in a world - wide civil rights controversy.

LUMUMBA'S REPRESENTATIVE Thomas Kanza, left, and minister delegate of the Republic of the Congo, talks with Jacque Lumbala, secretary of state for the Presidency of the French Council of Ministers upon his arrival in New York last week. Kanza came here to attend the United Nations Security Council meeting on the Congo.

CONGO BREAKS OFF TIES WITH GHANA; MAY BAR U.N. UNIT

the New York Times

Sat 11-19-'60

Army Regime Gives Accra Diplomats 48 Hours to Go —Assails Peace Mission

By PAUL HOFMANN

Special to The New York Times.

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo, Nov. 18—The army regime announced tonight that the Congo had severed diplomatic relations with Ghana. It also threatened to prevent the proposed visit of a United Nations conciliation commission by military force if necessary.

The regime, headed by Col. Joseph D. Mobutu, Chief of Staff of the Congo Army, gave the staff of the Ghanaian Embassy forty-eight hours to leave the country. The regime accused the Ghanaians of having meddled in the Congo's domestic affairs.

José Nussbaumer, Acting Commissioner of the Interior, made the double announcement. Mr. Nussbaumer is a member of the governing commission of young intellectuals appointed by Colonel Mobutu.

Order Follows Arrest

The order for the Ghanaians to leave the Congo followed the arrest Tuesday of Lovelace Mensah, a secretary of the Ghanaian Embassy here. Mr. Mensah was released yesterday, but Mr. Nussbaumer said the Ghanaian would remain under army surveillance until he left the Congo.

On the army regime's intention to bar the United Nations commission, Mr. Nussbaumer said the Congo authorities already had enough trouble with ill-intentioned Congolese." He said the Congo did not need "foreigners" from whom "we cannot learn anything."

He said the large majority of African and Asian countries represented in the commission favored "one Congolese politician only"—Patrice Lumumba, the deposed Premier.

"It is our right not to receive this commission," Mr. Nussbaumer declared. "We shall do everything in our power to prevent those persons from disembarking here."

Use of Troops Threatened

He said if the fifteen-member commission wanted first-hand information on the Congo it could get in touch with President Joseph Kasavubu in New York.

Mr. Nussbaumer recalled the parade yesterday in which he said 5,000 Congo Army troops had participated. He declared: "If necessary we shall order all these 5,000 men to Ndjili Airport." The airport is Leopoldville's main international airfield and the United Nations commission would presumably arrive there.

The United Nations here said the commission was scheduled to arrive Nov. 26 and that "tentative arrangements" were being made.

Mr. Nussbaumer said Mr. Mensah had been seized as he was about to call on Mr. Lumumba with documents linking Mr. Lumumba to Left-wing plot to invade northern Katanga. The invasion plan was said to be aimed at creating a new province to be called Lualaba.

Mr. Nussbaumer said the forty-eight hour time limit for the Ghanaian diplomats to leave the Congo would begin tomorrow morning. He said that while the Congo insisted on closing the Ghana Embassy here, is considered the Ghanaian troops in the Congo part of the United Nations force.

The documents found on Mr. Mensah, Mr. Nussbaumer said, were extremely compromising. He refused to say what they were, but said they were related to "our internal affairs."

Mr. Nussbaumer said the alleged Lumumba plan to create a new province in Katanga would mean the area would have to secede from Katanga, which has already declared itself independent of the Congo. Mr. Nussbaumer said the plan was to name the new province Lualaba after a river in Katanga.

Ghana Rejected Letter

President Kasavubu, in a letter to President Kwame Nkrumah of Ghana Oct. 4, asked for recall of the Ghanian Ambassador, Andrew Djin, and Nathaniel A. Welbeck, the Ghanian chargé d'affaires in Leopoldville. Mr. Kasavubu charged both with interference in Congo affairs.

Mr. Nkrumah rejected Mr. Kasavubu's letter. Mr. Djin has left Leopoldville, but Mr. Beck is still in the Ghanian Embassy. The embassy is guarded by Ghanian policemen of the United Nations force.

Mr. Nussbaumer noted that it was a "serious matter" for the Congo to break off relations with another African country.

He said the military regime had been warned by the United Nations not to take such a step.

But he said after mature consideration Congolese authorities had decided that Ghanian intrigues "could no longer be tolerated.

Mr. Welbeck said this morning: "If I am arrested here this would mean civil war."

He was understood to be awaiting instructions tonight from Mr. Nkrumah.

Ghana Refuses Comment

Special to The New York Times.

ACCRA, Ghana, Nov. 18—The Government refused comment today on the Congo's announcement that it had severed diplomatic relations with Ghana.

Spokesmen for a Congo Coordinating Committee here said: "We have no official intimation of a diplomatic break."

UN Seizes Radio In Léopoldville

The Christian Science Monitor
Boston, Mass.

Associated Press Wirephoto

President Kasavubu
Tries to halt pro-Red slide

Associated Press Wirephoto

Joseph Ileo
'Takes reins' from Lumumba

Compiled from Dispatches of the Associated Press and Reuters

Léopoldville, Congo

The United Nations has closed down Radio Léopoldville in an apparent attempt to prevent rival political leaders from fanning the deep political crisis here into a full-scale civil war.

Tues. 9-6-60

The move came Sept. 6 after the Congolese Cabinet had stripped President Kasavubu of his functions for an "act of treason" in dismissing Premier Patrice Lumumba the night before.

Mr. Lumumba has made several broadcasts over the radio since Mr. Kasavubu's action and was scheduled to make another broadcast at 7:30 p.m. Sept. 6.

UN officials said the station had been closed down in the interests of the "maintenance of law and order." The airport was also put out of action, with UN jeeps, ladders, and aircraft ramps blocking the runways.

Vital Key to Power

The closure of the radio station was announced at a press conference but a UN spokesman refused to say whether or not Mr. Lumumba had been advised of the move.

Radio Léopoldville is an important key to power in the infant nation.

The UN spokesman told the press conference:

"Because of the responsibility the UN has from the Security Council for the maintenance of law and order it has been decided to exercise an even more effective control over air traffic for those airports considered important for UN operations.

"For the same reason — responsibility for the maintenance of law and order — we have made arrangements for Radio Léopoldville not to go on the air."

Congolese police were reported later to have opened fire on supporters of President Kasavubu during a demonstration near the house of Mr. Lumumba.

Meanwhile, the Congolese Cabinet, which met throughout the night after M. Kasavubu's dramatic move in firing Mr. Lumumba, said it would take over the President's functions until Parliament met Sept. 7.

As dawn broke over the tense capital, it appeared that Mr. Lumumba was still in authority.

Associated Press Wirephoto

Patrice Lumumba
'Ousted' as Premier

House Surrounded

Mr. Kasavubu's house was surrounded by UN Ghana troops manning light machine guns.

Jason Senwe, Secretary of State, who took part in the all-night Cabinet session, said: "We are going before the Parliament. We are sure we will get a majority. The Army is also behind Lumumba."

Reports circulated that Mr. Kasavubu also summoned Cabinet members to his residence.

Neutral observers in the Congo capital doubted that—in view of the growing chaos, civil war in breakaway Kasai Province, and increasing economic troubles — that Parliament would give Mr. Lumumba the confidence vote he seeks.

The Senate has been particularly critical of the volatile Premier's dictatorial policies.

Mr. Lumumba's government continued to control the national radio network, but it appeared that his appeals and pronouncements were not heard beyond the immediate Léopoldville area due to technical difficulties.

Kasavubu Guarded

If Mr. Kasavubu, formerly a figurehead, succeeds in grabbing power over the strife-torn nation, it is likely that Katanga's Premier Moise Tshombe and Kasai's breakaway leader Albert Kalonji can be brought back into the fold.

Mr. Kasavubu is the leader of the Abako Party which dominated solidly the vital Bakongo area between Léopoldville and the sea. Abako strongly believes in a decentralized federalist system.

There was no immediate reaction to the Cabinet's decision from Mr. Kasavubu, who remained in his palatial home guarded by blue-helmeted UN troops.

Article 22 of the fundamental law, which so far has not been approved by Parliament, specifies that the President of the republic "names and revokes the premier and the ministers." Article 26 says that "the chief of state commands the armed forces."

In his radio appeal Sept. 5, Mr. Lumumba announced that he commands the army.

In explaining its action against Mr. Kasavubu, the Lumumba Cabinet cited Article 20 of the fundamental law which says: "No act of the chief of state can have effect unless it is countersigned by a minister who by doing this takes the responsibility."

The Cabinet charged that Mr. Kasavubu violated the law.

The reaction of UN officials was not known immediately. Mr. Kasavubu's appeal Sept. 5 was generally greeted with a sigh of relief by most UN officials whose relationship with the Lumumba authorities has been strained.

Hammarskjold Silent

All UN forces in the Capital were put on alert and a special UN guard was posted around Mr. Kasavubu's residence. UN units of British-trained Ghanaians and Sudanese machine gunners and Moroccan riflemen kept watch over the tense capital.

Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold studied reports of the twin grabs for power at his UN headquarters in New York. But he held off comment.

There was no indication how soon another Congo emergency session of the Security Council might be called. "The situation in Léopoldville is just too fluid for us to say anything at this time," a spokesman for the Secretary-General said.

All airports and the ferry to Brazzaville across the Congo River were guarded by United Nations troops and traffic in and out of the Congo was halted.

Stronger UN action in Congo urged: Page 7.

Lumumba Charges UN Interference

The Christian Science Monitor
Boston, Mass.
Thurs. 9-8-60

By Reuters

Léopoldville, Congo

Patrice Lumumba's government has accused the United Nations of interfering in internal Congolese affairs as the Congo Senate added to the political confusion here by refusing to allow Mr. Lumumba to address it.

Mr. Lumumba's government issued a communiqué Sept. 8 charging the UN with interfering in the Premier's conflict with Congo President Kasavubu and warning of "important decisions" to be taken on relations with the world body.

The Premier told reporters the UN plotted with Mr. Kasavubu against him and added: "I envisage measures against the United Nations. Mr. Kasavubu is still president but he has no authority. We will settle this in our own African way."

But Mr. Lumumba himself received a setback from the Senate, which rejected his demand to address it on the growing political chaos in the country.

The Senate ruled that Mr. Lumumba would not be allowed to speak before Foreign Minister Justin Bomboko had addressed it. But Mr. Bomboko, one of the signers of Mr. Kasavubu's declaration ousting Mr. Lumumba as Premier, had disappeared after escaping a police attempt to arrest him in a hotel Sept. 8.

Troops Patrol Streets

When Mr. Lumumba tried to speak following Mr. Delvaux's address, senators protested and Vice-President Joseph Okito ruled that Mr. Bomboko was the next listed speaker and no one could speak before him. He then adjourned the session until the Foreign Minister arrived.

The government issued its communiqué attacking the United Nations while troops and police patrolled the streets of this uneasy Congolese capital and Mr. Lumumba and Mr. Kasavubu continued their struggle for power.

It said the Congolese Government "notes with astonishment the interference of the United Nations in the conflict between the head of state and the government of the republic."

Mr. Lumumba already has protested to the UN against the closing of Congolese airfields and the shutdown of Radio Léopoldville, the main outlet for his speeches to the Congolese people.

The first round of the battle between Mr. Lumumba and Mr. Kasavubu ended in a draw Sept. 7 when the National Assembly invalidated their action in firing each other from office.

Rival Claims

The assembly vote, by a vote of 60 to 19, left the political situation here in the same chaotic state, with both men claiming control over the Army and neither knowing for sure where the troops would turn in a showdown.

The government communiqué said that Mr. Lumumba and his government still had the backing of both the Army and police and that the situation was in hand.

The heavy troop and police patrols on the streets gave no public indication of whether they backed Mr. Lumumba or Mr. Kasavubu although many soldiers said in private conversations that they would support the President in a showdown.

Localizing the Congo Crisis

The Christian Science Monitor
Boston, Mass.
Thurs. 9-8-60

The crucial factor in forthcoming United Nations Security Council action on the Congo will be the attitude of the newly independent African states. In essence, Secretary-General Hammarskjold now has asked the council to permit UN forces in the Congo to act as a real referee and stop the developing free-for-all there. He has also asked the council, figuratively, to repaint its "hands-off" signs in bigger letters—and in the Cyrillic alphabet so that Moscow will be sure to read them.

Only one of the independent African states which have been acting as advisers and backers of Mr. Hammarskjold actually is sitting on the Security Council. But their weight has several times been felt there when Soviet obstructionism and threatened vetoes against Hammarskjold policy have suddenly melted in the face of this solid African front.

The question now is whether these nations will continue to act decisively. They have previously backed the Secretary-General's dispatching of UN forces to the Congo; approved his circumspection in getting Belgian troops out; and cautioned mercurial Premier Lumumba to act more moderately.

They (and the Security Council) are now being asked to approve UN control of Congo airports and air waves. And they are being asked for further authority to disarm the troops of warring factions, to warn the Soviets against meddling, and to back a far-reaching UN rehabilitation effort aimed at getting the fledgling country back into minimum working condition.

This is a tall order, especially with the floundering Mr. Lumumba desperately trying to challenge the UN's authority for being there at all. It will take a solid front of African states to prevent Moscow from using its veto.

But the Hammarskjold request is filled with inescapable logic which the African diplomats and the rest of the uncommitted nations must see.

The order of business in the Congo is just what the Secretary-General outlines: (1) localize the crisis to prevent another Spain or Korea; (2) disarm the warring factions to prevent full-scale civil war; (3) let UN technicians put things in running order again; then (4) proceed to the job of settling the political quarrel between advocates of centralist-or-federation-type governments.

It is possible that the fourth point will inevitably be resolved long before any constitution-writing takes place in the Congo. The frantic moves of Mr. Lumumba to retain power may resolve the question of central-vs.-federation rule on a personal strength basis. It is to be hoped, however, that UN action, backed by the consensus of his neighbors, will come in time to prevent this.

If the new African states give the UN referees solid backing, they will be doing the cause of African nationalism great service.

Herter Charges Reds Complicate Congo Effort

Montgomery Adv.

WASHINGTON (AP) Secretary of State Christian A. Herter accused the Soviet Union Thursday night of trying to "complicate rather than assist" United Nations efforts to restore order in the Congo.

Adv. 9-2-60

The Soviet aim, he said, is to gain Communist control of the African republic through a "collapse of order" there.

Herter spoke out in a speech prepared for the annual dinner of the American Bar Assn. He denounced Soviet actions in the Congo as "the central obstacle to the establishment of a world of order."

Montgomery

In a review of East-West tensions, Herter charged the Kremlin leaders with clinging to a Marxist-Leninist dream of communizing the world. He said Soviet bosses probably are thinking in terms of a federation of all countries dominated by Moscow by physical coercion and force.

Pledging the United States to continue to strike for a just peace for all, Herter said this government is ready "to train and equip" U.N. peace forces.

"We support and encourage U.N. efforts to support standby peace arrangements which would permit it to act even more properly and effectively in future crises," he said.

"To this end, we will encourage other countries to respond at the next meeting of the General Assembly to the secretary-general's continuing effort to obtain national contingents for possible service in future U. N. forces.

"We are prepared to see our assistance used to train and equip these earmarked contingents for the specialized U.N. types of duty. Nations which do not earmark forces should, we believe earmark logistic and transport facilities."

Herter said that despite Soviet obstructions the world today is nearer a rule of law than it has ever been.

He said the three basic elements of American foreign policy are: 1. to ward off the threat of immediate war; 2. to press ahead "along constructive lines" in the meantime by safeguarded international agreements such as disarmament and 3, to strive for an ultimate goal of a world of law rather than force. In talking about disarmament, Herter emphasized that any complete East - West arms reduction plan must be accompanied by an international police force.

Herter contrasted Soviet and U.S. aid for foreign countries. The U.S.S.R. concentrates on spectacular projects which are of more propaganda than economic value, he said.

Africa States Praise U.N., Rap Lumumba

Montgomery Adv. Thurs. 9-1-60

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo (AP)—African neighbors bluntly told Premier Patrice Lumumba's government Wednesday to stop harassing the United Nations and cooperate in U. N. efforts to end the chaos within this two-month-old nation.

A Lumumba setback in the conference of independent African states coincided with a report from Elisabethville of reverses for his troops in their campaign against rebels in Kasai Province.

Albert Kalonji, the Baluba chieftain who proclaims himself president of a Mineral state in southern Kasai, claimed his troops have recaptured Bakwanga, his capital, and three other towns that Lumumba's men occupied last week. Independent confirmation was lacking.

ON HAND FOR WINDUP

Lumumba was on hand for the windup of the 13-nation conference of independent African states, which he opened at the Palace of Culture last Thursday while his police outside used warning shots and wielded gun butts to break up a demonstration against him.

The Premier, who has attacked the United Nations off and on and spread the suspicion that its motives are imperialistic, sat quietly as the resolution calling for Congolese cooperation was read.

But he bounded back a little later with a complaint the Congo had not been consulted about U.N. moves. He suggested "incidents would have been avoided if from the beginning a spirit of cooperation had existed between representatives of the United Nations and those of the government of the republic."

The conference pointed out that the United Nations entered the Congo "at the express request of the government of the Republic of the Congo" and intended to "safeguard her independence, her unity and her territorial integrity."

WORK OF PEACE

The resolution noted that the U. N. mission was designed to prevent the Congo from becoming involved in the cold war. The United Nations was praised for "the work of peace it brings to the Congo" and for promotion of the withdrawal of Belgian troops.

Lumumba, who has repeatedly called for the withdrawal of U.N. white troops, and who has harassed Secretary - General Dag Hammarskjold, reasserted confidence in the United Nations and its members. But he added: "Our great hope is that this organization pursues its objective with more efficacy for the great happiness of humanity."

The Premier asked that Congolese and U. N. troops join forces to pacify the country. His troops, he said, are burning with impatience and "obsessed with the idea of immediately entering Katanga to liberate their brothers."

The southeast province of the Congo, Katanga has proclaimed its independence. It is allied with Kalonji's Mineral state.

Lumumba charged that colonialists, meaning Belgians, had created a general staff of "saboteurs of our national independence" in Katanga.

He said the withdrawn Belgian troops have been replaced in Katanga by Belgian gendarmes disguised as "technical advisers" to train Katanga Premier Moise Tshombe's police.

Lumumba, who is relying more and more on the promises of the Soviet Union and its satellites while his government is being infiltrated by agents of the East, said the African conference has taught the West a lesson.

"The Western world has understood," he said, "that it is no longer possible to continue its play without risking the complete loss of Africa's friendship."

He added that peace will not be complete in Africa "until the West puts an immediate end to its colonial enterprises."

Keep Order And Let 'Em Fight

Montgomery Advertiser

U.N. Under-Secretary Ralph Bunche, leaving the Congo to the distinct satisfaction of the Lumumba government, says there are no "insuperable" problems facing the new republic.

Adv. 9-2-60

In all his career, he said, "I have never experienced anything so inspiring in the way of international cooperation."

It could only be assumed that there are two Congos, except that Bunche obviously is referring only to the "cooperation" of the nations fully supporting the U.N. presence in the Congo. That emphatically does not include the Congolese government.

Lumumba has threatened to demand that the U.N. force leave the Congo because it will not assist him in subduing the secessionist province of Katanga. To assist him, however, would constitute interference in a purely civil conflict, and this the U.N. force is forbidden to do.

It is on this point that turns the most incomprehensible aspect of the U.N.'s role in the Congo.

Its mission is to restore order, but in the clash between Lumumba and Katanga, it must remain neutral, neither impeding nor abetting the conflict.

For this attitude, the U.N. is battered by both Lumumba and Lumumba's enemies and is frustrated in any attempt to put down strife. What kind of order is possible if the U.N. must remain aloof from a situation which any day may rage into civil war?

One hopeful note is the resolution of the independent African states calling on Lumumba to cooperate fully with the United Nations. This may have little effect on Lumumba, but Russia, which is wooing these same nations, may be restrained from acting rashly.

Poll Of Newsmen Shows Demos In Trouble In South

Montgomery Advertiser

NASHVILLE (AP) — Despite the presence of Sen. Lyndon B. Johnson on the ticket, the Democrats will have trouble carrying the South in the November presidential election, a poll of southern newsmen has indicated.

Mar. 8, 1960

The newsmen, correspondents for the Southern School News, were polled by the Nashville Tennessean while attending their annual meeting here.

E. 8-A

They listed six southern and border states as "fairly safe" for the Democrats—Louisana, Arkansas, Maryland, Georgia, North Carolina and West Virginia.

Florida probably will go Republican, they said, and the others were listed as "doubtful, with Kentucky, Missouri, Mississippi and Tennessee leaning towards the Democrats and Delaware, Oklahoma, Texas and Virginia towards the Republicans.

Alabama and South Carolina lean toward "independent political action," the poll showed.

In many southern states, the newsmen said, "protestant ministers already are openly attacking" Sen. John F. Kennedy, the Democratic presidential nominee, "and using the separation of church and state as an argument to persuade their followers not to vote for a Catholic for president.

"In other states, the issue has not yet come out in the open but is expected to be raised between now and November," they said.

Southern School News is published monthly by the Southern Education Reporting Service. It reports on public school desegregation developments.

Congolese Arrested For Starting Riot

Montgomery Advertiser

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo (AP)—The Congo army commander said Wednesday a number of Congolese civilians have been arrested on charges of starting the panic that resulted in a mob attack on eight U.S. airmen and two Canadians Saturday.

Mar. 9, 1960

Gen. Victor Lundula said those arrested will face military trial.

The Americans and Canadians were beaten with clubs and gun butts when they landed at Stanleyville with equipment for the United Nations. They were rescued by Ethiopians of the U.N. force. The men were hospitalized but were flown to Tripoli Wednesday night.

Montgomery, Ala.

FAKE ORDERS

Lundula in his report said rumors and fake orders to Congolese soldiers contributed to the incident. He did not explain who gave the false orders.

He gave this account: An honor guard had been sent to the Stanleyville airport for the arrival of Congo Premier Patrice Lumumba. Shortly before the American plane arrived a civilian spread a rumor that Belgian parachutists were lying in wait for Lumumba.

About that time, the army officers at the airport received an urgent message from U.N. headquarters in Stanleyville.

The Congolese officers hurried to U.N. headquarters and "learned with stupefaction" that they were supposed to have given orders to Congolese soldiers to surround the headquarters and carry out a search. A number of U.N. officials already had been taken out of the office by the soldiers.

REASSURED OFFICIALS

The officers reassured U.N. officials and hurried back to the airport where they found civilians mixed with the honor guard in "indescribable disorder."

Incited by the rumors about Belgian parachutists, Lundula said, "at the moment when the door of the American plane opened, civilians, police and soldiers attacked the imaginary Belgian parachutists who really were Canadian officers."

Text of Soviet Congo Note

The N.Y. Times

Special to The New York Times.

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y., Sept. 17—Following is the text of a Soviet memorandum by Valerian A. Zorin requesting consideration of the Congo situation by the General Assembly at its regular session, which begins Tuesday:

New York

Letter dated 16 September from the Deputy Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics addressed to the Secretary General:

N.Y. 9-18-60

On instructions from the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, I request the inclusion of an item entitled "Threat to the Political Integrity of the Congo" in the agenda of the General Assembly's fifteenth regular session as an urgent and important question.

In accordance with Rule 20 of the Rules of Procedure of the General Assembly, an explanatory memorandum is attached.

VALERIAN A. ZORIN,
Representative of the U.S.S.R. on the Security Council.

Explanatory Memorandum

The Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republic deems it necessary that the General Assembly at its fifteenth session examine, as an urgent and important question, an item entitled "Threat to the Political Independence and Territorial Integrity of the Republic of the Congo."

In this, the Soviet Government is guided by the following consideration:

The situation in the Republic of the Congo, despite the Security Council's repeated resolutions aimed at normalizing conditions in that young African state and insuring its territorial integrity and political independence, not only continues to be tense, but is becoming more and more menacing.

The Soviet Government and the governments of a number of other states members of the United Nations have repeatedly and energetically raised in the Security Council the question of the need for strict implementation of the Council's resolutions adopted for the purpose of stopping Belgian aggression against the Republic of the Congo, of removing all interventionist troops from its territory, of protecting its independence and sovereignty from infringement by the colonialists.

Failure Is Charged

However, as a result of the failure to carry out the Security Council's resolutions of 14 and 22 July and of 9 August, a real threat is now arising to the political independence and territorial integrity of the Republic of the Congo.

This, in the view of the Government of the U. S. S. R., makes necessary the urgent consideration of an item on the situation in the Congo by all states members of the United Nations at the fifteenth session of the United Nations General Assembly.

The forthcoming session of the General Assembly offers great possibilities for a comprehensive and thorough examination of such an item inasmuch as it is known that taking part in the work of the session will be the heads of state or government of quite a number of countries, including the African countries, which are vitally interested in a speedy and just settlement of the question of the situation in the Republic of the Congo.

Aggression in the Congo and the creation there of a breeding ground of tension are not simply a local conflict. The question of stopping aggression and normalizing the situation in the Congo, the question whether the Congolese people will be given the conditions necessary for peaceful labor and an independent existence is of tremendous importance to all Africa and to the whole world.

The General Assembly must consider this item without delay so as to insure the normalization of the situation in the Republic of the Congo and the preservation of its national integrity and independence.

SPECIAL SESSION OF U. N. ASSEMBLY MEETS ON CONGO

The N.Y. Times

New York

U. S. Bid Opens Emergency Talks After Soviet Balks at Support for Chief

N.Y. 9-18-60

RESOLUTION IS VETOED

p. 1

Tunisia-Ceylon Draft Fails —Hammarskjold Role Is Issue of Debate

Text of Soviet memorandum is printed on Page 38.

By LINDESAY PARROTT

Special to The New York Times.

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y., Sept. 17—Delegates of eighty-two lands gathered here this evening at an emergency session of the United Nations General Assembly on the Congo.

The session was called early today at the request of the United States after the Soviet Union had vetoed in the Security Council a draft resolution by Ceylon and Tunisia. The resolution would have given strong backing to Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold's plans for the Congo.

Mr. Hammarskjold had asked for "clarification" of his authority. He suggested that the large United Nations force disarm some military bands in the Congo, that the Council again urge member powers not to interfere and that funds be directed through the world organization to enable a Congolese Government to work efficiently.

Soviet Makes Proposal

This afternoon Valerian A. Zorin, Deputy Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Soviet Union and head of its delegation here, moved that the whole Congo question be put before the regular General Assembly session, scheduled to open Tuesday.

In a memorandum to the Secretary General, the Russian asked that the regular session put on its agenda an item called "threat to the political independence and territorial integrity of the Congo."

The regular session, he asserted, would "offer great possibilities for a comprehensive and thorough examination" of the Congo problem. That was true, he said, because "heads of state or government of quite a number of countries, including African countries" will be present after Tuesday.

U. S. Presses Defense

One of the leaders will be Premier Khrushchev, scheduled to arrive Monday aboard the passenger - freighter Baltika. The leaders of his Eastern European allies will flank him when he speaks before the Assembly later in the week.

Meanwhile, the United States prepared to resume the defense of the Secretary General and his Congo policies that it had staged in the Security Council. James J. Wadsworth, head of the United States delegation, assured delegates that the Eisenhower Government was "not willing to concede failure just because of a Soviet veto."

Early today, the United States called for the special session, under the terms of the "uniting for peace" clause of the United Nations rules. That provision permits an issue to be brought before the Assembly when action is blocked in the Council. This morning's veto was the Soviet Union's ninetieth since the United Nations was established in 1945.

The United Nations must act for two reasons, Mr. Wadsworth said.

New York

First, he said, it must see that funds are available to make a Congo Government secure. The Secretary General has called the new republic virtually bankrupt, with the lack of money to pay discharged soldiers, former Belgian employes and civil servants as one cause of unrest.

Curb on Subversion Asked

Second, Mr. Wadsworth said, the United Nations must take steps to "protect the Congo against attempts at subversion." The Soviet Union has supplied the central Government of Patrice Lumumba, ousted Premier, with technicians and military transport.

In prospect as the special session developed was a resumption of the long and often bitter argument before the Security Council. In the Council meetings the United States, its Western and Latin-American allies and at least some of the Asian and African states defended Mr. Hammarskjold.

KATANGA INVADED BY SECOND FORCE

The N.Y. Times

But 800 Government Troops Agree to a 48-Hour Truce Urged by U. N. Soldiers

New York

By A. M. ROSENTHAL

Special to The New York Times.

ELISABETHVILLE, the Congo, Sept. 17—The United Nations command here announced today that a new heavily armed column of 800 Congolese soldiers had crossed into Katanga territory but had agreed to a forty-eight hour cease-fire.

The troops were encountered last night by a United Nations jungle patrol of Senegalese and Sudanese troops. The patrol commander told the Congolese that Leopoldville agreed last week to a cease-ifre in operations against this secessionist state.

N.Y. 9-18-60

The commander of the Congolese soldiers—five companies equipped with machine guns, mortars and an artillery piece—said he would halt operations until Sunday night, presumably to give him time to try to get in touch with Leopoldville.

Troops' Loyalties Unclear

There was no indication here as to who had ordered the invasion or to whom the attacking column owed its loyalty in the struggle for power going on in Leopoldville between President Joseph Kasavubu and Patrice Lumumba, the deposed Premier.

Without meeting any opposition, the invading column marched about thirty miles south of the border to the town of Kilubi. The Congolese, who repaired a blown-up bridge on their way, are now within about twenty-five miles of the mining city of Kongolo, their immediate objective.

Another Congolese unit of about 300 men marched a few days ago to within about twenty- five miles of Kongolo from the west in an apparent pincers operation.

Mortar Positions Set Up

United Nations officials said today that Katanga troops had taken up positions about two and a half miles from each Congolese column. Both sides are setting up mortar emplacements.

As soon as the United Nations command heard of the new column, it dispatched Col. Mauritz Mullersward of Sweden, a cease-fire observer, to Kongolo. He will try to make contact with invaders and persuade them to leave Katanga territory.

The new column, which is equipped with armored cars and jeeps, seems well organized, the United Nations said. It was believed here that the invaders were carrying out instructions given by Mr. Lumumba before he was ousted. It will be United Nations officials' task to convince the soldiers that those orders no longer apply.

Meanwhile, despite announcements by the Katanga government that al was quiet in towns ravaged by a revolt of Baluba tribesmen, the United Nations command had a different story to tell.

Ethiopian troops in the town of Luena, about 250 miles from Elisabethville, reported that Katanga gendarmerie, carrying out mopping-up operations against the tribesmen, had killed sixty-eight persons as of late yesterday.

Katanga officials conceded tonight that mopping-up operations apparently were still going on. The Ethiopians said there was firing by Katanga forces this morning.

There was continued military activity in South Kasai, which also has declared its independence. A Katanga spokesman said soldiers loyal to Mr. Lumumba had taken many prisoners.

Albert Kalonji, who calls himself President of South Kasai, issued a statement charging the United Nations force with doing nothing to protect South Kasai. He said Lumumba troops were still carrying on massacres of Baluba tribesmen.

Mr. Kalonji demanded that the United Nations command compel the troops to evacuate South Kasai and that it send observers to patrol the province's borders.

The Balubas in South Kasai are loyal to Mr. Kalonji, who is their chief. But in Katanga the Balubas are fighting Moise Tshombe, President of Katanga, who is Mr. Kalonji's chief ally.

Belgians Are Critical

In Elisabethville there was bitter feeling toward the United Nations on the part of many Belgians. In restaurants, bars and private homes and in the columns of Belgian-controlled newspapers United Nations troops were pictured as standing by while tribesmen destroyed European and African property.

The most bitter critics were refugees from the town of Manono. They filled Elisabethville with reports that Irish troops had not taken action to protect property.

Irish officers here are infuriated and insist their men acted in the best possible way within their instructions not to open fire except in self-defense.

A United Nations spokesman noted that in a difficult situation, where a considerable force of Katanga gendarmerie was unable by direct methods to afford adequate protection, the United Nations was able to evacuate without loss of life all Africans and Europeans who sought protection."

ANGRY CONGOLESE

Soldiers Attempt To Kill Lumumba

The Montgomery Advertiser

Montgomery, Ala.

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo (AP)—Angry Congolese soldiers tried twice Thursday to lynch Patrice Lumumba. They were twice foiled—first by U.N. Ghana troops, then by Congolese police of Col. Joseph Mobutu, 29, the Congo's strong strongman.

"Koboma, Koboma! (kill, kill!)" the soldiers shouted at the disputed premier as he finally escaped, panic-stricken, from a visit to Camp Leopold II.

Lumumba had lost his grip on many of his Congo followers, both military and civilian, in a fight against President Joseph Kasavubu and Mobutu, lanky, army chief of staff. Fri. 9-16-60

It was a chaotic day that seemed to leave Kasavubu and Mobutu in command, though for how long was anybody's guess.

Lumumba's aides insisted Thursday morning that he had everything under control and that Mobutu was under arrest.

But Lumumba's visit to Camp Leopold, the base of the 3,000-man Congolese army garrison of Leopoldville, showed that was wrong.

Lumumba hoped to rouse the army against Mobutu, but was assailed at Camp Leopold by Congolese soldiers who are concerned over reports of casualties among their relatives in the now quieted Kasai Province civil war.

With his own Gen. Victor Lundula, Lumumba took refuge in the officers' mess of the Ghana brigade of the U.N. Command.

Armed Congolese tried to get at him in the building, but Ghana troops shoved them away. Some were thrown out after a struggle on a stairway. Page 1

"It was a very close shave," a British officer of the Ghana troops said. "The men were very, very angry. It looked as though nothing would stop them.

The Montgomery Ala.

A few men were knocked down, but nobody was hurt.

"Lundula and Lumumba looked very frightened indeed."

For seven hours Lumumba and his general were besieged in the building. The Congolese pointed three machine guns at the mess door but let Ghana officers move in and out freely.

Then Mobutu sent his police to the rescue. Fri. 9-16-60

Blue-helmeted Ghana riflemen escorted Lumumba to the entrance soon after the warm, tropical night closed on the camp.

Screaming soldiers, many in steel helmets with camouflage nets, broke the police cordon as Lumumba was pushed into an army truck.

Lumumba's white sports shirt was torn. Page 2

The police formed a barrier of bayoneted rifles. The truck finally whisked Lumumba away to his residence, as Congolese soldiers shook their fists and roared for his death.

The truck dropped him at his residence overlooking the Congo River, where he apparently will be free to try again to regain mastery over the Congo.

Gen. Lundula chose not to go in the truck. The ex-sergeant, who has been the army's commander in chief, left by the mess hall's back door. He was not pursued.

But hundreds of aroused soldiers still milled inside the camp and no one would guess what turn events would take.

The unruly Congolese soldiers were infuriated by reports of numerous casualties among their families in Kasai.

At least 1,000 persons were reported killed and uncounted thousands wounded in the action between Lumumba's troops and secession-minded Baluba tribesmen in Kasai before the U.N. announced a truce last Saturday. Many of the Congolese soldiers here are Balubas.

Outside the camp, Congolese shouted for Lumumba's blood.

"Down with Lumumba the Communist," was a cry of demonstrators in Leopoldville streets.

A U.N. spokesman said Lumumba "requested the protection of the United Nations Ghana forces because of the excitement and agitation in Camp Leopold."

Mobutu and Kasavubu clearly held the upper hand at the end of a chaotic 24 hours of coup and countercoup.

To cheers of Belgian settlers, Mobutu announced at a sidewalk cafe Wednesday night that he and the army had seized power from the politicians and intended to throw out the Communists and run the country for the rest of the year with Western technical assistance.

Ghana troops stall lynching of Lumumba

The Birmingham News

Birmingham Ala.

BY LYNN HEINZERLING

LEOPOLDVILLE, Congo, Sept. 15—(AP)—Congolese soldiers tried to lynch Patrice Lumumba today.

They broke into a UN troop building and tried to seize the disputed premier. Ghan troops of the UN command succeeded in pushing the Congolese troops from the building. "It was a close shave," one officer of the Ghana force said. Thurs. 9-15-60

The unruly Congo soldiers were roused to fever pitch by reports of numerous casulties among their families in Kasai Province, where troops loyal to Lumumba have been fighting against Baluba tribesmen. The United Nations announced a truc in the bloody civil war Saturday. Page 1

MANY OF THE Congolese soldiers in Camp Leopold II here are Balubas.

Today's clash occurred at the officers' mess of the Ghana forces at the Congolese army's Leopoldville base.

Lumumba lost his grip on his supporters and dramatically appealed for UN military protection.

"With street demonstrators shouting "Down with Lumumba the Communist," Lumumba tried desperately to rally the Congolese troops in the camp against the military coup by pro-Western Col. Joseph Mobutu.

But for once he failed to swing the soldiers back to his side in the seesaw struggle with President Joseph Kasavubu for power.

A UN SPOKESMAN SAID Lumumba "requested the protection of the United Nations Ghana forces because of the excitement and agitation in camp Leopold."

The spokesman said Lumumba was given hospitality in the officers' mess of the Ghana brigade, but is free to leave there if he wishes to do so.

It was a tragi-comic reversal of fortunes for Lumumba, who repeatedly tried to have UN forces expelled from the country while he held undisputed power.

Mobutu and the forces loyal to President Kasvubu thus clearly held the upper hand at the end of a chaotic 24 hours of coup and countercoup in which no one in the capital could say for sure which side was winning.

Missing And Happily Missed

The Montgomery Advertiser

As this is written, Lumumba is missing—an altogether satisfying circumstance. Even if he turns up, it appears that he has been decisively supplanted. In the churning brew of the Congo, a new "leader" has floated to the top.

Montgomery, Ala.

The nature of the army colonel's power and intentions is not apparent, but his first actions are reassuring. Gone with Lumumba are the swarming communists who sabotaged the establishment of order and steered Lumumba toward the Kremlin camp.

Sun. 9-18-60

The anguish of the Russians can be imagined. In their boldest adventure to establish a foothold in Africa, they have been humiliatingly checked. The Congo is a monument to their marauding—one visible to all the young African republics that have yet to find a firm base. P. 2-B

Were such to happen to the West, it would be accounted a disaster. It is doubtless considered the same in Moscow.

The effect on Khrushchev will be interesting to observe. As much as for any other reason, his trip to the United Nations is calculated to woo Africa. The Congo development is, for him, a crushing event.

Of the young colonel who is wielding the power, little is known. He may go the way of others who rise on the tides of revolution only to devise a new and more severe repression. But in any comparison with Lumumba, he wins, whatever his flaws.

18a 1960

U.N. Completes Build-Up Of Its Troops in Katanga

New York Times
New York, N.Y.

All Belgians Expected to Have Quit Province by Tomorrow—U. S. to Protest Attack on 8 Airmen

Mon. 8-29-60

By HENRY TANNER

Special to The New York Times.

LEOPOLDVILLE, The Congo, Aug. 28—The United Nations has completed its build-up in Katanga Province and expects the Belgian forces to complete their withdrawal on schedule tomorrow night or Tuesday.

A spokesman for the United Nations mission said today that he saw no reason for the Belgians to keep their troops in the secessionist province beyond the deadline set by Dag Hammarskjold.

Addressing the Security Council Aug. 21, the Secretary General said the Belgians had promised that their last soldiers would be out of the Congo within eight days.

Congolese Premier Patrice Lumumba implied at a news conference last week that his Government would consider it United Nations "sabotage" if the Belgians failed to meet the deadline.

A United Nations spokesman announced, meanwhile, that 4,000 men of the international force had reached their destinations in Katanga's interior and that no additional troops would be sent there.

He dismissed as "irrelevant" predictions by Belgian commanders that their withdrawal might be delayed by an inability of the United Nations forces to assume the protection of the civilian population.

The only conceivable obstacle to the Belgian's immediate withdrawal would be a lack of planes, the spokesman said. The United States Air Force is putting planes at the Belgians' disposal for their evacuation from Kamina and Kitona, two large Belgian air bases.

A United Nations plane flew to Stanleyville to bring eight American fliers and two Canadian Army signalmen who had been beaten by Congolese soldiers there yesterday. A United Nations spokesman said one of the Americans was seriously wounded.

Clare H. Timberlake, United States Ambassador, was reported to be planning a strong protest to the Congolese Government.

Ralph J. Bunche, United Nations Under Secretary, made a strong protest to Foreign Minister Justin Bomboko, who is playing host to the Pan-African Conference.

Dr. Bunche is expected to leave the Congo in a few days. Andrew W. Cordier, Mr. Hammarskjold's top assistant, arrived here this morning to take over as head of the United Nations mission for about a week.

United Nations officials explained that Mr. Cordier was here to prepare a report on the Congo for the General Assembly and also to enable Dr. Bunche to confer with his successor, Rajeshwar Dayal of India, and Mr. Hammarskjold in New York.

A United Nations spokesman announced the release by the Congolese Government of fifteen Belgian soldiers captured a week ago when they went to Matadi, the seaport, to collect Belgian military trucks left behind during withdrawals.

The Belgians acted under an agreement reached between the United Nations and Belgian commands before the Belgian withdrawal, the spokesman said. The United Nations intervened to bring about the release, he said.

In another development, the Congolese Government softened its restrictions on river traffic across the Congo between Leopoldville and Brazzaville, capital of the formerly French Congo Republic.

Persons carrying special passes issued by the office of Premier Lumumba are now permitted to cross. Traffic had been stopped for more than a week. Premier Lumumba had charged that Belgian and French agents in Brazzaville were plotting against Congo's independence.

The conference of independent African states, which opened here last Thursday, continued its closed discussions while Premier Lumumba is in Stanleyville.

The number of delegations has risen to fifteen, according to conference officials. Only nine attended the opening session. Twenty were invited.

Among the late arrivals was M'hammed Yazid, Information Minister in the Algerian Provisional Government. Conference sources reported that the discussions were dealing mainly with problems of Katanga and with technical assistance to the Congo by African nations.

The Congolese had urged the conference to issue an "ultimatum" to Moise Tshombe, Katanga Premier, sources reported. A majority of the delegates have resisted this suggestion and the conference probably will issue merely a "warning" to Mr. Tshombe, it was said.

Observers from Israel, Japan, Nationalist China and Vietnam were barred from the conference room after a United Arab Republic delegate had objected to an Israeli's presence.

The Congolese had invited all the Middle Eastern and Asian nations to send observers. In the face of the Egyptian protest, the conference decided to rescind the invitations of the four that had responded.

Dayal in New Delhi

NEW DELHI, India, Aug 28 (Reuters)—Rajeshwar Dayal, new personal representative in the Congo of Secretary General Hammarskjold, arrived here from Pakistan tonight.

Mr. Dayal, Indian High Commissioner in Pakistan, will discuss the Congo with Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru and other Indian officials tomorrow.

He will leave for New York tomorrow night for talks with Mr. Hammarskjold before going to the Congo.

CONGO

New Belgian Cabinet Is Sought To Deal With Congo Problems

The New York Times
N.Y. N.Y.

By HARRY GILROY

Special to The New York Times.

BRUSSELS, Belgium, Aug. 28—Premier Gaston Eyskens is trying to form a new Cabinet to deal with the problems created by the Congo crisis.

Mon 8-29-60

M. Eyskens is reported to have given to King Baudouin during the last wek a list of the ministers he is seeking for his new team. The Premier this week-end telephoned to the men involved from his villa on the Belgian coast in the hope that the list can be completed tomorrow.

The new Cabinet will be based on the existing political coalition of the Social Christian party, or Christian Democrats as they are usually called, and the Liberals. It is generally predicted that some ministers will be replaced and that some "technicians" will be added.

The Premier's attempt to form a new Cabinet is connected with the promise he made to Parliament Aug. 18 that he would present next month a program of economic expansion and governmental reorganization.

M. Eyskens' regime ran into difficulties after it sent Belgian troops to quell disorders and protest Belgian residents in the Congo after the former colony became independent June 30. The United Nations later requested Belgian troops to withdraw.

Revenue Loss an Issue

The problems facing Belgium as a result of the Congo "catastrophe"—as M. Eyskens has described it—spring from a loss of Government revenue, a reduction of income of private investors and a drop in commerce with the Congo. Unemployment has resulted from the return of Belgians from Africa and from the slowing down of industries here connected with the Congo.

The partners in Belgium's coalition have expressed agreement on the need for a new governmental program, but there seems to be a difference of opinion as to how far it should go. The Liberals feel that it is best to concentrate on a few measures that can be thoroughly considered in the eighteen months before the next quadrennial election of Parliament.

Meanwhile, the Opposition Socialist party continues to urge that the entire Eyskens Cabinet resign and that new elections be called.

M. Eyskens is going ahead with his plans on the strength of confidence he won from both the House of Representatives and the Senate after promising his new program.

Items in Program Cited

The principal items discussed in political circles as likely to be included in the new Government program are: Expanded efforts to win foreign markets; rapid closing of unproductive coal mines; revision of the pension system to prevent too early retirements; tightening of the sickness insurance program to stop frauds; reduced defense expenditures; changes in the long-range plan for aid to the Congo, and elimination of one or more Government ministries and changes in some procedures to speed administrative work.

Emile Masquelier, regent of the National Bank of Belgium, has estimated that if the nation should suffer the most extreme loss conceivable in its affairs with the Congo, the revenue lost to the treasury would amount to $86,000,000 or 5.2 per cent of present fiscal receipts.

CONGOLESE FORCE NEARS KATANGA

The New York Times
New York, N.Y.

Troops Are Within 20 Miles of Secessionists' Line—Tshombe Plans Defense

Mon. 8-29-60

By The Associated Press

ELISABETHVILLE, the Congo, Aug. 28—Congo Army units have moved to within twenty miles of the northern frontier of rebellious Katanga Province, a Katanga Army spokesman said today. He announced that Katanga's soldiers had advanced to the border to meet the threat.

The spokesman said the Congolese were part of Congo Premier Patrice Lumumba's forces that captured Bakwanga, capital of Mining State, in Kasai Province, yesterday. Mining State had joined Katanga in defying Mr. Lumumba's authority.

Vowing to defend Katanga against Mr. Lumumba's forces, Premier Moise Tshombe of the secessionist province announced that he would fly to northern Katanga tomorrow to rally his troops.

Mr. Tshombe said at a news conference the two main roads and rail bridges leading south from Kasai into Katanga had been blown up and that roads had been mined.

The Katanga Army spokesman said intelligence reports put troops of the Congo Army at Luputa, an agricultural center about twenty miles from the Katanga border. Luputa is on the main road and railway leading south from Luluabourg, capital of Kasai Province.

Hhe spokesman said the Congolese were advance parties of a force that had moved south from Luluabourg by train to Mwene Ditu. Part of this force swung ortheast and took Bakwanga. The troops that took Bakwanga were believed still to be in that diamond-mining center, he said.

Another part of the force, however, continued moving south to Luputa and it was probable that patrols have reached the Katanga border, he said.

Move Into Border Town

Katanga troops flown to about twenty miles south of the line have been moved into the border town of Kabeze, the spokesman reported.

The force Mr. Lumumba sent from Luluabourg has been estimated at 300 men. The best estimates are that Katanga's Army numbers about 1,100. Katanga is also counting on support from Baluba tribesmen in both Kasai and Katanga Provinces.

At the same time, Mr. Tshombe criticized his old ally, President Albert Kalonji of Mining State, for not having stayed with his people in Bakwanga when danger threatened. Mr. Kalonji came to this capital of Katanga Wednesday to seek military help, three days before Bakwanga was captured. Mr. Tshombe declared:

"A leader should remain with his people. My troops want to see me and I want to see them to show them I am still in charge in Katanga and to prove I am not going to desert them."

U. N. Troops Move to Line

ELISABETHVILLE, the Congo, Aug. 28 (Reuters)—United Nations troops from Ethiopia moved toward the Katanga border today.

The Belgian army commander, Gen. Roger Gheysens, called for a United Nations-patrolled neutral zone in the area.

Killings in Kasai Reported

ELISABETHVILLE, Aug. 28 (UPI)—Lulua tribal warriors in Kasai Province were reported today to be massacring docile Baluba tribesmen led by Mr. Kalonji.

About 250,000 Baluba refugees had streamed into Mr. Kalonji's Mining State, only to be overrun by their ancient enemies. Hundreds were also reported to be dying of hunger and disease.

Belgian officials expressed concern over the fate of 130 Europeans, mostly Belgian, in the town of Bakwanga, captured Friday night by Lumumba troops.

The Montgomery Advertiser

BEATEN NEWSMAN, LUMUMBA AIDE

Montgomery, Ala.

While Serge Michel, right, expatriate Frenchman and press aide to Congo Premier Patrice Lumumba, watched without being able to prevent it, Andrew Borowiec, left, Associated Press correspondent, was driven from the press room in Leopoldville Thursday under a hail of rifle butts. The three Negro soldiers beat him as anti-government mobs screamed and police fired rifles during the opening of the Leopoldville conference of independent African nations.—AP Wirephoto

REPORTERS ATTACKED

The Montgomery Advertiser

Africa Parley Marred By Screaming Throngs

Montgomery, Ala.

Fri. 8-26-60

By ANDREW BOROWIEC

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo (AP)—Rifle fire and screams of anti-Government mobs Thursday marked the opening of the Leopoldville conference of independent African nations.

Steel-helmeted Congolese police rode over surging crowds clamoring for the death of Premier Patrice Lumumba, host to 11 African governments who answered his appeal for an all-African meeting.

An honor guard, lined up in front of the modernistic Palace of Culture, broke ranks and charged the demonstrators gathered around a dusty square.

As the rifles cracked and police smashed into the crowds with gunbutts, loudspeakers boomed Lumumba's keynote address.

"Gentlemen, you are now making contact with Congolese reality," he said." There is no compromise between liberty and slavery."

Shielded from the tumult by the palace's thick walls, about 50 African delegates listened to Lumumba. They looked grim. From conversations later, it was clear they were shocked.

Congolese police and troopers under the command of Col. Joseph Mobutu, army chief of staff, roughed up reporters and photographers covering the riot.

'DEATH TO LUMUMBA'

Cameras were seized, some to be returned later. Films were destroyed.

Newsmen were pushed around, kicked and slapped.

Reporter Russell Howe of the Washington Post was slapped in the face by several Congolese soldiers when he refused to give up his camera.

Three Congolese swooped down on AP correspondent Andrew Borowiec when he tried to telephone from a specially set up press room. They slapped the phone from his hand and pushed him outside under a hail of blows from their rifle butts.

Lumumba's chief press aide, a leftist expatriate Frenchman named Serge Michel, watched the scene pale-faced.

"I cannot help you," he said.

The rioting broke out when Lumumba rode in a open car with Foreign Minister Justin Bomboko to open the conference. A crowd of perhaps 8,000 watched. Goats wandered about the grass and dust.

There was some applause and shouts of "savior."

But soon several thousand supporters of the opposition Abako party roared out: "Death to Lumumba."

Placards raised over the heads of the crowd demanded the resignation of "Lumumba's Fascist government."

"Long live a federated Congo," said a hoisted banner in defiance of Lumumba's efforts to impose tight unity.

It was then that the police and troopers charged.

They were met by a hail of stones.

"Murderers," shouted the crowd, falling back.

'At least two policemen were led away, apparently injured.

A score of rioters, some bleeding, were thrown into police trucks.

One of the anti-Lumumba demonstrators admitted the protest had been staged for the benefit of the delegates.

"Down with communism, down with the government of Lumumba," he shouted into the microphones of two visiting radio reporters.

"We demand the liberty of our country. We demand the freedom of the press and we demand the liberty to go to and from Brazzaville—across the Congo River—at will. We object to being shut up in Leopoldville by that madman Lumumba."

Right after he finished, Mobutu seized the tape recorder of a French radio reporter, Pierre Gauly, and ordered Gauly out of the area.

Congolese Troops To Kasai Province

The News & Observer

Raleigh, N.C.

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo (AP) — Steel-helmeted Congolese soldiers streamed by airlift Wednesday to Kasai province, where bloody tribal fighting parallels the growth of a secessionist movement.

Thur. 8-25-60

Six hundred or more soldiers were reported sent in.

Premier Patrice Lumumba has vowed to keep the Congo intact and there was speculation that the operation in Kasai, east of Leopoldville province, may presage an invasion of rebellious Katanga province, farther east.

At Albertville.

Katanga itself was more immediately concerned with pro-Lumumba demonstrations at Albertville, on the western shore of Lake Tanganyika.

Mali U.N. soldiers, Belgian paratroopers and Katanga provincial soldiers were reported to have calmed that town after disturbances in which four congolese were killed and three Belgian soldiers wounded.

Lumumba called for Irish U.N. soldiers to get out of Kivu province, north of Katanga, and make way for Congolese "who alone can guarantee the evacuation of Belgian soldiers in this region."

A communique issued by the Premier's office charged that Belgian soldiers based in Belgium's neighboring Ruanda-Urundi trust territory threaten the Congo's eastern border. It said there was a complaint from Kivu that the Irish fraternized with the Belgians.

Chaotic Picture.

Rounding out the day's chaotic picture was a declaration by officials of Leopoldville province that Belgian soldiers have entrenched themselves in the Lower Congo area near the frontier of Portuguese Angola. They appealed for U.N. soldiers to oust them.

Without confirmation elsewhere, these officials declared "many Belgian planes" dropped the men and equipment Monday night. To some sources, their story sounded like an extension of the spy charges Lumumba whipped up against the Belgians last week.

The government requisitioned nearly all planes of the new Air Congo, taken over from Belgium's Sabena line, to fly its soldiers to Kasai's capital, Luluabourg.

warfare reported to have taken thousands of lives.

Lumumba's Congolese troops were ordered to overthrow the "independent state" set up in southern Kasai Provine two weeks ago by Albert Kalonji, leader of the Baluba tribesmen, but there was no report of Lumumba's troops in action yet.

Tribal War Kills 300

The fighting was between the Baluba tribesmen and the Luluas, who back Lumumba. Kalonji said Wednesday in Elisabethville, Katanga, that 300 have been killed in the Luluabourg area since Tuesday and thousands since the June 30 independence day.

Kalonji said he set up the independent state to protect his tribesmen.

It was feared the fighting would spread to Katanga Province, which borders on Kasai. Lumumba has threatened to send his troops there to win back the Katanga, which seceded from the Congo July 11. Katanga troops under Belgian officers have mined roads and railways and were massed at the border to repel an invasion.

Gen. Roger Gheysens, commander of Belgian forces in Katanga, said order had been restored at the town of Albertville, where heavy fighting broke out Tuesday between Belgian troops and pro-Lumumba tribesmen.

Mutiny Denied

The Katanga government announced Tuesday night that troops of the dismembered Mali Federation had mutinied there against their officers but Geysens said this was not true.

He explained that some of the Mali soldiers became innocently involved when local Lumumba supporters armed with spears and arrows attacked the railroad station and airfield there.

New Secession Splitting Congo

Commercial Appeal

Memphis, Tenn.

Lumumba Airlifts Troops To Quell 'Independent' Tribal State

Thur. 8-25-60

By United Press International

LEOPOLDVILLE, Aug. 24.—Premier Patrice Lumumba sped 1,000 troops by plane Wednesday to Kasai Province to end a secessionist movement there and halt an outbreak of tribal

TRIBAL WAR RAGES

The Fla. Times-Union
Jacksonville, Fla.
Thurs. 8-25-60

Congolese Troops Enter Trouble Spot

LEOPOLDVILLE, The Congo, Aug. 24 (AP)—Congolese soldiers streamed by airlift today into Kasai Province, where bloody tribal fighting parallels the growth of a secessionist movement. Six hundred or more soldiers were reported sent in.

Premier Patrice Lumumba has vowed to keep the Congo intact and there was speculation that the operation in Kasai, east of Leopoldville Province, may presage an invasion of rebellious Katanga Province, farther east.

Katanga itself was more immediately concerned with pro-Lumumba demonstrations at Albertville, on the western shore of Lake Tanganyika.

Mali U.N. troops, Belgian parachute troopers and Katanga provincial soldiers were reported to have calmed that town after disturbances in which four Congolese were killed and three Belgian soldiers wounded.

Seeks Irish Troops

Lumumba called for Irish U.N. troops to get out of Kivu Province, north of Katanga, and make way for Congolese "who alone can guarantee the evacuation of Belgian soldiers in this region."

A communique issued by the Premier's office charged that Belgian troops based in Belgium's neighboring Ruanda-Urundi trust territory threaten the Congo's eastern border. It said there was a complaint from Kivu that the Irish fraternized with the Belgians.

Rounding out the day's chaotic picture was a declaration by officials of Leopoldville Province that Belgian soldiers have entrenched themselves in the lower Congo area near the frontier of Portuguese Angola. They appealed for U.N. soldiers to oust them.

Without confirmation elsewhere, these officials declared "many Belgian planes" dropped the men and equipment Monday night. To some sources, their story sounded like an extension of the spy charges Lumumba whipped up against the Belgians last week in an effort to rally public sentiment behind himself.

Take Over Planes

The government requisitioned nearly all planes of the new Air Congo, taken over from Belgium's Sabena line, to fly its troops to Kasai's capital, Luluabourg.

"There is a national emergency," said Col. Joseph Mobutu, chief of staff of the fledgling, once mutinous Congolese army.

U.N. Tunisian forces are nominally in charge of restoring order in Kasai Province. The U.N. announced two weeks ago that the Tunisians had suffered a half dozen casualties—two dead and four wounded under attack — by tribesmen.

The warfare is between the traditionally hostile Lulua and Baluba tribes. It flared with new intensity a few days after Belgium freed the Congo June 30. The warriors fight with spears, poisoned arrows and torches. Many settlements have been burned.

Lumumba also is acutely concerned over the secessionist campaign of Albert Kalondji, a one-time nationalist associate. Kalondji, wooing the Baluba people, proposes to make a separate territory of the diamond-mining area of Kasai and link it with copper-rich Katanga. He advocates federation for the Congo instead of the unitary control Lumumba seeks to impose.

18a 1960

CONGO

They Can't Afford To Be Polite

The American
Baltimore, Md.
Sat. 8-27-60
P. 4

Prime Minister Patrice Lumumba has told the United Nations to get all its white troops out of the Congo.

Lumumba knows that he will have to eject the Belgian troops by force.

When the big struggle comes Congo soldiers do not want to kill any United Nations troops by mistake.

It seems to us rather stupid for Hammarskojold to send white troops into Africa in the first place.

There a race war has been going on for a century. Belgians have been robbing the black Congolese blind until the country has compelled the Belgian government to leave.

However, some individual Belgians want to stay. They do not want to give up the billion dollars a year they are squeezing out of the Congo.

Some individual Uncle Toms want the Belgian whites to stay also.

* * *

THESE GREEDY Belgian whites have combined with Congo Uncle Toms to prevent easy transit of the Congo government from slavery to independence.

But in the end the Europeans will have to leave Africa to the Africans.

Ever since Europeans and Americans declared the Suez Canal would go out of business if Europeans didn't operate it, they have been wrong.

Nasser put all foreigners out of Egypt and has been running his canal since.

One after another African nations have followed Nasser's lead.

Today from Algiers in the north to the Congo in Equatorial Africa the European has been forced out.

* * *

U.S. NEWS AND World Report plaintively sets the Zambesi River in South Africa as the line from which the Europeans will be able to hold on to Africa's great riches in diamonds, gold, uranium, cobalt and copper.

But just as Europeans have been compelled to take their hands out of the pockets of Indians and Chinese, they are being forced out of Africa in a great retreat which will not stop short of the Cape of Good Hope.

Imagine this! U.S. backing of England, France, Belgium, Portugal and Holland has permitted these European countries to occupy and exploit Africa until a little country like Belgium about the size of the State of Maryland was ruling the Congo, a big country the size of all the United States east of the Mississippi River with 15 million people.

* * *

SINCE THE COLD war between the West and Russia, we haven't dared help European nations keep their strangle hold on the African people and their economy.

One by one they have had to let go.

In fact, Krushchev has offered use of Russian troops to help Lumumba drive out the Belgians.

It is, therefore, certain that Belgian soldiers are going to have to leave the Congo.

In the present state of African feelings, Lumumba is wise in saying that all foreign white should leave the country until the new republic has organized and united its government.

And, of course, that should include non-African troops representing the United Nations as well.

* * *

FIDEL CASTRO'S revolution in Cuba is simply another phase of the world-wide movement in which little peoples seek independence.

We accuse Castro of bad faith, intemperate language, violence and falsehood.

But if foreign capital controls a country's business and refuses to give it up, revolutionists cannot be expected to be polite.

TANGANYIKA VOTE IS SET FOR AUG. 30

P. 10 L

Nyerere Party Unopposed —British Due to Grant Self-Rule Next Month

The New York Times

By LEONARD INGALLS

Special to The New York Times

DAR ES SALAAM, Tanganyika, Aug. 20—Preparations are being completed here for the introduction of self-government in Tanganyika early next month.

Sun. 8-21-60

The transfer of authority to the administration headed by Julius K. Nyerere, leader of the Tanganyika African National Union will be just a formality. His party, known as Tanu, is virtually unopposed in the election to be held Aug. 30 for seventy-one seats in the Legislative Council.

When the nominations were made last month, a commanding majority for Mr. Nyerere's party in the new Council was guaranteed when Tanu candidates were unopposed for fifty-eight seats. Only the most desultory campaign has been waged for the thirteen other seats and many observers believe candidates supported by Tanu will win these, too.

Nyerere to Head Nation

Mr. Nyerere will be asked by Sir Richard Turnbull, Governor of this British-administered United Nations trust territory, to form a government. Under the terms of transition to what the British call a "responsible government" for Tanganyika, Sir Richard will continue as Governor and will hold certain veto powers. But Mr. Nyerere, as Chief Minister, will be the effective head of government.

Mr. Nyerere will appoint ten of the twelve members of the Council of Ministers and the governor will name the two others. The ministers will head the government departments and will be the policy-makers. Although technically they will be the Governor's advisers, in effect the ministers will be Mr. Nyerere's Cabinet.

A smooth transition to self-government and to independence, probably in 1962, are foreseen for Tanganyika. One reason is that Mr. Nyerere is a moderate leader who has repeatedly emphasized the need for hard work by Africans once freedom is achieved. He has voiced respect for the minority races and recognizes Tanganyika's need for their skills, advice and assistance.

There are 9,000,000 Africans, 110,000 Asians, Arabs and persons of mixed blood and 24,000 whites in Tanganyika.

Basically race relations in Tanganyika are good, but some irritations remain. Some Asian shopkeepers, for example, are said to be inclined to overcharge Africans. An African-controlled government is likely to take steps to correct this situation.

An annoyance to Africans and Asians alike is the Dar es Salaam Club. It is one of the few places in Tanganyika where non-whites are barred. Its membership recently voted against permitting African or Asian guests on the premises.

One club member who opposed its discriminatory policies said: "It means that I couldn't even bring Mr. Nyerere or another African or Asian minister to lunch at the club. I don't think this can be continued much longer."

An example of how the community in general is rallying to the support of the new government is provided by Asian business men. One of the major problems confronting Mr. Nyerere is the shortage of Africans trained for administrative posts. Asian business men have contributed $280,000 toward the establishment of a college to train administrators.

Mr. Nyerere has also emphasized the importance of interracial cooperation in his selection of ministers to serve in the new government. Of the ten to be named by him, seven will be African, two white and one Asian.

The New York Times Aug. 21, 1960

SELF-RULE PREPARED: Elections are scheduled in Tanganyika (diagonal shading) for September.

8 Beaten U.S. Airmen Hail Ethiopians as Rescuers

The New York Times
New York, N.Y.
Mon. Aug 29 '60

By THOMAS F. BRADY

Special to The New York Times

STANLEYVILLE, The Congo, Aug. 28—"When are they going to get us out of this hell?" That, in effect, was the comment of the eight United States Air Force men interviewed today in the wake of the rifle-butt beatings they received at the airport here yesterday from Congolese soldiers and policemen.

Capt. Elbert L. Mott of Glenmora, La., commander of the Globemaster on which the eight arrived, said from his hospital bed:

"Tell our wives that we are all right. The wives of the whole crew should know that."

[The eight United States airmen and the two Canadians arrived by plane in Leopoldville, The Associated Press reported.]

Convinced By Rumors

The Congolese policemen and troops who beat the airmen had been convinced by rumors, of uncertain origin, that the Globemaster was full of Belgian military spies. Also, Premier Patrice Lumumba has fostered a spy scare in repeated speeches.

Some United Nations officers attributed the rumors to the presence of twenty-four Soviet physicians, nurses and interpreters in Oriental Province. One United Nations officer disclosed, however, that the Soviet health team had been held for some time at gunpoint at Bunia, 440 miles east of here.

The other wounded Americans are the co-pilot, First Lieut. Gerald T. Henry of Washington, injured in the back and eye; the navigator, First Lieut. William M. Shaw, Ashville, N. C., who received a head wound; First Lieut. Armand A. Kelzenberg, three head wounds; T/Sgt. Kenneth E. Bennett, Norfolk, Va., injured in head and back: Lieut. Kenneth E. Stickevers, Valley Stream, L. I., hand wounds; T/Sgt. Frederick Kiser, Smyrna, Del., tentatively believed to have a minor skull fracture, but conscious; and S/Sgt. Brice E. Bossa, Sarasota, Fla., head wound.

Two Canadians in Hospital

Two Canadian communications technicians who were aboard the plane were also in a hospital from the beatings. They are Signalman Albert Bone and Cpl. G. W. Gavel.

Still groggy, with their heads bandaged and hands too sore for shaking, the injured men were nevertheless able to relate most of what had happened. Captain Mott, with a blood-stained bandage across one cheek and the other cheek black and blue and criss-crossed with scratches, said:

"I came out of the plane and went into the airport office to file a return clearance. Kelzenberg was with me. We came out again and Congolese soldiers were saying things I could not understand.

"All of a sudden they began to hit me with rifles and heavy belts with buckles on the ends. I got groggy but didn't lose consciousness. I don't know how long it lasted. The Ethiopians came and pulled me out. They were splendid. They did a fine job." Lieutenant Kelzenberg said:

"Mott and I were filing a clearance when we heard shouting outside and ran back toward the plane. I got almost under the plane and somebody grabbed my arm. I saw Shaw bleeding and taking a beating. That was the last I saw of any of the crew until I got to the hospital.

"I ran for a ditch and then tried to get over a fence. Somebody pushed me back, but my leg caught. Then the beating began. Then some Congolese soldiers got me and dragged me to a jeep.

"Sometimes they seemed to be protecting me, but then they'd start beating me again. When I yelled I was an American it seemed to ease up a little, but they still hit me from time to time."

Plane From Dover, Del.

Their Military Air Transport craft, based in Dover, Del., was on temporary United Nations assignment at Chateauroux, France. It had flown from Chateauroux to Wheelus Field in Libya and then to Kano, Nigeria, en route here with rations for United Nations personnel.

Canadian soldiers and United Nations civilians in a Congolese jail reported that they had seen a jeep arrive with two bleeding United States airmen. They said a Congolese officer shouted, "Take them to the hospital."

An Ethiopian major jumped into the jeep and did so.

Another Ethiopian officer obtained the release of the imprisoned United Nations personnel by having his troops aim guns at a Congolese commander.

Meanwhile, Premier Lumumba attempted to show delegates to the Pan-African conference and a planeload of newsmen who arrived several hours later how popular he was here in Oriental Province, his political stronghold. In an airport speech, he called for fraternization between white and Africans and said he hoped Belgians would mingle with the throng that was greeting him.

Three Belgians Stoned

A little later three Belgians were stoned in the streets and taken to a hospital for emergency treatment. At the same time, a French employe of Sabena Airlines was beaten at the airport and taken to a hospital.

Premier Lumumba was greeted with wild enthusiasm. But the chief of the Oriental Province Government, Jean-Pierre Finant, a Congolese, was slapped by a Congolese policeman because he had tried to stop the beating of the Americans.

The policemen and troops were convinced by rumors of uncertain origin that the United States plane was full of Belgian military spies. Mr. Lumumba has fostered a spy scare by repeated speeches.

Some United Nations officers attributed the rumors to the presence of twenty-four Soviet physicians, nurses and interpreters in Oriental Province. One United Nations officer disclosed, however, that the Soviet health team had been held for some time at gunpoint at Bunia, 440 miles east of here.

---

8 Victims in Leopoldville

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo, Apg. 28 (AP)—The eight United States Air Force men who were assaulted by Congolese at Stanleyville were flown into Leopoldville tonight.

With them were the two Canadian signalmen who also had been beaten.

Coldly furious, Maj. Gen. Carl Carlsson von Horn, the Swedish commander of United Nations forces in the Congo, staged a show of United Nations force at Leopoldville airport as the victims arrived.

With a pistol at his belt, General von Horn deployed about 300 Sudanese and Ghanarian United Nations troops around the plane that brought the men.

A Congolese soldier showed up carrying a rifle. He was briskly hustled away. Asked about the show of force, General von Horn said:

"It is because I was so mad. I promised to fire the first shot myself if there was any interference."

One of the American airmen, telling of the attack in Stanleyville, said:

"I thought I was saying my last amen."

U. N. Meets To Act on The Congo

The Washington Post
Washington D.C.
Sun. 9-18-60

Assembly Called After Reds Veto Council Action

By Milt Freudenheim
Chicago Daily News Service

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. Sept. 17. — The 82-nation U. N. Assembly was to meet in emergency special session tonight on the Congo.

The Assembly was meeting on call of the Security Council following Soviet veto number 90 of an Asian-African plan to firm up U. N. authority in the Congo.

The United States scored a triple victory by leading the Russians into the Congo assembly via the veto route on the eve of Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev's arrival for the regular assembly which opens Tuesday.

United Nations reaches crossroads in its 15-year history this week, with Khrushchev in middle of intersection. Page E1.

Cuba imposes severe travel restrictions on U. S. Ambassador in retaliation for curbs placed on Premier Castro's movements in New York; 7 North Americans arrested in Havana. Page A4.

First victory—undermining the Soviet buildup for Khrushchev's appearance here along with several dozen other premiers, presidents and kings.

Second victory — forcing hard-nosed Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Valerian Zorin to cast his veto against the proposal of "neutralist" Ceylon and African Tunisia.

Third victory — dissipating anti-U. N. suspicions among nearly all Africans here. Now they have closed ranks again behind U. N. Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold.

U. S. to Push Proposal

In tonight's assembly, the Americans will reintroduce their tough proposal giving Hammarskjold 100 per cent support and barring Soviet aid "for military purposes" from the Congo.

India and other Asian-African delegations are conferring on possible compromise wording they hope could win East-West support to lessen cold war pressures on the Congo.

But all the non-Communists now have come back to the basic idea that aid to the Congo must go through the United Nations, and not come from Moscow, Brussels, Belgium or anywhere else.

Western diplomats guessed early today that the Congo emergency session may run on for several days—overlapping the opening of the regular U. N. assembly.

U. S. Ambassadors James J. Wadsworth and James W. Barco moved the Congo debate in the Security Council neatly along until the Russians dropped through the trapdoor by casting the veto at 1 a. m. today.

When Tunisia any Ceylon had trouble lining up Asian-African support for a proposal backing the U. N. in the Congo, the Americans made it easier for them by issuing their own strongly worded plan.

As a result, Tunisia and Ceylon were able to come up with a slightly softer wording that still would have firmly "decided that no assistance for military purposes be sent to the Congo except as part of the United Nations action."

The Russians told the Africans and Asians privately they would veto, but nobody believed they would slap their "friends" this way.

But Wadsworth lowered the boom just before the vote on the Ceylon-Tunisia proposal. He announced the United States saw "little substantive difference" between its own and the Asian-African wording.

Zorin rose to this with a veto that is not considered likely to please his boss Khrushchev.

The Russian then announced he planned to put the Congo crisis before the regular U. N. Assembly in a special item. But the emergency assembly session steals his thunder, much to his well-defined disgust.

Americans could not wait two days for the opening of the regular assembly session, although they delayed this week's Council when the Soviets wanted an urgent meeting.

He accused the United States of using the earlier delay to "prepare an overthrow" of the Congo government of Premier Patrice Lumumba.

Insiders saw the actual cause of the delay as being to win key African nations such as Ghana and the United Arab Republic back to support of Hammarskjold's policy.

The extent of the Soviet setback here can be measured in the vote on the Russian's own proposal that would have harshly attacked Hammarskjold's Congo command for "gross violations" of previous security council decisions.

Zorin charged the emergency assembly session was "illegal."

It was called under the Acheson-Dulles "uniting for peace" resolution of 1950 which authorizes the calling of an emergency Assembly Session by the vote of any seven members of the Council—with the veto inoperative — whenever council action is blocked by the veto. Russia did not vote for that Assembly resolution and has been calling it illegal for the past 10 years.

Shouting and pointing his finger, Zorin charged that the Only Russia and Poland voted for that one, while Tunisia and Ceylon abstanied.

Next the Council rejected a series of Soviet amendements to the Tunisia-Ceylon resolution. The Communists won Asian-African support for only one mild change out of five.

The Russians and Poles were alone again in the 8-to-2 vote on the Tunisian-Ceylon resoltuion, defeated because of the Soviet veto. France abstained, believing privately that the U. N. has no business in Africa.

This view is not shared by many, as will be shown in the coming emeregncy and regular session of the U. N. Assembly. Africa is slated to dispute Khrushchev's own bid for top billing at the United Nations this year.

Associated Press

Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Valerian A. Zorian gestures as he protests to the United Nations Security Council in New York against the American request for an emergency session of the General Assembly to consider the Congo Problem.

U. N. in the Congo

Task Set World Organization Said to Go Beyond Diplomacy

The writer of the following letter was formerly a member of the U. N. Secretariat who resigned after thirteen years' service in 1959.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES:

The U. N. will most likely survive its difficulties in the Congo, as it has survived many others—avowed and unavowed ones. This is not because of its outstanding performance, but because it enjoys the advantage of being the only U. N. we have.

Setbacks and failures are inevitable because Governments persist in giving the U. N. assignments which it is not equipped to carry out successfully. This they have done frequently and quite irresponsibly over the years—mostly with the participation, and often at the initiative, of our own Government.

Governments cannot resist the temptation to exploit the popular image of the U. N. as something that, while not a world government, can act as one, and to take advantage of its not being just that at the same time. Sometimes this means putting a U. N. face on an action really decided and taken independently. We did this when we intervened in Korea and had the U. N. supply the flag (and some token forces) for the purpose.

At other times it means taking no action at all, but giving the appearance of being most active. Here a case in point is the United States representative's insistence upon an emergency meeting of the U. N. Security Council at 3 A. M. during the Hungarian crisis. This, it could be argued, was "the least we could do." It was little, indeed, and we have been taking more of this type of "action" than its effects warrant.

Hungarian Question

Sir Leslie Munro, in his letter published Aug. 19, calls on us in these columns not to forget the events of 1956. Yet how many of us know, and remember, that he was made the U. N.'s Special Representative on the Question of Hungary? His thus became the unrewarding task to knock at a door which was known to be shut to him.

The rationale of his appointment was that it would "keep the issue alive"—and us from forgetting it. But since his failure to affect the Hungarian situation in any way was certain it would have been unfair to expect of him the kind of achievement which would be needed to save his still existing office, if not the Hungarian question, from oblivion.

A possible victim of the discrepancy between fiction and reality in U. N. politics is the dynamic Secretary General of the organization. Mr. Hammarskjold stepped into the Congo situation gingerly and with remarkable audacity, to the applause of those who prefer to stay out of it themselves. In so doing he accepted the task of becoming the executor of a policy which "deals" with a situation by ignoring at least one of its most important elements.

Crux of Problem

The resolutions of the Security Council, the ambiguities and omissions which Mr. Hammarskjold seeks to fill in by his interpretations, are addressed to one side of the Congolese problem: the transfer of sovereignty from the colonial power, Belgium, to its former colony. What the U. N. chooses to ignore is the real crux of the predicament with which Mr. Hammarskjold is coming face to face on the spot:

What and who is there to accept and exercise sovereignty on behalf of the population of the Congo? One is bound to wonder how long the U. N. can continue to pretend that there is a sovereign state and government in the face of accumulating evidence to the contrary.

Diplomacy is an art which people addicted to calling a spade a spade on all occasions are unlikely to master. But diplomacy has its limitations, and the mission taken on by Mr. Hammarskjold in the Congo makes demands which go beyond the skills of diplomacy. It calls for statesmanship which faces realities and is supported by the means required to face them. Was the master of quiet diplomacy unaware of the limitations of the means made available to him?

MARK PRICEMAN.

BELGIUM SPEEDING CONGO WITHDRAWAL

Special to The New York Times.

BRUSSELS, Belgium, Aug. 25—The last Belgian troops in Katanga Province of the Congo were reported today being regrouped at Kamina base to leave for Belgium.

About 300 soldiers arrived here by air today. Nine planes with about 750 soldiers are expected tomorrow and 1,000 soldiers are to arrive Saturday by sea.

The Foreign Ministry announced tonight that the United States would provide planes to help Belgium complete the evacuation of her troops from the Congo within a week.

Belgium's pledge to recall all her troops within a week was announced Sunday by Secretary General Dog Hammarskjold to the Security Council.

King Baudouin attended a ceremony today honoring the forty-nine Belgian soldiers killed in the Congo crisis. Thirty-nine were killed when a transport plane crashed near Goma July 19.

CONGOLESE TROOPS ARE SENT TO KASAI

Force Enters Mining State —Brussels Reports Pact by Kalanji and Tshombe

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo, Aug. 26 (Reuters) — Premier Patrice Lumumba said today his troops had taken up positions in Kasai Province, where a secessionist Mining State has been proclaimed by the Provincial President, Albert Kalonji.

Mr. Kalonji, who is at Bakwanga, a town built around a rich diamond mine, has said he feared an "invasion" by the Congo Premier.

Mr. Lumumba said, "In Kasai there are Beligans who, with Kalonji, are organizing disturbances because of the diamonds in the province. And there are Belgians there profiting by the situation to steal as many diamonds as possible."

Belgian Aircraft Seized

Mr. Lumumba said his security forces in Luluabourg, the capital of Kasai Province, had seized a Belgian aircraft carrying arms from Brazzaville to Bakwanga, the capital of Kasai Province.

Mr. Lumumba also accused the Belgians in the area of trying to set up a special Kasai airline for runs from Brussels to Kasai via Brazzaville.

The Mining State of Kasai contains more than 90 per cent of all the industrial diamond potential in the Congo.

Mr. Lumumba said he had released, "on humanitarian grounds," Mr. Kalonji's wife and children. They had been detained and held as hostages here shortly after Mr. Kalonji announced the establishment of his Mining State.

Troop Moves Reported

Meanwhile, reports continued to reach Elisabethville, capital of Katanga, of movements in Kasi Province of troops supporting the Central Government.

The Katanga Premier Mose Tshombe, flew over his capital in the first helicopter of the force. He received two helicopters and a number of spotter secessionist province's own air aircraft from Belgian authorities.

Mr. Tshombe was reported to have agreed to supply arms to Mr. Kalonji.

Katanga-Kasai Pact Reported

BRUSSELS, Belgium, Aug. 26 (AP) — The Belgian radio said today that Moise Tshombe Premier of secessionist Katanga and President Albert Kalonji of Kasai Province, had agreed to federate their states.

The broadcast said, an agreement was signed yesterday in Elisabethville, Katanga's capital.

Mr. Tshombe [illegible] said to have sent a few [illegible] companies of Katanga troops [illegible] to Kasai Province to protect [illegible] Bakwanga.

A Congo Federalist

Albert Kalonji

"I AM not a vain man, but I am very dynamic." This self-description of one of the Congo's "angry young men," Albert Kalonji, has been borne out repeatedly in recent months. The President of the self-styled Republic of Mining State, who said yesterday that he feared an "invasion" by the Central Government, wasted little time after the Congo's independence to make clear that he was opposed to Premier Patrice Lumumba's "dictatorial ambitions," although he once was an ally of Mr. Lumumba.

Man in the News

On Aug. 9, while visiting with President Moise Tahombe of secessionist Katanya Province, Mr. Kalonji issued a declaration of independence for his part of Kassi Province, which lies northwest of Katanga.

Mr. Kalonji likes to have press cameras focused on him. A small beard, which he cultivates meticulously, and a balding head make him look a bit like Lenin. He points with evident pleasure to the crowds that cheer him outside his office.

Career Has Been Varied

Mr. Kalonji, who makes his governmental seat in Bakwanga in southern Kasai, studied and became a teacher of agronomy, then worked for a bank before opening his own business as an insurance broker.

After becoming a provincial legislator he added the study of law and political economy to his already heavy schedule.

Mr. Kalonji, 30 years old and the father of six children, is a chief of the Baluba tribe. The entered Congolese politics during the Brussels World's Fair in 1958.

While working in the Congolese pavilion Mr. Kalonji met several nationalists who apposed the colonial administration in the Belgian Congo.

Elected by One Faction

On his return to the Congo, Mr. Kalonji become active in Mr. Lumumba's Congolese Nationalist Movement. Soon thereafter the movement's top echelon grew tired of Mr. Lumumba's dictatorial ways, tried to jettison him, but succeeded only in splitting the party.

One faction elected Mr. Kalonji as its leader. He called his group "the one and only true Congolese Nationalist Movement."

Mr. Kalonji received strong

A chief of the loyal, energetic Baluba support from Kasai Province. As a Baluba chief he commanded the loyalti of that energetic and intelligent people and its related tribes.

When tribal warfare broke out between the Baluba and the Lulua, Mr. Kalonji strongly defended the Baluba's position.

For generation the Baluba had served the lordly Lulua warrior people. When independence approached, however, the Lulua realized that the more numerous Baluba would control Kasai province. Mr. Kalonji contended this was the reason for the warfare.

Mr. Kalonji's attitude was deemed too aggressive, however, by the colonial administration and he was jailed and exiled briefly.

His exile boomeranged politically when his party swept elections in Kasai's cities.

This occurred despite Mr Kalonji's orders to his followers not to vote. This order paralleled that given by Joseph Kasavubu to his Association of the Lower Congo when he became dissatisfied with the way the election was being held.

Mr. Kassavubu is now the Congo's Chief of State, although his association, known as Abako, favors a confederation system over the centralist system Premier Lumumba is trying to impose.

Through his cooperation with Abako Mr. Kalonji came to favor the federal ideas that led him to declare the secession of Mining State.

8 IN U. S. AIR CREW BEATEN IN RAID BY CONGO TROOPS

The New York Times
N. Y. Times

3 Are Detained After Attack at Stanleyville Airport—Lumumba Flies There

Sun. 8-28-60

U. N. AIDES ALSO HURT

P.

They Are Assaulted in Hotel—Centralist Force Takes Capital of Mining State

By HENRY TANNER

Special to The New York Times.

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo, Aug. 27 — Congolese soldiers beat up United Nations personnel and eight crew members of a United States plane in Stanleyville today.

The violence occurred less than an hour before Premier Patrice Lumumba arrived in Stanleyville, capital of Oriental Province.

A United Nations spokesman here who announced the incident said three of the eight Americans had been taken to a Congolese military camp from which they were later freed.

The attack on the Americans came shortly after they had landed an Air Force plane carrying United Nations personnel and signal equipment to Stanleyville.

Lumumba Learns of Attack

Reports from the scene said Mr. Lumumba became aware of the incident when he noticed that one of the Americans was bruised and blood-stained.

All eight Americans were hospitalized, a United Nations spokesman said. Two of them were said to have been wounded by blows with rifle butts. The two were reported to have been saved from being beaten to death by the intervention of an Ethiopian, Col. Walayo Hommes.

The United Nations personnel who were attacked were in a hotel in the center of the city that serves as headquarters there for the organization's peace force. Two Canadian officers and a Swedish civilian were injured.

Mr. Lumumba warned yesterday that the United Nations forces would have to withdraw as soon as the Belgian troops left and that he would not tolerate a United Nations "occupation."

Premier Leads Tour

Premier Lumumba flew to Stanleyville this morning with a group of newsmen and delegates attending the Pan-African Conference here. He had told newsmen that the purpose of his trip was to show his visitors that he and his Government had political support.

Mr. Lumumba was welcomed at the airport by an honor guard of about 800 Congolese soldiers. A crowd of several thousand civilians gave him an enthusiastic and noisy ovation.

In another development today, a Congolese column of 600 men entered the mining center of Bakwanga in Kasai Province, where an independent Mining State has been proclaimed by Albert Kalonji, one of Mr. Lumumba's fiercest political opponents.

According to the Congolese Government, the column drove into Bakwanga from Luluabourg, the provincial capital.

[At the United Nations, officials were awaiting fuller details of the outbreaks in the Congo, which they considered serious.]

Fragmentary reports of the assault on the Americans began reaching Dr. Ralph J. Bunche, assistant to Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold, at Dr. Bunche's office here in mid-afternoon. Dr. Bunche said he expected to have a complete report later tonight, a spokesman said.

The incident at the Stanleyville airport was in violation of an agreement signed between the Congolese Government and the United Nations mission here, the spokesman said.

The agreement recognizes that the Congo's major airports are vital to the United Nations force. It gives the United Nations control of these airports. In the cases of the Leopoldville and Stanleyville airports, it stipulates how many Congolese soldiers are allowed to be stationed at them.

Dr. Bunche addressed a strong protest to the Congolese Foreign Minister, Justin Bomboko.

Scene of Past Incidents

The Stanleyville airport has been the scene of incidents between the Congo Army and United Nations personnel before.

The Congolese had control of the airport until a few days ago, when an Ethiopian officer, Gen. Iyassu Mangasha flew there from the capital to intervene personally. General Mangasha is the Chief of Staff of the United Nations command in the Congo. He had made the trip with Gen. Victor Lundula, Commander of the Congo Army.

Yesterday United Nations spokesman here said an Ethiopian company had taken over the airport as a result of intervention by the two generals. The spokesman said all Congolese units had been withdrawn from the airport, except for a small platoon.

Premier Lumumba has repeatedly requested that the Congo Army be given control of the country's airports. Yesterday he said he had renewed his request in writing to Dr. Bunche.

In Kasai Province, the 600 Congolese soldiers encountered "little resistance," Congolese sources said. They said there were "some casualties."

The Congolese column was part of nearly 1,000 troops that had been airlifted to Luluabourg from here earlier this week. According to Congolese officials, it included two units of so-called elite commandos of 100 men each.

Mr. Kalonji, the President of Kasai Province, who had made his headquarters in Bakwanga, left by plane for Elisabethville, capital of secessionist Katanga Province, two days before the invasion by the Congolese Army. Tonight he was still reported to be in Elisabethville.

It was reported yesterday that the two secessionist areas, Mining State in Kasai and Katanga, had signed a pact of federation.

Bakwanga is the seat of an important diamond-mining area. The Mining State covers a large area shaped like a kidney bean, immediately south of Luluabourg. It includes two districts, Kabinda and Kasai District.

Lumumba Addresses Crowd

LEOPOLDVILLE, Aug. 27 (AP)—Premier Patrice Lumumba landed about three-quarters of an hour after the airport incident.

His plane was surrounded by Congolese policemen and soldiers and crowds.

"I fight with you for the total liberation of our country," Mr. Lumumba said in a brief address.

"I am very happy to see you in combat uniform ready to descend on Katanga," he declared. "All soldiers here are mobilized. They demand from their Minister of National Defense [Mr. Lumumba] that they go to Katanga."

Meanwhile, the Ethiopian commander of United States forces in Stanleyville reported a serious situation and asked for instructions.

United States Ambassador Clare Timberlake discussed the situation with Dr. Ralph J. Bunche. Mr. Timberlake was awaiting word on whether a United States plane could be sent into Stanleyville.

Communist Aid Alleged

ELISABETHVILLE, the Congo, Aug. 27 (AP)—The capital of Mining State set up in Kasai Province in defiance of the Central Congo Government fell today to Congolese soldiers led by officers from Communist Czechoslovakia, the President of Kasai Province, Albert Kalonji, said today.

Mr. Kalonji said his capital at Bakwanga had been seized because United Nations forces from Tunisia had disarmed his soldiers there.

He also said soldiers from Guinea were in the invading force. Mr. Kalonji said Guinea had promised to help Premier Patrice Lumumba end the rebellion in Mining State.

According to Mr. Kalonji the Congolese in Kasai had seized the town of Gandajika, south of his rebel capital and only about twenty miles from Katanga's border.

Mr. Kalonji said three Czechoslovak officers had arrived in Luluabourg, the capital of Kasai Province, "under the cover of the United Nations claiming that they were technicians for aircraft supplied to the Congo by the Soviet Government."

Meanwhile this capital of secessionist Katanga began to prepare for an attack from Mr. Lumumba's forces.

A senior officer of the Katanga Army said troops had been flown to Kaniama and other points near the Katanga border with Kasai Province. President Moise Tshombe, several Cabinet ministers and the Katanga Army's Belgian commanders met in Mr. Tshombe's residence.

The few bad roads leading into Katanga will be blocked and bridges mined, it was reported. It was also said stretches of railroad lines leading into the province were being torn up.

Embassy Team Wins in Japan

TOKYO, Aug. 27 (AP) — A United States Embassy softball team with Ambassador Douglas MacArthur 2d in its lineup defeated a Japanese Foreign Ministry team including Foreign Minister Zentaro Kosaka, 11—5, today in their sixth annual game. The embassy now has a record of two wins, three losses and one tie.

300 Congo Troops Bludgeon U.N. Unit

Atlanta Constitution Atlanta, Ga.

Fri. 8/19/60

LEOPOLDVILLE (AP)—Congolese army riflemen kicked, clubbed and robbed a Canadian U.N. unit at Leopoldville airport Thursday. Protesting sharply, the U.N. command cracked down and reclaimed full control over the airport.

(Meanwhile Thursday U.N. Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold called in the chief representatives of the Big Four powers for a joint conference aimed at keeping the Congo situation from collapsing into chaos.

(Reliable sources said the secretary-general told them bluntly that Big Four unanimity was imperative in order to avoid drastic deterioration in the already turbulent newborn African republic.)

The savage incident, one of a series of clashes of Premier Patrice Lumumba's Negro soldiers with U.N. personnel, came as Lumumba himself delivered pointed snubs to U.S. Ambassador Clare H. Timberlake and U.N. Undersecretary Ralph J. Bunche.

By ANDREW BOROWIEC

The Congolese apparently mistook the Canadians, assigned to signal duty in the interior, for Belgians. Some were aboard a plane and others in jeeps when the Congolese struck. The Congolese totaled about 300: the Canadians few more than a dozen.

Thirty Congolese blocked the plane's takeoff.

The Canadians, two of whom wore wings and chevrons similar to the insignia of Belgian paratroopers, were robbed of their wallets and some arms.

KNOCKED OUT

Their Canadian-French protests were shrugged off with a repeated charge that they were "Flemish Belgians."

Capt. Andre Taschereau of Montreal, the detachment's commander, was knocked unconscious by a rifle butt smashed into his right temple.

The Congolese forced some of the Canadians to lie on the ground and made one strip to his shorts.

Signalman Jose Mathieu of Quebec was kicked twice in the face.

Cpl. Robert Conroy of Kingston, Ont., suffered a blow on the back. He said a Congolese broke his rifle stock in delivering that blow.

Ghana U.N. soldiers rushed to help the Canadians.

They surrounded the party and, easing the Congolese away by persuasion and argument, took them to their quarters.

Under cover of Lumumba's martial - law declaration, Congolese troops moved in uninvited to share guard duty at the airport with Ghana troops of Maj. Gen. Carl von Horn's U.N. forces.

REINFORCEMENTS SENT

The U.N. Command, concerned over a clash Wednesday of Congolese with a Norwegian detachment, rushed three additional companies to the airport after the attack on the Canadians. These were two companies of Sudanese and a Ghana company.

Gen. Victor Lundula, the ex-sergeant commanding the ill-disciplined Congolese forces, agreed to pull most of his men from the airport, leaving behind a token contingent of 30. The blue U.N. flag was hoisted again on the control tower.

A U.N. spokesman declined to comment officially on the steadily deteriorating relations.

James Reston

God of the Congo A Threat to U.N.

The Atlanta Constitution Atlanta, Ga.

WASHINGTON—The planners at the State department look a little glassy-eyed this week, as if they'd been reading Vachael Lindsay's "Congo."

"Beware, Beware, Walk with care,
Or Mumbo-Jumbo, god of the Congo. . . .
Mumbo Jumbo will hoo-doo you."

N.Y.T. 8-20-60

It is not too much to say that the outbreak of racism, tribalism and primitivism in the Congo has sent a shiver through this government.

There have been a series of urgent and private meetings here all week leading to a very simple but hard conclusion, namely, that unless the irresponsible Congo "government" of Premier Patrice Lumumba is contained, the future of the United Nations and of the whole of central Africa will be seriously affected.

The stakes are high because Lumumba, with the diplomatic support of Moscow, is defying the United Nations precisely at the moment when the United Nations is trying to avoid the direct intervention of Communist or Western troops in the convulsive development of Central Africa.

Though Secretary Gen. Dag Hammarskjold of the United Nations, who is not a careless man with words, has talked about the possibility of war over the Congo, the official estimate here is that the Soviets are playing a limited game. If they could subvert the Congo and exploit the chaos of Central Africa, no doubt they would try. But direct intervention with Soviet troops is not considered likely.

In the first place, the logistics of the situation are against them. Direct military intervention by the Russians in the Congo would be more difficult than for the United States and the Western European powers, who are closer.

Second, the other new African and non-Communist Asian states prefer the stabilizing influence of the United Nations to any reckless maneuvers that might bring Communist and Western troops into Central Africa.

Third, the U.N. troops in the Congo are authorized to defend themselves against attack and could probably deal with anything short of massive guerilla war until help arrived.

And finally, so much is known of Lumumba's personal self-indulgence and political instability that he is becoming an embarrassment to the Russians, especially since his appeals to racist prejudice, which go against Communist ideology.

For all these reasons, it may be possible to find some formula in the U.N. Security Council today that will preserve the authority of the United Nations and enable that organization to gather and develop the administrative and technical personnel to bring some order to the Congo.

Washington is now realizing that it can no longer look to its friendly allies in Western Europe to maintain stability in Central Africa and that it must find new instruments for this purpose.

This is why there has been such a flurry behind the scenes here this week to preserve the position of the United Nations before the new god of the Congo wrecks the whole experiment.

U.N. Chief Assailed by Lumumba

The Atlanta Constitution Atlanta, Ga.

Tue. 8-16-60

By GEORGE SIBERA

LEOPOLDVILLE (UPI)—U.N. Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold flew back to New York Monday night and summoned the Security Council into an urgent session on the new crisis created by Congolese Premier Patrice Lumumba's statement that the Congo no longer had confidence in Hammarskjold.

Hammarskjold set no time for the council meeting but asked that it be held up at a time when Congolese representatives could be present.

OFF FOR N.Y.C.

He told Lumumba he was leaving for New York Monday night after Lumumba sent him two sharply worded letters saying "The Congolese government and people have lost confidence in you," and threatening to "take other measures" unless U.N. facilities here be placed at Lumumba's disposal.

Hammarskjold replied that he would leave for New York to report to the Security Council unless the Congolese government promptly modified its attitude. Lumumba asked him to postpone his departure for 24 hours to enable a Congolese delegation to accompany him.

FIVE DEMANDS

In the first letter the fiery Congolese Premier presented five demands to Hammarskjold and said there must be immediate compliance:

1. Congolese or other African troops must take over the Congo airfields.

2. The U.N. air transport facilities must be placed at the disposal of Congolese troops to move into secessionist Katanga Province.

DEMANDS WEAPONS

3. The U.N. forces must immediately seized all weapons "distributed by the Belgians" in Katanga and give them to the central government.

4. Only African troops—from Morocco, Tunisia, Sudan, Mali, Ghana, Guinea and Ethiopia—must be used in Katanga.

5. All white troops must be pulled back from Katanga immediately. This applied to Swedes who began taking over from the Belgians this weekend.

NOT RESTORING ORDER

Lumumba accused Hammerskjold of violating the Security Council resolutions on the Congo by holding talks in Elisabethville with Moise Tshombe, president of the province which has seceded from the Congo.

Lumumba said Hammarskjold's troops were not performing dutifully their assigned task of helping Congolese troops restore order and protested that Hammarskjold had talked with Tshombe without consulting him first.

He said Hammarskjold was acting in "collusion" with Tshombe, that he was backed by the Belgians and that he was systematically by-passing the Security Council rulings. He said he "absolutely could not agree" to Hammarskjold's interpretation of the U.N. resolutions.

Times 8-16-60

In the Katanga itself Belgian troops began flying out Monday while Europeans cheered and wept. Planeload after planeload of U.N. troops were flying into Elisabethville under arrangements worked out between Hammarskjold and Tshombe who once threatened to fire at any U.N. troops trying to enter Katanga.

Monday police hurled tear gas bombs into an unruly crowd of students and routed a short-lived demonstration against Tshombe and Swedish troops.

Europeans were reported to be streaming out of Jadotville, where bloody clashes occurred this weekend and there were fears of more trouble to come.

Hammarskjold Monday rejected all of Lumumba's charges, said he was not prepared to discuss the "unjustified allegations," and added he would submit his case to the Security Council.

Congo Massing Troops To Attack Katanga with Reds Supplying Trucks

The Atlanta Constitution, p.1

Atlanta, Ga., Wed. 8-31-60

10 Soviet Aircraft Flying In

By ANDREW BOROWIEC

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo (AP) — The Congo government sent more troops to Kasai province Tuesday in an apparent build-up for invasion of secessionist Katanga province with reported Communist help.

"I can assure you the Congolese are not doing it themselves," a Soviet source said. By account of Communist newsmen 100 Soviet trucks of the type used here for transporting troops have been sent to the interior.

RED PLANES ON WAY

Ten Soviet Ilyushin-14 planes are being flown to the Congo and are expected to arrive in Stanleyville within a few days. The purpose of the flight is not known but it is being rumored they may be piloted by Czechs and that a new airline may be started with them to replace the old Belgian line now known as Air Congo.

The developments came as the United Nations reported all Belgian combat troops had left the Congo by Monday midnight. Only a number of Belgian specialists remain in the big camps of Kamina in Katanga province and Kitona near Leopoldville.

GOES TO ARMY H.Q.

The Katanga camp became the center of a dispute between Katanga Premier Moise Tshombe and the United Nations. Tshombe threatened Tuesday to put Kamina Base out of action unless the U.N. hands over the security of the base to the Katanga Army. The U.N. wants the base neutralized and prohibited to all troops but U.N. forces. The installation would be of paramount importance in any invasion or defense of Katanga province.

Congo Premier Patrice Lumumba, who told Congolese troops in the Oriental province capital of Stanleyville over the weekend of an impending march on Katanga, returned to Leopoldville Tuesday and went directly to Camp Leopold II where his army has its headquarters.

He said he had ordered a "profound reform of the ancient structure" of society in the province under which the territories formerly ruled by tribal chiefs would become rural communes. He also told of a decision to create peasant cooperatives to "mobilize all the forces of the country for a vast economic and social program."

The pronouncements had the authentic ring of the left-wing advisers who have moved into Lumumba's entourage and are now penetrating many government departments.

Lumumba's spokesman, Serge Michel, a leftist formerly associated with the Algerian rebel movement, dealt briefly with the gun-butt attack on eight American airmen and two Canadian signalmen at the Stanleyville Airport Saturday shortly before Lumumba's arrival.

Michel said a rumor that the Americans were Belgian paratroopers circulated through the crowd and the Americans were attacked as they left the plane.

While Western newsmen were receiving this version of the Stanleyville incident Communist newsmen were receiving another. They were told that the American airmen had provoked the fight and were beaten up in return.

UNLOADED CARGO

The airmen have said they had unloaded cargo from their plane when they were attacked.

Although Lumumba had made no apology for the incident, it is understood that Congo President Joseph Kasavubu expressed deep regrets both to U.S. Ambassador Clare H. Timberlake and Dr. Ralph Bunche, who turned over to a successor Tuesday his post as chief of the U.N. operation in the Congo. Bunche left for U.N. headquarters at New York.

The Congolese army troops apparently are being concentrated in Kasai province along the railroad leading to Elisabethville, the Katanga capital. The Katanga army claims to have railroads and roads along the 800-mile border with Kasai mined and blocked.

FIGHTING IN KASAI

The most active spot militarily in the Congo right now is Kasai. There Premier Lumumba's uniformed forces are reported battling Baluba warriors in a prelude to a strike at Katanga.

Whatever the truth of the battle reports, secessionist Albert Kalonji began recruiting a private army in Elisabethville, Katanga's capital. A Baluba chieftain of Kaasi province, Kalonji's avowed aim is to recapture the Kasai area he calls his "mineral state" and its capital, Bakwanga, which he lost to Lumumba's soldiers Saturday.

Three hundred Baluba tribesmen, ranging from teen-age boys to veterans of the old Belgian-trained Force Publique, streamed into Camp Simonet barracks at Elisabethville to volunteer. They were issued khaki uniforms.

1Pa 1960

CONGO

REDS HARMING U.N. IN CONGO

Atlanta Journal & Constitution

By WILLIAM R. FRYE
Special to Atlanta Journal-Constitution

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y., Aug. 20—Soviet influence on Congolese Premier Patrice Lumumba has confronted the United Nations and the free world with one of their most dangerous challenges.

To say that Lumumba is easily swayed is a major understatement.

Beside him, Cuba's Fidel Castro is Gibraltar of stability and rational behavior, U.N. people say. He is made to order for Communist manipulation — and private information reaching here is that the Communists have made important inroads into his entourage.

A high official told me shortly after the Congo crisis broke, that "Lumumba is a madman." The comment was not intended to be taken literally, of course, but it was indicative of the premier's unpredictability and irrationality.

ON ONE OCCASION in the early days of the crisis he presented the U.N. with an ultimatum that Belgian troops must leave Leopoldville by 6 p.m. on a certain day.

Maj. Gen. Henry Templer Alexander, to whom the ultimatum was presented, looked at his watch. "But Mr. Prime Minister," he said, "it is now 7 p.m."

"That," said Lumumba, "is a technicality. It is up to you to get them out."

The incident was not pressed, since the U.N. was making herculean efforts to get along with the 35-year-old Congolese leader. It is on such a foundation that the U.N. has been trying to build its rescue operation for the Congo.

THE U.N. PLANS to spend, on behalf of the Congo, as much as $150,000,000 to $200,000,000 in the first year, an amount three to four times as large as the normal U.N. budget.

All the resources of the world organization and its specialized agencies have been mobilized to help lift the Congo from cannibalism and witchcraft into the 20th Century.

The WORLD in Focus

Some of the complexities of a fast-moving world are put into proper perspective in "The World In Focus," designed for your own background and informed discussion.

SUNDAY, AUG. 21, 1960

4-E

But more and more evidence points to Soviet sabotage. There is such a close resemblance between Soviet attacks on Hammarskjold and Lumumba's latest blasts as to persuade U.N. people that they were ghost-written in the Soviet embassy in Leopoldville.

Andre Fomin, the Soviet charge d'affaires there, spent some time as a member of the Russian delegation to the U.N., and thus is thoroughly familiar with U.N. procedures. Moscow's policy from the beginning of the Congo crisis has been to do as much to disrupt the U.N. operation as it could without offending the African bloc here.

THERE IS, moreover, responsible U.N. sources say, significant Communist influence in, if not actual infiltration of, the Congo cabinet itself.

Lumumba's principal secretary has been accused of being a Communist. Lumumba himself is not so regarded; he is said to reflect whatever viewpoint is presented to him most forcefully at any given moment.

This is what Hammarskjold and Dr. Ralph Bunche, his key aide, have been up against in Leopoldville, according to excellent sources here. It does much to explain Lumumba's mercurial behavior. It apparently explains his public break this past week with the secretary-general.

The real adversaries, in the last analysis, are not Lumumba and Hammarskjold but Khrushchev and Hammarskjold. The whole U.N. rescue operation can succeed only if Hammarskjold can outmaneuver the Kremlin.

THE STAKES are huge. Katanga province has an estimated $20,000,000,000 worth of silver, gold, copper, cobalt and uranium ore.

The ultimate stake could be communist or noncommunist domination of Africa — that, or in a showdown, as Hammarskjold has said, world war.

The secretary-general has an important ace in the hole, and he is playing it. The African bloc in the U.N. exerts formidable diplomatic leverage on the Soviet Union. It is a remarkable fact, but it is so.

Moscow cares very much what Ghana, Guinea and other emerging states think about its policy. Communist influence in Africa depends to a large extent on their verdict.

THE AFRICANS, though sympathetic with Lumumba as the struggling head of a country newly independent, do not want the cold war on their continent—except, perhaps, in the form of competitive economic aid. Hammarskjold personally has immense prestige among them.

Moreover, the Africans, like other anti-colonists, do not want the precedent established that the U.N. can intervene with force in the domestic affairs of a state.

If the U.N. can legally help Lumumba crush the Katanga revolt, it can also help stamp out the Mau-Mau tribes in Kenya; it could put down a Nasser-supported revolt against Jordan or Iran; it could even help the segregationist government of South Africa if the Bantu, or black, population should rise up.

THE AFRICANS do not want to see any of this happen. Hammarskjold reminded them of the possibility this past week when he called attention to the Lebanese crisis of 1958, in which no African or Asian wanted the U.N. to help the Chamoun regime.

Intervention in domestic affairs would do much to make the U.N. a world government Such action is specifically forbidden in the U.N. Charter.

Hammarskjold, insisting that the U.N. stand aloof on Katanga's future, has a strong case in law and in practical politics.

To the extent that he wins African backing for his position, Soviet sabotage may be brought under control.

PATRICE LUMUMBA
Is He a Madman?

Lumumba Shuts Ferry In Move Against Foes

Atlanta Constitution
Atlanta, Ga.
Mon. 8 P 24-e

LEOPOLDVILLE (UPI)—Congolese authorities Sunday suddenly halted travel between Leopoldville and Brazzaville, across the river in the former French Congo, in an apparent move against political opponents of Premier Patrice Lumumba.

Congolese gendarmes halted ferry traffic across the Congo River at noon. They also stopped motor boats which ply across the river. The authorities were reported trying to keep planes from hopping across the river.

Officials said the action was taken in retaliation for the alleged use of the Brazzaville airport by an Air France plane carrying members of the opposition MNC party, which favors a loose federation of Congo states. Premier Lumumba insists on a strong central Congolese government.

The busy ferry to Brazzaville has been stopped before, but only for brief periods. There was no immediate indication how long it might be stopped this time.

RESUMING LIFE'S WORK

Atlanta Constitution

Georgia Mission Surgeon Flying 'Home' to Congo

Atlanta, Ga.

Tues. 8/23/60

LEOPOLDVILLE (UPI) — Five weeks ago, a 56-year-old Georgia-born doctor was airlifted from the Congo, his lie's work as a missionary seemingly ended.

But Tuesday, Dr. Tinsley Smith, born in Savannah but in the Congo or 30 years, flies back to Luluabourg to pick up the pieces of his broken dream.

Dr. Smith is chief surgeon of the 76-bed hospital of the American Presbyterian Congo Mission (APCM) at Mutoto, 40 miles from Luluabourg. The mission, run by the Southern Presbyterian Church of the United States, operates a church, hospital and several mission schools in the Luluabourg area.

Two months ago, there were something like 125 missionaries—all Americans—in the area. Today there are 17. And the mission has just asked for 10 more to be sent out on an emergency basis.

Dr. Smith and his wife Catherine got their first hint of trouble-to-come last fall, when fighting broke out between the Luluas and Bagubas. And in the second week of July this year, when the disorder came after independence, they got orders to leave. They flew from the mission in one of the mission's two light (Cessna) planes and finally reached Salisburg, Southern Rhodesia, in a USAF Globemaster.

For a time it seemed that the end of Dr. Smith's missionary work had come. And the Tinsley Smiths resigned themselves to the idea of going "home."

But they have no home as such outside the Congo, although their 20-year-old son Gordon is at pre-med school at Austin College, Sherman, Texas.

When they reached Leopoldville en route to the states, Dr. Smith was asked to help out in the Congolese hospital here. He has done what he could, but the place is so disorganized it is practically impossible to get anything done as it should be.

However, the three weeks spent in Leopoldville have given Dr. Smith a breathing space and a chance to consider his future. He has decided to stay. His wife is in full agreement.

Tuesday, they fly to Luluabourg. They will be unable to set up housekeeping again at Mutoto, because of the very unsettled conditions there.

So Dr. Smith will do what he can to help in the hospital at Luluabourg and with Red Cross teams in the area. He will try to get to the hospital at Mutoto from time to time to help with supplies.

Dr. Smih has no illusions about the blood flowing between the Babubas and the Luluas, and of the danger to any white man.

"But," he says, "The Congo is our home."

Lumumba Puts Congo Under Martial Law, Arrests U.N. Officials

The Atlanta Constitution Atlanta, Ga.
Wed. 8-17-60 P. 1

Charges Belgian Spies Used Peacemakers

By GEORGE SIBERA

LEOPOLDVILLE, The Congo (UPI)—Premier Patrice Lumumba sent his police Tuesday to arrest United Nations officials he said were being used by "Belgian spies" and then decreed martial law in the Congo for a period of six months.

Lumumba said that during that time the military regime would hold "special military and possibly people's tribunals which will hand down summary justice to troublemakers—be they black or white."

He threatened to seize Belgian assets in the Congo if the Congolese government does not recover what he called its "frozen patrimony" within two weeks—a reference to funds he claims Belgium owes to Congo.

MET WITH NEWSMEN

Lumumba met with the cabinet Tuesday night and then told newsmen that "as of today a special military regime is decreed throughout the country for the next six months."

He took the stern action after a day in which his police swooped down on United Nations headquarters and arrested about a dozen U.N. officials. Police also arrested scores of other whites in widespread raids on hotels and private homes.

In another attempted show of strength, Lumumba ordered 300 Congolese troops equipped with armored cars, light artillery and machine guns into Leopoldville from the Thysville garrison. This was the garrison whose mutiny last July 5 set the whole Congo into chaos.

HOSTILE MOVE

Lumumba staged his hostile new move against the U.N., while Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold flew back to New York for an urgent new Security Council meeting on the re-kindled Congo crisis.

The U.N. chief left Leopoldville abruptly Monday night and ordered the new council meeting after Lumumba sharply told him he and the Congolese people had "lost confidence" in Hammarskjold.

P. 12

Moscow radio gave backing on Tuesday to Lumumba's blast against Hammarskjold. The Soviet radio said "the strange non-interference of the U.N. command and Hammarskjold" in secessionist Katanga province "looks like open encouragement for the atrocities and terror of the Belgian invaders and their puppet (President Moise) Tshombe."

Atlanta, Ga.

Police, on orders from Lumumba, crashed into U.N. headquarters after cordoning off a whole section of the European quarter.

Some 12 U.N. officials were arrested because they were not carying their pink identity cards signed by Hammarskjold. All were released after being vouched for by other U.N. officials at police headquarters and in barbed wire compounds thrown up in the streets.

The thinly disguised excuse for the intervention was an allegation that Belgian paratroopers and spies were operating in the Congolese capital and wearing U. N. armbands.

But observers believed the real reason to be that Lumumba, feeling more and more deserted by members of his own government, was trying to show his strength both to the Congolese and the United Nations.

Hammarskjold-Led Troops Ready to Move Into Katanga

The Atlanta Constitution Atlanta, Ga.
Fri. 8-19-60

By The Associated Press

U. N. Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold arrived in the Congo Thursday night to lead a Swedish force into secessionist Katanga Friday.

En route to Leopoldville from from New York, he stopped 90 minutes at Accra, Ghana, to refuel and confer with President Kwame Nkrumah.

P. 1

Harrarskjold arrived as Premier Patrice Lumumba began showing his muscles with rifle-carrying Congolese soldiers on the eve of U. N. entrance into Katanga.

Lumumba's uniformed forces, which spread terror through Leopoldville in the July mutiny, halted cars on the road to the airport and searched them for weapons. Even diplomats were halted.

Faced with growing dissension, Lumumba broadcast an appeal for national unity and went to extraordinary lengths to protect his own life.

Reporters summoned to Lumumba's residence for a news conference found two Congolese soldiers with bayonetted rifles posted inside the entrance and four Ghana policemen, also with rifles, on duty in the reception room. Lumumba did not appear.

After waiting more than half an hour, the 30 or more correspondents who had answered his summons walked out.

P. 8

Lumumba has promised to cooperate with Hammarskjold in the U. N. effort to replace Belgian soldiers in rebellious Katanga, the richest of the Congo's six provinces.

But the new show of force threw a blanket of uncertainty over the situation.

Hammarskjold, accompanied by two generals and 300 Swedish soldiers, is scheduled to fly to Elisabethville early Friday.

Moise Tshombe, Katanga's premier, promised Hammarskjold a warm welcome in Elisabethville, the provincial capital 950 miles southeast of Leopoldville. Tshombe warned, however, that the presence of the U. N. force "could cause troubles provided by enemies of the state" and said there is general uneasiness among Katanga's people.

WHITES TO CLUSTER

The Brussels radio announced the Belgian military command in Katanga has broadcast a recommendation that white residents move to large centers within the province to assure better protection if trouble comes. Some whites were reported preparing to dash to neighboring Northern Rhodesia in the event of a clash.

GUARANTEES SAFETY

Though Hammarskjold has rejected conditions Tshombe sought to impose, the Premier again urged confirmation that there will be no interference in Katanga's affairs or U.N. help for emissaries of Lumumba's central government.

"I personally guarantee your safety and that of your assistants," said Tahombe, who a week ago was telling U.N. Undersecretary Ralph J. Bunche that the entry of U.N. units scheduled for Aug. 6 would lead to war.

U. N. CHIEF WARNS OF CONGO FAILURE

The New York Times
N.Y., N.Y.

Mistreatment of Personnel Imperils Entire Program, He Informs Council

Fri., 8/19/60

By THOMAS J. HAMILTON
Special to The New York Times.

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y., Aug. 18 — Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold told members of the Security Council today that the entire United Nations program in the Congo had been jeopardized by the mistreatment of Canadian signal corps men in Leopoldville.

Mr. Hammarskjold, in a letter to the eleven members of the Security Council, submitted a strongly worded report on the incident.

He enclosed also a report from Dr. Ralph J. Bunche, his special representative in the Congo, on the arrest of two United Nations representatives in front of the residence of Premier Patrice Lumumba by members of the Premier's body-guard.

Reliable sources said that in his letter Mr. Hammarskjold emphasized that a continuance of such incidents would make it impossible for the United Nations to continue operations in the Congo.

Hammarskjold Sends Protest

In addition, it was learned, Mr. Hammarskjold has sent a protest to Mr. Lumumba. Howard C. Green, Minister of External Afafirs of Canada, called on him this afternoon to discuss the incident and other Congo developments before returning to Ottawa. Canadian sources said that Canada had already sent a protest.

The Secretary General read reports on the incidents to representatives of the United States, the Soviet Union, Britain and France, whom he had summoned to his office this morning to emphasize the gravity of the situation.

In addition, he sent copies of his letter to the eight governments contingents to the United Nations Congo force—Ethiopia, Ghana, Guinea, Ireland, Liberia, Morocco, Sweden and Tunisia.

Copies were also sent to such countries as Canada, which have supplied administrative personnel or staff officers to the United Nations operation.

Pressure on Council Grows

The incidents in Leopoldville, which have caused intense concern about the reliability of Mr. Lumumba's Government, increased the pressure in favor of a prompt meeting of the Security Council to consider Mr. Lumumba's dispute with Mr. Hammarskjold over the operations of the United Nations force.

Deputy Premier Antoine Gizenga of the Congo is expected to arrive in New York tomorrow night. A meeting of the Security Council that had been expected to open at noon Saturday is expected now to be delayed until Sunday or Monday.

Mr. Gizenga is known as an advocate of a radical solution of the Katanga problem, and it is generally felt that the Security Council should wait twenty-four hours after his arrival in New York to give African delegates an opportunity to talk with him.

African delegates had been reluctant to take sides with Mr. Hammarskjold against Mr. Lumumba in the dispute over the Secretary General's hands-off policy regarding Katanga province.

Confidence Shaken

However, the incident in Leopoldville today, following his bitter attacks on Mr. Hammarskjold, have shaken their confidence in Mr. Lumumba.

The Western powers decided not to introduce a resolution endorsing Mr. Hammarskjold's interpretation of the resolution of Aug. 9. This stated that the United Nations Congo force would not be used to "influence the outcome of any internal conflict, constitutional or otherwise."

The United States, Britain and France will wait for the Soviet Union to issue a formal challenge to Mr. Hammarskjold's position that the United Nations force must not be used to "subdue" the Katanga Government.

If the Soviet Union does so, it will be called upon to submit a resolution giving its interpretation of the Aug. 9 resolution. Such a resolution, it is generally agreed, would come nowhere getting the seven votes needed for a majority.

Reliable sources said today that Vasily V. Kuznetsov, a Soviet First Deputy Foreign Minister, again refrained from the use of strong language when he joined the delegates of the Western Big Three in talking with Mr. Hammarskjold.

Yesterday the Soviet representative informed Mr. Hammarskjold officially that he disagreed with his interpretation, but did not formally challenge it.

It is generally agreed that Soviet moves in the Security Council will depend upon the attitude taken by Mr. Gizenga, which in turn is thought to be dependent upon the amount of support he can get from the other African delegates.

Mix-up Here on Soviet Plane

Mistaken assumptions about a Soviet turboprop airliner occupied officials of the United Nations, three Federal agencies and the Port of New York Authority most of yesterday.

By nightfall the entire matter was cleared up and all parties were satisfied, if exhausted, after permission was granted to land the plane in New York.

The scurrying began with a mesage that a four-engine Ilyushin 18 carrying a Congolese delegation to the United Nations had taken off from Accra, Ghana.

It was assumed that the plane was heading directly to New York and the Port of New York Authority was asked by the Federal Aviation Agency for permission to land the plane at Idlewild. The Authority refused on the ground that such "special landings" were a matter for the State Department.

The Port Authority suggested that the plane be diverted to McGuire Air Force Base near Trenon, N. J.

Then it was learned that the plane had landed at London, apparently its original destination all the time.

Last night, the Port Authority said it had received a State Department request that the plane be permitted to land at about 8 or 9 P. M. tonight. T permisison was granted.

BELGIUM DEFENDS POLICY ON CONGO

The New York Times
New York

Cabinet Says Independence Grant Avoided a War—Lumumba Criticized

Thurs. 8-18-60

By HARRY GILROY
Special to The New York Times.

BRUSSELS, Belgium, Aug. 17 —The Belgian Government defended its Congo policy before Parliament today.

P. 3

The Government contended that if independence had not been granted to the Congo a colonial war would have resulted. Furthermore, it said, good relations between Belgium and the Congo would exist now if Premier Patrice Lumumba had not encouraged disorder.

The Belgian House of Representatives returned from vacation at the request of Premier Gaston Eyskens to receive the Government's request for a vote of confidence. This will be taken at theend of debate tomorrow and the Senate will then debate the Congo issue Friday and Saturday.

Auguste Schryver, Minister of African Affairs, said Belgium was responsible for having delayed in forming a Congolese official class. As a result, he said, the process of putting the Congolese in charge of running their country could not have been carried out without a shock.

Lumumba Is Blamed

"Yet we should have succeeded, except for the disastrous mutiny of the Congo Army and except for the agitation by the Congolese ministers," he said. "The Premier of the Congo is the principal one who encouraged the disorder."

M. de Schryver said Mr. Lumumba, before the army mutiny, had felt that the authority of the Belgian officers should be respected but had changed his mind and precipitated the break-up of the force "by unconsidered promises and subversive advice."

The Belgian Minister defended the timing of the grant of independence. He said the forty-four Congolese leaders who attended round-table in Brussels last February had united in "demanding independence — immediate, total and without any reservations."

"Would you have been disposed to make a colonial war to impose our views?" he asked, and then firmly answered himself, "No."

Wigny Defends Policy

Foreign Minister Pierre Wigny said the troubles in the Congo did not result from the "hate of the Congolese people or of most of their official representatives against the Belgian people." The troubles are the work of "some men who are governing alone and whose responsibility is immense," he said.

M. Wigny said he sent a telegram to New York July 12 to approve the sending of United Nations troops to the Congo He said Belgium had abided by the United Nations decisions by withdrawing her troops when the international force was able to guarantee order.

The Foreign Minister said that if he had followed the advice "of pseudo firmness" offered by some, Belgium would have hastened to recognize the independence of Kantanga province. This, he said, would have discredited the Katanga Premier, Moise Tshombe, and helped Mr. Lumumba to lead "all Congolese patriots into a national war."

M. Wigny said everything possible was being done to preserve "the chances of collaboration" between Belgium and the Congo.

The Minister of Defense Arthur Gilson, defended the Belgian military actions in the Congo. He said that the Belgian garrison had now left Elisabethville and that garrisons would leave other Katanga towns in the next few days. The question of Belgian bases in the Congo remains for further discussion, he said.

U. N. TECHNICIANS HURT IN BEATINGS BY CONGO TROOPS

The New York Times
New York, N.Y.

Fri., 8/19/60

Soldiers Assault Canadians at Airport, Then Withdraw at World Force's Order

By THOMAS F. BRADY
Special to The New York Times.

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo, Aug. 18 — Congolese soldiers beat a Canadian captain into unconsciousness and manhandled seven other Canadians today at the Leopoldville airport.

The Congolese then withdrew from the airfield at the demand of the United Nations.

The United Nations forces at the airport—Ghanaians and Sudanese—had been preparing to clear the airfield of the Congolese troops, "by force if need be," when an agreement was reached for the Congolese withdrawal.

The airport was entirely in United Nations hands by 5:30 P. M., but a "symbolic" Congolese squad of six men was permitted to remain behind as a token of the fact that the airport belongs to the Congo.

Eight Canadians Stopped

The beating occurred this morning when eight Canadian officers and men, here as communications technicians, went to the airport to embark for Luluabourg in the interior.

As they were boarding a plane twenty Congolese soldiers with a noncommissioned officer arrived in jeeps and trained machine guns on them.

The Congolese ordered the Canadians to lie prone on the tarmac. The Canadian captain was injured when he did not lie down fast enough, according to United Nations military forces at the airport.

A Congolese soldier struck the captain in the face with his rifle butt and another hit him in the back. Other Canadians were kicked as they lay on the ground and two were also injured, the United Nations said.

Canadian Unconscious

As the Congolese began to put the Canadians in a truck, a Ghanaian officer, Capt. David Amenu, arrived with a squad of Ghanian soldiers. According to his account of the incident, he "persuaded" the Congolese to surrender the Canadians.

Captain Amenu said that the noncommissioned officer agreed almost immediately but that the other Congolese soldiers argued at length about giving up their prisoners.

"They don't have any discipline and they pay no attention to their leaders," Captain Amenu commented.

He said that the Canadian officer, Capt. J. C. Terchereau, was unconscious when he got him back to the Ghanaian command post in the control tower. He was treated by a Ghanaian military hospital ten miles away.

The Congolese were believed to have manhandled the Canadians because some wore parachutist badges. Many Congolese were preparing to attack the Congolese.

Belgian paratroopers, who of Staff of the Congolese Army Premier Patrice Lumumba said Col. Joseph Mobuto, promised yesterday were preparing to later to recover these articles. His promise was given to Brig. Gen. Mangasha Yassou of Ethiopia, Chief of Staff of the

The Congolese stripped the Canadians of money, cameras, belts and some hats. The Chief

United Nations command.

Immediately after the incident, the Congolese forces at the airport—about 200 strong—began to withdraw as the Canadians imposed strong security measures.

About seventy-five Congolese remained in a big transport shed about a half mile from the tower, however they began to filter back into the control area shortly after midday.

Ghanaian forces prepared to use force if necessary to clear the field. At that point Gen. Victor Laundula, head of the Congo Army arrived and said he had given the order for withdrawal "to avoid friction."

Shortly thereafter Colonel Mobuto and General Yassou arrived. The Congolese announced the agreement as "symbolic" force to stay at the airport as "observers who will keep me informed of what is going on."

Colonel Mobuto demanded that the Ghanaians evacuated housing they have been occupying across the road from the airport. He said the United Nations had taken over the housing without Congolese agreement.

General Yassou in turn demanded that the property taken from the Canadians be returned. The two chiefs of staff agreed tot ry to give the other satisfaction on these points.

Congolese Seize Americans

In an incident yesterday afternoon five unarmed American soldiers were extricated from Congolese soldiers at the airport by two Ghanaian officers.

Four American enlisted men and a lieutenant came to the airport in civilian clothes. They were taken out of their car by the Congolese and marched to a hangar where they were forced to stand against a wall, the United States Embassy reported.

The Ghanaians then arrived

The New York Times

John Diefenbaker

and persuaded the Congolese to release the Americans.

In Leopoldville this afternoon Under Secretary Ralph J. Bunche of the United Nations sought a meeting with Premier Lumumba. He was informed that Mr. Lumumba could not see him but that a Belgian aide would see him. Dr. Bunche did not accept the offer.

Dr. Bunche issued a statement tonight describing what had happened to the Canadians. He said Captain Terchereau was recovering. He said Moroccans and Indians had also been victims of rough treatment by the Congolese in recent incidents.

He expressed thanks to the United Nations forces for patience in the face of provocation.

The United States Ambassador, Clare H. Timberlake, called on Mr. Lumumba by appointment today but left without seeing the premier when a Congolese guard refused to let him enter. Mr. Timberlake returned at noon, however, after a new invitation from the Premier.

Canada Sends Protest

OTTAWA, Aug. 18 (Canadian Press)—Canada protested sternly to the Congo Government today over injuries to Canadian service men and demanded assurances for their safety in the future.

Prime Minister John Diefenbaker called the attack "totally unwarranted and unjustifiable."

New Crisis in the Congo

N.Y. Times
Aug. 19, 1960
Week in Rev. 8:30

The Security Council is to meet again in emergency session to deal with a new crisis in the Congo precipitated by Premier Lumumba's open challenge to the United Nations and his ambition to use it as a tool to make himself sole master of the largest African state. On the outcome of this session may depend the success or failure of the latest United Nations police action and its efficacy as an instrument of peace and order.

The new crisis arose when Premier Lumumba, openly instigated by Soviet Russia and Communist China, accused Secretary General Hammarskjold of violating Security Council resolutions and then served demands on him to put at the disposal of Mr. Lumumba's shaky regime all United Nations forces and facilities in the Congo "to subdue the rebel Government of Katanga" and to withdraw from it all "non-African" troops.

When Mr. Hammarskjold refused Premier Lumumba proclaimed his "nonconfidence" in the Secretary General and called for the latter's replacement in the Congo by African-Asian observers to do his bidding. He then proceeded to make a mockery of the United Nations "presence" by raiding its headquarters in Leopoldville, arresting United Nations personnel and terrorizing the white population on the pretext of searching for "Belgian spies." As a further token of his determination to take matters in his own hands he has established his own military rule by an army that recently mutinied and committed wholesale atrocities.

In this situation the Security Council cannot act otherwise than to reassert its own authority and that of Mr. Hammarskjold. Its resolutions, adopted at Mr. Lumumba's own request for help, call on Mr. Hammarskjold to provide the Congolese Government with such military assistance as may be necessary to restore law and order and to assure the withdrawal of Belgian troops, but under no circumstances to intervene in any Congolese "internal conflict, constitutional or otherwise."

The latter stipulation is specifically designed to bar any United Nations involvement in the internal constitutional conflict between Premier Lumumba's dictatorial centralism and the federalism espoused by President Tshombe of Katanga and others. It is reinforced by the Security Council's approval of principles enunciated by Mr. Hammarskjold to the effect that United Nations troops are under the sole command of the United Nations, that they cannot use force except in self-defense, and that they are not there to enforce any political solutions but are there to establish conditions that would permit the Congolese people to determine their constitutional structure by democratic processes.

All this, of course, precludes any such action as Premier Lumumba demands. But behind Mr. Lumumba stand Soviet Russia and Communist China, who have been denouncing Mr. Hammarskjold as a stooge of the "imperialists," especially American "imperialists," because he refuses to shed blood, and who have threatened to send their own troops into the Congo to back Mr. Lumumba, already surrounded by Left-Wing advisers. That is the greater danger which, as Mr. Hammarskjold has warned, poses questions of war or peace, and it will be up to the Security Council to take adequate measures to ban the specter hovering over the Congo now.

Civil War Is Feared In Breakup of Mali

The Washington Post

Associated Press

A woman member of the Caiman Committee—or Women's League—parades with her child during the celebration of independence at Brazzaville in the new Congo Republic.

PARIS, Aug. 20 (AP)—Two flamboyant rival leaders turned the west African port city of Dakar into a tense armed camp today and threatened the newly independent Mali Federation with partition, perhaps bloodshed.

Leaders of the former French states of Senegal and Sudan, joined as the Mali Federation only last year, found themselves at sword's point only a week before they were to elect a new Mali president.

The Aug 27 election precipitated the crisis, in which acting President Modibo Keita, a Sudanese, tried to tighten his control by dismissing Deputy Premier Mamadou Dia, a Senegalese. Dia, who also is premier of Senegal, responded by announcing withdrawal of his state from the Mali Federation. Keita then decreed a state of urgency — corresponding to martial law.

Virtual Prisoner

The ensuing hubbub left Keita in control of the government buildings in Dakar—the capital of both Mali and Senegal — but a virtual prisoner there while Senegalese controlled the rest of the city. It seemed Keita's bid for power had failed.

Communications with Dakar virtually were cut off and censorship was imposed. Keita and Dia took to the airwaves—Radio Senegal and Radio Mali and both in Dakar—to broadcast their divergent stands.

ties it appeared the Mali Federation—a brave experiment in African unity—was dead. It seemed likely Senegal and Sudan would revert to their old status.

Mali had been scheduled for entry into the United Nations next September. Now, it seems, two states will apply instead. But the outcome is not clear.

Both Keita and Dia are supporters of the French Community and the situation in Mali was taken up by French President Charles de Gaulle and Prime Minister Michel Debre in a ahstily arranged meeting this afternoon.

[Reuters reported from Paris that President Charles de Gaulle has asked the Premiers of Sudan and Senegal to meet with him in Paris over the breakup of the Mali Federation. De Gaulle is president of the French community, which includes the Mali Federation.]

Despite the political turmoil, Dakar was reported outwardly calm, with no violence. Senegalese police partolled the streets while troops—ostensibly Mali troops but largely drawn from the state of Senegal—ringed government buildings. Truckloads of Senegalese were reported coming into town, however, to support Dia.

No Intervention Right

Although France has negotiated economic agreements and maintains some military establishments in Senegal and Sudan, it has no right to intervene unless asked to do so.

The prestige of de Gaulle is so great in French Africa, however, that a word from him might ease the conflict, even if Sudan and Senegal still went their opposite ways.

French concern was that Keita—whose Sudanese political stronghold is a poor, landlocked country needing a port city—might turn his gaze southward to bordering Guinea, where Marxist-leaning President Sekou Toure's port of Conakry beckons.

Keita, a French trained ex-schoolteacher wildly popular in his home state, wanted to make of Mali a strongly centralized government. Dia, an equally flamboyant French trained politican who likes to cha-cha in nightclubs, favored a looser federation where the more educated Senegalese population would enjoy greater leeway.

Together, the Senegal and Sudan number only 5½ million people in an area three times the size of France. Neither has an armed force worthy of the name and in consequence an actual conflict seemed unlikely

MALI TENSE

The Montgomery Advertiser

Partition In Prospect For New African State

Montgomery, Ala.

Sun. 8-21-60

DAKAR, Mali Federation (AP) — The newly independent Mali Federation was threatened with partition Saturday night after a tense day that found Acting President Modibo Keita a virtual prisoner in his own capital.

In a day that saw bloodshed threatened, followers of his arch-rival, Vice Premier Mamadou Dia, seized control of this capital and major port city.

Keita is from the former French Sudan. Dia is from the former French Senegal, most populous of the two states in the federation formed only last year. The federation became independent June 20.

In a bid to become a strong-man, Keita dismissed Dia Friday and declared a state of urgency —corresponding to martial law.

Keita was at a disadvantage in the struggle since Dakar, seat of the federation government, is in Senegal. He thus tried his coup in the heart of Dia's territory

Surrounded by his supporters, Keita was reported to be closely confined at Government House.

His hand-picked army chief, Col. Soumare, was arrested by Dia's men.

Keita also is premier of Sudan, and Dia is premier of Senegal.

Keita dismissed Dia in a move to strengthen his position before the Mali presidential elections scheduled for Aug. 27. Dia responded by withdrawing Senegal from the federation, and Keita countered with a declaration of a state of urgency.

Both Radio Senegal and Radio Mali are now in the hands of Senegalese authorities. Previously the two stations broadcast contradictory directives and reports since Radio Mali had been operated by Keita supporters. The two stations reported Saturday night that Keita had called for intervention of French troops and that the request had been denied.

Dag Calls Joint Conference On Preventing Africa Chaos

Montgomery Advertiser

Montgomery, Ala.

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP) —Dag Hammarskjold called in the chief U.N. representatives of the Big Four powers Thursday for a joint conference aimed at keeping the Congo from collapsing into chaos.

Fri 8/19/60

Reliable sources said the U.N. secretary-general bluntly told them that Big Four unanimity was imperative in order to avoid a drastic deterioration in the already turbulent newborn African republic.

African sources said that Hammarskjold also had warned Africa's U.N. representatives that disagreement persists with Premier Patrice Lumumba's Congo government, the United Nations would have no alternative but to pull out the more than 11,000 U.N. troops in the country.

Hammarskjold and other U.N. officials made no secret of their concern over such incidents as Thursday's savage attack by Congolese army riflemen on a Canadian U.N. unit at Leopoldville Airport. A U.N. spokesman commented that directives to U.N. troops make clear they have the right to shoot in self-defense if attacked.

To underscore his concern, Hammarskjold sent a letter to the ambassadors of all countries which have contributed U.N. forces to the Congo operation, detailing the incident involving the Canadians. The letter stressed the role the U.N. played in restoring order.

Summoned for the rare meeting that lasted 45 minutes were U.S. Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge, Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Vasily V. Kuznetsov, British Minister Harold Beeley and French Ambassador Armand Berard.

The U.N. secretary-general also held another group meeting with the ambassadors of Ecuador, Argentina, Ceylon and Tunisia—all smaller countries on the 11-nation Security Council.

DAG, CONGO SPAR

U.N. Slates Palaver On Worsening Crisis

Montgomery Advertiser

Montgomery, Ala.

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP) —The Security Council will meet in extraordinary session Sunday to deal with the worsening Congo crisis. Increasing differences between Dag Hammarskjold and Congo Premier Patrice Lumumba gave a grave air to the situation.

The secretary-general Friday sent a bristling note to Lumumba threatening to ask the Council to call off its U.N. operations altogether unless attacks on U.N. troops stop at once.

Lumumba denounced the note as blackmail and demanded removal of white U.N. troops whom he blamed for incidents in which Canadians have been beaten and robbed and U.N. security officers arrested.

The big question was whether the Soviet Union would support Lumumba's demands and turn its back on Hammarskjold.

The secretary-general has made plain to all the Big Four powers that an East-West clash over the Congo runs the risk of plunging the newborn African republic into deeper chaos.

African representatives at the United Nations were awaiting talks with a Congolese mission sent by Lumumba before taking any definite course of action.

The African representatives, long staunch supporters of Hammarskjold, are reported dismayed with Lumumba's actions. But they did not want to disclose their position pending talks with the Congolese.

IGNORED LUMUMBA

Hammarskjold pointedly ignored Lumumba in addressing his note formally to the government of the Congo. Lumumba heads the government under the chief of state, President Joseph Kasavubu, who is less assertive than Lumumba.

The secretary-general referred to what he called highly reprehensible incidents in which the Canadians were manhandled and U.N. security guards detained under a threat of being shot.

He declared that a continuance "would lead to conditions which would render the work of the United Nations in assistance of the Congo practically impossible."

"Such a development might therefore make it necessary for the secretary-general to submit to the Security Council for reconsideration all of the United Nations activities in the Congo," he added.

"In these circumstances the secretary-general expects that the government will immediately take all measures necessary to forestall the recurrence of any such incidents as those to which this protest refers."

MAINTAIN PEACE

He also warned that the predominantly African U.S. force expected to reach a total of 16,000 men has as its overriding purpose the maintenance of international peace and security.

He said that purpose was the basis for the decision of the Security Council July 14 to send forces into the Congo "and the further development of the United Nations activities will be determined by it."

The U. N. released also a statement by Undersecretary Ralph J. Bunche, American Negro who is Hammarskjold's trouble - shooter on the scene, congratulating U. N. personnel for their conduct "in the face of needless and senseless provocation."

Bunche sent a note to Lumumba saying the U. N. forces came to the Congo as friends and as Lumumba's guests. "We are therefore entitled to expect that your government will protect us, while we are negotiating with it, from outrages such as those committed last night in the very grounds of your residence," Bunche wrote.

New Demand By Lumumba Widens Rift

Montgomery Advertiser

Montgomery, Ala.

Fri. 8/20/60

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo (AP)—Premier Patrice Lumumba of the Congo widened his rift with the United Nations Friday with new charges and demands.

He accused U.N. Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold of "blackmail" in his handling of the Congo situation and formally demanded withdrawal of all white U.N. troops from the Congo.

He served notice that, "The government of the republic is ready to renounce the services of the United Nations because the Congo, sovereign and independent, is nobody's property."

'ANOTHER POWER'

At a news conference in his modernistic residence, which once belonged to the Belgian governor, Lumumba reiterated his condemnation of Hammarskjold. He also repeated his demand for observers from 14 African and Asian nations to take over what he terms the execution of the Security Council's decisions regarding the Congo.

Lumumba's standard complaint has been that Hammarskjold and his aides have been boycotting his government, that they have refused to arrange withdrawal of Belgian troops from the Congo and end the secession of defiant and rich Katanga Province.

Congolese Attack U.N. Canadians

Montgomery Advertiser

Montgomery, Ala.

Fri. 8/19/60

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo (AP)—Congolese army rifemen kicked, clubbed and robbed a Canadian U. N. unit at Lepoldville airport Thursday. Protesting sharply, the U. N. Command cracked down and reclaimed full control over the airport.

The savage incident, one of a series of clashes of Premier Patrice Lumumba's Negro soldiers with U. N. personnel, came as Lumumba himself delivered pointed snubs to U. S. Ambassador Clare H. Timberlake and U. N. Undersecretary Ralph J. Bunche.

The Congolese apparently mistook the Canadians, assigned to signal duty in the interior, for Belgians. Some were aboard a plane and others in jeeps when the Congolese struck. The Congolese totaled about 300; the Canadians few more than a dozen.

TROOPERS ROBBED

Thirty Congolese blocked the plane's takeoff.

The Canadians, two of who wore wings and chevrons simliar to the insignia of Belgian paratroopers, were robbed of their wallets and some arms.

Their Canadian-French protests were shrugged off with a repeated charge that they were "Flemish Belgians."

Capt. Andre Taschereau of Monier, was knocked unconscious by a rifle butt smashed into his right temple.

The Congolese forced some of the Canadians to lie on the ground and made one strip to his shorts.

Signalman Jose Mathieu of Quebec was kicked twice in the face.

RUSH TO AID

Cpl. Robert Conroy of Kingston, Ont., suffered a blow on the back. He said a Congolese broke his rifle stock in delivering that blow.

(In Kingston, Conroy's wife, who gave birth to a baby boy Wednesday said: "As far as I am concerned they can turn our troops right around and send them all home again.")

Ghana U. N. soldiers rushed to help the Canadians.

They surrounded the party and, easing the Congolese away by persuasion and argument, took them to their quarters.

Dag Departs Under Attack By Lumumba

The Montgomery Advertiser

Montgomery, Ala.

Tues. 8-16-60

LEOPOLDVILLE, The Congo (AP)—Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold left for New York by plane Monday night to put difficulties newly raised by Congo Premier Patrice Lumumba before the United Nations Security Council. He declined to wait for Congolese delegation that sought to fly to New York with him.

Lumumba had asked Hammarskjold to delay his departure 24 hours to take a delegation of four Congolese ministers along to appear in the Council.

In a letter to Lumumba the secretary-general said that he did not see the advantage of this since the Security Council would not meet before the arrival of the Congolese delegation in any case.

(In New York the U.N. announced Hammarskjold has asked Ambassador Armand Berard of France, president of the Security Council for August, to call the 11-nation Security Council into session to deal with the new problems. He asked that Berard fix the date so that the Congolese delegation would have time to get to New York. It was indicated that no meeting would be held before Wednesday and that it might be set for Thursday.)

CALL TO COUNCIL

Hammarskjold decided to consult the Security Council after Lumumba in a bitter series of three letters announced he no longer had confidence in the secretary-general.

Shortly before Hammarskjold left his Leopoldville apartment Vice Premier Antoine Gizenga telephoned and asked what time his plane was going. Gizenga said the Congolese delegation wanted to go with him.

ESCORTED BY GUARD

Hammarskjold was escorted to the airport by a guard of Ghana police from the U.N. Congo force.

The secretary-general is flying by U.N. plane to Paris where he will board a commercial plane for New York. Before leaving Leopoldville, Hammarskjold sent letter to Congo President Joseph Kasavubu expressing regrets he had been unable to see him and saying that certain misunderstandings had arisen.

Kasavubu spent the day in the newly independent former French Congo as the guest of Premier Fulbert Youlou. Lumumba point-edly was not invited to the independence celebration across the river.

P 2

The cocksure Lumumba clashed openly and bitterly with Hammarskjold Monday and in a declaration asked that an African-Asian observer group take over the delicate task in place of Hammarskjold.

Tue. 8-16-60

The declaration came in an exchange of letters as multiracial U.N. forces, pledged to political neutrality, moved by air and rail to reinforce Swedish U.N. detachments in secessionist Katanga province.

The neutrality, irritating to Lumumba, was demonstrated during street demonstrations Monday in Elisabethville, Katanga's capital, against the independence-minded provincial Premier Moise Tshombe.

POLICE USED TEAR GAS

Tshombe's police used tear gas to break up the demonstrations. The Swedish U.N. troops, out on their first day of patrol in Elisabethville after taking over guard duty from Belgian soldiers, looked the other way.

Five planeloads of Belgian soldiers flew out of Elisabethville for Kamina, their ground-and-air treaty base in Katanga 300 miles northwest of Elisabethville. This is part of a withdrawal that Belgium says will be completed only when the safety of Belgian civilians remaining in the Congo is assured.

With his country in near collapse around him and his own position shaky, Lumumba made five demands on Hammarskjold:

1. Remove U.N. troops from all Congo airports and turn the guard duty over to his reactivated Congolese army and police.

2. Send Moroccan, Guinean, Ghana, Ethiopian, Tunisian, Sudanese, Liberian and Congolese troops to Katanga immediately and withdraw all white troops from the province.

3. Provide planes to fly Congolese troops throughout the country to re-establish order.

4. Seize all arms and ammunition distributed by the Belgians in Katanga and put them at the disposition of the central government.

5. Replace Hammarskjold's control over the U.N. Congo command by neutral observers of 14 nations whose mission would be "to assure the immediate and integral application of the Security Council's resolutions." Lumumba named Morocco, Tunisia, Ethiopia, Ghana, Guinea, the United Arab Republic, Sudan, Ceylon, Liberia, Mali, Burma, India, Afghanistan and Lebanon.

Bunche Fails To Work Out Compromise

Ghana-Morocco Detachment Sent Back on Plane

ELISABETHVILLE, the Congo, Aug. 5 (AP).—An advance guard of United Nations troops was barred from entering Katanga today and sent flying back to Leopoldville with U. N. Undersecretary Ralph Bunche.

Thus Premier Moise Tshombe of Katanga, who has proclaimed the secession of his province fro mthe new Congo republic, showed the meant business in refusing to allow the United Nations to put his territory under U. N. patrol. He has said U. N. troops would have to fight their way in.

Dr. Bunche, top troubleshooter in the Congo for Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold, came here yesterday and failed to work out a compromise with Mr. Tshombe. Today Dr. Bunche went back to the Congo capital of Leopoldville to report to Mr. Hammarskjold.

Plane Surrounded

But the plane that came to pick him up, carrying 20 troops from Ghana and Morocco to make arrangements for the arrival of the rest of the U. N. force expected here tomorrow, was surrounded by Katanga police and soldiers as it stood on the Elisabethville Airfield.

Godefroid Munongo, Katanga interior minister, went aboard and personally informed the soldiers they would not be allowed to get out.

Mr. Munungo told newsmen he had warned Dr. Bunche that intervention of U. N. troops would be regarded as aggression and Katanga would then be entitled to take legitimate measures of defense. He said Dr. Bunche had told him that U. N. troops would not come until after further negotiations.

Tribal hiefs Gather

Just before Dr. Bunche left, Mr. Tshombe told a news conference:

"I have gathered all tribal chiefs of Katanga in Elisabethville in order to explain the internal situation of Katanga. I have informed them of the decision to oppose the arrival of U. N. troops. The chiefs agree with me. Dr. Bunche has been informed of my decisions and he realizes the situation is dangerous."

It appears that Mr. Tshombe has carried his opposition to U. N. intervention as far as possible on the diplomatic level, and the next move is up to the U. N.

Mr. Tshombe appealed yesterday to Dr. Bunche to hold off on the movement of troops into Katanga and to refer his government's secession from the central Congo government to the Security Council for a review of the whole Katanga qquestion.

First reports said the request was relayed to Mr. Hammarskjold in Leopoldville, 950 miles to the northeast, but Dr. Bunche today said he had had no communication with the secretary general since his arrival and was hurrying back to report on his talks with Mr. Tshombe.

(An U. N. spokesman in Leopoldville said Mr. Hammarskjold had been in constant contact with Dr. Bunche and that an international U. N. task force, including most of the Swedish battalion, would enter Katanga as scheduled at dawn tomorrow.)

The Katanga government appeared to be getting ready to prevent any unwanted planes from landing at the Elisabethville airport. Trucks and bulldozers, used before to block the landing strip, were massed under rthe control tower.

Although the Ghanian and Moroccan troops were not allowed to leave their plane, three U. N. observers were allowed to remain in Elisabethville.

Before his departure, Dr. Bunche held a 1-hour conference with Mr. Tshombe.

No Internal Interference

Dr. Bunche in his departure statement emphasized that he had come to Katanga only to make arrangements for the arrival of U. N. troops to replace Belgian forces keeping order in the province.

In an obvious reference to Mr. Tshombe's fears that the U. N. troops were coming to bring Katanga under control of Premier Patrice Lumumba's central government, Dr. Bunche said the U. N. "has nothing to do with internal political affairs in this area although such affairs obviously affect U. N. operations."

"I have take nand will take no decisions here and I have no authority to take any," he added. "My function is to report as fully as possible to Mr. Hammarskjold."

Mr. Tshombe told a news conference last night he was under the impression U. N. troops would not begin arriving Saturday but conceded Dr. Bunche had given him no assurance. Hedging, he added that he would not be surprised if the troops came.

Members of Premier Lumumba's central government were certain to oppose any attempt to take the question of Katanga to the Securiy Council. Katanga's mines, rich fields and pastures furnished 60 per cent of the wealth of the pre-independence Belgian Congo, and Mr. Lumumba and his ministers have made plain they consider part of the U. N. military force's mission is to enforce the central government's authority over Mr. Tshombe and his rebellious Katanga regime. Mr. Hammarskjold in a statement Wednesday said the U. N. force had not been sent to take orders from the Congo government or mix in the infant nation's internal affairs.

Elisabethville's Europeans were anxious, but there were no signs of panic or preparations for a mass flight in fear the province might become a battleground.

But long lines of Africans 16 to 30 years old marched or cycled to an army barracks in answer to the provincial government's general mobilization order, issued after Mr. Tshombe announced U. N. troops would have to fight their way in Saturday. They sang independence songs as they came to sign up.

Forty or so members of Mr. Tshombe's opposition, who favor U. N. intervention, gathered near Elisabethville's main hotel yesterday in the mistaken belief that Dr. Bunche was staying there. The police quickly pounced on them under emergency regulations banning public meetings of more than five people and dispersed the crowd by tossing a couple of small smoke bombs.

To prevent any disturbance during Dr. Bunche's visit, most of the police were shifted last night to patroling African residential areas. Jeeploads of armed men moved up and down the streets or stationed themselves at main intersections.

Hammarskjold Denies Troops Aid Secession

Assurance Given After Premier Warns of Fight

By LYNN HEINZERLING

Associated Press Staff Writer

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo, Aug. 4.—Dag Hammarskjold rushed his chief trouble shooter to Katanga today after giving assurance that United Nations troops will not try to enforce the Central Congo government's claim on the rich secessionist province.

Dr. Ralph J. Bunche flew to Elisabethville, the Katanga capital, a day ahead of schedule after Katanga Premier Moise Tshombe warned U. N. troops "will have to fight their way in" to his province.

The U. N. military command went ahead with plans to send its first units to Katanga Saturday despite Mr. Tshombe's threat. A special multi-racial task force was alerted to stand by for the move.

Privately U. N. officials said they expected no serious resistance in the mineral-rich province, whose secession would spell economic doom for the rest of the vast Central African country.

Katanga Mobilizes

The Katanga government ordered general mobilization of all able-bodied men in the province, both black and white, to back up the hard core of 500 loyal Congolese troops serving under Belgian officers.

Mr. Hammarskjold sought to soften the defiance of the Katanga leaders by emphasizing the U. N. troops were not acting as agents for the central government of Premier Patrice Lumumba.

"The (U. N.) force is . . . not under the orders of the (Lumumba) government nor can it . . . be permitted to become a party to any internal conflict," Mr. Hammarskjold said in a statement. "A departure from this principle would seriously endanger the impartiality of the United Nations and of the operation."

The fear he sought to put at rest was stated by Katanga Interior Minister Godefroid Munongo, who said, "we know only too well that . . . the U. N. forces would bring in their baggage the agents of Lumumba."

Wants Loose Federation

Mr. Tshombe, in declaring Katanga independent of the central government soon after the Congolese army mutinied last month, charged that Mr. Lumumba was planning to set up a Communist dictatorship. The provincial Premier and other Katanga leaders want the Congo's provinces joined in a loose federation, with their province retaining much of the revenue from its rich uranium and copper mines and its fertile fields and pastures. Mr. Lumumba wants a strong central government and looks to Katanga to finance the poorer remainder of the country.

Belgian officials in Elisabethville generally believed that Mr. Tshombe's threat of military action was a bluff and that he could not bring any effective force into action against the U.N. troops.

They believed Mr. Tshombe and Dr. Bunche would work out some face-saving agreement for the U.N. force to enter Katanga. And with Mr. Hammarskjold on record that the U.N. force would not be used in support of the Central Congo government's aim of controlling Katanga, the way appeared opening for negotiations on future relations between the province and the central government.

Although the Belgian cabinet agreed Tuesday that Belgian troops in Katanga would turn over their peace-keeping mission to the U.N. forces, Premier Gaston Eyskens said in Brussels last night their departure would not be immediate.

Insisting on Security

Belgian Foreign Minister Pierre Wigny told a news conference the Belgian forces, who have been keping order at the request of Mr. Tshombe's government, would leave only when the Belgian command "decides that the security of persons there is assured."

The Belgian officials also indicated belief that the U. N. troops might be used to put Katanga under the Lumumba government's control, and Mr. Eyskens declared:

"Thme United Nations does not have the right, under the cover of a replacement of Belgian troops, to indulge in a political operation. The Belgian government has refused to interfere in the internal affairs of the Congo, of all parts of the Congo . . . The United Nations, like Belgium, must respect the will of the people of any part of the Congo as regards the area's future legal statute."

The Russians, who charged yesterday in Pravda that Mr. Hammarskjold was acting in the Congo is a pro-American agent, said last night the decision to send U. N. troops into Katanga struck a blow at those who hoped to "ignore" Security Council decisions.

Tribal Chiefs Gather

But the dispatch distributed by the official Soviet news agency Tass referred to Mr. Hammarskjold's statement that the U. N. was meeting with success i nits Congo efforts and declared:

"As long as Belgian troops remain on the territory of the Congo, to speak about 'success' of the United Nations is premature, to say the least."

Katanga tribal chiefs gathered in Elisabethville today for Dr. Bunche's arrival. Some traveled hundreds of miles.

Mr. Tshombe's cabinet held an emergency meeting to discuss the situation.

Dag Hammarskjold, United Nations secretary-general (right), and Ralph J. Bunche, United Nations under secretary, confer in Leopoldville, Congo Republic, before Mr. Bunche went to Elisabethville to arrange for the entrance of U. N. troops in the Katanga area.—AP Wirephoto.

Associated Press Radiophoto

ON GUARD IN KATANGA: Military police patrol airport in Elisabethville, capital of province that has declared itself independent of the Republic of the Congo.

A Calm Katanga Waits on U.N.; Premier in Plea to All Nations

Ordinary Folk Wonder Why Distant Forum Troubles Over Their Future—Tshombe Says Self-Rule Is Issue

By HENRY TANNER

Special to The New York Times.

ELISABETHVILLE, The Congo, Aug. 7—The people of this city waited in somnolent Sunday calm for news of the goings on in United Nations' headquarters in New York affecting the secessionist province of Katanga.

They were aware that their future might be shaped by strangers. They found it awesome, and at the same time more than a little funny, that they should be the center of attention in such a distant place.

A bespectacled policeman wanted to know whether guards in front of the United Nations building were wearing a uniform like his. He roared with laughter at the thought that midnight in New York would be dawn in Elisabethville and that New Yorkers would still be sleeping while he was sitting down for lunch.

A Belgian settler complained bitterly that the Americans had not learned a thing and never would, and that only the most stupid or evil could fail to understand that Katanga was the free world's last bastion against communism.

Flags Flutter in Breeze

Both in the African city and along the wide boulevards of the European district, green, red and white flags with three copper stars, the emblem of independent Katanga, were flying in the breeze.

Belgian Sunday drivers and African cyclists were out in force in a picture of calm and order. Life and business, in fact, continue as usual in Elisabethville, and this is Premier Moise Tshombe's strongest argument.

Yesterday the Provincial Premier declared that he just could not understand that the world should prefer the central Congo Government to his own despite the fact that the men in Leopoldville had plunged the country into chaos and had made United Nations intervention necessary while he maintained order in his region, kept the economy going and protected lives and property.

Tonight the Premier issued a "solemn appeal to all nations of the world."

The right of a people to self-determination is sacred, he declared. He said he was certain he could count on all peaceful nations to support the independence of Katanga.

Mine Operations Go On

Union Minière de Haut Katanga, the great mining concern that has its headquarters here, is proving Mr. Tshombe's point about economic stability by continuing to mine and export its copper, cobalt, tin and zinc.

Unlike the rest of the Congo, unemployment here has risen by only a few thousand as textile industries and tobacco factories that had their markets elsewhere in the Congo have had to reduce production.

Belgian technicians—2,000 at Union Miniére alone—are still at their posts. Most have sent their wives and children away, and some 600 persons were flown out on the day after the announcement by Dag Hammarskjold, United Nations Secretary General, that United Nations troops would move into Katanga last Saturday. The move was called off Friday.

Belgian troops, who kept out of sight in the days preceding the expected landing of United Nations forces, appeared in restaurants and bars for the first time today, mixing with the Congolese without any signs of hostility on either side.

"We need the white man, he must teach us," a Congolese store clerk explained.

Both Europeans and Congolese politicians are conscious of the fact that the victory they won over the United Nations last week is temporary and that new decisions, perhaps unfavorable to them, will be made in New York.

Effects Abroad Ignored

However, even the many are of them are conscious of what they want themselves. They do not know and do not want to know that the United Nations, Africa and, perhaps, the world may have to suffer as a result of their resistance.

Premier Tshombe apparently has no plans for making any suggestions to the United Nations on what course could be taken to find a solution.

Today he and his aides were content to say that their determination would remain unbroken in the face of United Nations pressure and that they rejected intervention by armed forces but would welcome the presence of civilian delegates or observers.

Most observers here believe, nevertheless, that Mr. Tshombe would accept United Nations forces under two conditions: if he had fool-proof assurance that the United Nations' entry would not deliver Katanga to the authority of the central Government of Premier Patrice Lumumba, whom Mr. Tshombe regards as "a tool of communism," and if the United Nations build-up and Belgian withdrawal were phased out over several months to prevent a sudden exodus of the Belgian technicians needed for the smooth running of the region's economy.

Katanga Mission in London

Special to The New York Times.

LONDON, Aug. 7—A seven-member Katanga mission arrived today from Brussels hoping to make informal contacts "wtih people whose opinions carry a certain weight."

The mission is led by Evariste Kimba, Minister of Public Works, and includes Gabriel Kitenge, Minister Without Portfolio, and Tomas Tshombe, brother of the Katanga Premier.

In reply to questions, Mr. Kimba said that "it would be much regretted" if President Kwame Nkruma of Ghana put his troops at the disposal of Premier Lumumba "to fight a people who are struggling for independence."

Mr. Nkrumah offered yesterday to assist Mr. Lumumba if the United Nations force failed to secure the full withdrawal of Belgian troops.

U. N. CONGO DEBATE PUT OFF TO TODAY

ACCORD IS SOUGHT

Hammarskjold Said to Await Resolution Clarifying His Mandate on Katanga

By THOMAS J. HAMILTON

Special to The New York Times.

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y., Aug. 7—The Security Council's emergency discussion of the Congo crisis was postponed today until noon tomorrow.

The session will begin with a personal report by Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold on the refusal Friday of the Katanga provincial authorities to admit the United Nations' Congo force.

The postponement was announced by a United Nations spokesman at 5 o'clock, three hours before the Council had been scheduled to convene at the request of Mr. Hammarskjold. The Secretary General flew from the Congo yesterday for the session.

[In Leopoldville, Reuters reported, the party of Joseph Kasavubu, Chief of State of the Congo, called for a loose federal government instead of the present strong central regime. It also gave Premier Patrice Lumumba a vote of no confidence.]

Two Explanations Given

The United Nations spokesman said that Armand Bérard of France, President of the Security Council for August, had postponed the meeting to allow time for arrival tomorrow of a Congolese delegation headed by Antoine Gizenga, deputy Premier.

However, other sources said the postponement had been requested by the Secretary General because no agreement had been reached on a resolution intended to clarify his mandate in the Congo.

Under resolutions adopted by the Security Council last month, Belgium was to withdraw her troops speedily from her former colony and they were to be replaced by the United Nations force, which was to restore and maintain order in the new republic.

In a report sent to the Council yesterday before his departure from Leopoldville, the Secretary General suggested that Katanga authorities be reassured that the presence of the force would not prejudice their attempt to attain home rule. He also said he felt it was not possible for the United Nations troops to use force against Katanga in view of the secessionist province's threat to resist the entry of those troops.

Argentina, Ceylon, Ecuador and Tunisia took the lead in drafting on the Congo mandate. This would give the assurances that the admission of the United Nations contingents would not affect Katanga's status in relation to the central Government and would put pressure on Belgium to withdraw her troops by repeating the previous requests and specifically referring to Katanga.

The Secretary General, who had announced in Leopoldville that United Nations contingents would arrive in Katanga yesterday, canceled the order after the provincial government informed him that such action would "set off a general uprising."

Mr. Hammarskjold held separate talks last night and today with the group planning the resolution and with Pierre Wigny, Belgian Foreign Minister; Vasily V. Kuznetsov, a Soviet First Deputy Foreign Minister; M. Berard, Sir Pierson Dixon of Britain, Henry Cabot Lodge of the United States and Bohdan Lewandowski of Poland.

The Secretary General also was in contact during the day with a number of African states that are not in the Security Council. It was understood that they were pressing for language calling for the immediate withdrawal of Belgian forces from Katanga Province and the immediate entrance of United Nations contingents.

Reliable sources said that the African group objected to giving any specific assurance to Katanga on the ground that this would give too much importance to Premier Moise Tshombe in his contest with Patrice Lumumba, Premier of the Congo.

Africa's Effect Uncertain

It was not certain whether the African states would succeed in having the proposed resolution drafted in accordance with their demand. Tentative plans call for its introduction by the two African-Asian members of the Security Council, Tunisia and Ceylon.

The resolution is expected to reaffirm the mandate given Mr. Hammarskjold in the Security Council's second Congo resolution, adopted July 22. This called on Belgium to withdraw her forces "speedily" and authorized the Secretary General "to take all necessary action to this effect."

Some delegates said they were not clear as to what Mr. Hammarskjold wanted the Council to do. However, reliable sources said that his oral statement tomorrow would be clear. These sources said that he would be specific in urging Belgium to withdraw from Katanga.

Mr. Lumuma and his supporters among the African states contend that the Katanga government is a Belgian puppet and that the presence of Belgian troops in the province was responsible for its determination to fight.

Passage Was Garbled

Mr. Hammarskjold's written report contained a passage that seemed to acquit Belgium of instigating the Katanga authorities' stand. The United Nations said today that one word in this passage was garbled in transmission and that the correct version was as follows:

"The difficulty which the Council faces in the case of the Katanga does not have its root in the Belgian attitude regarding the problem as stated to me, as the Belgian Government acquiesces in the Security Council decisions and therefore undoubtedly will instruct its military elements in the province to act in accordance with the resolutions as implemented by the United Nations force if that has not yet been done."

As issued yesterday by the United Nations, there was a period after "United Nations Force" and the word "if" did not appear.

Mr. Lodge, who arrived at noon today from Beverly, Mass., talked on the telephone with Secretary of State Christian A. Herter before calling on the Secretary General. There was no word on the position to be taken by the United States on the proposed resolution pending its submission.

France and Britain were understood to be using their influence to have the resolution concentrate on assurances to Katanga authorities.

No word was available regarding the Soviet position. However, a tough statement issued in Moscow Friday called for the immediate entry of the United Nations force into Katanga and said that if the present force was not able to do this it should be replaced by contingents that were.

During the Congo debates last month, there was the twin threat of a French veto if the Security Council had called for the "immediate" withdrawal of Belgian forces and of a Soviet veto if the withdrawal request was not strong enough.

Recently the Soviet press has denounced Mr. Hammarskjold's handling of the Katanga problem. The Soviet demand for the dismissal of Maj. Gen. Carl Carlsson von Horn, commander of the United Nations force, for not going into Katanga Province was actually directed at the Secretary General since the general acts under Mr. Hammarskjold's orders.

It is generally believed that the Western powers will call an emergency special session of the General Assembly immediately—it can meet on twenty-four hour's notice—if the Soviet Union vetoes the proposed resolution.

A dispatch from Monrovia, Liberia, reported that Mr. Lumumba had revived his previous proposal that the Security Council send observers to the Congo to check on compliance with its previous resolutions. This, it is felt, would undermine the authority of the Secretary General, who set up the United Nations force and has left Dr. Ralph J. Bunche, his personal representative in Leopoldville, to direct United Nations operations.

The Congolese delegation will arrive tomorrow morning from London. In addition to Mr. Gizenga, it will be composed of the following: Justin Bomboko, Minister for Foreign Affairs; Rehmy Moamba, Minister of Justice; Impollo Maurice, Minister for Youth and Sports, and Thomas Kanza, delegate to the United Nations.

Congo to Get Irish Aide

DUBLIN, Aug. 7 (UPI) — United Nations troops in the Congo will have an Irish second in command, an army spokesman said today. The spokesman said Col. Harry Byrne, commanding the First Brigade in Cork, had been assigned to the United Nations as second in command to Maj. Gen. Carl Carlsson von Horn, a Swede.

Kasavubu Party in Congo Calls For a Weaker Central Regime

Chief of State's Group Also Withdraws Confidence in Lumumba—Supports Katanga's Stand on Federation

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo, Aug. 7 (Reuters)—The party headed by Joseph Kasavubu, chief of State of the Congo, demanded today that the strong central Government of the new republic be replaced by a loose confederation of powerful provincial regimes. It also adopted a vote of no confidence in the Premier, Patrice Lumumba.

The central committee of the Association of the Lower Congo, known as the Abako party, called for the establishment of an independent province in the Lower Congo. [Mr. Kasavubu presided at the committee meeting, United Press International reported.]

It has been indicated that a federal regime is acceptable to Premier Moise Tshombe of Katanga as part of the price for his abandonment of the mineral-rich province's proclaimed secession from the republic.

U. N. Force Barred

Katanga has maintained close ties with Belgium, which formerly ruled the Congo, and has refused to admit the United Nation troops that are replacing Belgian forces in the rest of the country under Security Council resolutions.

A Leopoldville meeting of Abako sent a cablegram to the United Nations Security Council charging that Mr. Lumumba was incapable of insuring security in the country. It urged the Council to consider confederation the only solution for the Congo crisis.

Mr. Kasavubu and Mr. Lumumba were political rivals before the Congo's independence June 30. Mr. Kasavubu favored a confederation idea while Mr. Lumumba insisted on the centralized system that was set up.

Rift Smoothed Over

Mr. Kasavubu, who failed to form a government, was elected Chief of State to smooth over the rift. There had been fears that he would try to campaign for Lower Congo's secession.

The Lower Congo Youth Movement also protested to the United Nations today, charging Ghana with interference in the Congo's affairs and demanding the withdrawal from the Lower Congo of Ghanaian troops that are in the United Nations force.

Yesterday Mr. Lumumba sent a message to Mr. Kasavubu from Guinea asking him to hold a Cabinet meeting to move to dispense with armed United Nations help and to rely on troops from Ghana. Reliable Congolese sources said today that the Cabinet had not discussed the message.

Meanwhile, more than 1,000 United Nations soldiers set up cordons and machine-gun nests and patrolled central Leopoldville when 100 youths protested in a peaceful demonstration against the decision not to send United Nations troops into Katanga. The move was called off in view of expected violent resistance there.

The demonstrators, members of the Congolese National party's youth movement, drove through the city brandishing placards, shouting anti-Belgian slogans and demanding that the United Nations enter Katanga.

Khrushchev Is Hailed

LEOPOLDVILLE, Aug. 7 (AP)—The Congolese youths, calling for the United Nations entry into Katanga, also shouted "Long live Khrushchev!" during their demonstration today.

They drove to the residence of United Nations officials and demanded to see Dr. Ralph J. Bunche, United Nations Under-Secretary, who is in charge of the United Nations' operations in the Congo.

"Let him talk to us, after all he is an African," their leader called.

When Dr. Bunche, an American Negro, failed to appear, the Congolese started screaming demands for Soviet troops and yelled "Long live Khruschev!"

Dr. Bunche accused the Congolese Deputy Premier, Antoine Gizenga, or having twisted the facts concerning the United Nations' decision not to send a task force to Katanga at this time.

Yesterday, as Dag Hammarskjold, United Nations Secretary General, was flying to New York to report to the Security Council, Mr. Gizenga accused him of having violated his pledge and of having ignored the Congolese Government in dealing with the Katanga problem.

Dr. Bunche, who had visited Elisabethville, the Katanga capital, said in a statement that parts of Mr. Gizenga's remarks were "deformed and incorrect." He also denied that the decision to postpone the United Nations entry had been a result of an agreement with Premier Tshombe.

Congo Premier Asks Dag To Set Deadline For Belgian Troop Exit

The Montgomery Advertiser Montgomery, Ala.

Date 7-26-60

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP) — Premier Patrice Lumumba of the Congo said Monday he asked U.N. Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold to set a deadline for Belgium to withdraw its troops from the Congo.

He said Hammarskjold assured him he would spare no effort.

Lumumba told a news conference it was "in this spirit" the secretary-general would negotiate with the Belgian government in Brussels.

Hammarskjold leaves New York Tuesday night and will stop in Brussels Wednesday en route to Leopoldville in the Congo.

Lumumba, answering questions, did not make clear whether Hammarskjold agreed to set an exact deadline for Belgian withdrawal as the Premier had asked.

Hammarskjold announced earlier he is going to Brussels for discussion with the Belgian government and to Leopoldville for an on-the-spot survey of the Congo.

Lumumba said his government wanted Belgian soldiers out of all the Congo, including the bases to which they are being withdrawn as U.N. forces move into strategic spots.

Asked how he planned to solve the problem of the secession of Katanga province, he said: "There is no Katanga problem. There is only the problem of the withdrawal of the Belgian troops."

He charged that Belgium had plotted in advance to hold back that wealthy province when the Congo became independent June 30.

But Lumumba did not renew his threat to call for Soviet forces if the Belgians did not pull out. He said the Congo would depend on the U.N. to get them out and thought it could do so.

Lumumba added that he wants the U.N. force—now building up to 12,000 men—to stay on as long as it must to keep order and "organize our young army."

50-YEAR PACT

Lumumba said L. Edgar Detwiler, American financier, has no 50-year-contract for exploitation of Congolese resources as he has claimed. The Premier explained that there was only an agreement in principle and that a contract could be signed only after an investigating commission and the Congo Parliament had approved that agreement.

The premier said he would visit Washington, go to Canada to recruit French-speaking technicians Thursday to talk with Hammarskjold there.

Thomas Kanza, Congolese minister delegate to the U.N., will go with Hammarskjold. But Lumumba said he would stay behind to pay his respects to President Eisenhower, who is vacationing in Newport, R.I.

U.S. officials made clear they would like to see him visit Washington. Owen Roberts, a State Department escort officer, has been with him almost constantly since he flew into New York.

Roberts has inquired about Lumumba's plans, with the idea that an official invitation might follow if he intended to visit the U.S. capital. But he has been told that Lumumba had nothing planned beyond Tuesday night, when Hammarskjold will leave.

Technical assistanct experts took part in Lumumba's midday discussion with Hammarskjold, in contrast to the political experts that joined in a first 2½-hour talk between the two late Sunday.

Lumumba has expressed thanks to the 11-nation Security Council for two resolutions adopted in the last two weeks in which it called for the withdrawl of Belgian troops from the Congo and authorized Hammarsjold to send a U.N. force there to keep order.

Congo Chief Confers with Head of U.N.

The Fla. Times-Union Jacksonville, Fla.

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y., July 24 (AP)—Congo Premier Patrice Lumumba, on a mission to win friends and finances for his trouble-torn land, conferred today with U.N. Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold.

Mon. 7-25-60

The 35-year-old Congolese leader arrived in New York early this morning and told newsmen peace in the Congo depends on the prompt withdrawal of Belgian troops.

P. 1

He said he has confidence in the United Nations and "we hope it will find a speedy solution."

The Negro leader's meeting with Hammarskjold was held in the secretary general's 39th-floor office at U.N. headquarters.

Wants U.N. Appearance

In addition to meeting with Hammarskjold, Lumumba has said he hopes to appear before the U.N. "to inform international public opinion" about conditions in the Congo.

The Security Council last Friday voted to call on Belgium to withdraw its troops speedily from the newly independent African nation, but the council has not scheduled any further meetings on the Congo.

Lumumba was accompanied by a retinue of a dozen Congo officials.

Several hours later, L. Edgar Detwiler, the American financier who signed a multimillion-dollar development pact with the Congo, arrived at Idlewild airport. Detwiler had accompanied Lumumba to London from the Congo.

Won Out Over Reds

Detwiler, 62, said he had successfully competed with the Soviet bloc to land the contract. He said he did not know what the Soviet bloc had offered in the way of agreement but because of the "fantastic mineral wealth in the Congo the offers from other sources must have been almost unlimited."

Congo Premier Bidding For Friends, Finances

Montgomery Advertiser Montgomery, Ala.

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP) —Congo Premier Patrice Lumumba, on a mission to win friends and finances for his trouble-torn land, conferred Sunday with U.N. Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold.

Mon. 7/25/60

Lumumba, 35, arrived in New York earlier in the morning and told newsmen peace in the Congo depends on the prompt withdrawal of Belgian troops.

P. 2-A

He said he has confidence in the United Nations and 'we hope it will find a speedy solution."

In addition to meeting with Hammarskjold, Lumumba has said he hopes to appear before the U.N. "to inform international public opinion" about conditions in the Congo.

NO MEETINGS SET

The Security Council last Friday voted to call on Belgium to withdraw its troops speedily from the newly independent African nation, but the Council has not scheduled any further meetings on the Congo.

The tall, bespectacled Premier in a brief statement in French said: "We came here to make direct contact with the secretary-general of the United Nations in order to arrange a speedy solution to the problem of the Congo.

"The peace of the Congo is conditioned on the immediate withdrawal of Belgian troops and we thank the U.N. for the resluin it adopted in that sense.

"We extend our compliments and friendship to President Eisenhower and we also thank the American people for all they have done for the emancipation of the African people."

The Negro leader was accompanied by a retinue of a dozen Congo officials.

LANDED CONTRACT

Several hours later, L. Edgar Detwiler, the American financier who signed a multimillion-dollar development pact with the Congo, arrived at Idlewild. Detwiler had accompanied Lumumba to London from the Congo.

Detwiler, 62, said he had successfully competed with Soviet powers to land the contract.

He said he did not know what the Soviet bloc had offered in the way of agreement but because of the "fantastic mineral wealth in the Congo the offers from other sources must have been almost unlimited."

The signing of the pact was announced in Leopoldville last week. Lumumba said Detwiler's Congo International Management Corp. included financial and banking circles from the United States, Canada, Britain, Japan, the Netherlands, West Germany, Israel, Ireland and France. The 50-year pact is subject to ratification by the Congo Parliament, now in recess. Detwiler said he was confident the pact would be approved.

He said he had told the U.S. State Department that "if we lose the resources of the Congo it will be one of the most tragic things to happen to the free nations of the world."

Detwiler said he planned to make a full report to the State Department in Washington Tuesday.

Congolese Premier Meets U.N. Chief

News & Observer
Raleigh, N.C.
Mon. 7/25/60

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y. (AP) —Congo Premier Patrice Lumumba timgPen ree rPaLumumirRcba talked with U.N. Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold for 2½ hours Sunday about the situation in the troubled Congo. He later told newsmen he is "very optimistic."

Lumumba said he plans to continue his talks here Monday and Tuesday. He met with Hammarskjold after saying on his arrival in New York that Belgian troops should leave the Congo immediately.

Fruitful Meeting.

Speaking in French, Lumumba told reporters here: "I have just had a very fruitful meeting with the secretary of the United Nations on the general situation in the Congo. This meeting is going to be continued Monday and Tuesday. I express my satisfaction for the understanding which has prevailed during our conversation."

Asked if he is optimistic about the Congo situation, he replied, "Very optimistic."

Lumumba said he will talk with members of the U.N. Security Council at a luncheon Monday.

Lumumba, 35, arrived in New York earlier in the morning and told newsmen peace in the Congo depends on the prompt withdrawal of Belgian troops.

He said he has confidence in the United Nations and "we hope it will find a speedy solution."

In addition to meeting with Hammarskjold, Lumumba has said he hopes to appear before the U.N. "to inform international public opinion" about conditions in the Congo.

The Security Council last Friday voted to call on Belgium to withdraw its troops speedily from the newly independent African nation, but the Council has not scheduled any further meetings on the Congo.

The tall, bespectacled Premier in a brief statement in French said: "We came here to make direct contact with the secretary-general of the United Nations in order to arrange a speedy solution to the problem of the Congo.

"The peace of the Congo is conditioned on the immediate withdrawal of Belgian troops and we thank the U.N. for the resolution it adopted in that sense.

"We extend our compliments and friendship to President Eisenhower and we also thank the American people for all they have done for the emancipation of the African people."

The Negro leader was accompanied by a retinue of a dozen Congo officials.

CONGO PREMIER REACHES NEW YORK
. . . Patrice Lumumba Shown at Idlewild Airport.

18a 1960 CONGO

Big Nations Bar Separate Katanga

By Patrick O'Donovan

LEOPOLDVILLE, Congo, July 27—These are the twilight days for the Republic of Katanga. Not that it ever emerged into full daylight. But there were men, Belgian and African, who believed they could take the Province, with all its fantastic wealth, out of the struggling Belgian Congo Republic and set up house as a new sovereign state.

They sincerely believed that in so doing they would save their investments, preserve a patch of Africa committed to the West, avoid the travails of the rest of the Congo and obtain a higher standard of living for the inhabitants. If they had been left entirely alone they could have done it.

But even Katanga is part of the world. It will not be allowed to act as if Katanga existed in outer space, and it will feel itself most shamefully betrayed.

Katanga Loss Intolerable

In Elisabethville, it did seem possible that a compromise could be reached that would give Katanga a large share of the trappings and realities of sovereignty. Now in Leopoldville, a thousand miles away, the idea of losing the richest province seems intolerable, and impossible, and the world has agreed with extraordinary unanimity.

The beginning of the end probably came last Sunday. Then the special delegate of the Belgian Government, Count Harold Premont Lynden, a vast man with a ferocious and artistocratic sense of humor, called together separately three representative groups of Belgians in Elisabethville—civil servants, lawyers and businessmen. In effect, he told them that the jig was up.

Belgium would not resist United Nations troops. Belgium would not maintain herself to stay. The chances of international recognition were nil. Eventually Katanga would have to re-enter some sort of union with the Congo.

The result was something like panic all over again. A delegation from the employes fothe Union Miniere, upon which depends the economic life of the Province, declared that they would leave finally if Belgian troops withdrew.

Reassurance Necessary

It is now the hard and thankless task of the United Nations to reassure these angry and frightened people. It is clear that the United Nations does not want to take over yet another province where there is neither law nor commerce nor industry. If this is to be avoided the Belgian civilians must be persuaded to to stay. And a waste of delicate negotiations stretches ahead.

A senior representative of the United Nations will be going there soon. U.N. troops will will follow then when the troops are available, and hen the time is ripe.

The change of view has expressed itself not in the Katango Government of Moise Tshombe, but among Belgian officials. The Brussels Government has been under merciless pressure from friends, like Britain and the United States, and from the unanimous decision of the U.N. Security Council to ignore Katanga and its antics.

If it is safe to predict anything in the Congo, it is probably true that it is all over in Katanga—except the shouting and perhaps the shooting.

By Vic Casamento, Staff Photographer

Congo's Premier Patrice Lumumba appears happy during welcoming ceremony for him at National Airport. In the background is Secretary of State Herter.

18a 1960

CONGO

UN Troops Will Go To Congo To Quell Riots

Atlanta Daily World

Atlanta Ga

18a

By GEORGE SIBERA
(United Press International)

LEOPOLDVILLE, The Congo—Advance units of four battalions of United Nations troops will arrive by Saturday to cope with rioting and pillage that erupted again Thursday in the Congo, it was announced.

Dr. Ralph Bunche, famed American Negro diplomat who is the U. N. special delegate to the new Congo republic, announced the imminent arrival of a U. N. armed force as blacks ran riot through Leopoldville, firing on cars and looting homes vacated by fleeing whites.

Atl. 7-15-60

Hundreds more whites fled to safety across the Congo River.

The rioting through the newborn republic severed normal supply lines and the spectre of famine rose in Leopoldville where the Congolese quartrs had only three days supply of food.

The arrival of the U. N. troops under Swedish Gen. Karl van Horn threatened to increase rather than ease tensions.

DEVELOPMENTS OUTLINED

As the crisis deepened, there were these main devlopments:

—Moise Tshombe, premier of rebellious Katanga Province, which has proclaimed independence from the Congo, refused to allow U. N. troops in his province and insisted Belgian troops must stay to protect Katanga.

—In Brussels, the government said it received a note from the National Congo government severing diplomatic relations.

—Congolese premier Patrice Lumumba cold-shouldered a Belgian general in Leopoldville and said, "We do not need your protection."

—The African nation of Ghana sent a delegation to Lumumba to offer armed support.

—Belgian Premier Gaston Eyskens announced he would indignantly protest a Russian note branding Belgium an aggressor in the Congo.

WILL ARRIVE THURSDAY

Bunche, who had been menaced at gunpoint by Congolese army mutineers in Leopoldville last Saturday, told newsmen the first units of four battalions of U. N. forces authorized by the Security Council early Thursday would arrive in 48 hours.

These troops were to supplant Belgian forces which attacked in Leopoldville and other spots in Kasai, Orientale and Katanga provinces when mutineers began looting, pillaging and raping white women.

"There will be four battalions by the end of next week," Bunche said.

He said Belgian troops would gradually be withdrawn as U. N. contingents drawn from Ghana, independent Guinea, Mali Federation and Tunisia arrived.

The troops will have only defensive weapons and their trucks and equipment will be provided by their own nations," Bunche said.

The Montgomery Advertiser
Sun. 7-12-60
p. 9 A

18a

BELGIAN PARATROOPERS STAND GUARD OVER CONGOLESE PRISONERS
Automatic Weapons Dominate Battle Scene At Leopoldville Airport

AP Wirephoto

Congolese Unprepared To Live In Free World

The Montgomery Advertiser

Montgomery Ala

By WILLIAM L. RYAN
Associated Press News Analyst

The Congo as an independent state is two weeks old and suffering a national nervous breakdown.

Sun. 7-17-60

Because their land is so rich so important, because its fate will have enormous impact on restless Africa, the Congolese have the whole world breathing down their necks as they try to govern themselves. Perhaps no people ever were so tragically unprepared for freedom.

p. 9-A

The new republic is a third the size of the United States. But, by generous estimates, only 20 persons among its 13½ million Africans are college graduates.

POLITICS CHAOTIC

Its politics is chaotic. Its leaders are disorganized, with neither a program for the future nor personnel sufficiently educated to administer a nation. It is torn by fierce tribal conflicts. Its European-type cities, built during 80 years of Belgian colonial rule, clash anachronistically with a countryside dominated by a thousand-year-old heritage of primitive tribal life.

Now the republic seems to be ripping apart. Its richest province, Katanga, is controlled by a secessionist. Another province, Kasai, wants autonomy.

What happened? It's a long and complex story. Here, in brief, is an ABC on this latest point of dangerous crisis in a world already surfeited with tension.

THE LAND:

The Congo, nourished by the mighty Congo River, is made up of six provinces extending from a narrow neck touching the Atlantic in the west to the heart of equatorial Africa on Lake Tanganyika and the Nile in the east. Leopoldville and other principal cities, which have been home for 100,000 Europeans, have all the amenities of modern life. The Congo's villages are still living in the distant past.

THE PEOPLE:

Congolese are mostly what are called true Negroes, speaking a variety of Bantu-based tongues. The only common language for conducting business is French, introduced by Belgium. It is incomprehensible to many Congolese.

THE ECONOMY:

It provides half the West's uranium, basic element of atomic power, 72 per cent of the West's radium, 80 per cent of its cobalt, 70 per cent of its industrial diamonds, and 8 per cent each of its copper and tin.

These riches have made the Congo the wealthiest and healthiest land in Africa. Workers in cities have been earning up to $150 a month, a fortune in Africa. The Belgian administration instituted mass welfare and health programs and generally followed a benevolent policy which, particularly after World War II, veered away from a tendency toward the South African brand of segregation.

THE EDUCATION

But Belgian education of Congolese for self-government lagged far behind the economic program. Today, about half the Congolese are literate—if that word is considerably stretched. Schooling for years depended almost entirely on missionaries, often under Belgian government subsidy. Much of it centered on teaching skills and trades.

Only recently were Congolese introduced to university training.

THE REPUBLIC

Belgium, 80 times smaller than the present Congo Republic, ruled the colony 80 years. Leopold II, great-grand uncle of today's King Baudouin, treated the Congo as his personal property, reaping riches from its ivory, minerals and other resources.

Belgians were able colonists but like many another colonial country Belgium could not escape the nationalist fever which mounted after World War II. The Congo thrived, but its young men were too impatient to wait until 1964, when Belgium promised independence.

Belgium bowed to the pressure. Independence was set for June 1960. Elections in May were a confused affair. To cap the confusion, Congolese leaders insisted on calling their nation republic of the Congo, despite the fact that another republic of the Congo, formerly French, exists across the river.

Pictures of election aspirants had to be pasted to ballot boxes so illiterate tribesmen, enjoying universal suffrage, could choose their candidates for Parliament.

Dozens of parties entered the elections. In bloody tribal clashes men hacked one another to pieces with primitive weapons. When it was over, two extreme Nationalist groups emerged as dominant.

THE LEADERS

The National Congo Movement claimed 84 of the 137 lower House seats. Its leader, 34-year-old Patrice Lumumba, demanded that the Belgians authorize him to form a government.

Lumumba's chief rival, Joseph Kasavubu, 42, emerged with 12 seats for his Abako movement party. He also claimed the premiership.

Against a background of increasing intertribal violence, and as Europeans began to flee the Congo, Kasavubu accepted the presidency instead, with its largely ceremonial duties.

Lumumba was a typical product of emerging young Africa, the epitome of the clash between ancient and modern, between European and primitive African. He was educated in Belgian schools in the Congo, studied law by correspondence. Fiery and unpredictable, feared and distrusted by the Europeans, he built a career on the slogan "down with the Bula Matari (the white chief.)"

A former $100 a month postal clerk, he served two years for embezzlement and was jailed again in 1959 for violent nationalist agitation. His enemies say he has contacts behind the Iron Curtain and gets Communist money, but none have proved it.

Kasavubu, 42, is a veteran agitator who once studied for the Roman Catholic priesthood, became a Protestant, then assumed leadership of the powerful Abako, a cultural-racial association which he promptly turned into a personal political machine.

Unlike his rival, Kasavubu is squat, roly-poly and a man of few words. The father of seven, he is a former government clerk. Kasavubu's main strength is the Bakongo Tribe, whose 120,000 members dominated the 380,000 Africans in Leopoldville.

THE DISINTEGRATION:

Kasavubu demanded that the Belgians divide Leopoldville's Province in two, making a separate province for Bakongos. The Belgians refused. Kasavubu ordered the Abako to go on strike.

Other tribes got into the act, including the 50,000 Bayaka tribesmen, and the 40,000 of the Bengala Tribe in Leopoldville. The Bengalas had favored their own Jean Bolikango, head of the Puna party and an advocate of cooperation with the Belgians, for president.

Breaking a promise to the Bengalas, Lumumba threw his support to Kasavubu, touching off fierce, brutal clashes between the tribesmen. As the public temperature rose, Kasavubu was sworn in June 27 in a Parliament building surrounded by heavily armed members of the Force Publique the Congo's Belgian-trained, 25,000-strong army-police. More violence erupted.

PEACE SHATTERED

On ceremonial independence day, June 30, Lumumba shattered the atmosphere of peaceful transition of authority. In King Baudouin's presence, he unleashed a tirade against 80 years of "atrocious" Belgian rule.

And tribal fighting spread.

In Kasai, with its Lulua and Baluba Tribes, leader Albert Kalonji demanded provincial autonomy. And in Elisabethville, the provincial premier, Moise Tshombe, proclaimed secession, accusing Lumumba of Communist tactics. This would be an enormous blow to the new republic, since Katanga is its economic mainstay.

In the first week of July, Congolese troops mutinied, shouted for higher pay and demanded the removal of all white officers. The mutinous troops ran wild in cities in a carnival of rape, pillage and throat-cutting. Europeans fled by the thousands.

At last Lumumba's bewildered Congo government turned to the United Nations, which has sent in first units of a force from African countries to attempt to bring order out of chaos.

That was the situation into which Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev injected world communism, warning the West to keep hands off the Congo.

U. S. Sending Planes, Jeeps Into Congo

The Evening Star
Washington D.C.
Aug 19 1960

Ten C-47 airplanes and 20 jeeps will be sent to the United Nations Command in the Congo, the Defense Department announced yesterday.

This is the first American contribution of equipment to the U. N. troops. The planes will be flown and the jeeps will be driven by U. N. troops, not American, as far as the Defense Department knows.

The planes will be flown from Europe by European Command crews and will be turned over to the U. N. at Leopoldville. The jeeps, plus six months' supply of spare parts, will be airlifted from Barksdale Air Force Base, La.

The United States is supplying transportation for 1,000 Tunisian soldiers and 12,000 Moroccan soldiers—volunteers for the U. N. forces to be assigned to keep peace in the Congo.

Three hundred tons of American flour also are on their way to the Congo.

Also, three helicopters and several small, single-engine planes have been sent to the American Ambassador in the Congo for evacuation of American citizens.

The aircraft carrier Wasp is steaming toward the Congo on what is slated to be a possible evacuation mission. Contrary to reports from Moscow that the carrier is now in Congo waters sending planes out over the country, the Wasp, in fact, expects to arrive in the vicinity of the Congo toward the end of this week.

18a 1960

CONGO

Feuding Flares in Leopoldville

The Miami Herald — Miami Fla

Troops Put Down Congo Tribal Riots

Sun. 7-3-60

LEOPOLDVILLE, Republic of Congo —(AP)— The Bakongo and the Bayaka tribes resumed their ancient feuding in Leopoldville Saturday, second day of the Congo's independence. A large force of Congolese troops was rushed to the scene and put down the trouble.

More than a dozen Congolese were struck by clubs, rocks or fists and slightly injured, and troops bruised some others with the butts of their rifles. Some store windows were smashed.

Isolated fighting took place over a wide area but no shots were fired and the troops dispersed large crowds without using the tear gas they had ready.

The fighting broke out shortly before President Joseph Kasavubu and Premier Patrice Lumumba, on an independence victory tour of the capital, were scheduled to visit the area—the Ngiri Ngiri commune.

Several thousand Bakongo tribesmen, with women and children were assembled outside a small African church when the trouble started. The area is inhabited by Bakongo and Bayaka.

A Bakongo and a Bayaka bumped into each other and started fighting. Fights spread all along the street. At one time nearly 100 were fighting.

Congo Leaders Rush to Troubled Area

The Times — Seek to End Mutiny in Republic's Army

Pittsburgh

By LYNN HEINZERLING

LEOPOLDVILLE, Congo (AP) —President Joseph Kasavubu and Premier Patrice Lumuba flew to Thysville Wednesday night in an effort to end a mutiny in the new republic's army.

New Orleans La

Acting swiftly to meet the nation's first violent crisis, Lumumba already had calmed demonstrators by troops in Leopoldville who demanded removal of their white Belgian officers.

Thurs. 7-7-60

The premier sought to free a number of officers held prisoner by Negro soldiers at Thysville, 75 miles southwest of Leopoldville.

Information Minister Anicet Kashamura said in a radio broadcast "the situation is very serious. The enemies of our independence have provoked trouble and created bad feeling in th army. We must all fight like brothers against our enemies in the interior and exterior."

P. 9

Tanks were reported on their way to Thysville where the mutiny erupted Tuesday night.

The situation in the capital was quiet but tense after a demonstration by 200 Negro soldiers in front of the Parliament building. They demanded more pay and their own Negro officers.

Lumumba personally assured them their grievances would be met.

The soldiers roughed up their white commander, Gen. Emile Janssens, and another white official in a noisy demonstration of several hours.

One report said the soldiers were promised that Janssens and his entire white officers' corps will be replaced. There are no Negro commissioned officers now in the army—known as the Force Publique—in this country which became independent of Belgian rule only July 1.

The 25,000 men of the Force Publique provide the only means Lumumba has for maintaining peace and order in the Congo.

Trained by white officers, the Force Publique is one of the strongest military forces in Central Africa. It has been invaluable to the Belgians in putting down intertribal fighting that has plagued the Congo for years.

The demonstrators marched without arms from the Leopold II barracks to the Parliament building.

En route they met up with Janssens in his car. The car was halted and his pistols snatched away. The soldiers whacked him once or twice with their belts.

A white police commissioner shouted commands to the soldiers to disperse and fired his pistol into the ground. He also was struck by belts, but managed to get away with only slight injury.

In a speech at the barracks before the march, Lumumba promised the men he would take steps to meet their grievances.

Congo Rebels Kill 2 Whites

The Atlanta Journal and Constitution

U.S. Urges Citizens to Leave; Belgium Sends More Troops

Atlanta Ga

LEOPOLDVILLE, The Congo, July 9 (AP)—Violence erupted Saturday in two eastern Congo provinces, where rebellious Negro troops killed two Europeans. This first slaying of Europeans by blacks in the current disorders spurred the mass flight of whites from the seething Congo.

Sun. 7-10-60

U.S. and British consuls in Elisabethville urged their countrymen to get out of Katanga Province, main center of the new disorders, as swiftly as possible.

The Belgians, who granted independence to The Congo June 30, ordered a third company of troops from Brussels to help the Congolese government to maintain order. Two companies were flown to The Congo Friday.

Government officials enforced an uneasy quiet in this capital after a day of disorders, but the U.S. embassy arranged to send out American women and children for the duration of the emergency. There are about 2,000 Americans in The Congo.

More than 70 men, women and children slept overnight in the U.S. embassy, where Negro troops tried to break in Friday.

President Joseph Kasavubu and Premier Patrice Lumumba flew to the west coast port of Matadi, where reports said rebellious troops held up a ship taking Belgians back to their homeland. There also were reports of trouble at the port of Boma.

* * *

THE TWO LEADERS were reported trying to calm the mutinous military, who touched off the disorders last week by demanding more pay and the dismissal of all Belgian officers in the Force Publique, the Congo army raised and trained by Belgium.

The worst disorders were reported at Kongolo, in Katanga Province. A dispatch to the newspaper Elisabethville Essor said the dead were a Belgian territorial administrator and a Portuguese settler.

P. 6

The Katanga provincial government said Negro troops fired on a crowd of whites who had crowded upon the wharf at Kongolo trying to escape. Essor reported three other whites were wounded but about 420 got across the upper Congo there in two river boats.

Sun. 7-10-60

Katanga provides most of the nation's wealth in the form of copper and other minerals. Top political leaders there are reported about to form an independent government.

This has been a constant threat in Katanga, where there is a very strong feeling against spreading the province's wealth over the entire nation.

* * *

TO THE NORTH, in Kivu Province, mutinous troops set up road blocks around Goma and fears of more bloodshed sent whites fleeing toward British Uganda. Amateur radio operators at Goma broadcast appeals for airdrops of food for refugees.

A report from Kenya said an airlift was being organized in Uganda when refugees reach there.

Kivu provincial officials and a Belgian officer were trying to persuade the troops in Goma to return to duty.

(Emerging from another emergency session of the cabinet, Premier Gaston Eyskens declared in Brussels: "The Congo situation is worse today than it was Friday.")

(He ordered two ministers, Auguste de Scrijver and Walter Ganshof van der Meersch, by plane to Leopoldville to make contact with the Congolese government. The ministers said the problem is to deal with the mutiny in the Force Publique, the chief reliance of the new government in maintaining order.

(Foreign Minister Pierre Wigny told reporters on arriving for the cabinet meeting that anarchy cannot be tolerated in the Congo "neither for Belgium, neither for the free world.")

* * *

WHILE CALM returned to Leopoldville a strict curfew was being maintained, starting at 6 p.m. Foreign Minister Justin Bomboko said the curfew is necessary to "prevent Congolese from disguising themselves as soldiers and entering the white areas."

The main escape hatch for whites in the Leopoldville area, the ferry across the Congo River to Brazzaville, was still held up. Hundreds of Belgians and others hoping to leave the city resigned themselves to another night of uncertainty. About 2,000 white refugees are housed in Brazzaville in the Congo republic once ruled by France.

Bomboko charged Belgian immigration officers at the river took the first boat to Brazzaville Friday when troops descended on the city and the keys could not be found. The foreign minister said steps were being taken to reopen traffic across the river. Air traffic again was moving at Leopoldville Airport, with Belgian and Portuguese planes removing whites.

Congolese ministers and military police broke up a crowd of Negroes who gathered at the ferry to prevent the departure of Belgians.

Foreign Minister Bombuko himself rode in a jeep with military police through the city to see that foreign embassies were not molested.

Associated Press Wirephoto

SAFETY BRINGS TEARS FOR CONGO REFUGEE
Woman Overcome With Emotion on Landing in Brussels

Congo Vexes Belgium

Christian Science Monitor

By Egon Kaskeline

Special Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

Paris

Boston, Mass.

Economics

Belgium is feeling increasingly the pinch of the unsettled Congo situation.

Although Belgium's three political parties accepted the new Congo status, voted almost unanimously by the Chambers, Premier Gaston Eyskens and his collaborators now are severely criticized by part of press and public opinion for having given in too rapidly to Congolese nationalist pressure. They are blamed for having endangered not only Belgium's billion-dollar investment in the Congo but also the future of this rich territory.

In fact, the risk of seeing the Congo torn apart by rival native parties has become acute.

Premier Eyskens, accompanied by his immediate collaborators, will go to Leopoldville to attend the Congo's independence celebration on June 30. It is, how- will go to Leopoldville to attend ever, uncertain and in fact more and more unlikely that King Baudouin also will be present.

Hand in hand with the growing political turmoil goes the downward trend of economic affairs in Africa whch threatens to have serious consequences in the former mother country.

Thousands of Europeans are leaving the Congo and are transferring their funds abroad. It is true that the big Belgian mining enterprises, such as the Union Minière du Haut Katanga or the Cominière and the large Leopoldville textile mills, UTEX-LEO, are continuing their investments programs on schedule. But medium and small firms have begun to liquidate their assets. In order to stop this capital flight, the Congo administration recently limited transfers abroad to $200 monthly.

Devaluation Fought

The Congo franc, originally at par with the Belgian currency, now is down to two-thirds of its official rate of exchange. On the Brussels Stock Exchange, Congo shares are continuing their downward trend and former "blue chips," such as the Union Minière, are being quoted at less than half of their 1958 value.

In recent talks with the Congolese leaders, the government of Premier Eyskens undertook to stop the devaluation of the Congo franc and to step up its economic development program. Not less than $100,000,000 in public funds have been invested in the Congo in 1960. The Brussels government also guaranteed the Congo's recent $40,000,000 loan with the World Bank and another $35,000,000 loan with a private banking group. It now appears that this is not enough, and the Belgians will have to open still wider the strings of the public purse.

Belgium's public finance is increasingly strained as a result of the Congo crisis and also of an unsatisfactory economic situation at home. The total budget deficit increased from $220,000,000 in 1957 to $580,000,000 last year and the public debt has risen from $6,500,000,000 to $7,500,000,00. M. Eyskens is considering an increase in taxes this year, but has run into trouble with his Liberal coalition partners who oppose a new levy on the public.

Belgium's trade with the former colony also is on the decline. As compared to 1956, imports went down from about $240,000,000 to $190,000,000 in 1959 (7.4 per cent and 5.7 per cent of Belgium's total imports) while exports dropped from $140,000,000 to $80,000,000 (4.4 per cent and 2.7 per cent of the total sales abroad). There has been a further shrinking of trade between Belgium and its former colony during the current year.

Bright Spots Found

However, there also is growing evidence of Belgium's successful efforts to divert its economic interests to other goods and especially to the countries of the European Common Market. The Belgian economic picture is not altogether bleak.

Minister of Foreign Trade Jacques Van Offelen, in a speech early this month, took a good look at the bright spots in a generally troubled situation. He pointed out that, despite the loss in the Congo trade, Belgium's total exports during the four first months of 1960 were $1,300,000,000 compared to $1,000,000,000 during the corresponding period of 1959.

Belgian industries especially succeeded in increasing their sales in the European markets.

The country seems to have recovered from the consequences of last year's serious recession. The industrial production index was 125 in May, 1960, compared to 117 May, 1959.

Moreover, the index does not reflect the full extent of industrial recovery, because the structural crisis of the Belgian coal industry had an unfavorable effect on a generally expanding over-all production.

In fact, Belgian steel mills and metal-working industries have been doing increasingly well in 1960 as did the chemical plants and most of the textile factories.

USDA economist report says Congo farm outlook is great

The Afro-American

Baltimore, Md.

WASHINGTON

Long-range prospects for increased agricultural production in the Congo appear to be excellent, says Snider W. Skinner of the U.S. Department of Agriculture in a 52-page report just issued by the Department.

Mr. Skinner, an agricultural economist with the Africa and Middle East Analysis Branch of the Foreign Agricultural Service, bases this position on the fact that in the Congo there is much land which can be planted or grazed.

Sat. 7-30-60

ONLY A LITTLE over two percent of the land was in annual field and tree crops and permanent pastures in 1956.

In addition to land area, the report says the rainfall is ample in most areas, the terrain is suited to mechanization, and there is an active demand in world markets for farm crops raised in the Congo.

Between 1951 and 1956, says the report, more than 2,200 short tons of improved seeds and five million plants were distributed. This work is resulting in increased production of food for home use, as well as higher yields of export products.

* * *

IN 1958, African and European farmers of the Congo produced 60,000 tons of coffee, 249,000 tons of palm oil, 158,500 tons of palm kernels, 157 tons of seed cotton, and 41,000 tons of rubber.

The United States imports about half the coffee output of the Congo and Ruanda-Urundi, 40 percent of the palm kernel oil production, and 26 percent of the rubber. In turn, these two countries import 72 percent of their wheat flour and 46 percents of their unmanufactured tobacco from the United States.

18a 1960

Bunche Key Force To Solution of Clashes in Congo

Pittsburgh Courier
Pittsburgh, Pa.
Sat. 7/23/60
P. 18

(Courier Press Service)

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo—While the Congo rattles from heated clashes between Congolese and Belgium troops, the fine hand of Dr. Ralph J. Bunche as mediator becomes increasingly prominent as the force to quell the rumbling.

Dr. Bunche, United Nations Under-Secretary General, reportedly was called in by the Congolese to mediate a cease-fire between them and the Belgians. He met with Congolese authorities and Ambassador Jean van den Bosch of Belgium in an effort to halt the clashes.

More recently Dr. Bunche said the United Nations had decided to send United Nations troops swiftly to the Congo Republic in response to the appeal of the Government to the United Nations. The vote was eight for, including the United States and Russia, and three abstentions.

■

DR. BUNCHE said that by this week "I would anticipate that not less than four battalions of UN troops will have come here. General Carl Van Horn of Sweden, who heads the UN truce supervision organization in Jerusalem, is coming to serve as my military adviser in this operation. For obvious reasons, the first of the UN troops to arrive here are likely to be drawn from the African states of Guinea, Ghana, Mali, Morocco and Tunisia."

Meanwhile, Belgium ignored an ultimatum from Congo Premier Patrice Lumumba, to withdraw all Belgium troops from Congolese territory. Instead more Belgium troops are pouring into the troubled Congo.

In the mineral-rich Katanga Province, Premier Moise Tshombe has been rumored to be the "tool" of the copper mining interests. The head politico in Katanga has been called a "company man" in the province which produces 60 per cent of the Congo's copper wealth.

■

OTHER RUMORS circulated that the Congolese are victims of a "calculated plot" to keep the Congo in the hands of the Belgians because it contains vast mineral deposits. The Shinkolobwe area, 200 miles from Elizabethville, capital of Katanga Province, has some of the richest uranium mines in the world.

Earlier Premier Lumumba had been punched in the face by an angry Europeon after he and President Joseph Kasavubut returned to Leopoldville from an unsuccessful attempt to fly to Stanleyville.

"Murderer, traitor, r a p e r," some of the crowd shouted, "to your knees, to your knees." The incident passed without major violence.

Amid the turmoil, the United States recommended that all American missionaries get out of the Western part of the African nation following reports that two American missionary w o m e n were criminally assaulted by Congolese troops.

Meanwhile, in Washington the United States accused Russian Premier Nikita Khrushchev of trying to inflame the international atmosphere by offering to send aid to the rio-torn Congo.

■

KHRUSHCHEV SENT a message to Congolese officials offering "any assistance" to help in what he termed their "just cause against imperialism." He said the UN Security Council "has done a useful thing by adopting the resolution calling upon the Belgium government to withdraw its troops from Congolese territory."

CONGO

UN Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold told the Security Council he would take immediate steps to put into effect a three-pronged plan he outlined at a private meeting: Technical assistance to help the Congo restore order, train its national forces and establish its economy.

Dr. Bunche concluded, "I have high hopes that the United Nations intervention which will proceed with all possible speed, will assist in correcting misunderstandings and grievances and will give reassurance to all with regard to internal security."

Congo's Jews Flee But None Are Hurt

Pittsburgh Courier
Pittsburgh, Pa.

TEL AVIV—When 5,000 of Leopoldville's 10,000 white Congo residents sought refuge in Brazzaville uprising between Premier Patrice Lumumba's newly independent Congolese and their "die-hard" former Belgian colonial officers aided by "company man," Moise Tsombe, recently, the Jewish community of that city joined with the rest of the whites in the trek.

Information coming here from the Congo reveals that no Jews were molested . . . not in Leopoldville, nor in Elizabethtown where most Congo Jews reside, nor in Stanleyville or any other Congo city.

One Israeli family of six persons, one Tunisian Jewish woman, and one French Jewish woman, none of whom said they had trouble, arrived in Brussells, Belgium, whit the white evacuees.

Yaacov Levav, a Solel Boneh director, who was a member of the Israeli delegation to the Congo independence celebration, said that some of the 2,500 Jews in the Congo Jewish community voiced thoughts about migrating to Israel and added that he heard many Jews in other south-of-the-equator African countries were thinking likewise, a thought that has seldom been broached before

Lumumba is winner of Congo test of strength

The Afro-American
Baltimore, Md.

LEOPOLDVILLE, Belgian Congo — Patrice Lumumba, winner of tests of strength in the Congo's new Chamber of Deputies, was officially named Tuesday to form the first government of his country.

The Congo, a Belgian - controlled UN trust territory, is slated to become independent on June 30.

Star, 7-2-60

Lumumba was given the job of government - maker for the second time Tuesday following a meeting with Granshof Van Der Meerch, resident Belgian Minister in charge of Congo Affairs until the country becomes independent.

P. 9

His assignment followed elections in the Chamber of Deputies during which pro-Lumumba men were elected to posts of President and two vice-Presidents in a contest between his followers and those of Joseph Kasavubu, head of the rival Abako Party, who had also claimed a majority.

* * *

KASAVUBU HAD been appointed to form a government last week by King Badouin of Belgium after Lumumba's first efforts to organize a government had been stalemated by refusal of the Kasavubu forces to cooperate.

At a press conference following his appointment, Lumumba appealed to all Europeans to remain in the Congo and help in the work of setting up the new Government.

He also expressed the hope that European women and children who had left the Congo—in anticipation of political disturbances — would soon come back.

A week ago Kasavubu rejected a compromise proposal from Lumumba that Kasavubu become President of the new government, while Lumumba got the premiership and a free hand in choosing the cabinet.

As a result, the outstanding problem appeared to be what role Lumumba planned to give Kasavubu and his Abako followers, who earlier had threatened to pull the area controlled by his party out of the Congo and set up an autonomous state.

Kasavubu gets post as Congo president

Afro American, Baltimore Md.
Sat. 7/2/60

LEOPOLDVILLE, Belgian Congo — Tension which gripped the Belgian Congo for the past several weeks eased off Friday with the election by the Congolese Parliament of Joseph Ksasvubu as President and endorsement of his rival, Patrice Lumumba, as Premier.

The voting was the result of a last - minute compromise between Lumumba, head of the Congolese National Movement, and Kasavubu, head of the Abako Party.

The Kasavubu followers had threatened a secede from the Congo, which is slated to become independent on Thursday, if the leader were not made head of state.

When this post went to Lumumba, Kasavubu at first refused to accept any post in the proposed government. The Abako Party also announced plans for a general strike to paralyze Leopoldville.

The strike plans were promptly called off by Kasavubu after he was elected by Parliament with the backing of Lumumba.

* * *

DESPITE THE apparent agreement reached by the two "strong men" of the Congo, observers said there was still a possibility of strife in the colony due to the dissatisfaction of Moise Tshombe, leader of the Conakat Party in Katanga Province, and Albert Kalonji, Baluba leader.

Tshombe complains of inadequate representation, since he was given only one of the cabinet ministries for his party.

Kalonji is the only major Congo political leader to have been left out of the cabinet. He and his followers have already announced plans to set up an independent Baluba government in Kasai Province.

Soviet Charges Intervention in Congo

Washington Post
Thur. 7/14/60

By John Miller
Reuters

MOSCOW, July 13—The Soviet Union today accused the United States and other Western powers of helping Belgium undertake "direct military intervention" against the Congo Republic. D. C. P. A-10

The charge was made in a statement handed by Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko to envoys of the United States, Belgium, Britain, West Germany and France.

Copies were sent to all other accredited embassies in Moscow and the Soviet government newspaper Izvestia splashed the statement over its front page under the headline: "Hands Off Free Congo."

The statement accused American Ambassador Clare Timberlake of plotting with U. N. representative Ralph Bunche in the Congo to launch "imperialist" intervention under the flag of the United Nations.

"The colonialists' intervention in the Congo provides new proof of how certain powers, in the first place the United States, continue to march along the road of aggression and provocation," the statement said.

It called on the United Nations to take immediate steps to "defend the sovereign rights of the independent Congo Republic."

The statement accused Belgium of flagrantly violating international law, accused West Germany of lending its bases to Belgium for intervention, and accused "leading circles" in Britain of playing "a direct part" through Britain's dependent territories in Africa.

The Soviet statement said in part:

"As a result of a long and courageous struggle of the Congolese people against foreign colonial oppressors, the independence of the Congo Republic was proclaimed on June 30, 1960.

"The family of independent African states was joined by one of the largest African countries with a population of over 13 million people and disposing of immense natural and economic resources.

Recognized by Soviet

"The Soviet Union, like the majority of the countries in the world, has recognized the Congo Republic as an independent and sovereign state.

"The Security Council on July 5 unanimously adopted a resolution to recommend to the General Assembly of the United Nations the acceptance f th Congo Republic as a member of the United Nations.

"However, immediately after the proclamation of the Congo's independence, the officials of the former Belgian colonial administration who remained in the country, with the support of diplomatic representatives of the Western powers, the United States, Britain, and France, undertook, in violation of international law and the United Nations charter, actions directed at the undermining of the sovereignty and the liquidation of the independence of the young state.

"The Soviet government warns of the grave responsibility borne by the leading circles of the Western powers for unleashing armed aggression in the Congo, and demands that it should immediately be stopped.

"The government of the Soviet Union considers that in view of the serious situation created in the Congo, which threatens peace and general security, the United Nations organization must immediately take measures to defend the sovereign rights of the independent Congo Republic.

Aggression Charged

"By using its armed forces for military operations on the territory of the Congo and by sending, despite the protests of its government, new forces within the frontiers of the Congo, Belgium is committing a crude violation both of the territorial inviolability and the political independence of the Congo; that is, Belgium is committing actions which international law has for a long time now qualified as acts of aggression.

"Furthermore, the fact that the Belgian government is sending troops to the Congo which come from the NATO command and are stationed in the German Federal Republic, once again shows what role is being played by the aggressive NATO bloc, acting the part of an international gendarme, in the colonial subjugation of the peoples of Africa.

"An indirect part in the aggression against the Congo Republic is being played by Adenauer's government, which places its air bases at the disposal of foreign troops being dispatched to the Congo.

"It is thus acting in the same way as during the Anglo-American aggression against the Lebanon and Jordan in July, 1958.

"A direct part in the intervention against the Congo Republic is being played by the leading circles of Britain, who use for this purpose the government of their dependent territories.

"The Portuguese government, known all over the world for its bestialities in its African colonies of Angola and Mozambique, has concentrated troops along the frontiers of Angola and the Congo . . ."

Governing the Congo

New York Times
7/15/60

Temporary Administration by U. N. Trusteeship Council Proposed

The writer of the following letter is Associate Professor of International Relations at Howard University.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES:

The regrettable events of the past week in the newly independent Congo bring to mind several problems which should have been considered by more nations than the Belgians and Congolese alone in the crucial weeks prior to independence.

It should have been obvious that it would be largely impossible for the Congolese to police effectively a jungle-covered area one-third the size of the United States with a police and military force smaller than the police force of New York City, even assuming optimistically that that force would not become a hotbed of rebellion, as it did. Considering the belated start given the Congolese by the Belgians in the art of governing, it should have been equally obvious that the civil administration of the sprawling territory would be under serious strain, if not breaking down entirely.

Such a situation could perhaps have been prevented by a permanent United Nations police force (as opposed to the hurriedly called up force being sent now) and a temporary U. N. civil administration corps available on call—if such bodies existed. Composed mainly—in the case of employment in the Congo—by police components from such countries as India, Pakistan, Haiti, Ethiopia, Mali, Ghana, an international force could have headed off the present tragedy or at least served as a "trip wire" until new steps could have been devised to cope with the disorder.

A U. N. "presence" in the form of one representative of the Secretary General, such as in Kashmir or Laos, may be sufficient in the case of well policed communities or well organized opponents (i.e., the Communists in Laos). In the face of primitive tribes not acquainted with the U. N., it is merely pathetic.

Relief From Dilemma

A U. N. police force and temporary civil administration could have saved Belgium from the terrible dilemma in which beyond a doubt it is now caught: of either having to abandon thousands of innocent Europeans and Africans (for some old inter-tribal scores seem also in the process of being settled) to senseless slaughter; or surely to become branded as a "colonialist aggressor" for using troops to save them. The second alternative appears to be in the process of becoming a reality.

It would seem that the now almost-defunct Trusteeship Council of the U. N. could be made to serve a rather worthwhile purpose by being entrusted with such temporary administrative and police tasks likely to arise from such explosive "decolonization" processes. For it is a logical surmise that these processes will become the more disorderly as the area involved is less well prepared for its new status. This might well be the case in the Spanish or Portuguese colonies, or in some British areas with large white settler populations.

To be sure, Belgium now reaps the fruits of her narrowly paternalistic policies of yesteryear. This, however, does not absolve the other U. N. members from their share of blame. Instead of helping both the Congolese and the Belgians to make transition easier, they sent useless delegations of well-wishers.

It is Clemenceau who is credited with saying that "war is too serious a business to be left to generals." One might well say today that "independence is too serious a business to be left to disgruntled colonials and national fanatics."

BERNARD B. FALL.

Washington, July 14, 1960.

Whites Flee For Lives as Congo Erupts

The Atlanta Constitution
Atlanta, Ga.
Sat. 7-9-60

BRAZZAVILLE, Former French Congo (AP)—Chaos and panic gripped Leopoldville Friday with mutinous Negro troops running wild for hours through the capital of the nine-day-old Congo Republic.

Several thousand whites, mostly women and children, fled the city in fear of assault and rape.

The men in their families sent them by ferry to this former Free French headquarters city across the Congo River from Leopoldville.

By nightfall a semblance of order had been restored, but the situation was far from quiet in Leopoldville.

A curfew was imposed at 6 p.m. on the capital of the former Belgian colony.

STOOD OFF SOLDIERS

U.S. Ambassador Clare M. Timberlake was reported to have stood off a group of Negro soldiers who invaded the U.S. Embassy—where American families had taken refuge. Advices to the U.S. State Department said the troops were demanding that Timberlake turn over a photographer.

Tentative estimates were that under 40 of the 200 Americans living in Leopoldville had left the city. The U.S. Air Force rerouted two big air transport planes to Brazzaville for possible use in evacuation of Americans. Civilian planes also were being diverted to that city.

The British consulate said nearly all British women and children in the colony of 400 Britishers had been evacuated from Leopoldville.

Prime Minister Patrice Lumumba's Cabinet issued a communique denying he had been the target of an assassination attempt. The communique said a group of Europeans wanted to kill Lumumba, but were nabbed by guards at his residence. (The Belgian radio said it was a case of mistaken identity—that the Europeans were Belgian plainclothes security agents assigned to guard Lumumba, and they were released when their identity was disclosed.)

RELEASES COMMAND

Lumumba, seeking to keep the situation in hand, Friday turned over the command of the 25,000-man army to President Joseph Kasavubu as commander in chief.

The army chief of staff will be a European officer and the big military base in Leopoldville will be commanded by a Congolese officer.

The troops had mutinied to enforce demands for more pay and replacement of white officers by Negroes. They forced the resignation of their white Belgian commander this week.

APPPEALS TO PEOPLE

Lynn Heinzerling, AP correspondent at Leopoldville, said Kasavubu and the Cabinet appealed to the population to maintain order and return to their jobs.

Advices received in Brazzaville said Congolese troops threatened harm to visiting dignitaries, including Ralph J. Bunche, Negro undersecretary of the United Nations, and an Israeli envoy who came here for the independence ceremonies.

MARCH OF EVENTS

This was the march of events Friday in the restive Congo capital:

News spread in the early hours among white residents that mutinous troops were attacking whites and raping white women. The troops were aroused by rumors that Soviet planes had landed nearby.

Men with families hurriedly packed their wives and children—some clad in pajamas — off to the ferry that connects the capital with neighboring Brazzaville. Headlights from cars lighted up the scene.

HALT EXODUS

It was estimated that from 3,000 to 4,000 whites managed to get across the treacherous body of water known as "Stanley's Pool" before the Congo troops, armed with bayonets, halted the exodus for several hours. It later resumed.

European settlers in Brazzaville set up shelters in schools and other buildings to take care of the refugees. The president of the French Congo, Abbe Fulbert Youlou, appointed a committee on refugee care. Many were taken to private homes.

NO BLOODSHED

The troops arrested some Belgians, but there was no bloodshed. Communications between Leopoldville and the outside world were interrupted for a time.

Unrest spread and whites flocked to the Belgian, French, Italian and U.S. embassies.

MANY WENT EARLY

Many Europeans had already left the Congo in anticipation of trouble to follow independence.

Amid all the excitement Tass, the Soviet news agency, announced that agreement was reached with Lumumba for establishment of diplomatic relations with the Soviet Union. Tass said Lumumba received a visiting two man Soviet delegation Thursday night.

Whites Flee Leopoldville In Terror

The Montgomery Advertiser
Montgomery, Ala.
Sat. 7-9-60

BRAZZAVILLE—Former French Congo (AP) — Mutinous Negro troops ran wild for hours Friday through Leopoldville, capital of the nine-day-old Congo Republic, sending whites streaming from the city in fear of assault and rape.

The U.S. Embassy was invaded and widespread violence was reported elsewhere.

A detachment of 164 crack Belgian infantry volunteers in combat dress and armed with automatic weapons left Brussels by plane during the night for the Congo. The Brussels announcement of the departure did not say where they would land. Belgian rule in the Congo ended with King Baudouin's handover of power to the republic last week.

TWO KILLED

Forty-two women and children, refugees from the chaos gripping the former Belgian Congo, arrived in Luanda, Angola, where many told of narrow escapes from threatened rape and injury. One woman said she saw two Europeans killed in the streets of Nkinzi in the new republic. Another said beatings of Europeans had been common in the past two days.

The Belgian radio said Leopoldville itself appeared deadly quiet Friday night after a 6 p.m. curfew was imposed. It said shops had been closed, food was scarce and all Congolese servants had left European homes.

FLIGHT HALTED

Several thousand whites, mostly women and children, fled Leopoldville. The men sent their families by ferry to this old Free French headquarters city across the river from Leopoldville.

The flight across the river was halted for several hours by bayonet-carrying troops but later was resumed. One ferry was forced to unload and passengers were forced to carry their baggage back home.

Refugees from Thysville and smaller communities in the Leopoldville province poured into Leopoldville through Thursday night and before dawn Friday Congolese troops burst on the scene in jeeps and trucks.

Belgians were a particular target for searches and examination.

Troops stopped Europeans throughout the white area of the city and demanded to see identity papers. Foreigners living in hotels were ordered to stay in their rooms.

Troops moved into the central post office and radio-transmitting station and for a time virtually all communications with Leopoldville were cut off.

Congolese soldiers, straining to exercise their new authority, pointed their guns constantly and fired warning shots when orders were not obeyed promptly.

The U.S. Embassy in Leopoldville had a plan prepared in case it was deemed necessary to leave.

U.S. Ambassador Clare M. Timberlake was reported to have stood off a group of Negro soldiers who invaded the U.S. Embassy—where American families had taken refuge. Advices to the U.S. State Department said the troops were demanding that Timberlake turn over a photographer.

Tentative estimates were that under 40 of the 200 Americans living in Leopoldville had left the city. The U.S. Air Force rerouted two big air transport planes to Brazzaville for possible use in evacuation of Americans. Civilian planes also were being diverted to that city.

MISTAKEN IDENTITY

The British consulate said nearly all British women and children in the colony of 400 Britishers had been evacuated from Leopoldville.

Prime Minister Patrice Lumumba's Cabinet issued a communique denying he had been the target of an assassination attempt. The communique said a group of Europeans wanted to kill Lumumba, but were nabbed by guards at his residence. (The Belgian radio said it was a case of mistaken identity—that the Europeans were Belgian plainclothes security agents assigned to guard Lumumba, and they were released when their identity was disclosed.)

Lumumba, seeking to keep the situation in hand, Friday turned over the command of the 25,000-man army to President Joseph Kasavubu as commander in chief.

The army chief of staff will be a European officer and the big military base in Leopoldville will be commanded by a Congolese officer.

Too Much Too Soon

For the savagery that wracks the new Congo Republic, Belgium must be accounted responsible—as much as the impulsive nationalists who clamored for independence.

Belgium's errors were several and varied, but basically they reduce to two—(1) a failure to anticipate the rise of nationalism and (2) an over-eager response to independence sentiment once it was discerned.

Until January, 1959, there was scarcely a sign of nationalist ferment. But it was alive nonetheless, having been given impetus by an event the previous August when Gen. De Gaulle offered neighboring French Equatorial Africa the choice of independence, some arrangement within the French community or the status quo.

Five months after De Gaulle's offer, rioting exploded in Leopoldville, killing 70 persons. The city's European quarter was ravaged.

The Belgian King promptly announced Belgium's intention "to lead, without fatal delays, but without inconsiderate haste, the Congolese people to independence in prosperity and peace."

This seemed wise and moderate, for while colonial rule had allowed the Congolese to rise economically, it had made no effort to instruct the natives in the ways of self-government. Baudoin's promise of independence "without inconsiderate haste" seemed an acknowledgement of this.

Unfortunately, the King deserted his own resolution. When Congolese nationalists demanded a definite date, Belgium capitulated and set June 30 as the date for independence. It thus conferred self-government on a country in which half the people are illiterate, only 12 occupied administrative positions in the government and none was a doctor, lawyer, engineer or officer of the army.

Chaos was spoken of as inevitable, and it has arrived with a fury.

It may be said that Belgium gave the Congolese only what they wanted—independence. But in the hands of the untrained natives, it was about as defensible as placing a loaded Howitzer in a children's playground.

If The Bluff's No Bluff

If Belgian troops remain in the Congo, civil strife may be supplanted by global war.

Secretary Herter says Russia's threat to send Red troops to the Congo may be all bluff. If so, it is a bluff that could be turned to action.

The Congo government—to use the word "government" loosely—has all but asked the Russians to intervene. The pretext is there for the Russians to act.

The Belgians inflame an already combustible chaos. Having created the climate for crisis by granting early independence to a people never schooled in self-government, Belgium now remains to aggravate through its militia.

This furnishes rioting Congolese with the pretext for disorder and the Congolese government with the pretext for inviting Russia.

But if Belgium has a responsibility to withdraw, the U.N. force has the duty to show that it can protect helpless whites from the marauding natives. This Belgium has endeavored to do while the U.N. force was being formed up.

That force is still frail. Its rapid and effective strengthening could head off most of the hazards to world peace that now arise from the Congo.

But the ultimate determination of whether trouble will be confined to the Congo will be made, as always, in the Kremlin, which has conducted a running blast at the United States since spring.

Secretary Herter catalogued some of the incidents this week—the summit collapse, the U-2 incident, the Cuba threats, the deliberate downing of an RB-47. In addition, there have been a steady flow of lesser harassments, as in the Russian charge that American planes systematically buzz Soviet ships and an accompanying threat that Russia will take such measures as necessary to halt the practice.

And now the Congo.

Here, the position of the United States is clear. If Russia is not bluffing about sending troops to the Congo, the consequence would almost certainly be war.

Uranium-Rich Congo Region Gains Independence Today

LEOPOLDVILLE, Belgian Congo (AP)—This rich old Belgian colony Thursday becomes the independent Republic of Congo under the newest and least experienced Negro government on the African continent.

Its past is filled with the harsh and luxuriant story of 19th Century empire builders—such as the Stanley who found Dr. Livingstone and knew just the words, he presumed, to win a niche in posterity. Its future is a hopeful gamble, in the widening surge of African nationalism, among 13 million people who may be only barely beyond cannibalism in some remoter quarters. As for its economic future, it is one of the greatest producers of uranium.

At 11 a.m., Baudouin, King of the Belgians, reads the proclamation of independence in the still incomplete Palace of the Nation. His act cuts the ties that have bound the Congo to Belgium for 80 years.

The Belgian government has signed a treaty with the leaders of the new republic, however, to help them guide the nation to stability. A communique said the treaty envisaged mutual collaboration in the military, economic, financial, administrative, judicial, cultural, scientific, social and educational spheres.

It is believed the cooperation will include the future role of some Belgian civil servants needed badly to make up for the lack of trained Congolese administrators.

The treaty still must be approved by the Congo Parliament.

King Baudouin arrived Tuesday for the independence ceremonies. He was greeted at the airport by President Joseph Kasavubu and Prime Minister Patrice Lumumba who sought to win control of the new government.

Wife Of Missionary Safe At Home After Congo Escape

ANNISTON (AP) — Tired and badly shaken—but very happy—Mrs. Clifford Lee New is safe at home with her two small children after escaping from rioting Congolese in Leopoldville.

Her Baptist missionary husband is still in the terror-stricken country which recently was granted independence.

"It's wonderful to be back home," said Mrs. New. "It was terrible there."

The News and their two children, Stephen, 6, and Robin, 3, were stationed at the Eyene Mangai mission 700 miles from Leopoldville. They had completed three years of their four-year appointment.

Mrs. New said when she arrived in Leopoldville on July 6 everything looked natural.

But almost at once, she added, "we saw the native military soldiers hitting every white person in sight with the big buckles on their belts.

"We became frightened, but didn't get hurt.

"That night the natives went through Thysville — about 24 or 30 miles from Leopoldville — breaking into the house of the white people and molesting the white women.

"The missionaries there were not hurt."

U. S. Troops Set to Aid Congo; Herter Backs Plea for U. N. Help

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, July 11—The Defense Department said today that two companies of the Twenty-fourth Division had been alerted in West Germany to be ready to be flown to the Congo to help in the evacuation of refugees if needed.

Officials at the State Department expressed the view that the troops would not be used unless the United Nations asked for their help.

Meanwhile, Secretary of State Christian A. Herter endorsed as having "undoubted merit" a request by the Congo for United Nations military aid in dealing with her internal disorders.

Mr. Herter made the comment on his return from a conference with President Eisenhower at Newport, R. I.

Other State Department officials said they believed that the United States would willingly contribute to such a plan. But they also made it clear that the United States was not seeking a leading role. Belgium, they said, must bear the main responsibility because Belgian citizens are mainly concerned and Belgians know the country best.

Meanwhile, the defensive Department said two companies of the Twenty-fourth Division—which was sent to Lebanon two years ago—were standing by to be flown to the Congo for evacuation work if needed. Officials at the State Department expressed the view that they would not be used unless the United Nations asked for them.

Thus far none of the 2,000 United States citizens who have been living in the Congo has been reported killed or injured. Most of the 200 American residents in Leopoldville and 140 in Elisabethville have been evacuated.

Lincoln White, State Department press officer, observed that talks were going on between Assistant Secretary General Ralph J. Bunche of the U. N. and Congolese Government officials about a "possible United Nations role."

Reports to the State Department indicated that there had been a "breakdown of law and order at various places," Mr. White said.

There is an "obvious need" to protect foreigners in the Congo "by whatever means are appropriate," Mr. White said. But he added that he did not think United States troops would be used to restore order.

"I don't think any consideration has been given to that," he said.

Other officials said military technical assistance such as proposed by Dr. Bunche might be geared in such a way as to help solve both the immediate crisis and long-term problems in the Congo.

One form of aid might be the provision of officers at various levels, it was said. Another might be the provision of non-commissioned officers.

"The United Nations will have to work out a new formula for this problem," one official observed. "In the case of the Gaza Strip and the Gulf of Aquaba [in the Mideast], the formula was an emergency force. In the case of Lebanon it was something else. In Laos something

Refugees Arrive in Ghana

Special to The New York Times.

ACCRA, Ghana, July 11 — Eighteen young American mothers and their children have arrived here safely by plane from Brazzaville.

Mrs. Helen Soltario, wife of a United States Embassy official, and one of a party of forty-nine Americans and twelve others evacuated from the Congo area, said "there were groups of drunken soldiers all over the streets."

"They wouldn't let us out of the house," she added. "Drunken soldiers were playing with bayonets and machines guns through the city. Sprays of machine-gun bullets broke all windows."

The Americans made their way to the Soltario's house in Brazzaville and then left for the United States Embassy.

4 AFRICAN STATES ATTAIN FREEDOM

French Pledge Independence to Council of Entente

By GRANGER BLAIR

Special to The New York Times.

PARIS, July 11—Four West African autonomous republics in the French Community today received a pledge of full independence from the French Government.

Accords giving complete sovereignty to the Ivory Coast, Niger, Dahomey and Voltaic Republics were signed this evening by leaders of the four African republics and Premier Michel Debré at the Hotel Matigon, the Foreign Ministry headquarters.

It is expected that the formal proclamations of independence by the four states, which are grouped into what is known as the Council of the Entente, will take place the first week in August, after the ratification of the accords by the French and African Parliaments.

At the close of the signing ceremony, Hamani Diori, Premier of Niger and president of the Council of the Entente, said:

"Today is a solemn day for a France faithful to its ideal of liberty, equality and fraternity. It is equally a great day for the four states of the Council of the Entente, which offer their gratitude to France."

M. Diori asserted that it was his belief that today's step in the evolution of the French Community was leading to "the constitution of a great ensemble, based on the liberty and equality of the peoples of Africa and of France."

Premier Debré also spoke in warm words of cordiality between France and members of the Community. But he warned the African states of dangers from within and without to their democratic development.

There are private ambitions loose on the African continent and in this perspective cooperation between rance and the African states. [in the Community] takes on a significance unlike anything that has occurred over the past centuries," M. DeBré said.

"Beyond this desire to cooperate there is equally something which must remain and which, as far as we are concerned, remains," the Premier went on. "That is the wish to remain in the same ensemble, the affirmation of the fraternity which united us at the moment when the Constitution [of the Fifth Republic] was voted by all of use, whatever the changes in your status and whatever the changes in the Community institutions."

Sovereign Members Growing

With today's action and the virtually certain approval of the independence agreements by the Parliaments, the number of autonomous republics in the Community to achieve full sovereignty soon will increase to seven.

Already independent are the Malagasy Republic (Madagascar), of the Eastern coast of Africa, and the Mali Federation, made up of Senegal and

The New York Times July 12, 1960

NEW STATUS ADVANCED: Pacts on independence were signed by 4 African nations (diagonal shading) and Paris.

Sudan in West Africa. Soon to follow the Council of the Entente into independence are the Chad, Congo, Gabon and Central African Republicans, whose leaders are now in Paris negotiating with the French Government.

Next year, when the West African republic of Mauritania becomes independent in accordance with the pledge given by President De Gaule, all twelve African republics in the Community will be sovereign and equal to France.

While no one spoke at the Hotel Matignon ceremony of the grave events in the Congo, which was recently granted independence by Belgium, such was not case in the French Senate, where that body concluded the ratification of cooperative accords between France and the Mali Federation and the Malagasy Republic.

Jean Foyer, secretary of State for Community Affairs, told the Senate that nothing similar to the widespread disorders in the former Belgian Congo had occurred in Madagascar or in the Mali Federation, which he descriped as "independent states capable of governing themselves and led by worthy men."

KATANGA PREMIER IN CONGO SECEDES; ASKS BELGIAN AID

Economic Tie Is Proposed—Lumumba Seeks Help of U. N. in Uprisings

By Reuters.

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo, July 11—The Congo's richest province declared itself an independent state tonight.

Premier Moise Tshombe of Katanga Province asserted in a radio broadcast that the copper-rich province was declaring its "total independence" from the Congo.

He added, however, that Katanga would retain an economic bond with Belgium.

The Katanga Premier made his announcement in Elisabethville after having declared a state of emergency as the rebellion of Congolese troops continued.

Plea for Troops Denied

Earlier he had asked in vain for the aid of troops or policemen from Northern Rhodesia, a member of the British-ruled Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland.

Premier Patrice Lumumba of the Congo, which became independent of Belgium June 30, took off for Elisabethville before Mr. Tshombe's declaration. Mr. Lumumba earlier expressed "astonishment" at the call for troops from neighboring Northern Rhodesia.

Mr. Tshombe declared Belgian troops in his provincial capital would remain there. He said he had asked for more of them to be sent into Elisabethville.

Mr. Tshombe said he wanted Premier Lumumba to keep out of the province and had sent instructions to his Cabinet ministers to tell Mr. Lumumba so upon his arrival at the Elisabethville airport.

Appeals to Bunche

As Congolese Army mutineers battled Belgian troops today in two centers, Mr. Lumumba appealed for United Nations military specialists to help reorganize the rebellious armed forces. He made the request through Dr. Ralph J. Bunche, United Nations Under Secretary, who has been here since the Independence Day celebrations.

[At the United Nations, Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold plans to ask nine African members to send officers to the Congo to restore discipline to the mutinous army].

Dr. Bunche issued a statement here tonight saying he assured Mr. Lumumba and Chief of State Joseph Kasavubu yesterday that the United Nations would give the new republic "as much assistance as possible."

Aid Within U. N. Charter

This assistance, he said, would be given within "the framework of the Charter of the United Nations and of the principles according to which the organization functions."

"On a purely personal level, I would like sto say that I was profoundly impressed in the course of this interview by the ardent desire of all those who took part in it to surmount the present difficulties in the country," Dr. Bunche added.

He said he had submitted a detailed report on his discussions here to United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold.

Mr. Lumumba has been rushing from one trouble center to another in an effort to restore order. He hurride to Matadi over the week-end and flew this afternoon to Luluabourg on his way to Elisabethville.

Before taking off, he declared his Government's determination to "have law and order respected and to defend the territorial integrity of our country."

Radio reports received here described a continuing battle between Belgians and Congolese in the uranium center of Shinkolobwe, 100 miles northwest of Elisabethville.

The battle began when the Europeans rejected a demand to hand over their weapons. Rebel gunfire drove off a plane-load of troops trying to land reinforcements in Shinkolobwe.

Missionaries Surrounded

Sixty American misisonaries and their families at Kapanga in northern Katanga Province found themselves surrounded by Congolese rebels. They radioed a message from their mission station that so far they had not been molested.

"We are entirely cut off," the urgent message to Leopoldville said. "There is nothing to do but wait."

Belgian paratroopers tried to keep an escape route open from Elisabethville to the Northern Rhodesian border. Long automobile convoys moved along the sixty-mile stretch past rock-throwing Africans.

Reports from the other side said the Rhodesian copper belt had become a huge refugee camp. Among the refugees were officials of a huge copper-mining concern. They said they had decided to flee after ten officials had been slain by rebel troops.

our Belgians who returned to Elisabethville after having taken their families to Rhodesia were reported to have been knifed to death.

Looting was reported in full swing in Jadotville and Kolwezi, north of Elisabethville.

Reports from Stanleyville, capital ,of Eastern Province said the situation was "explosive." Africans poured in from outlying villages and hunted for arms. Many Africans hurled insults at Europeans in the streets and searched their home for arms.

Rhodesian Troops on Border

Special to The New York Times.

SALISBURY, Southern Rhodesia, July 11—Rhodesian troops dug themselves in today along the border with the Congo's Katanga Province. Machine gun nests have been built and fronties posts heavily sandbagged.

Bivouac fires twinkled until dawn this morning as soldiers guarding road blocks and defensive positions warmed themselves against chill night air.

But the likelihood of their going into action in the near future receded with statements by Prime Minister of the Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland, Sir Roy Welensky, and Sir Edgar Whitehead, Prime Minister of Southern Rhodesia. They said troops could not be sent across the frontier in response to an appeal by Moishe Tshombe, Katanga provincial Premier.

Sir Roy said the Federal Government did not recognize Mr. Tshombe as head of an independent state and that a request would have to come from Premier Patrice Lumumba's central Government in Leopoldville.

Sir Edgar said that an indirect request "to the Federation in general" had been made by Katanga for 5,000 policemen, but that it would have to come either from the Belgian or Congo central Governments.

There are about 1,500 Federal troops on or near the border and more in reserve at the Tug Argan barracks in the Northern Rhodesian Copper Belt

Meanwhile, a penetration of federal therritory from the Congo was reported from Kitwe. According to the report, two diamond drillers were forced to flee with their wives and one child yesterday from their camp two miles inside the Northern Rhodesian border at Kapishi, near Mwinilungu, when hostile Congolese began to surround their camp.

They were reported to be returning to the Maple Leaf Diamond Drilling Company camp at Kalulushi, but late today had not arrived.

The New York Times July 12, 1960

As violence continued throughout the Congo, Katanga Province (shaded area), which is adjacent to Northern Rhodesia, announced that it was seceding.

For 'Aggression' Read 'Rescue From Savages'

U.N. action in restoring order to the Congo will be a major test of the ability of the Security Council to take effective, fast action.

First priority must go to saving helpless whites, Belgians and others, from looting, raping, murdering blacks who have at least proved what critics of Belgium had said — they were not ready for self-government.

That Belgium failed to educate them to the responsibilities of governing themselves is evident. It is also clear that Belgium was not the most enlightened colonizer. But this cannot excuse or mitigate murder and rape, which are not failures in political science but offenses against the custom and law of all men, except the most retarded savage tribes.

The Soviet Union, while agreeing to the dispatch of U.N. forces to relieve Belgian troops in the maintenance of order, has cried that it's all an imperialistic hoax to reconquer the Congo for colonists.

In the first appeal to Secretary General Hammarskjold, the Congo government suggested that the real cause of the chaos and anarchy was the mutiny of Congolese troops and a complete collapse of administrative control. The second message spoke of Belgian "aggression," a remarkable restatement of the Soviet line.

A number of U.N. delegates thought they detected the hand of Dr. Ralph J. Bunche, Mr. Hammarskjold's representative in the Congo, in the second message," a New York Times dispatch reports. It may have been legalistically necessary to allege something of the kind. The U.N. is only empowered to meet threats to international peace and security, not civil wars or internal disturbances. This may have been one reason for the reference.

But great as is Dr. Bunche's reputation for probity, he is not above the suspicion of possibly hoping to minimize the horrors committed by newly liberated Negroes.

The "aggression" charge is palpably false. Belgium had abandoned the Congo a few days before the hastly revolt and Belgian troops returned only to save the lives of whites trapped in barbaric anarchy and violence. Belgium can be faulted for not preparing the Congolese for self-government, but not for sending troops in on a purely humanitarian mission to insure the escape route of terrified whites.

If this is aggression, the word has taken on a strange communist meaning.

Under the independence agreement with the new Congolese government, Belgium had left 2,000 troops at various Congo bases. These were supplemented by additional companies when the blacks ran amuck. Belgium will demand, and should get, firm proof that the U.N. troops sent in to replace Belgian soldiers can and will insure the right of whites to leave in safety if they choose or remain in peace if they desire.

A failure to have shouldered the white man's burden in the highest traditions of colonial noblesse oblige does not forfeit Belgium's right to save its own from drunken, crazed savages, whatever Dr. Bunche's desire might be to shift the blame for the unspeakable atrocities

United Press International

TRAINING IN KATANGA: Volunteers in Katanga Army go through obstacle course. Republic of the Congo province has ordered mobilization to enforce announced secession.

Tshombe Ready to Discuss Entry Of U. N. but He Remains Wary Refrains From Unconditional Acceptance of New Security Council Resolution—Hammarskjold Cites 'Obligations'

By HENRY TANNER

Special to The New York Times.

ELISABETHVLLE, the Congo, Aug. 10 — President Moise Tshombe of Katanga said today he was ready to negotiate on the admission of United Nation troops to the province, but he refused to accept unconditionally the resolution adopted by the Security Council early Tuesday.

His stand was taken in a reply to a message from Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold asking him to state whether he and the authorities he controlled were willing to "accept obligations which are incumbent on all under the resolution."

The resolution called on Belgium to withdraw her troops immediately and declared that the entry of United Nation troops into Katanga was necessary for the success of the United Nations mission in the Congo. The Security Council resolution sought to assure Katanga that the admission of the United Nations force would not mean submission to the central Congo Government.

Cooperation Requested

Mr. Hammarskjold invited Mr. Tshombe to say whether he "submitted to the same duty of cooperation that is imposed on the central Government of the Congo and on the Government Congo" and on the Government.

The Secretary General said he would make arrangements for "conversations" with Mr. Tshombe if the Katanga leader accepted the obligations required by the resolution.

Mr. Tshombe replied that the Katanga Government could not "admit" Mr. Hammarskjold's reference to the central Congo Government, "whose Premier has announced that he rejects the tutelage and control of the United Nations."

Katanga is eager to contribute to peace and is ready to enter conversations at Mr. Hammarskjold's convenience, Mr. Tshombe added.

The exchange of messages was made known here without official comment.

The resolution was adopted at a special session of the Security Council called after Katanga had made it clear it would forcibly resist the entry of United Nations troops.

Mr. Tshombe, who declared Katanga independent of the Congo July 11, has said that United Nations troops were not needed in Katanga, where his regime, assisted by Belgian troops and advisers, was keeping order.

Tshombe Plan Unmentioned

Mr. Hammarskjold's message, received this morning, did not mention a call for negotiation of an "agreement" between the United Nations and Katanga that Mr. Tshombe issued yesterday in a telegram to the Secretary General.

Nor was there any reference to a long list of conditions that the Katanga President said would have to be met if the provincial government were to drop its opposition to the United Nations' entry.

Either Mr. Hammarskjold or Under Secretary Ralph J. Bunche is expected here soon for talks on the United Nations' entry.

This expectation was evident in an appeal for calm addressed to Belgian residents today by Count Harold d'Aspremont Lynden, personal representative here of the Belgian Premier.

"Any withdrawal of Belgian forces will be preceded by preliminary negotiations," he said.

Such negotiations will concern the "quality, composition and strength" of the United Nations forces and the "instructions they will receive," he said. He added that Gen. Roger A. Gheysen, commander of Belgian forces in the Congo, would be the Belgian negotiator.

The Belgians have insisted that non-African troops be stationed in Elisabethville, which has a European population of about 7,000. A similar Belgian request in Leopoldville resulted in the use of Swedish and Ghanaian troops there by the United Nations.

Count Lynden told Belgian civil servants still working here that there was no reason for them to leave their posts under present circumstances.

At the same time, he relieved all Belgian officials in Katanga —magistrates, civil servants and army cadres—of their allegiance to the central Congo Government.

These Belgian officials were lent to the Congo after independence. They were to be paid partly by Belgium and partly by the Congo.

In a radio address Count Lynden said these officials had been released from their engagement and were now considered "volunteers." The terms of their new status will be announced in a few days, he said.

Belgians Get 'Release Orders'

Belgian civil servants have received "release orders"—signed documents enabling them and their families to travel on any route between here and Brussels and to receive funds from Belgian consulates in all countries. Only the date is missing from the documents.

An order for evacuation from Katanga in a crisis would be given over the radio by Belgian authorities.

For the moment, Belgians are eager to increase, rather than reduce, the number of their civil servants and technicians in Katanga. The Belgian Government is understood to be offering favorable terms to persons willing to come here.

Katanga Finances Described

Special to The New York Times.

PARIS, Aug. 10—Katanga is preparing to make itself a hard-money bastion of free enterprise in Africa, according to a Frenchman who identified himself today as an economic counselor to the Tshombe government.

Charles Pollet, a business man of Le Havre, arrived today from Elisabethville. He said he had been advising Mr. Tshombe on economic matters since they met last February at the round-table conference in Brussels that negotiated the Congo's independence.

M. Pollet said a Katanga national bank would be established in a few days with an initial capital of 100,000,000 Katanga francs (about $2,000,000). The Katanga franc will be issued at parity with the Belgian franc, now worth 2 United States cents, he said.

M. Pollet said he sought to encourage European industrialists to establish new industries in Katanga. This would diversify Katanga's economy, which has been based thus far on copper and other mineral deposits.

M. Pollet said Mr. Tshombe favored a Congo federation based "on the Swiss model." Each state would have its own money and its own budget and would participate in central finances and ministries in proportion to its potentialities.

U. N. CHIEF LANDS IN CONGO TO LEAD FORCE TO KATANGA

Arrests of Lumumba's Foes Are Reported—Belgian News Agency Seized

By The Associated Press.

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y., Aug. 11—The United Nations said Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold arrived in Leopoldville tonight to lead a United Nations force into secessionist Katanga Province tomorrow.

En route from New York, he stopped ninety minutes at Accra, Ghana, to refuel and confer with President Kwame Nkrumah.

Congo Press a Target

By THOMAS F. BRADY

Special to The New York Times.

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo, Aug. 11—Reports of several arrests of Opposition leaders or "saboteurs" circulated here today. Only one arrest, that of a local newspaper editor, was confirmed.

In another development the Congolese Government seized the Belgian news agency Belga tonight. Information Minister Anicet Kashamura said that it will be converted to a Congolese news agency.

Mr. Kashamura went to the Belga offices with three gendarmes carrying bayonets and halted the transmission of news to Brussels. Distribution of news on the agency's incoming wires has continued.

Lumumba Scored Belgium

Premier Patrice Lumumba has bitterly assailed Belgium for sending troops to the Congo after rebellious soldiers from his own army had attacked Belgian residents in the former colony.

The Ministry of Information declared last night that a number of arrests had been made

United Press International Radiophoto

KEEPING THE PEACE IN THE CONGO: Ghanaian troops, part of United Nations force, carry truncheons and shields as they move out on anti-riot duty in Leopoldville.

and that others were expected following disorders in the African quarter of the city in which the car of Premier Patrice Lumumba was stoned.

The editor who was arrested is Gabriel Makoso, Congolese editor of the French-language newspaper Le Courier d'Afrique. The Belgian-owned newspaper is described as Roman Catholic in its tendencies. Premier Lumumba has recently attacked the Roman Catholic Church in the Congo for what he caled inference in political matters.

Belgian employes of the newspaper said that the Congolese police had searched the editorial offices and printing plant but had not closed the plant or seized today's edition, which appeared shortly after noon.

The police also searched the premises of another newspaper, Presence Congolaise, which supports Albert Kalonji, who split Mr. Lumumba's National Congolese movement into two rival sections before the Congo became independent June 30.

Mr. Kashamura has said that he intends to forbid the entry of copies of the French newspapers Le Figaro and Rivarol and five Belgian papers of Right-wing sympathies.

Injury of Lumumba Denied

Yesterday's rioting in the African quarter had given rise to a report that Premier Lumumba, who attempted to restore order by speaking then, had been injured by a stone thrown at his car. However, his entourage denied that he had been hit.

The Premier called a news conference at 4 P. M. today, but newsmen walked out of his residence at 4:55 when he had not appeared. One of Mr. Lumumba's aides said that the Premier was busy talking by telephone to Joseph Kasavubu, Chief of State of the Congo.

Two European Communist newsmen who did not walk out said that Premier Lumumba had expressed to them concern over the "distortion of news from the Congo by the Western press" and had said that if it continued, measures would be taken to halt it.

This morning, Mr. Lumumba made a radio appeal for calm and order in Leopoldville. Congolese policemen and soldiers patrolled the city in force today, and no disorders men reported.

The disturbance last night occurred after the police had invaded the headquarters of Mr. Kasavabu's Association of the Lower Congo, known as Abako. Some important elements of Abako have threatened the secession from the Congo by a Region of Bakongo tribes who inhabit the lower Congo basin, including the Leopoldville region.

Meanwhile, the arrival of Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold of the United Nations was awaited here. He has announced that he would go to the secessionist Province of Katanga tomorrow in command of 300 Swedish soldiers belonging to the United Nations Congo force.

The Soviet Government has given Premier Lumumba a big, fast Ilyushin 18 airliner for his personal use. He was said to be inspecting the airliner tonight. The Premier said recently that the United States had rejected a request by him for the use of a plane.

Lumumba Tightens Security

LEOPOLDVILLE, Aug. 11 (AP) — Premier Lumumba tightened security here with rifle-carrying Congolese police and soldiers today, the eve of the United Nations entrance into the secessionist province of Katanga.

Mr. Lumumba's uniformed forces halted cars on the road to the airport and searched them for weapons. Diplomats were also stopped.

Faced with growing dissension, Premier Lumumba broadcast an appeal for national unity and went to extraordinary lengths to protect his own life. Two Congolese army soldiers with bayoneted rifles were posted inside the entrance to his residence and four Ghanian policemen, also with rifles, were on duty in the reception room.

Premier Lumumba has promised to cooperate with Secretary General Hammarskjold in the United Nations effort to replace Belgian soldiers in Katanga, the richest of the Congo's six provinces.

The Secretary General, accompanied by two generals and 300 Swedish troops, is scheduled to fly to Elisabethville early tomorrow. The flight probably will involve at least six planes.

Observers said there was little doubt that Premier Lumumba was in serious trouble with his countrymen.

"Let us stop the quarrels; let us abandon the destructive spirit," he said in his radio appeal today. "All disorder must stop. Let us preserve our independence * * * You must respect authority. The whole world is watching us."

The Premier's authority is disputed in at least four of the Congo's six provinces. A movement to cut down the authority of the central Government appears to be growing.

Hammarskjold Sees Nkrumah

Special to The New York Times.

ACCRA, Ghana, Aug. 11—Secretary General Hammarskjold conferred today with President Kwame Nkrumah on the Congo situation.

Mr. Hammarskjold's plane stopped here for refueling on route to Leopoldville, the Congolese capital. The United Nations official had a twenty-minute talk with Mr. Nkrumah in the President's residence.

Reliable sources said that Mr. Nkrumah put forward the views that his Cabinet ministers had stressed yesterday in Parliament—that Mr. Hammarskjold must ignore the conditions laid down by President Moise Tshombe of the Congo's Katanga Province for the entry of United Nations troops into the secessionist province.

A motion adopted in Ghana's Parliament yesterday authorizing President Nkrumah to order a general mobilization seemed to be merely precautionary. Defense Minister Charles de Graft Dickson said this morning, "I have had no orders from the top."

FALL OF PREMIER HINTED IN BELGIUM

New York Times

Eyskens Confers With King as Demands Increase for Resignation Over Congo

By HARRY GILROY

Special to The New York Times.

BRUSSELS, Belgium, Aug. 10—Reports that the Belgian Cabinet would resign because of the Congo crisis circulated in Brussels today. A source close to the Government said tonight that the decision had been put off at least until tomorrow.

Premier Gaston Eyskens called on King Baudouin this evening after a Cabinet meeting. Earlier there had been separate meeting of the Christian Democratic members of the Cabinet with M. Eyskens and the Liberal party members with Vice Premier Albert Lillar. M. Eyskens and M. Lillar head the two factions that form the coalition Government.

The Socialist party, largest group of the Opposition, issued a demand today that the Government resign because its Congo policy had been "a complete failure."

The Socialists said that, as a result of the Government's policy, Belgium had been isolated in the United Nations and put in a position where it was considered responsible for endangering world peace.

Parliament Meeting Urged

Belgian workers would not continue to follow the policy of this Government, the Socialist leaders said. They announced they were asking for a meeting of Parliament. The next meeting is scheduled for November but M. Eyskens has said that Parliament would be called before its normal recess was over.

The Socialist attack followed an editorial uproar in newspapers that usually support the Christian Democratic and Liberal parties. Roman Catholic newspapers joined the critical chorus.

La Libre Belgique, the most influential Catholic newspaper of Brussels, reported toda that a new Government was in the making under the leadership of Paul Van Zeeland, a banker who was formerly Premier and is now a Minister of State and Senator. He is a Christian Democrat.

Spaak Is Mentioned

Others mentioned for membership in this proposed new cabinet were Paul-Henri Spaak, Secretary General of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, a Socialist, and Walter Ganshof van der Meersch, Attorney General of the Belgian Supreme Court, who recently served as Resident Minister in the Congo.

M. Eyskens has fought off suggestions for a change of Government repeatedly in the last few weeks. He has declared that he had a responsibility to see the events in the Congo through and he was not one to lay down a burden.

The political developments in Brussels overshadowed the statements of M. Eyskens yesterday that suggested Belgium might reduce her contribution to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. This issue will probably not be decided until the military budget for the coming year is considered by Parliament.

Reports of violence in Leopoldville have raised new anxieties here about Belgians still in the Congo. There are 20,000 Belgians in Katanga Province, where United Nations troops are to replace the Bel- emphasized that Belgian troops would not give up their security watch until substitute forces had arrived.

NATO Awaits Belgian Move

Special to The New York Times.

PARIS, Aug. 10—The possibility of a change of attitude by Belgium on the North Atlantic Treaty Organization is not likely to be formally discussed by the alliance's Permanent Council here before next month.

Regular weekly council meetings have been suspended during the August vacation period and are not expected to be resumed before early in September.

A definitive sign of Belgian policy is expected in October when the alliance's secretariat sends out questionnaires to determine each country's planned military contribution for the next year.

Belgium has an armed force of 120,000 men and a national defense budget of 20,000,000,000 Belgian francs ($400,000,000). The following represents Belgium's military contribution to NATO:

Ground force — Two divisions, one infantry and one armored, stationed in West Germany.

Air force—Three tactical squadrons attached to the Second Allied Tactical Air Force in Germany.

Naval force—Fifty minesweepers.

Belgium spent 3.8 per cent of her gross national product on defense last year while France spent 8.9 per cent and the United States 10.7 per cent.

Twelve out of every 1,000 inhabitants serve in Belgian armed forces while twenty-three out of every 1,000 serve French soldiers serve twenty-in France and thirteen out ofeight months and United States every 1,000 in the Uniteddraftees two years. States.

Not long ago Belgium reduced the period of military service for her soldiers from eighteen months to twelve.

UN Umbrella for Congo? Gateway to Southern Africa

Christian Science Monitor, Boston, Mass., Thur. 7/21/60

G.1

Area Strategic

By Arnold Beichman

Special Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

Léopoldville, Congo

Highest diplomatic circles here which have been sharply critical of Belgian policies since Congolese independence now are considering what the free nations should do in the event the Soviet Union moves for control of the three-week-old African colony with cooperation from Premier Patrice Lumumba.

The Congo not only potentially is one of the richest territories in the world but from a geopolitical standpoint it is the gateway to Africa southward. That is why there is such great concern that Mr. Lumumba's recent activities are not youthful errors of judgment or sowing of political wild oats by the 35-year-old Congolese Premier but are far more serious than that.

People who have known Mr. Lumumba for some time say that he is not a Communist under party discipline.

But as one man who has watched him closely for several years said: "Lumumba is today a prisoner of the Communists." Even among Congolese leaders here who find themselves less and less able to voice their opposition to Mr. Lumumba's policies openly, he is regarded as moving rapidly into the Soviet orbit.

Parliament Ignored

These observers say that Mr. Lumumba's capableness probably matches that of any other Congolese in the country. Evidence of that is seen in his domination of President Kasavubu who many hoped might be a balance to Mr. Lumumba's antiwhite chauvinism and pro-communism.

In recent days Mr. Lumumba has been demonstrating his contempt for the Congolese Parliament, ignoring its directives, giving press conferences rather than appearing before the Chamber of Deputies. His flight to his Stanleyville home base at the height of the Belgian Congolese crisis left a floundering government.

A forecast made authoritatively is that Mr. Lumumba shortly will move to establish a unicameral legislature, oust Mr. Kasavubu and become not only Premier but also chief of state. This would inevitably lead to a personal dictatorship over this country.

Logistics Problem

However, to achieve this ambition Mr. Lumumba may ally himself with the Soviet Union either formally in a mutual defense pact or through an economic aid program.

A high ranking diplomat here said, "I think the Soviets would be mad to send troops in because there would be the problem of supplying them over vast distances. It is a problem even for the UN to support its own troops here. But if Soviet troops do come to the Congo, I can only assume that the United States will send troops here too and there might be another Korea."

An example of Mr. Lumumba's seemingly eccentric behavior which served his tactics of causing distrust of the United Nations and the Western democracies among Congolese was provided July 20 with UN Undersecretary Ralph J. Bunche at his side.

Looking tense and uncomfortable, Mr. Lumumba, standing outside his home, the former residence of the Belgian Governor General, criticized the United Nations for not moving fast enough in ousting Belgian forces from the Congo.

He declared, "We will make a pact even with the devil to get the Belgians out," and added, "We know the Soviet Union is ready to help us."

Swedish Unit Arrives

[Belgian planes began airlifting Belgian parachute troops out of Léopoldville July 21 in fulfillment of the United Nations plan to make this a UN-controlled city by July 23, the Associated Press said. The troops are returning to Belgian treaty bases within the Congo.

[A contingent of Swedish troops for the UN Congo force arrived from the Middle East and began taking over guard duty from the Belgians at the Léopoldville airport, 15 miles out of town.

[The headquarters staff of the Belgian Air Force here also was packing up. Files, cabinets, and even refrigerators and washing machines were crated for shipment to the Belgian bases at Kitona and Kamina.]

U.S. Aid Goes Unnoted

In his press conference Mr. Lumumba praised the Soviet satellites for sending food—which they hadn't at that time—although two Soviet Ilynshin transport planes came in late July 20 with food supplies. Yet he said nothing about the vast American food contributions at a time when flour stocks in Léopoldville and other cities in the interior were exhausted.

Mr. Lumumba is using a white intervention scare as a weapon in his drive for total power. He is setting up impossible conditions for United Nations behavior and demanding their immediate achievement.

All this is regarded by competent authorities here as the Soviet Union's first real major thrust toward Africa. And Mr Lumumba's actions in recent days seem calculated to assure some success for Moscow's push into this vast and strategic con-

Associated Press Wirephoto

Congo Delegates to UN Follow Tempestuous Debate

Minister Delegate Thomas Kanza, left, and State Secretary André Mandl

Moscow Neutralization Sought

Boston, Mass. Thur. 7/21/60

By William R. Frye

United Nations Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

Christian Science Monitor

United Nations, N.Y.

The United States has vowed that it will, together with other United Nations members, do "whatever may be necessary" to keep Soviet troops out of the Congo.

This blunt warning was issued to Moscow early July 21 in a postmidnight session of the United Nations Security Council. It came only minutes after the Soviet Union had broadly hinted at an intention to send a Soviet Army on just such a mission.

The sudden confrontation of the two giant superpowers, each with a club figuratively raised over Africa, produced a crisis atmosphere. Even Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold, normally given to diplomatic understatement, felt impelled to warn of the possibility of world war.

But many felt the crisis had been blown up out of true proportion. Serious though it is, few genuinely expected it to touch off an Armageddon. The United States, it was said, may well neutralize the Soviet Union, permitting the UN, under a kind of umbrella, to pursue its recue operation.

Clearly this was the intention of the United States. Informants said the American threat was designed as a counterweight to Soviet pressures on Belgium. Those pressures might well, if allowed to run unchecked, disrupt the UN's effort to restore calm—either by frightening the Belgians out too soon, it was said, or by provoking them into defiantly remaining too long.

In any event, if and when the Belgians do withdraw, an unchallenged Soviet Union might well claim credit for having forced the withdrawal, diplomats said, just as Moscow claimed that it had halted the British-French invasion of Suez in 1956 by atomic - missile threats.

Washington has had enough of such Soviet tactics, and is resolved not to let them succeed if it can help it, informants here say. It is applying diplomatic counterpressures, accepting whatever risks may be involved — including the risk that Congolese Premier Patrice Lumumba will ask for Soviet troops, thus putting the United States in an awkward position.

[Mr. Lumumba has won the support of his Cabinet for his threat to call for Soviet intervention in the Congo and said he plans to fly to New York to appear before the United Nations Security Council and has asked for the suspension of the current meeting until his arrival.

[No date was set for Mr. Lumumba's departure and a spokesman for the Premier refused to say whether Mr. Lumumba planned any action on his threat before appearing before the Security Council.]

Strategy Worked Out

Soviet pressure tactics in the Cuban, the U-2, and the RB-47 cases, as well as the Congo, have thoroughly aroused the Eisenhower administration, it is said. A major strategy conference at Newport, R.I., July 19 is said to have laid down the policy of counterpressures.

"Obviously no troops should be introduced into the Congo other than those requested by the Secretary-General," United States Chief Delegate Henry Cabot Lodge told the Council July 21 in its third night session within a week.

"The United States can accordingly be counted on to continue its vigorous support for the United Nations in the Congo.

"With other United Nations members, we will do whatever may be necessary to prevent the intrusion of any military forces not requested by the United Nations."

One source in a position to know administration policy said the phrase "whatever may be necessary" would include the shooting down of any Soviet troop-carrying planes which set out for the Congo.

Hopeful Sign Hailed

Both Mr. Hammarskjold and Mr. Lodge pointed to the rapid buildup of the UN peace force as a hopeful sign. The Secretary-General called the force a "major step forward in international cooperation" and the "biggest single effort" of its kind which the UN ever had undertaken—"far bigger and far more complicated than the United Nations Emergency Force" in the Middle East.

Along with troop deployment, UN efforts are being made, the Secretary-General said, to combat epidemics and food and fuel shortages. He disclosed that Lt. Gen. Raymond A. Wheeler, who directed clearance of the Suez Canal, has been assigned to prevent silting of the Congo River.

Mr. Hammarskjold said he had informed Moise Tshombe, secessionist Premier of Katanga Province, that the UN force had every right to enter any part of the Congo. Mr. Tshombe had declared he would not let the UN into Katanga.

Charges Traded

The Council chamber, scene of many bitter verbal exchanges, has rarely heard as emotional and searing a speech as was delivered by Belgian Foreign Minister Pierre Wigny, who contrasted his country's "Christian civilization" with the terror, murder, and rape which, citing vivid instances, he attributed to Congolese mutineers.

Thomas Kanza, minister delegate of the Congo, said that if Congolese women and children could write, they too could complain of Belgian atrocities. He appeared deeply stirred by M. Wigny's condescension and scorn.

Mr. Kuznetsov demanded that the UN order Belgium out of the Congo in 72 hours. It is virtually certain that a milder resolution, due to be offered July 21 by Tunisia, will be substituted. The question of Soviet interven[illegible] then may rise in ac[illegible]

The U. N. Moves In

New York Times Mon. July 18, 1960

The crisis in the Republic of the Congo has proved that when the United Nations has to move in time of emergency it can move fast. The first complaint from the Congolese Government was dated July 12, less than two weeks after the new republic had attained its independence. The Security Council, meeting one day later and carrying its meeting over into the early hours of yesterday morning, passed an effective resolution in which for once, and for obviously different reasons, the United States and Russia voted together.

Yesterday word came from Under Secretary Ralph Bunche in Leopoldville that U. N. troops from five African countries might be available to take over police duties within the next forty-eight hours. This would make it possible for the Belgian troops of which the Congolese have complained to be withdrawn from the disturbed area. It would also guarantee the lives and the property of white Europeans who have been subjected to numerous indignities, to threats and in some cases to actual injury during the past few days.

The prolonged debate of Wednesday night and Thursday morning, which led to the resolution instructing the Secretary General to provide the Government of the Congo "with such military assistance as may be necessary," had some astounding features. In the first place the Secretary General, stepping out of his usual noncommittal role, declared in an opening statement that "the presence of the Belgian troops cannot be accepted as a satisfactory stop-gap arrangement ending the re-establishment of order." Ambassador Lodge, speaking for the United States, urged "an instantaneous response to the urgent request of the Congo Government." Russian Ambassador Sobolev, using some of the identical phrases already given out in a broadcast over the Moscow radio, accused the United States, Britain and France of trying to "undermine the sovereignty" of the new republic. Mr. Sobolev also charged that the United States was holding an infantry division in Germany ready to invade the Congo.

Yet the result of the prolonged night meeting was to set in motion a drive toward peace, of which only the U. N., under the circumstances, is effectively capable. All that the Belgians or any nation in the Western world desires in the Republic of the Congo, or in other new states in Africa, is law and order. Colonialism lingers in the Congo and in several other parts of the world because the former imperialists did not train the people in the art of self-government. Yet it is ridiculous to the verge of insanity to charge with imperialism these nations which are now relinquishing their imperial power.

The U. N. experiment in the Republic of the Congo will be watched everywhere with intense interest. A considerable part of the future happiness of mankind depends on this experiment's success.

Wilkins Calls For GOP To Match Demo Platform

The Montgomery Advertiser Montgomery, Ala.

Thurs. 7-21-60

CHICAGO (AP)—A Negro leader told Republicans Wednesday they can't expect to get many Negro votes in November if the GOP fails at least to match the Democrats in writing a strong civil rights platform plank.

The advice was served on the Republican Resolutions committee by Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People in answer to a question put by Thomas E. Stagg Jr., a committeeman from Louisiana.

Stagg wanted to know what percentage of the Negro vote may go to the Republicans if they matched or outdid the Democrats on civil rights.

Wilkins replied he didn't know about percentages but "if you're thinking in bare political terms you can't lose—you can't afford not to be for a strong civil rights program." Wilkins implied that if the GOP wanted to attract Negro voters it would have to bid at least as high as the Democrats.

DIFFERENT VIEW

A different view has been given the GOP platform drafters by Sen. Barry Goldwater. The Arizona Republican said the federal government should concern itself in the civil rights field only with elimination of discrimination in the field of voting rights.

Goldwater argued the right to a ballot is the only civil right guaranteed in the Constitution. He said equal treatment in employment, education, housing and so on are civil liberties—not guaranteed by the Constitution, and thus outside governmental enforcement obligations. Some Southern Republican delegates shared Goldwater's viewpoint.

Charles H. Percy, youthful president of the Bell & Howell Co., and Platform Committee chairman, made a point of being on hand at a labor subcommittee hearing to quiz AFL-CIO President George Meany. Percy said both Vice President Richard M. Nixon and New York Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller agree that tax reforms to encourage business expansion are needed to improve the economy.

LABOR HEARING

Meany, asked what he thought of this stand, said he considered government planning to boost production and federal spending to meet unfilled needs would create more jobs and more customers for industry, making the nation stronger in the process.

COSTS, PRICES DOWN

Percy didn't disagree directly but said, "I believe the way to stimulate the economy is to get costs down and prices down." He said lack of such reductions is the reason for growing foreign competition in the domestic market.

Meany, noting that the steel industry is operating at only about half its capacity, said the problem now is not increased capital investment, though that should not be discouraged. The labor union chief said President Eisenhower's administration has neglected to marshal America's resources to attain full employment.

In that connection, Meany said the total number of manhours worked in the American economy is actually less today than when Eisenhower took office. More people are at work, he conceded, but many at only part-time jobs.

Meany said organized labor is "flexible" in considering methods by which employment can be expanded. For example, he said higher tariff walls may be needed for a few hard-hit industries although, in general, labor unions favor free trade.

President Arthur H. Motley of the U.S. Chamber o fCommerce asked for Republican platform pledges to put labor unions under the antitrust laws, to tighten boycott restrictions on union activities, and to prohibit compulsory union membership arrangements such as the union shop. Meany, on the other hand, called for substantial repeal of the Taft-Hartley and Landrum-Griffin labor relations laws.

Hammarskjold Pledged To Help, Lumumba Says

The Atlanta Constitution Atlanta, Ga. 7-21

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (UPI)—Congo Premier Ptarice Lumumba said Monday U.N. Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold promised him he would "spare no effort" to obtain the withdrawal of Belgian troops from the turbulent new republic.

Tues. 7-26-60

"He assured me that in that spirit he will negotiate with the Belgian government in Brussels," Lumumba told a news conference following an 80-minute meeting with Hammarskjold.

"I even asked him if he could set a deadline for the complete withdrawal of the Belgian troops," Lumumba said. "The secretary general assured me that he would spare no effort."

The goateed African Premier also said Hammarskjold assured him "there is no question of an independent Katanga," the mineral-rich Congo province which seceded from Lumumba's nation in the midst of a mutinous upheaval after Belgium gave the Congo its freedom July 1.

"There is only the Republic of Congo," Lumumba said.

The Congo premier's busy day at the U.N. included a conference with Soviet first Foreign Minister V. V. Kuznetsov and other members of the Russian delegation, the Tass News Agency announced.

Congo Mutineers Charged With Rape As Revolt Fails

Montgomery Advertiser 7-1

Fri. 7-8-60

LEOPOLDVILLE, Congo (AP)—Mutinous Negro soldiers Thursday ended a two-day army revolt marked by charges of white women they had been raped by mutineers. Montgomery, Ala

A railroad official said women brought here on a special train from Kisantu, between the capital and Thysville, told him they had been raped by Congolese soldiers who invaded their homes looking for weapons. They said their husbands were forced to walk to the soldiers' barracks but were later released.

At one point in the uprising in this week-old African nation, white residents of Leopoldville patrolled the road leading from the mutineers' camp because of reports the disatfected army men were marching on the capital.

A government spokesman said the mutinous soldiers held the road between Leopoldville and Thysville Wednesday and turned back a group of officials on their way to Thysville.

Tanks sent from Leopoldville, in turn, forced back a detachment of the mutineers heading for the capital. Noncommissioned officers were removed from the detachment and the band apparently disintegrated.

In another incident, police and military forces were sent to Stanleyville, nearly 800 miles to the northeast, to deal with convicts who broke out of prison and demonstrated before the government building.

Information Minister Anicet Kashamura confirmed the army mutineers at Thysville, about 75 miles southwest of Leopoldville, had restored to command the white Belgian officers they had held in confinement. In Leopoldville, most mutineers returned to barracks.

Much of the credit for settling the mutiny was given to Prime Minister Patrice Lumumba and President Joseph Kasavubu, who flew to Thysville to address the insurgents. Agreement to surrender and release Belgian officers was reached at these meetings.

SHAKY NORMALITY

With the collapse of the revolt, the two centers of resistance—Leopoldville and Thysville — returned to shaky normality. The tension, while not entirely dissipated, had eased greatly.

A factor in the return of comparative calm to the capital was settlement of a 10-day strike of some 10,000 dock and railway warehouse workers whose walkout had tied up incoming supplies.

The 25,000-man Negro army revolted to enforce demands for more pay and replacement of white Belgian officers by Congolese.

One result of the mutiny was the ouster of Lt. Gen. Emile Janssens as commander in chief of the army. Kashamura made it clear Thursday that Janssen was fired by the new Congo government although he had tendered his resignation.

In Pretoria, the South African government recalled its consuls general at Leopoldville and Elizabethville because of differences with the Congo's new government.

Eric Louw, South African minister for external affairs, said the action was taken after Lumumba informed the South African government he was unable to agree to its request to maintain consular representation in the Congo.

South Africa had no official representation at the Congo's independence day ceremonies last Thursday. A resolution by the Congolese Parliament stated South Africa would be unwelcome at the festivities because of its segregation policies.

Hatred Drove Congo Revolt

Montgomery Advertiser

By ANDREW BOROWIEC

SONGOLOLO, the Congo (AP) —The main driving force of the black man's revolt in the Congo was hatred of the white man's paternalism.

Montgomery, Ala.

The uprising of the 25,000-man Force Publique—the Congo's Belgian-trained army—came just a week after the June 30 proclamation of independence from Belgian rule.

Mon. 7/25/60

BREWED SLOWLY

The revolt spread like a flame throughout the Congo bush and jungle. The pent-up feelings of inferiority, the 80 years of servility, flared up in rape, looting and killing.

P. 8B

The revolt brewed slowly in that first week. Although the blue flag of independence was snapping over the Congo towns and villages, to the average Negro nothing had changed.

Belgian officials continued to reign over him. Belgian officers commanded the troops. Big ships continued to carry Congo products to Belgium.

"Is that independence?" men were asking one another in shacks with thatched roofs and in barrack-like homes in Negro sections of the gleaming white cities built by the Belgians.

When the soldiers screamed demands at rallies, the new Congo government did not know what to do. In a nation of more than 13 million, only a dozen black men had been to a university. None had administrative or leadership experience.

WENT ON RAMPAGE

Despite pleas and promises from their own government officials, the soldiers went on a rampage against the whites.

Today, more than two weeks after savagery swept the Congo, bitterness is still in the black man.

In this lower Congo capital of an administrative region bordering on Portuguese Angola, I listened to complaints and pleas for help.

Although my face is white, I was asked to join the village officials as they sat to discuss how to make democracy work in the Congo.

Soldiers with the naive eyes of children and an ever ready smile tried to explain to me why they revolted.

'BAD WOMEN'

"Yes, our men raped white women," one said. "They were bad women. They walked around in shorts showing their legs. But when black men came to them, they refused to shake hands. Belgian officers slept with our women all the time. But we could never sleep with theirs."

To the primitive, illiterate soldier of the Congo army independence should have abolished the separating him from the white woman.

When he saw the barrier remained, he got the woman against her will.

In giant Camp Hardy near Thysville, about 75 miles west of Leopoldville, black soldiers locked up their officers for two days and queued up at the bungalows where their wives lived.

And then they asked 35 officers to stay and command them.

"The officers refused because of what we did to their wives," a soldier said. "Why? I gave my wife many times to white men."

For the officials of the new nation, the task is to make sure that the people will listen to their orders, that the people have work and enough to eat.

FLED POSTS

When Belgians fled their posts in the interior, the Congo government sent a train from Leopoldville through the lower Congo.

At ramshackle stations in the dusty bush, the train discharged hastily recruited Congolese administrators.

They found villages controlled either by mutinous soldiers or the tight apparatus of President Joseph Kasavubu's party, the Abako.

The officials came from Leopoldville. Most of them were followers of Premier Patrice Lumumba's national Congolese movement.

They found the desks of their Belgian predecessors locked or looted. Abako party members refused to obey their orders.

U.N. troops control the port cities of the lower Congo. But the interior continues to be torn by tribal strifen internal squabbles, disorder and uncertaintv.

"Will peace and order reign soon in the Congo? You must help us," a Congolese official said. "We do not hate the white man, but we don't want the Belgians back. They have had their chance.

"Give us Americans, Russians, anybody. Don't leave us alone. We are young and we need help, or else blood will flow again in the Congo."

Congo Tragedy Personal For Two Montgomerians

Montgomery Advertiser, Montgomery, Ala.

Mon. 7/25/60

Montgomerians have been shocked by the eruption of savagery in the Belgian Congo. But to a few the tragedy is especially vivid and personal—they have kinspeople there.

P. 8B

Montgomery restaurant man Victor Hanan, for example, had a number of uncles and cousins in the new African nation.

He's received no word from them directly, but understands some of them made their way safely to neighboring Rhodesia, leaving behind their businesses and property.

Hanan is himself an old Congo hand. He lived and worked there from 1928 to 1938.

He recalls a land of primitive customs, where European civilization spread a thin veneer over tribal ignorance and superstition.

It's a vast country, some of it breathtakingly beautiful, according to Hanan. He covered much of it, and the names of many of the tribes and places currently in the news are well known to him.

"There are a lot of places where a white man has never set his foot," he reminisced here Friday.

* * *

He believes that allowing the Congolese to take over the rule of their own country was a tragic error.

"They're too far behind. It will take them a long time to reach a point where they can rule themselves," he says. "So many of the tribes are jealous of each other, they can't make a government. They hate each other."

VICTOR HANAN
Lived In Congo

He points to the current troubles in Ruanda - Urundi, between the Congo and Tanganyika, where a tall race of handsome Negroes had formerly long lived in indolence, forcing a tribe of smaller Negroes to work for them as slaves.

The latter have now rebelled, raising the prospect of long and bloody strife.

"And take this fellow Lumumba," says Hanan. "He's only been through high school. How is somebody like that going to rule a country?"

Echoing this sentiment is Isaac Alahdeff, also in the restaurant business here. He spent six years in the Congo, working in a merchandise business in Elizabethville.

"They've got to have white forces there," said Alhadeff. "They've got to have somebody —Belgians, Englishmen or Russians."

His brother-in-law is among the missing in the Congo.

Neither Alahdeff or Hanan recalled any incidents of strife between black and white during their years in the Congo. But Hanan remmembers one white man who almost lost his life to native customs.

The European, traveling by car along a Congo road, was unfortunate enough to run into a pygmy. He stopped his car, and was promptly taken prisoner by other pygmies, who tied him to a tree.

They were waiting, he learned, for the injured pygmy to die. Then he was to be killed, in accordance with jungle law.

Luckily, the injured pygmy recovered, and the white man was allowed to go his way.

Diplomats Believe Heat Taken Off Congo Crisis

Montgomery Advertiser, Montgomery, Ala.
Tues. 8/23/60

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP) — Diplomats expressed belief Monday that developments within the past 24 hours had taken much of the heat out of the Congo crisis.

Relations between Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold and representative of the Congo government continued tense but the Congolese apparently are not ready to jeopardize U.N. aid by clinging to unacceptable conditions.

Major developments included:

1. A resounding victory by Hammarskjold in Sunday's security council debate that gave solid backing for his position despite attacks by the Congo government and the Soviet Union.

2. An announcement in Leopoldville that Premier Patrice Lumumba would not press his demands for U.N. aid in trying to put down the rebellious government of Katanga province. In Katanga the secessionist government of Premier Moise Tshombe and allies from elsewhere in the Congo called on the Congo army to get rid of Premier Lumumba and join their effort to form a confederation of Congo states; they called Lumumba a traitorous helper of "communist colonialism."

3. Assurances that the last Belgian military units would be out of the Congo within a week. Hammarskjold said the Congo situation no longer was a threat to international peace.

Hammarskjold was reported highly pleased by the support he received in the 11-nation council. Even Tunisia, the only African nation on the council, backed him up. The support was so solid that the Soviet Union decided against any formal challenge.

The secretary-general, however, has concluded that his position would be less vulnerable if he followed the same procedure he has found so successful in directing the U.N. emergency force in Palestine.

This calls for setting up an advisory committee at U.N. headquarters made up of representatives of the countries which have contributed military units to the 14,500-man U.N. force in the Congo. A U.N. spokeman said he would proceed promtly to form his new body.

Despite word from Leopoldville that the Congo government has withdrawn its demands on the U.N., there was still no word here that the Congo delegation, headed by Vice-Premier Antoine Gizenga, would see Hammarskjold before it leaves for home Tuesday night.

Hammarskjold has no immediate plans to return to the Congo. He flew back last week to lay the problem before the security council after he came under heavy attack from Lumumba.

Dr. Ralph J. Bunche, special U.N. representative in the Congo, will continue to represent the secretary-general on the scene until his newly designated replacement, Indian diplomat Jaieshwar Dayal, arrives. Bunche has been under attack by the Lumumba government.

The main cause of the friction between Lumumba and the U.N. leaders was a dispute as to whether U.N. forces should be used to end the announced secession of Katanga province. Hammarskjold insisted that the U.N. could not intervene in any internal political dipsute. this dispute was supported by nine of the security council's 11 members.

Lumumba Threatens To Seek Aid Outside Of U.N. Source

The Montgomery Advertiser, Montgomery, Ala.
8-21-60

LEOPOLDVILLE, The Congo (AP)—Congo Premier Patrice Lumumba said Saturday his government has authorized him to seek military and other aid outside the United Nations if his demands are not satisfied by the U. N. Security Council Sunday.

Lumumba said his Cabinet has authorized him to "make contact for direct aid from any country in all fields as from tomorrow."

Government supporters attending the news conference and one or two Communist correspondents applauded when the Premier made his statement.

"That," said Lumumba, "is the applause of 14 million Congolese."

Asked where he would apply for aid if the Security Council did not agree to send the African-Asian observer group he has requested and meet other demands, Lumumba said: "I don't think it will be necessary. And anyway it is an affair of state."

Correspondents asked whether he would apply to African countries or white nations and he replied: "I do not make any distinction.'

Lumumba said he called his news conference to "clarify international opinion."

"We can always tell the United Nations to withdraw," Lumumba said. "The United Nations came here at our request and we can ask them to leave."

But the Premier went on to say he knows "the United Nations understands its role here."

He took pains to repeat he had confidence in the United Nations, if he had lost confidence in Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold.

"We do not want to replace the Belgian occupation with a United Nations occupation," he said. "The United Nations task here is limited."

The opposition Abako party declared earlier that it intends to rid the country of Lumumba "by legal or illegal means."

Party officials said it intends to censure Lumumba's policy and his attacks against the U.N. when the Congolese Parliament meets in 10 days.

Congo Chief Drops Fight Against Dag

Montgomery Ala.
Tues. 8/23/60

—LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo (AP) — Premier Patrice Lumumba's government backed down Monday and dropped its efforts to force Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold to revise U.N. operations in the Congo.

The government reversed itself after the Security Council, meeting in New York, in effect reaffirmed the secretary-general's policy in conducting the U.N. military and civilian aid program

A spokesman issued the news following a three-hour conference of Lumumba and the silver-haired Soviet ambassador to the Congo Mikhail D. Yakovlev.

The government "sees no reason to press its demands," said the spokesman, Serge Michel, a left-wing Frenchman of Russian origin who is Lumumba's chief press aide.

ATMOSPHERE GOOD

"The government is satisfied that Belgian soldiers will be withdrawn. The government considers the atmosphere good."

The demands, voiced by Lumumba last week, included withdrawal of all white soldiers from the Congo, a supply of U.N. planes to speed Congolese soldiers to interior trouble spots, and the appointment of a 14-nation African Asian commission to advise Hammarskjold.

Evidently referring to the Soviet Union, Lumumba had threatened to appeal to another power unless the Security Council bowed to his demands.

It was clear that the Security Council's tacit approval of the policy pursued by Hammarskjold has played a major role in influencing the stand of the Lumumba regime

Lumumba has moved from one extreme to another in his stormy career as the leader of this chaotic, newly independent nation.

Lumumba was in telephone contact with Deputy Premier Antoine Gizenga, an extreme nationalist who heads the Congolese delegation at the U.N.

According to Congolese officials Gizenga was satisfied with the way the situation developed.

Gizenga reportedly stressed that "no one at the Security Council said that the government of the Congo was wrong."

The government of secessionist Katanga province also welcomed the outcome of the Security Council session. Premier Moise Tshombe's regime said in a communique issued at Elisabethville, Katanga's capital, that it retains faith in the U.N. and would welcome Hammarskjold if he chose to make another visit there.

It was also announced that a delegation representing political organizations in various provinces of the Congo will leave for Leopoldville Tuesday to appeal to all political parties supporting the idea of confederation to work out a formula for applying it as soon as possible. Lumumba opposes all such moves.

BELGIAN ARRESTED BY CONGOLESE TROOPS

Vincent Block, a Belgian arriving at Leopoldville airport in Congo, is guarded by Congolese troops after being arrested for possessing a firearm. He was taken to military authorities for questioning. The gun was confiscated.—AP Wirephoto

18a 1960 CONGO

Lumumba Assails Belgium as Congo Becomes Free

Associated Press Radiophoto

King Baudouin speaking in Leopoldville. At lower right is Joseph Kasavubu, President.

The New York Times 7-1-60

By HARRY GILROY

Special to The New York Times.

LEOPOLDVILLE, Republic of Congo, June 30—An attack on colonialism by the Premier of the new Republi cof Congo marred the ceremonies today in which King Baudouin of the Belgians proclaimed the territory's independence. [At midnight Thursday the Republic of Somalia was proclaimed, merging the former Italian trusteeship territory of Somalia and the former British territory of Somaliland. At the same time Ghana, after three years as a self-governing British dominion, became a republic within the Britsh Commonwealth.] The Congo independence ceremony before the two chambers of Parliament was attended by leading Belgian officials and diplomats from all over the world. It began in an atmosphere of friendship but was abruptly transformed by the militant speech of Premier Patrice Lumumba, who recited the sufferings of the African whites.

Two hours later at a state dinner however, Mr. Lumumba toasted King Baudouin and praised Belgium for the magnificent work she had done in building the Congo. He said the Congolese people were grateful that Belgium had given them freedom without delay and he said the two countries would remain friendly.

Nevertheless, his first speech remained for many listeners the most significant utterance of the day.

Kasavubu Expresses Goodwill

The ceremonies were held in the beautifully draped circular hall of the National Palace that was to have been the residence of the Belgian Governor General.

Joseph Kasavubu, the new nations Chief of State, expressed goodwill toward Belgium and won hearty applause from the members of Parliament. Apparently as a result of behind-the-scenes discussion, Mr. Kasavubu dropped the last section of his prepared address, which was to have ended with the declaration: "I proclaim in the name of the nation the birth of the Republic of the Congo!"

Instead, Mr. Lumumba moved from his place alongside Premier Gaston Eyskens of Belgium and went to the lectern to speak. He wore the maroon sash of the Order of the Crown, Belgium's highest decoration, which he received last night.

He said that June 30, 1960 would be known for the "glorious history of our struggle for liberty" He asserted that no Congolese would ever forget the struggle in which "we have not spared our strength, our privations, our sufferings or our blood.

Cites 'Wounds' of Colonialism

It was a struggle that was indespensable, he said, for putting an end to the "humiliating slavery which had been imposed on us by force." He commented that colonialism had left wounds too keen and too painful to be wiped from memory.

He asked if the Congolese could ignore work done for pay "that did not permit us to satisfy our hunger nor clothe us nor lodge us decently nor raise our children who are dear to us?

Premier Lumumba reminded the members of the new Parliament of "the ironies,t he insults, the blows that we had to submit to morning, noon and night because we were Negroes."

He asked if they had not known "that our lands were despoiled in the name of rule, supposedly legal, that recognized only that might makes right?"

He said the Congolese had suffered because of political or religious beliefs. He mentioned the magnificent homes of the whites compared with the poor places oft he blacks and the color bars that kept the Congolese from theatres, restaurants and stores.

'Sublime Struggle' Foreseen

He said that Congo was now in the hands of her children and that a "sublime new struggle" lay ahead to bring peace, prosperity and grandeur.

He declared Congo must be made the "rallying point of all Africa" and that the nation must put an end to the oppression of free thought and give to all citizens the fundamental liberties guaranteed in the United Nations Declaration of the Rights of Man.

Premier Lumumba said the Congolese ought to be able to count on assistance from foreign countries, including Belgium, in developing their new country.

He said Belgium had finally understood the meaning of history and had not tried to oppose Congo's independence. He noted that Belgium was ready to provide help and friendship and that a treaty had been signed that would be profitable to both countries.

Baudouin Is Cheered

King Baudouin was cheered as he drove to the ceremony. In the first speech of the day he gave a careful statement of Belgium's claim to have delivered the Congolese from the Arab slave trade and to have created the fabric of civilization on which their parliament now rests.

The territory was acquired in 1885 by King Leopold II, Baudouin's great-granduncle, as a personal empire. Belgium took it over as a colony in 1908.

King Baudouin cited the opening of the Congo to international trade, the building of transport lines, the establishment of medical services that wiped out old plagues, the modernizing of agriculture and the starting of industrial enterprises.

He called attention to the educational work that had been done, the training of workmen and the beginning of the development of an intellectual élite.

"We are happy to have given the Congo, despite great difficulties, the indispensable elements for preparing a country moving along the path of development," the King said.

"The great independence movement under way in all Africa has found on the part of Belgian authorities the greatest understanding," he added. "In the face of the unanimous desire of your people we have not hesitated to recognize your independence at the present moment."

Dangers Foreseen

King Baudouin foresaw as the principal danger threatening the Congolese the inexperience of the people, tribal struggles and "the attraction that you exercise for certain areas of foreign powers desiring to profit from weakness."

He urged the Congo Parliament to continue the services nestablished by the Belgians and to turn to Belgium for help whenever it was need. He concluded: "My country and I recognize with joy and emotion that the Congo has acceded on June 30, 1960, in full accord and friendships with Belgium, to independence and international sovereignty."

Premier Lumumba's speech produced comments of surprise and disappointment among Belgium and western diplomats. The Soviet diplomats present seemed to be enjoying the occasion.

Eisenhower Sends Gift

Robert Murphy former under the secretary of State and head of the United State delegation to the indepence ceremonies, presented credentials to Mr. Kasavubu and gave him a bust of Abraham Lincoln sent by President Eisenhower.

Mr. Murphy said the United States was prepared to finance the training of 300 Congolese in U. S. schools or institutions of other countries. He announced that the United States was elevating of other countries. He announced that the United States was elevating its consulate Genegal here to an embassy with Consul General John Tomlinson as Charge d'Affaires.

Clare H. Timberlake, who has been counselor of the U. S. Embassy in Bonn and who accompanied Mr. Murphy, is scheduled to become the U. S. Ambassador.

Ambassadors from many other countries announced diplomatic recognition of the Congo Republic, Israel announced that Ehud Avriel former Ambassador to Ghana, would become Israel's Ambassador here.

LUMUMBA'S SPEECH WORRIES CONGOLESE

The New York Times

Special to The New York Times.

LEOPOLDVILLE, Republic of Congo, July 1—A struggle is going on inside the Congo Government over the speech yesterday by Premier Patrice Lumumba in which he condemned the treatment of the Congolese under the Belgian colonial regime.

The speech caused anxiety among many diplomats here, although it was generally considered to have been intended for domestic consumption.

Last night and today members of Mr. Lumumba's Cabinet told Belgian Cabinet ministers here for the independence celebration that they disapproved of the speech. Mr. Lumumba is reported to have told Belgians that he regretted that the speech had distressed Belgium.

The Premier apparently intended to soften the blow of the speech when he delivered a toast to King Baudouin later yesterday. In the toast he praised the King and Belgium for granting independence. At a state diner he continued on this theme by speaking of the magnificent capital of Leopoldville given to the new state as a result of Belgian work.

However, some members of the Cabinet are still disturbed and are talking about issuing a Cabinet statement to counter the effect of the speech.

The New York Times July 1, 1960

AFRICA'S CHANGING MAP: Ghana (1) was transformed into a republic today as two new states, the Republic of Congo (2) and Somalia (3), celebrated independence.

Congo, Once a King's 'Estate,' Rises From Stone Age to Nation

Fifty-five years ago, in the heartland of darkest Africa, which formally became the independent Republic of Congo today, the wheel was not used, language was not written, cannibalism and witchcraft were common, and the site of the capital Leopoldville, was still a dense jungle.

That area became known to the outside world only eighty-five years ago. At that time the British-born American newspaper man Sir Henry Morton Stanley, who had earlier tracked down the missing Dr. David Livingstone, undertook a long exploration of the Congo River.

Sir Henry later tried to interest the British in the new land but failed. However, he succeeded with King Leopold II of Belgium, who decided to use his own great wealth to develop the Congo as a kind of personal estate after the Belgian Government had refused to show interest. King Leopold set up the Independent State of the Congo, which lasted until 1908, when the Belgian Parliament took it over as a colony.

The Belgian Government set out to substitute the carpenter's hammer for the tribal drum, introducing the twentieth century overnight to a primitive people divided into many warring tribes.

The 13,600,000 Congolese, scattered over an immense area of equatorial forest and savanna about a third as large as the United States, are sitll divided into about 200 tribes, some of them still warring.

More than 400 dialects are still spoken in the Republic of Congo. The range of social evolution almost covers the range of human growth, starting with the Stone Abe aborigines in the Pygmy tribes, who use arrows and spears dipped in poison. The new state is home not only to the world's smallest human beings—the four-foot Pygmies—but also to some of the world's tallest—the seven-foot-tall Watusis.

There is also a "lost greatness" for the Congolese to remember in their new struggles. The Kingdom of the Congo flourished from the fourteenth century and even exchanged envoys with Portugal, the Vatican, BBrazil and the Netherlands. But the kingdom fell victim to the slave traffic and began a rapid decline in the eighteenth century.

Today barely half of the Congolese can read and write, and only sixteen Congolese are university or college graduates. There are no Congolese doctors, lawyers or engineers, and no African officers in the 25,000-man Congolese army.

The independence movement began among Congolese working for the colonial administration or for commercial companies in a land that is rich in copper and cobalt and industrial diamonds. At first, after World War II, the Congolese talked only of "equal pay for equal work," but following quickly upon this came talk of political rights.

In December, 1957, the Belgian Colonial Administration gave the Congolese their first measure of self-rule by holding elections in Leopoldville, Elisabethville and Jadotville. A year later the cry for "immediate independence and departure of all the Belgians" had become common.

The Belgian Government tried to carry out a plan for independence by stages, but rioting in Leopoldville in January, 1959 aroused pressure for early independence. That independence was agreed upon at a round table conference in Brussels earlier this year.

SOMALI IS BORN AS FREE REPUBLIC

New Nation Merges Former Italian Trusteeship Area With Somaliland

MOGADISHU, Somalia, Friday, July 1 (Reuters)—The new republic of Somalia was proclaimed at a minute after midnight today.

Independence for this Italian trusteeship territory of Somalia on the horn of Africa coincided with the union of Somalia and Somaliland, a former British territory that became independent five days ago.

Cannons thundered in salute, fireworks burst and crowds danced and sang in the beflagged streets.

The proclamation followed a glittering reception attended by delegates from seventy-two countries. Congratulatory messages poured in from around the world.

The white-starred flag of the republic was hoisted with full military honors.

"Joyous Moment" Hailed

Addressing cheering crowds from a floodlit balcony of the Legislative Assembly building, the provisional head of state, Aden Abdullah, said the world was "listening to the new independent state at this joyous moment."

He said "we address our thoughts" also to the millions of Africans "under the yoke of injustice and misunderstanding."

"Let us renew our appeal to the world for peace and justice for these brethren," he declared.

Mr. Aden asserted that the republic would maintain good relations with all nations and would defend "the sacred values of democracy."

A United Nations representative, Constantin A. Stravropoulos of Greece, said, indenpendence could never have been achieved without an enthusiastic and constructive spirit of the Somali people and Italy's enlightened leadership.

Mogadisha was in a jubliant mood. Housing accommodations caused the biggest problem because of the influx of visitors, some of whom slept in cars and in the open air.

The two newest hotels were largely commandeered for foreign delegations.

The union with Somaliland will be formally ratified tomorrow by the National Assembly.

Observers predict Mr. Aden will be the first provisional President. He is a former trader who at 52 is Somalia's elder statesman. He is expected to hold the post for a year. After that, a referendum will choose a new President.

A behind-the-scenes struggle is under way for the post of Premier. There is strong support for Somalia's Premier, Abdullahi Issa, 38, but the need to cement ties with Somaliland may result in the selection of its Premier, Mohammed Haji Ibrahim Egal. Mr. Ibrahim is regarded as a moderate.

Unification problems were mounting. The biggest problem is a unified army command. Britain is providing military aid to her former territory and has specified that she does not want a unified command at this stage.

The agreement with Britain provides that Somaliland troops must be under British officers for siv months. The British aid is intended for the Somaliland region exclusively.

One of the eight Somali-Italian treaties due for signature today is believed to be related primarily to military aid and to the development of a Somali air force.

The independence celebrations will continue until Tuesday with a round of parties and dinners.

The population of the new republic is about 2,000,000.

Trusteeship Unit in Quantry

Special to The New York Times.

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y., June 30—The Trusteeship Council raced toward adjournment tonight before it becomes improperly constituted.

The problem, which the United Nations anticipated last year but failed to solve, deals with an incongruity in the composition of the Trusteeship Council.

Somalia's freedom ends Italy's role as an administrator of the former trust territory and she will automatically give up her council membership. But the United Nations Charter states that the council must always be "equally divided between those members * * * which administer trust territories and those which do not."

This requires the elimination of one of the seven non-administering members to maintain the balance. However, the Charter does not spell out how this should be done and no nation has expressed its interest in resigning.

Actually, the fourteen-nation body had been illegally constituted since April 27, when Togo became independent and ended France's role as an administering member.

Unlike Italy, however, France remained a member, a privilege accorded to the five permanent members of the Security Council. She merely "moved over" to the non-administering side.

Technically, the move presaged the elimination of two nations, one to make room for France and the other to maintain the balance. With the independence of Somalia, the number of nations to be eliminated from the council has now risen to four; Italy and three elected nations.

Trusteeship officials are looking hopefully to the fall session of the General Assembly to untangle the snarl. Last year a five-hour debate that ended at 4 A. M. on the last day of the session failed to produce any solution. Fortunately, the Trusteeship Council is not expected to meet again until after the General Assembly has had a chance to solve the problem.

SOUTH AFRICA SAYS FEW WILL BE CURBED

Special to The New York Times.

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa, June 30 — François C. Erasmus, Minister of Justice, said today that "only a percentage" of 1,200 persons to be released from detention in South Africa would be subject to restrictions on their activities.

"The majority of those being released are being set free unconditionally and are not subject to any restriction," he said in a statement.

Persons to be freed in the next two weeks are among 1,900 jailed without formal charge or trial under South Africa's state of emergency, which is in effect in all major towns and cities.

Some who have been released have had to obey a curfew, make daily reports to the police and limit their movements.

The Government has said the state of emergency would be lifted gradually. Mr. Erasmus said today that the Government intended to do away with restrictions gradually on released detainees in the next few weeks.

It was reported yesterday that all 1,200 would be under restrictions.

RECORDS & RESEARCH
PO BOX 68
TUSKEGEE INST
ALA
10 12 60

The B'ham News B'ham Ala Associated Press wirephoto

Wounded Congolese beseeches foe

Aug 7-17-60

A wounded Congolese soldier stretches a hand toward his foe, a Belgian paratrooper, after clash at Leopoldville airport Wednesday. The Belgian troops drove mutinous Congo soldiers from the airfield where hundreds of European civilians sought evacuation.

Congolese Try to Keep Americans at Missions

The Birmingham News
New York

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo, July 17 (AP)—Congolese tribesmen are trying to stop American missionaries from leaving their posts in the interior of the Congo.

Messages received in Leopoldville by the American mission radio center said crowds had prevented the landing of United States evacuating planes in several parts of Leopoldville and Kasai provinces. 7-18-60

The messages said the crowds sought to head off the departure of American doctors and teachers. P. 5

The newly opened United States Embassy here announced that about half of the 2,000 Americans in the Congo had been evacuated and most of the others were out of danger. No contact has been estabblished, however, with several isolated posts in the jungle.

New nation, Belgium lock horns—

The Birmingham News P. 1

Word war rages; UN force in Congo

Birmingham, Ala., Sun., 7-17-60

LEOPOLDVILLE, The Congo, July 16—(AP)—A vast airlift of UN forces was in full swing Saturday to the chaotic Congo, locked in a war of words between its new rulers and its former Belgian masters.

Violence between Negro crowds and Belgian soldiers threatened the capital as the UN vanguard of Negro soldiers from Ghana and Tunisia took up positions around the capital. More soldiers were on the way from Morocco and Ethiopia to swell the UN force that ultimately may reach 6000 men.

Congolese police, assigned by the UN to share police duties with Belgian soldiers in the capital, dispersed a crowd of several thousand Negroes in downtown Leopoldville. The crowd had been shouting insults at Belgian troops on patrol duty.

The crowd was angry because Belgium ignored an ultimatum from Congo Premier Patrice Lumumba to pull its troops out of the Congo by 6 a.m.

Instead, the Belgians announced they were sending in three more companies of troops to protect nationals who want to leave—as 25,000 of the Congo's 100,000 white population have done since the Congo army went on a rampage 10 days ago.

AS UN TROOPS arrived in Leopoldville, Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold concentrated on lining up trasportation, technicians and other help needed in the strife-torn Congo.

For one thing, he is seeking doctors and medical supplies.

Hammarskjold was reported to have asked Yugoslavia if it could supply some light planes, pilots and technicians.

MEANWHILE, Belgium's permanent UN representative, Walter Loridan, sent a letter to the secretary general asking for a UN inquiry into atrocities he said were committed against Belgians by mutinous Congolese troops.

Lumumba angrily accused Belgium of trying to provoke trouble throughout the Congo. He said Belgian paratroopers had landed at Coquilhatville, on the equator, taken over provincial offices and had killed a Congolese soldier. P. 8

Lumumba talked with reporters before leaving with President Joseph Kasavubu for Stanleyville, in the Eastern Congo, where he once was jailed by the Belgians for starting a riot.

Birmingham News

LUMUMBA DECLARED there can be no resumption of diplomatic relations with Belgium until all Belgian soldiers leave the Congo, including the bases at Kamina and Kitona occupied by treaty after the Congo got its independence June 30. Lumumba charged that the Belgians had violated the treaty. Sun 7-17-60

The premier also accused the Belgians of being behind the decision of rich Katanga Province in the Southeast Congo to declare its independence.

Belgian Radio said Maj. Gen. Carl Carlsson von Horn had arrived to take over command of UN forces and conferred with UN Undersecretary Ralph J. Bunche, who had been placed in temporary charge of UN forces. But later it said he had been delayed and would reach Leopoldville tomorrow. Von Horn has been chief of the UN commission in Jerusalem, keeping the peace between Israelis and Arabs, the broadcast said.

THE UNITED STATES was in charge of the big airlift flying in troops and supplies from Tunisia and Morocco, and was unloading planeloads of flour and other food for the hungry nation.

The supply situation was so bad that the 40-man American ground crew supervising unloading operations was told planes would have to fly to Brazzaville for fuel for return trips.

Brazzaville, across the Congo River from Leopoldville, is in the Congo Republic, the former French colony. The city has been a main escape hatch for thousands of whites fleeing the Congo terror.

THE AMERICANS also had only the food and water they brought with them. The Tunisian soldiers flown in on U. S. planes had to sleep on the concrete floor of an airport hangar. A tent city on a golf course was being hurriedly prepared for them.

The troops from Gahana will be housed in the main military camp in Leopoldville, presumably moving in as the Belgians move out. But when the Belgians would leave was problematical.

Belgian officials emphasized they would protect their nationals until UN forces can assure order and the danger is past. Then the Belgian soldiers will return to Belgium or to bases they occupy by treaty with the Congo.

Belgium Cautions New Congo Republic

Christian Science Monitor

By the Associated Press

Leopoldville, Republic of Congo

Belgium has handed over the rich Congo to its native leaders with a word of caution and an appeal for friendship. The new Premier responded with a stinging attack on Belgian colonial rule.

Boston, Mass

Proudly wearing the mauve-red sash of Belgium's top decoration, the Order of Leopold, presented before the independence ceremonies, Premier Patrice Lumumba uttered these harsh words in the crowded Parliament chamber, June 30:

"We have know the ironies and insults, the blows to which we had to submit morning, noon, and night because we are Negroes."

The tall, goateed nationalist said the Congolese suffered under Belgian law, which he described as never the same for blacks as for whites—"accommodating for one, cruel and inhuman for the other."

"We have known atrocious sufferings for political opinions or religious beliefs," he went on. "We have known that in the cities were magnificent houses for the whites and decrepit huts for the blacks, that a black was not admitted to the cinemas nor in the restaurants nor in the stores called 'European'.

"But despite all that, we, who have been chosen by your elected representatives to direct our dear country, we, who have suffered in our bodies and in our hearts from colonial oppression, say to you that all is finished.

"The Republic of Congo has been proclaimed and is in the hands of its own children. Together, my brothers, we must begin a new fight, a sublime fight, which is going to lead our country to peace, to prosperity, and to grandeur."

Somber Scene

The scene in the unfinished chamber was somber. The deputies wore dark business suits, although a few combined their European dress with the plumed headdresses.

Belgium's young King Baudouin, resplendent in a white uniform, was greeted by thunderous applause as he rose to speak. An artillery battery boomed slowly as he proclaimed the Congo's independence, ending 80 years of Belgian rule over the vast colony in Central Africa.

"Your task is immense and you are the first to realize it," King Baudouin told the new leaders of the nation one-third the size of the United States.

"The principal dangers which threaten you are: the inexperience in self-government of the populations; the tribal rivalries which have done so much in the past and which must not, at any cost, resume; and the attraction which foreign powers, ready to take advantage of the least weakness, may exercise on certain regions."

Firecrackers, Guns Vie

As the King spoke inside the still-unfinished Palace of the Nation, thousands on thousands on Congolese, many of them dressed in colorful native garb, massed outside to celebrate their new independence. The burst of fire-crackers competed with the saluting guns.

President Kasavubu, speaking after the King, praised Belgium for "not opposing the current of history."

The political leader, who 18 months ago was in jail for his part in riots which caused scores of fatalities in Léopoldville, said Belgium "understood the grandeur of the ideal of liberty which animates the hearts of all Congolese."

Both the West and the Communists cheered the new nation. But despite the rejoicing, the path ahead was filled with grave uncertainties.

Fabulously rich in minerals, the vast territory lying astride the equator is pitifully poor in native administrators and educated persons. Only a dozen held posts in the old colonial setup. Millions view independence as something magic that overnight is going to give them everything their Belgian rulers enjoyed.

United Press International

Robert D. Murphy
Led U.S. delegation

Belgium has signed a treaty of friendship and collaboration with the Republic of Congo to help guide the fledgling nation. A communiqué said the treaty envisaged mutual collaboration in the military, economic, financial, administrative, judicial, cultural, scientific, social and educational spheres. Other details were not given, but Belgian advisers in all fields are expected to stay on.

Representatives of about 60 nations were on hand for the independence celebrations, including United States and Soviet delegations.

Robert D. Murphy, former Assistant Secretary of State, headed a five-man American party as President Eisenhower's personal representative. He said on arrival: "We will watch with keen satisfaction as the newly independent Congo takes its important place in the community of nations."

Soviet Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev sent congratulations and said independence for the Congo "dealt another telling blow at the moribund colonial system."

Communist China called the new republic "a tremendous encouragement and inspiration to the African peoples and all oppressed peoples the world over."

Belgians Face Up to Loss

The Belgian nation faced up to the loss of the rich colony—80 times larger than the fatherland itself, the world's leading producer of industrial diamonds, uranium, and cobalt and among the leading suppliers of gold, tin, manganese, and zinc.

Belgian investments in the Congo are officially estimated at more than $1,000,000,000. A break in Belgian-Congolese relations—regarded as unlikely—would deal a blow to the Belgian economy to the tune of about 3 per cent of the country's national income for 1960.

New Congo: Toward Unity

Christian Science Monitor

The Lumumba victory in the lower house of the Congo Parliament will be welcomed by those friends of African freedom who recognize the importance of the Congo's emerging into independence next week as a united country. It does not guarantee this development of course. Already a very narrow defeat for him involving the top Senate posts has thrown the question of the leadership of the new government open just when it appeared settled.

What is specially important about the vote that made Patrice Lumumba Premier designate for the new government is that it was won despite earlier Belgian acceptance of his opponent, Joseph Kasavubu. Indeed, M. Lumumba got for his candidates for key posts in the lower house the 74 votes he predicted he would. M. Kasavubu got 58 compared with a predicted 78.

The voting only establishes the initial positions of the two main elements, and the two outstanding personalities in Congolese politics. M. Lumumba has been organizing his forces on a nationwide scale, and favoring strong central authority. M. Kasavubu has been insisting on stronger regional organization.

Meanwhile at Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, a 13-nation conference of independent African states has expressed its concern for Congolese unity. It has offered to support any United Nations provisions for keeping the Congo intact after independence.

If the Lumumba aims for a strong central authority now prevail, the Congo may face some of the problems that have retarded development of effective two-party government in Ghana. That one-time British colony was also a beneficiary of a Cinderella-like transformation from colony to independent state. But it was a victim of political weaknesses at the "grass roots" level of government.

Even so, the alternative to the Lumumba hopes appears to be an extreme form of tribal-regional rivalry. This could split the Congo and throw discredit on African self-government efforts.

Congo War Claims 1st U.N. Losses

The Montgomery Advertiser

Montgomery, Ala

Belgian Radio Says Moroccans Killed In Two Skirmishes

Aug. 7-19-60

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP)—the United Nations African force was reported to have suffered its first losses in fighting with Congolese in two cities of the new African republic Monday.

The victims were Moroccan members of the U.N. peace force.

The Belgian radio said mutinous native troops at Thysville fired on the Moroccans and killed several.

A second report said a separate Moroccan detachment engaged in fierce fighting with Congolese at the port city of Matadi, near the mouth of the Congo River, and there were casualties on both sides.

TROOPS ENTER CITY

This report, telephoned from the vilage of Noqui on the border of Portuguese Angola, said the U.N. troops entered the big Congo port city but had not succeeded in occupying Matadi harbor, a center of continued labor unrest and violence since independence was granted by Belgium June 30.

The Congolese were said to have ransacked stores and homes along the harbor.

Belgian troops have not undertaken any serious police action at the port since an agreement was concluded with Congolese authorities to withdraw the Belgian navy from the city several days ago.

This was the first word of casualties among U.N. troops since they arrived last week under a mandate from the U.N. Security council to restore order in the new republic.

Moroccan troops had been sent by train to Thysville, about 75 miles southwest of the Congo capital of Leopoldville, to pacify the area.

An outbreak at the Thysville camp earlier this month started the mutiny that spread rapidly through much of the Congo's 25,000-man army.

Thysville also was reported to be a center for widespread troop violence including murder, rape and looting.

Even with the U.N. force rapidly increasing, Leopoldville reports said Belgian troops gave every indication of staying on in the Congo to protect the lives and property of Europeans.

Patrice Lumumba, the Congolese premier, has threatened that unless the Belgians withdraw he will call in Soviet troops. U.N. Undersecretary Ralph J. Bunche met with the Congolese Cabinet on Lumumba's ultimatum, which expires Tuesday.

The Congolese House of Representatives was reported here to have backed Lumumba's ultimatum but the Belgian radio reported the Congolese Senate adopted a resolution opposing Lumumba's ultimatum and rejecting "any eventual intervention of Soviet Russia" in the Congo.

In New York, U.N. Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold told the Security Council Belgium has agreed to limit its troop activities and place its forces partly under U.N. command.

Hammarskjold gave no indication he had asked the Belgians to pull out or if he expected this to happen.

News of Africa

Confusion Seen Likely As Congo Picks Name

The Washington D.C. Post.

D.C. Monitor 6/26/60

From News Dispatches

LEOPOLDVILLE, Belgian Congo, June 26—The government of Premier Patrice Lumumba decided today that the name of this country when it becomes independent next Thursday will be Republic of Congo.

The choice seems certain to result in serious confusion because the former French colony across the Congo River to the north calls itself "The Republic of Congo."

Meanwhile, police dispersed groups of tribesmen in Leopoldville streets as the Congo's new cabinet discussed the tribal clashes which broke out yesterday.

The cabinet issued a communique saying the justice and interior ministers have been instructed "to take immediately all the necessary measures to restore order."

Yesterday's clashes were between celebrating Bakongo tribesmen and disgruntled Bangala tribesmen.

The Bangkongo leader, Joseph Kasavubu, was elected president Friday over Jean Bolikango of the National Unity Party supported by the Bangala.

Thirteen tribesmen were injured and 44 arrested during the clashes.

There were these other developments in Africa today:

Kenya—A group of settlers from the "white highlands" met to plan a pioneer society to organize mass emigration of whites to underdeveloped regions of South America and Australia.

On official, Y. G. Buchholtz, said it was inevitable that much of the white highlands should be made available to African resettlement.

South Africa—Armored cars stood guard in the Johannesburg suburb of Orlando to block any move to observe the outlawed "freedom day" proclaimed by the banned African National Congress.

KASAVUBU PRESIDENT Old Political Rivals Share Power In Congo

Montgomery Advertiser

Montgomery, Ala.

6/26/60

LEOPOLDVILLE, Belgian Congo (AP)—Joseph Kasavubu, who styles himself as a Gandhi-like foe of African colonialism, was elected president of the new Congo Republic Friday.

He will share power with his chief poltical rival, Patrice Lumumba, the newly confirmed premier.

As the departing Belgian colonial rulers had hoped, the compromise making Kasavubu chief of state and Lumumba chief of government brought together the two major political factions whose separate ambitions carried a potential of violence. The main problem now is whether they will work together.

Belgium is quitting the Congo next Thursday and turning authority over the 13 million people to Lumumba and Kasavubu.

Kasavubu, using the nonviolent civil disobedience tactics of the late Mohandas K. Gandhi in the war against colonialism, has been jailed by the Belgians in the past as an agitator. He once studied for the Roman Catholic presthood, later became a Protestant, and has worked as a teacher, civil servant, agronomist and bookkeeper.

Lumumba, too, was arrested after riots in Stanleyville in 1959 and spent nearly three months in jail.

Both Houses of Parliament met in joint session and elected the president by a vote of 159 for Kasavubu to 43 for Jean Bolikango, his only opponent.

Kasavubu's election had been expected, since he and Lumumba had been trying to work out some sort of deal in hopes of avoiding political clashes that might spill over into violence.

Although the presidency is largely a ceremonial position, it involves considerable prestige and the power to summon Parliament. In some cases the president can postpone a meeting of Parliament, and this could be a strong check on Kasavubu's old chief rival if strategically timed.

Friday morning was the hour of victory for the debonair Lumumba, a tall, bearded nationalist who had worked day and night to patch together a multiparty Cabinet that could win parliamentary support. Kasavubu had tried to form a Cabinet and failed, but three members of his Abako party got Cabinet posts.

The balloting went off without trouble except for one old African chief wearing a bright beaded hat. Since he spoke only Swahili and did not understand any French, the Congo Parliament's official language, he was baffled by the procedure. With the help of an interpreter, the Senate president set him straight. The chief then returned to his seat and cast his vote smilingly.

The lower House confirmed Lumumba's 23-member Cabinet with 74 affirmative votes. One member voted no, 5 abstained and 57 were absent. The Senate vote was 60-12, with 8 abstaining and 4 absent. Cheers from young Africans filling the public galleries greeted the results.

Many of the 57 absentees in the Chamber of Deputies were Kasavubu's political allies. His strength is centered around Leopoldville, while Lumumba comes from Stanleyville, in the Congo River back country. Their differences appear to be mainly regional and involve no basic clash. Both have long been forces in the local independence movement.

A sign of possible trouble came in Leopoldville, where a strike of Kasavubu's followers at the provincial headquarters entered its second day. They want the Belgians to create a separate province for the Bakongo tribesmen who live in and around Leopoldville and form the core of Kasavubu's political machine. The Belgian administrator told them to take it up with the new government.

Kasavubu Is Elected President of Congo

The Washington Post

Washington, D.C.

Reuters

LEOPOLDVILLE, Belgian Congo, June 24—The Congolese Parliament today elected Joseph Kasavubu President of the Congo and endorsed rival Patrice Lumumba as Premier.

The voting, apparently the result of a last-minute compromise between the two leaders, sent a wave of relief through this tense capital of the colony, which becomes independent next Thursday.

Kasavubu promptly called off a general strike with which his Abako Party was threatening to paralyze Leopoldville. Bakongo tribesmen danced in the streets.

Abako Party supporters had threatened to break away from the rest of the Congo if their 50-year-old leader were not made head of state.

Face Another Threat

But 34-year-old Lumumba and his Congolese National Movement (MNC), now face a threat from another quarter—Moise Tshombe, leader of the Conakat Party, which holds power in copper-rich Katanga Province.

Tshombe today complained of inadequate representation in Lumumba's Cabinet and made another veiled threat to lead Katanga into secession.

When the Cabinet list was published Thursday, it was understood that the Conakat party accepted the Economics Ministry as the price for lifting the threat of secession.

Struggle May Continue

But Tshombe issued a statement in Elisabethville today saying he agreed with Lumumba that the price of cooperation was three key Ministries, not one.

Some observers said the struggle for power between Lumumba and Kasavubu is not over.

In theory, the head of state has the right to dissolve Parliament and dismiss the government. But after independence, Lumumba could change this part of the constitution of he can muster the necessary majority in Parliament.

The Senate and House of Representatives elected Kasavubu by a combined vote of 159 to 43 over his opponent, Jean Bolikango, of the Puna National Union Party.

Lumumba earlier had said he would support Bolikango, but since then he was believed to have made a deal with Kasavubu, whose party got three Cabinet posts.

Lumumba presented his coalition Cabinet to Parliament for approval after declaring he would follow "a neutral position between two blocs which divide the world."

He condemned "obscurantist colonialism," but appealed to missionaries, Belgian industrialists and settlers to stay in the country and continue bringing technical civilization to the Congo.

Congolese Begin Celebrating Independence Tomorrow

LEOPOLDVILLE, June 28 (UPI)—Congolese danced in the streets today as excitement built up for Thursday when the Congo republic becomes the newest independent nation. But some Europeans feared an outbreak of anarchy among rival tribes.

Only two days ago the African sectors of Leopoldville were placed under a state of emergency because of native riots and the attitude of the Baluba and Bangala tribal minorities in this capital city posed a major question.

The two tribes have no representatives in the National Union Government formed last week by Prime Minister Patrice Lumumba. The Bangalas rioted on Saturday and the Balubas demonstrated before parliament yesterday when President Joseph Kasa Vubu was sworn in.

Many Africans had jumped the gun on the 48-hour national holiday and have quit their jobs to start celebrations. Women paraded through the streets in printed cottons bearing the legend "independence on June 30."

Foreign visitors have been pouring into Leopoldville and the government has summarily requsitioned entire hotels to house these dignitaries. The main guest awaited is Bwana Kitoko (bountiful master)—better known as King Baudouin of Belgium.

RUSSIANS IN LEOPOLDVILLE—Mizro Kakhmatov (lower right) president of the Supreme Soviet Presidium, and Ivan Kotchergin waving, arrive at Leopoldville, Belgian Congo for celebration marking indpendence of the wealthy colony. King Baudouin proclaimed the independent Republic of Congo with a warning to the new nation to beware of greedy foreign powers. Representatives of about 60 nations were on hand for the celebration, including U. S. and Soviet delegations. (AP Wirephoto).

Police Kill 10 In Congo Riot

17 Injured As Crowd Attacks Forces In Equatorial Capital

By The United Press

Leopoldville, Congo Republic, July 4.—Police opened fire Monday on a rioting mob in Coquilhatville, capital of the Equatorial Province, killing 10 and wounding 13 others.

Three soldiers and one African police commissioner also suffered injuries when the rioting crowd attacked the security forces with bows and arrows, spears, sticks, and machetes in the first clash with authorities to bring fatalities since this new republic achieved independence last week.

Before the crowd was dispersed, the rioters burned down the house of the local commissioner for youth and sports.

Curfew Ordered

A curfew was clamped on as of 2 p.m. and heavy police and "force publique" Congolese Army patrols were sent through the native quarter.

Reports reaching here said hundreds of Africans massed in the cented of the provincial capital to demand an immediate improvement of living conditions and monthly salaries of about 5,000 francs.

They threw up barricades of tree branches in an effort to keep workers away from their jobs.

The demonstrators became unruly and attacked the security forces. Police first used tear-gas grenades in an attempt to break up the attacks. Then the troops fired two volleys into the rioters, causing the casualities.

13 million Congolese celebrate

LEOPOLDVILLE, Congo Republic — Premier Patrice Lumumba accused the Belgians of inflicting "atrocious sufferings" on the Congolese people during their 80-year rule over this African land.

He made the charge against the former colonial masters as the Belgian Congo gained its independence June 30 and became the Congo Republic.

"We have known ironies and insults, the blows to which we have had to submit morning, noon and night because we are Negroes," Lummumba said at independence ceremonies attended by his parliamentary colleagues, assembled dignitaries of the church and diplomatic corps and King Baudouin of Belgium.

The Premier described Belgian law as different for blacks and whites — "accomodating for one, cruel and inhuman for the other.

"Who will forget the fusillades under which so many of our brothers perished?

"Wages paid to black men were not sufficient to satisfy their hunger, to dress them or provide them with decent lodging.

"We have known atrocious sufferings for political opinions or religious beliefs. We have known that in the cities there were magnificent houses for the whites and decrepit huts for the blacks, that a black was not admitted to the cinemas, in restaurants nor in the stores called "European".

". . We who have been chosen by your selected representatives to direct our dear country, we who have suffered in our bodies and in our hearts from colonial oppression, say to you all that is finished.

"The Republic of Congo has been proclaimed and is in the hands of its own children. Together, my brothers, we must begin a new fight, a sublime fight which is going to lead our country to peace, to prosperity and to grandeur," Premier Lamumba declared.

PRESIDENT EISENHOWER sent a bust of Abraham Lincoln as his personal gift to the new government. The United States also announced it is ready to talk about scholarships and financial help for 300 golese students to sinudy Con Congolese students to study in America or elsewhere abroad.

Dr. Robert G. Nelson of Indianapolis, Ind., who is executive secretary of the Department of Africa of the United Christian Missionary Society commented on the problems facing the new republic. Dr. Nelson, who is on a tour of 13 African countries, including the Congo Republic and the Union of South Africa, said:

"Premier Lumumba has expressed a desire for Belgians and other Europeans to remain in Congo, and has promised an agreement of friendship to be concluded with the Belgian government. It waits to be seen whether he is a strong enough leader to counteract many of the excessive statements which have been made during his campaign.

"The effects of developments in Congo in the past few days have been greatly felt in other parts of Africa — particularly in southern and eastern Areas.

"Stories of "panic" among Europeans in Congo were greatly overstressed in the press in South Africa. Some South Africans told me that this was a deliberate attempt on the part of the nationalist government to play up the plight of the European in a free Congo, in order to strengthen their present stepped - up policies of racial separateness.

". . There seems little doubt that the mounting tension in Congo has probably hardened the determination of the South African government to speed up their plans for total apartheid within the Union.

". . . So with the fate of Congo in the balance, the rest of Africa and the world will anxiously await developments during these next few days. African nationalism," Dr. Few observers in this part of the world doubt the tremendous effect which the Congo's trasil is having upon the cause of Nelson concluded.

The United States is represented in the Republic of Congo by a white ambassador. President Eisenhower sent Clare H. Timberlake's nomination to the Senate to be confirmed as the first U.S. Ambassador to the Republic.

Mr. Timberlake was also named representative of the President with the rank of Special Ambassador as a member of the official U.S. delegation to independence ceremonies in Leopoldville June 30 and July 1.

The Republic of the Congo covers 943,000 square miles and has a population of 13,000,000 people in 500 tribes.

Congo Police Rout Protesters With Gas

The Washington Post

LEOPOLDVILLE, Belgian Congo, June 28 (AP) — Members of two disgruntled political groups attempted a march through Leopoldville's main street today to protest their exclusion from the new Congo Government. Police ordered one group away and drove back the other with tear gas and rifle butts. W.C.

The demonstrations came on the eve of independence celebrations. The main boulevard is already festooned with Congo banners to mark the end of Belgian rule over 13 million Congolese Thursday

King Baudouin is flying here for the ceremonies along with diplomatic, governmental and church dignitaries. Among teh guests is Richard Stanley, 29-year-old grandson of Henry M. Stanley, the 19th century explorer who found Livingstone. Wed. 6/29/60

Belgians Maneuver P4A

The Belgian maneuvering in the emerging state was not confined to the capital. Belgian officials flew to Katanga Province to avert a crisis in that area, where copper mines provide 60 per cent of the Congo's income.

The Katanga Provincial Government, composed solely of members of the local Conakat Party, had threatened to secede and declare independence from the other five provinces. The Conakat backed down and offered the opposition Balubakat four posts in the Provincial Government, but the Balubakat refused. Belgian officials hoped to mediate the dispute, which had sparked tribal rioting in the southern province.

The Leopoldville clashes involved two groups shut out of power in Premier-designate Patrice Lumumba's National Government.

The two groups of demonstrators consisted of: (1) 500 followers of Jean Bolikango, defeated in the national presidential election now demanding the post of Defense Minister, which is held by Lumumba and (2) 2000 supporters of Albert Kalonji, whose group is demanding three ministries and a Secretaryship of State.

Associated Press

JEAN BOLIKANGO

. . . followers battle police

Lumumba Bans Threats

Foreign Minister Justin Bomboko said after the demonstrations that Lumumba had not decided whether to reshuffle his cabinet and include representatives of either faction. But he said that Lumumba will not bow to threats of violence or public demonstrations.

The Kalonji group, a good humored crowd consisting mostly of African women wearing gaily cored national costumes, set off to march down the city's main street.

All went peacefully until they reached an important road junction. The route of their march was supposed to be straight ahead. Police diverted them to the left. The marchers were angry, but they obeyed and marched off.

Across the intersection, on the main street that the Kalonji procession had originally intended to take, stood about 500 supporters of Bolikang.

Police Use Tear Gas

They people are the Bangala, traditionally loyal to the outgoing Belgin rules and their co-workers in creating the modern Congo. They wantted to join up with the Kalonji demonstrators. The police, fearing either a fight between rival factions or a demonstration they could not control, blocked the way.

About 50 Negro policemen, led by a Belgian officer, tried to force the Bangala back by holding their rifles horizontally across their thighs, as barriers.

When this failed they rolled six tear gas grenades along the ground in front of the crowd. It broke the front ranks of the Bangala but the rear ranks stood fast. By this time they were shouting and waving their arms with excitement. Police jabbed them with rifles.

After six more gas grenades and some pushing and shoving by police rifle butts, the crowd fell back somewhat and stood sullenly in the road, awaiting the arrival of Bolikango. He ordered them to disperse immediately. They did.

But many marched angrily to the Bolikango Party headquarters, where they continued to demonstrate.

KASAVUBU TAKES OFFICE IN CONGO

N.Y. Times N.Y.

Chief Vows to Be 'Guardian' of New State—Kalonji Group Demonstrates

Tues. 6/28/60

By HARRY GILROY

Special to The New York Times

LEOPOLDVILLE, Belgian Congo, June 27—Joseph Kasavubu took office today as chief of state of the new Republic of Congo. He pledged to place himself above politics and to be "the guardian of the law, the arbitrator and the first servant of the state."

But it remains to be seen just what powers M. Kasavubu will have in comparison with those of Premier Patrice Lumumba. The Belgian Congo will become the Republic of Congo Thursday.

Just before M. Kasavubu's talk, several thousand demonstrators gathered outside the national palace, where the ceremony was to be held in the presence of both houses of Parliament. The demonstrators demanded that Albert Kalonji, president of one wing of the Congolese National Movement, be included in the Government.

Demands Three Cabinet Posts

M. Kalonji told the crowd that "our patience is exhausted." He demanded that his party receive three posts in the Cabinet.

M. Kalonji, political leader in Kasai Province, took over the leadership of the Congolese National Movement last July after M. Lumumba had been evicted from the party. M. Lumumba proceeded to build his factior into the colony's most powerful political group. He ignored M. Kalonji in all the negotiations of recent weeks that led to the formation of the Cabinet.

M. Kasavubu's speech was made in the presence of three Belgian Cabinet ministers—Pierre Wigny, Foreign Minister; Auguste de Schryver, Minister of the Belgian Congo, and Walter Ganshof van der Meersch, Belgian Resident Minister.

After the session the officials met with Premier Lumumba and other Congolese officials to negotiate a basic treaty of friendship between the republic and Belgium.

This accord will be expanded later into a series of agreements on aid, banking arrangements, service of Belgians in the Congolese Government as technicians and the protection of personal and property rights.

Belgium Signs Congo Aid Pact

Washington Post, D.C.

Thur. 6/30/60 P.A7

From News Dispatches

LEOPOLDVILLE, Belgian Congo, June 29—Belgian King Baudouin arrived here today for independence celebrations as his country signed an agreement to assist Africa's newest nation in its foreign affairs.

The Congo becomes independent Thursday.

Under a 12-point treaty of friendship and cooperation signed in the Congolese Parliament House today, Belgium will retain its military bases in the Congo until further notice, Belgian sources said.

It also calls for Belgium to undertake an aid program for the Congo and pledges mutual assistance between the two countries.

Belgian Prime Minister Gaston Eyskens and Foreign Minister Pierre Wigny were the chief signatories for Belgium Congolese Prime Minister Patrice Lumumba and Deputy Prime Minister Antoine Gizenga led the Congolese delegation.

Speech Called Friendly

Belgian officials described a speech made by Lumumba at the ceremony as "remarkable for its friendly tone toward Belgium and full of good will."

Representative of about 60 nations were converging here for Thursday's independence day ceremonies.

A five-man American delegation, headed by President Eisenhower's personal representative, Robert D. Murphy, arrived last night. They were greeted by Lumumba. Murphy told him that relations between the new republic and the United States are expected to be friendly and mutually beneficial.

"We will watch with keen satisfaction as the newly independent Congo takes its important place in the community of nations," Murphy said.

Meanwhile, troubles of an international character were brewing for the new republic. Foreign Minister Justin Bomboko told a reporter that the Union of South Africa has been informed that its presence at the independence ceremonies "would be unwelcome." Bomboko said the decision was made by the Cabinet after criticism in both houses of Parliament of South Africa's strict race segregation policies.

Seeks U. N. Entry

Prime Minister Lumumba formally asked United Nations Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold to sumbit his country's name to the Security Council as a candidate for U. N. membership. Lumumba, also ordered his 20,000-man army to take severe measures against any trouble-makers who challenge the govermennt's power.

An African rushed up to King Baudouin's open car as he drove in state through the town, snatched the King's sword from its scabbard, which was lying in the car, and ran off brandishing it in the air until soldiers cornered him, pinned him to the ground and took it away. No political significance was attatched to the incident.

As the King drove through the streets, Europeans shouted, "Long live the King"; Africans cried "Long live Kasa (Kasavubu), our King of the Congo," and chanted "indepndence, independence, independence."

—AP Radiophoto

Congo Police Drive Back Demonstrators with Rifles and Rifle Butts

Congolese Politicos Protest

LEOPOLDVILLE, Belgian Congo, June 28 (AP)—Members of two disgruntled political groups attempted a march through Leopoldville's main street today to protest their exclusion from the new Congo government. Police ordered one group away and drove back the other with tear gas and rifle butts.

The demonstrations came on the eve of independence celebrations. The main Boulevard Albert is already festooned with Congo banners to mark the end of Belgian rule over 13 million Congolese Thursday.

King to Attend

Kking Baudouin is flying here for the ceremonies along with diplomatic, governmental and church dignitaries. Among the guests is Richard Stanley, 29-year-old grandson of Henry M. Stanley, the 19th Century explorer who found Livingstone.

The Belgian maneuvering in the emerging state was not confined to the capital. Belgian officials flew to Katanga Province to avert a crisis in that area, where copper mines provide 60 per cent of the Congo's income.

The Katanga provincial government, composed solely of members of the local Conakat party, had threatened to secede and declare independence from the other five provinces. The Conakat backed down and offered the opposition Balubakat four posts in the provincial government, but the Balubakat refused. Belgian officials hoped to mediate the dispute, which had sparked tribal rioting in the southern province.

The Leopoldville clashes involved two groups shut out of power in premier-designate Patrice Lumumba's national government.

The two groups of demonstrators consisted of: (1) 500 followers of Jean Bolkiango, defeated in the national presidential election now demanding the post of defense minister, which is held by Lumumba and (2) 2,000 supporters of Albert Kalonji, whose group is demanding three ministries and a secretaryship of state.

Foreign Minister Justin Bomboko said after the demonstrations that Lumumba had not decided whether to reshuffle his Cabinet and include representatives of either faction. But he said that Lumumba will not bow to threats of violence or public demonstrations.

The Kalonji group, a good humored crowd consisting mostly of African women wearing gaily colored national costumes, set off to march down the city's main street.

Marchers Diverted

All went peacefully until they reached an important road junction. The route of their march was supposed to be straight ahead. Police diverted them to the left. The marchers were angry, but they obeyed and marched off.

Across the intersection, on the main street that the Kalonji procession had originally intended to take, stood about 500 supporters of Bolikango.

NIGERIA, CONGO MOVE TOWARD INDEPENDENCE

Pair Ending 80 Years As Colonies

LEOPOLDVILLE, Belgian Congo, June 13 [Reuters]—The two biggest countries in "Black Africa," the Belgian Congo and Nigeria, emerge this year as independent nations after 80 years as colonies.

The Belgian Congo is moving turbulently toward independence June 30. Nigeria has been stepping out from under British control for several years and the final step to full independence Oct. 1 will be realtively smooth.

Hit by Violence

The sprawling Congo, with an area of 905,400 square miles, has been hit by tribal, political, and anti-white violence as its 13 million people travel the last lap to independence.

Nigeria, with slightly more than one-third of the Congo's area, but with a population of 35 million, is subject to the strains of religious and regional rivalry. Violence is virtually absent.

In the Congo, many of the estimated 80,000 Belgians still in the colony are making hurried arrangements to leave. Most of the 17,000 British administrators, business men and technicians in Nigeria are remaining.

Prepares 10 Years

Two years ago, Belgians scarcely considered the possibility that their rich African colony would break away. The British have been preparing Nigeria for independence for the last 10 years.

For decades after Belgium took over the Congo in 1885, the territory was virtually an estate of King Leopold II, an estate 80 times the size of Belgium itself. The ruling policy even after administration was handed over to the Belgian government was summed up in the word paternalism. In the Belgian view, the natives of the Congo, ranging from the giant Watutsis to fierce pygmy tribes, needed welfare, not politics.

Altho Belgium improved the lot of the Congolese, advanced political training was neglected.

Builds Roads, Schools

Excellent roads were built, model schools and hospitals were provided, and the Congolese boasted the best Negro housing in Africa. About half the school age population received primary education. The Catholic church provided 16,500 elementary schools, 103 secondary schools, and 171 technical institutes.

Many skilled workers were trained to exploit the rich mineral resources of the territory. The Congo produced 75 per cent of the world's cobalt, 70 per cent of its industrial diamonds, and more than half the western world's uranium.

But the state was absolute and the Africans had no say in their government. The United Nations condemned Belgium's refusal to allow the natives any political voice.

Begins Modified Policy

Then the Belgians began to modify the policy of paternalism. Some literate Africans were given a vote in the 1956 district elections. Promising students were given the chance of professional training in universities at Leopoldville and Elisabethville.

But these were developments aimed at producing an administrative elite in years, not in months or weeks. As the Congo approaches self-government, there is not a native medical doctor or lawyer in the country.

Not even the most jubilant and optimistic African leader doubts that severe difficulties lie ahead. Economic problems and tribal conflict constitute the most serious threats to the new republic.

Plagued by Rifts

In contrast to the swift revolution in the Congo, the political development of Nigeria has been a gradual evolution towards independence. Nigeria, tho plagued by tribal and religious rifts, began its last lap toward unified, self-government with the creation of the Federation of Nigeria Oct. 1, 1954.

The constitution setting up a federal government over the northern, eastern, and western regions granted a large measure of self-government. An elected house of representatives and a government formed from its members dealt with the country's affairs. The assemblies and governments in the three regions also had internal self-government.

The decision to give the federation complete self-government Oct. 1, 1960, was made at a conference of British and Nigerian government officials in London two years ago.

THE BELGIAN CONGO

Newsweek

First Blow for Liberty

Dayton, Ohio

"Long Live the King of the Congo," shouted the African crowds last week as a big, two-toned car drove into the Belgian Congo town of Kisantu. But although Belgium's young King Baudouin is currently touring the vast colony, 77 times the size of his homeland, it was not Baudouin who stepped out of the car into the pouring rain and then disappeared into a nearby assembly hall. Instead, the crowds were hailing 43-year-old Joseph Kasavubu, chief of the native Abako party and now the Congo's No. 1 nationalist.

Kasavubu has not yet taken King Baudouin's crown but the results of last week's Congo-wide elections suggested that he soon may. In Leopoldville and nearby communes where the Abako had called for a boycott of the elections (to protest Belgium's program of gradual independence by 1964) 70 per cent of the eligible Africans abstained from the polls. Those who did vote sweepingly rejected Belgium's step-by-step approach—as Kasavubu said they would.

Kasavubu demands "complete, immediate, unconditional independence" for nearly 14 million Congolese. The snag is that as Belgian policemen and administrators go home, many of the more primitive Congolese are inclined to revert to fetish rites and tribal wars. Last week, for instance, Belgian investigators discovered that 226 Bushongo tribesmen had been poisoned in ceremonial village trials.

Nevertheless, the Congo will undoubtedly soon be free. In Brussels last week NEWSWEEK's Lionel Durand asked Raymond Scheyven, the energetic Belgian Minister for Congo affairs, about the prospects. Scheyven's reply:

"We have learned from British and French experience and will definitely free the Congo. As for how soon, either we work fast and grant the Congo independence when and how the Congolese want it—and thus avoid a complete break—or we abandon the Congo piecemeal, at the risk of bloodshed. It's better to work fast. A Congolese government won't be any more or less mature in six months than in three, so why not have one in three months?"

Belgian King Works On Congo Independence

The Call Kansas City, Mo.

1-8-60

By NEIL SMITH

LEOPOLDVILLE, Belgian Congo —(UPI) — King Baudouin of the Belgians began working on an independence program for the Congo this week behind the white washed facade of the governor general's residence.

Belgian authorities apparently were determined not to allow the king's series of talks with local political leaders to become the focus of independence demonstrations. No information was made public as to whom the king would meet or when he would do so.

Main interest in political circles centered around the possibility of a meeting between Baudouin and Abako (Lower Congo) party leader Joseph Kasavubu.

Kasavubu's power with the lower Congo populations was demonstrated when he decided they would not take part in the municipal elections held in Leopoldville on Dec. 20. Seventy per cent of the voters abstained.

When Baudouin drove from the airport to the city on his arrival here Monday, Africans were heard chanting, "long live King Kasavubu."

Whatever meetings Baudouin holds with African politicians, tern set during the earlier stage of the royal tour of the Belgian Congo. Up to now, the king was said to have taken no active part in political talks. Congo Minister Auguste De Schrijver has conducted the interviews, asking questions and giving replies, while Baudouin remained strictly in the role of an observer.

Reports circulating in Leopoldville Tuesday said the Congo would become independent in April next year, or by June at the latest.

This speculation was based partly on a reported statement by De Schryver at Bukavu last week that the country might have representative institutions in early spring.

The viewpoint of the Belgian government is known to be that the step-by-step establishment of a parliament by universal suffrage and the subsequent forming of a Congolese government would signal the virtual independence of the Congo.

The parliament would have the task of writing a constitution for the new state. The government would negotiate with Belgium on any future relations between the two countries.

BELGIANS BLAMED IN CONGO CONFLICT

The New York Times

Kasavubu, Nationalist Chief, Says They Provoked Tribal Warfare to Bar Freedom

New York

By HOMER BIGART

Special to The New York Times.

LEOPOLDVILLE, Belgian Congo, May 27—The Congolese nationalist leader Joseph Kasavubu, who may become the first President or Premier of the Congo Republic, charged in an interview today that Belgian administrators had provoked the Lulua-Baluba tribal war just to show the world that the Congolese were unready for self-government.

5-28-60 p. 8

The Belgian Congo is scheduled to achieve independence June 30.

Eight tribesmen were slain in renewed clashes between the Lulua and the Baluba in Kasai Province last night.

The fighting was heaviest at Luebo. There Lulua seeking to drive all Baluba from the city raided the Baluba quarter with machetes and spears, killing three Baluba and injuring one.

A Baluba counter-attack resulted in the slaying of two Lulua and injuries to seven. Fifty-eight huts were burned. Later, in the provincial capital of Luluabourg, three Lulua were slain by the Baluba and twenty injured.

Mr. Kasavubu, usually considered the most moderate of the Congolese nationalist leaders, said the Belgians had flouted international law by supporting Lulua demands for the ouster of the Baluba from western Kasai.

The Lulua contend that the smarter and more aggressive Baluba are foreigners on the Lulua tribal lands and have threatened to massacre all Baluba who resist evacuation. The Belgian authorities took the position that any Baluba remaining on Lulua lands would have to bow to Lulua tribal law.

"The Belgians are more foreign than the Baluba, yet they supported Lulua demands that the Baluba go away as foreigners," Mr. Kasavubu commented. "It is against international law. Why, in the United States all sorts of people of different nationalities live together and nobody tries to separate them."

Mr. Kasavubu is a member of the six-man Congolese advisory group that is supposed to share power with the Belgian Governor General until independence. Mr. Kasavubu said that on a recent visit to Kasai the group called a halt to evacuation of the Baluba but the order was thwarted by the Belgian provincial administration.

Mr. Kasavubu dismissed as "bad Belgian propaganda" reports that he and his Association of the Lower Congo, known as ABAKO, had little faith in Congolese unity and wanted a revival of the ancient Bakongo (Lower Congo) kingdom. He said he was opposed to separatism and strong for federation.

Mr. Kasavubu denounced the sending of Belgian reinforcements to the Congo. He said that he wanted no Belgian troops here now and that he would certainly oppose the existence of Belgian military bases in the Congo after June 30.

CONGOLESE POLICE KILL 10 IN CLASH

The Times N.Y., N.Y.

They Fire on Demonstrators Demanding That New Province Be Set Up

By HARRY GILROY

Special to The New York Times.

LEOPOLDVILLE, Republic of Congo, July 4—Congolese troops fired into a crowd of political demonstrators in Coquilhatville today, killing ten and wounding twenty.

The demonstrators were members of the Munongo tribe who feel they have been left out of the government of Equator Province and are demanding that a new province be established in which they can rule themselves.

The national Government headed by Premier Patrice Lumumba has acted vigorously against tribal groups trying to establish new provinces because they find themselves in the minority.

It was reported here that the Kasai provincial government had ordered the arrest of members of a dissident government established by Baluba tribesmen and their allies.

Government Criticized

The National Government's actions reflect its realization that it cannot govern if every minority group sets up its own administration.

Yet the Government's moves have also stirred angry comments that Premier Lumumba is acting to cripple the opposition to his personal organization.

Foreign Minister Justin Bomboko and Joseph Ileo, President of the Senate, are members of the Munongo tribe involved in today's clash. Joseph Bolikango, who feels he was tricked by Mr. Lumumba after being promised support for the office of Chief of State subsequently, won by Joseph Kasavubu, is also allied with forces asking for a new provincial government in Equator Province.

The trouble in Kasai Province is reported to involve an order to arrest Joseph Ngalula, head of the dissident provincial government. Mr. Ngalula was the first Congolese leader to visit the United States, in March, at the invitation of the United States.

7-5-60 p. 3C

The Baluba and Lulua tribes have been struggling for months over lands in Kasai. This tribal struggle takes form in the political arena in a contest between the two wings of the Congolese National Movement, one headed by Premier Lumumba and the other by Albert Kalonji, a member of the national House of Representatives.

Promise Of White Women Incites Congo Freedom Bid

Jackson Daily News
Jackson, Miss.
June 6, 1960

Settlers Moving Out Fast As Independence Day Nears

LEOPOLDVILLE, Belgian Congo (UPI) — Reports that African extremist politicians were promising native voters the women and property of white men spurred a mass movement of white settlers from the sprawling Belgian Congo today.

The reports, made grimmer by the news of the first murder of a European settler by a Negro in more than 19 months, brought the exodus to near panic pitch.

The whites were trying to get out before the Belgian Congo gains independence June 30.

The National Congolese movement and its radical allies have been making sweeping election gains.

Reports from the interior said African national leaders have been telling their followers they would take over white men's houses, cars, "and even women" on independence day.

A Greek planter was hacked to death by one of his native workers in the district of Maniema Wednesday.

Travel agents and airlines are booked solid by air and sea in all directions for the next two months. Many families were leaving with a minimum of possessions and without proper travel documents.

With poll returns in for 96 of the 137 seats in the new Congo Chamber of Deputies, extremist parties accounted for at least 46 seats. Although they probably will not obtain a clear majority, the returns indicated their combined strength would leave them in control of a coalition government.

TRIBES HARASSING MISSION IN CONGO

The New York Times
June 5, 1960

U. S. Presbyterian Station in Belgian Colony May Be Forced to Close

New York

Special to The New York Times.

LEOPOLDVILLE, Belgian Congo, June 4 — A United States Presbyterian mission in the Belgian Congo may be forced to close one of its ten stations because of harassment by Congolese.

The mission station at Bibanga in Kasai Province already has been obliged by threats to halt its building program and sell its 100 head of cattle. Although independence still was a month off, Congolese politicians demanded the mission cease paying rent to the Belgian Colonial Government for grazing rights. They demanded retroactive payment of rent to the not-yet-existing Congo Republic.

They also said the missionaries had to pay for gravel taken out of the ground for building a school, a hospital, a church and a leper colony.

Bibanga is the easternmost of the mission's ten stations in Kasai. It is in territory dominated by the Baluba tribe, which, since October, has been at war with the Lulua tribe. The missionaries have endeavored to stay neutral.

None of the 1,500 American missionaries scattered through the Congo has been physically molested by the Congolese. The Bibanga affair is the first reported instance of Congolese unfriendliness to missions.

Decision Due on Closing

A decision on closing the Bibanga station — which was founded in 1917 and which includes an eight-bed hospital and a colony of 100 lepers—awaits the outcome of impending talks between mission officials and nationalist leaders in the Bibanga area.

Officials of the Southern Presbyterian Church, which runs the mission, said none of the other nine stations had been harassed, although the Luebo station was caught in the center of a clash between the Lulua and Baluba in which at least nine tribesmen were killed.

Luebo is a predominantly Baluba city surrounded by Lulua held territory. Hundreds of Baluba tribesmen tried to drive the Lulua minority out of town. The mission had ample warning from both sides of the impending battle. A Baluba representative had advised the mission that any Lulua caught inside the mission grounds would be slaughtered.

Dr. Henry Nelson of Nashville, Tenn., evacuated all the sick and injured who could walk. He steadfastly refused, however, to permit the evacuation of some seriously wounded Lulua. They remained in the hospital and have not been harmed.

Fear Race Violence After Troops Leave

Chicago Defender
Chicago, Ill.

KAMPALA, Uganda — (UPI) — Hundreds of white settlers streamed through Uganda from the Belgian Congo Wednesday, driven by fear of widespread racial violence when that sprawling African territory gains independence June 30.

White families, some who have lived in the Congo for two generations, passed through Uganda by rail, air, auto or river steamer on their way to new lives in Europe.

Many had no passports or travel documents and only a minimum of personal possessions. This was all right for Belgian nationals, because their government has guaranteed their care.

Sat. 6-11-60

"The trouble is, many stateless persons have been living in the Congo, too," A British immigration official said. "When they reach Uganda, they are likely to be stuck here permanently because no other country will have them."

Many Europeans still in the Congo, which lies west of Uganda, were laying in stocks of motor fuel for a speedy departure if and when it becomes necessary.

P. 3

The Uganda government also feared a flood of black refugees from the Congo once Belgian control and troops are removed.

Steps already have been taken for the setting up of refugee camps along the Uganda-Congo border.

In Northern Rhodesia, troops were reported to have moved up to the Congo frontier to seal it in case violence does develop. Authorities in Portuguese Angola were understood to have taken a similar measure recently.

Free Congo called political miracle

Afro-American, Baltimore, Md.
Sat. 6/25/60

P. 9

LONDON — On the last day of this month, the twelve million Africans of the Congo will shake off Belgium's colonial rule for self-government and independence.

This development is regarded as the most spectacular of all the political revolutions which have taken place in present-day Africa—a miracle of all political miracles.

Everything happened suddenly. Without warning and the usual period of 'agitation' and constitutional experiments which characterize surrender of power to indigenous peoples, Congo's nationalist movement sprang to life almost overnight and independence was granted as soon as the first Congolese voices were raised to demand it.

No colonial people in Africa have had it so good.

* * *

LAST WEEK the country went to the polls to decide who of the various contending political parties should assume power from the Belgians. The results were undecisive, for no less than 100 parties contested for 137 constituencies.

The party with the biggest majority was the African National Congres led by the brash 24 - year - old Patrice Lumumba, one-time a simple clerk. He gained 35 seats for his party.

But this does not give him a sufficient majority to form a government. In point of fact, the latest development is that a big coalition of other parties successful at the election has secretly built up against him.

The lineup, which includes his chief rival, 'King' Joseph Kassavubu, leader of the Abako party and tipped to be first Chief of Sate, totals 89 ,while the only support Mr. Lumumba has been able to get outside his own party are six seats.

However, nothing has been finally settled.

The impact of the political change in the Congo has been twofold. Africans throughout Africa have hailed it as a resounding victory for African nationalism and have heaped praise on the practical - mindedness of the Belgians who were quick to make peace with the Africans.

On the other hand, white settlers in the rest of Africa, including Belgian Congo settlers, are horrified by the 'treachery' of the Belgians. They are, however, indulging in the comforting prophesy that when the Belgians leave there will be chaos. Already, neighboring countries such as the Portuguese Angola and the Federation have moved in troops to the borders in anticipation of trouble.

However, it is true to say that things could not be smooth for the Africans, because the Congolese, like most Africans, are divided into many tribes speaking different languages and there has been conflict and physical violence between one tribe and another.

This coupled with struggle for power between leaders must lead to a very difficult phase in the years ahead. But one hopes that these difficulties will not result in the kind of political "mess" which reactionary white settlers are predicting.

Meanwhile white Belgians in the Congo are in the fever of panic. Many have sent out their families to Belgium or to white dominated countries in Africa such as the Federation and South Africa.

At one time money was flying out of the country at the rate of several thousand dollars a day until the Belgium Government restricted the flow.

18a 1960 CONGO

Congo Gains Independence Tomorrow, Is Up For Grabs

EDITOR'S NOTE: Cheerless prediction as freedom comes to the Congo on Thursday: it's up for grabs—with the odds favoring the Reds. In this dispatch an African expert tells why.

Birm Post

BY ROBERT C. RUARK
Special to Scripps-Howard Newspapers

The three main fears throbbing in Belgium since it was decided six months ago to give formal independence to the Congo, when the Congo was in no wise nearly for it, were:

1. The fate of the money and the people who have made the vast fortunes for Belgium and the world from the almost limitless riches of the Congo area.

Wed 6-29-60

2. The fear that Reds would take advantage of the vacuum coming up; that Communism would turn to its own advantage the confusion and strife which is certain to exist in a native battle for power.

P. 19

3. That the Congo, reasonably solid and businesslike in its exploitation of native and mineral resources, would suddenly be ripped apart by battle between native tribal factions, and what is termed "balkanization" would result.

Even before the sacred day of "L' independence," all three things had happened in varying degrees.

Money Going Out

Concerning point one, I was told that four billion Congo francs in one lump went out of the Congo after the January, 1959, riots. Since then the small holder has been sending out his money, legally or illegally, at such a rate that the government was compelled to limit the outflow per person to about $200 a month. In recent weeks some of the government-controlled companies have been sending money back to the Congo, in order to maintain trade.

Flight of the white "colons" has approximated the monetary departure. Great bargains, in recent months, were to be found in the various businesses of the small holders, who planned departure as soon as their inventories ran out. The Sabena Airline put on special planes, and the exodus by now has probably reached 30,000.

One reason for the flight of the people was personal fear, but a greater reason for the flight of both people and money was the suspicion that the new government would nationalize Belgian holdings or at best, discourage foreign capital investments due to the uncertainty of the government—if any. Nationalization has not yet occurred, as no proper government has been organized.

Backed By Reds

Touching point two, the Russians and the other carrion crows already have invaded the Congo. The strongest single man, Patrice Lumumba, was openly Communist-backed, and Leopoldville and Stanleyville today are thronged with Red or Red-tinged opportunists. Communism was easily apparent in formenting the riotings and clamor which led to an unduly early granting of official freedom.

Lumumba was also the pet of the Belgian Freemasons who are strong and are a part of the Liberals, who also represent big money.

If this sounds confusing, it is. But the Congo was run from Belgium, the Congo's governor had always been named by the ruling political party or parties, and the governor more or less handpicked the Congolese politicos.

The greatest hope of moneyed interests was that independence would bring such chaos that a new kind of "economic colonialism" might be imposed, with the white man continuing to run things, but under a black figurehead whose material wants might be easily appeased in wine, women and flashy cars, plus a Swiss bank account.

Unfortunately today the Russians and the Germans and the Czechs and Yugoslavs have the same idea.

Will Get Worse

Point three brings up the possible "balkanization" business. With Lumumba having his troubles forming a government; with at least two provinces already threatening secession; with other tribal leaders warning of new trouble; with a baker's dozen of sidebar politicos scheming to unhorse the appointed incumbents; with no real majority existing in the parliament—I would say the Congo is already balkanized, and figures to get worse before it gets better.

The tribal aspects, the active hatreds among people who speak 500 different languages and dialects, cannot be minimized. When the Beneluas started killing the Balubas in the October-November riots of 1959, they were not acting against Belgians. After naked Benelua women marched through the streets to proclaim war with the hated Balubas, both sides jived themselves up on African hemp (marijuana type) and proceeded to the slaughter with spears and poisoned arrows.

Law and order in the shape of the Belgian army came in November, and quieted the riots, but the conbatants broke out again as soon as the army left, and started a new war in December.

This is something of what is faced as the Congo achieves independence. Is there any hope of cohesion, any hope for the greater good for everybody in the future? It's up for grabs.

Police Break Up Congo Dissenters On Eve Of Independence Festivities

The Montgomery Advertiser, Montgomery, Ala.

Wed. 6/29/60

LEOPOLDVILLE, Belgian Congo (AP) — Members of two disgruntled political groups attempted a march through Leopoldville's main street Tuesday to protest their exclusion from the new Congo government. Police ordered one group away and drove back the other with tear gas and rifle butts.

P. 2A

The demonstrations came on the eve of independence celebrations. The main Boulevard Albert is already festooned with Congo banners to mark the end Thursday of Belgian rule over 13 million Congolese.

King Baudouin is flying here for the ceremonies, along with diplomatic, governmental and church dignitaries. Among the guests is Richard Stanley, 29, a grandson of Henry M. Stanley, the 19th century explorer who found David Livingstone in Africa.

The Belgian maneuvering in the emerging state was not confined to the capital. Belgian officials flew to Katanga Province to avert a crisis in that area, where copper mines provide 60 per cent of the Congo's income.

HOPE TO MEDIATE

The Katanga provincial government, composed solely of members of the local Conakat party, had threatened to secede and declare independence from the other five provinces. The Conakat later offered the opposition Balubakat four posts in the provincial government, but the Balubakat refused. Belgian officials hoped to mediate the dispute, which had sparked tribal rioting in the southern province.

The Leopoldville clashes involved two groups shut out of power in designate Premier Patrice Lumumba's national government.

The two groups of demonstrators consisted of 500 followers of Jean Bolikango, defeated in the national presidential election now demanding the post of defense minister, held by Lumumba, and 2,000 supporters of Albert Kalonji whose group is demanding three ministries and a secretaryship of state.

Foreign Minister Justin Bomboko said after the demonstrations that Lumamba had not decided whether to reshuffle his Cabinet and include representatives of either faction. But he said that Lumumba will not bow to threats of violence or public demonstrations.

The Kalonji group, a goodhumored crowd consisting mostly of African women wearing gaily colored national costumes, set off to march down the city's main street.

All went peacefully until they reached an important road junction. The route of their march was supposed to be straight ahead. Police diverted them to the left. The marchers were angry, but they obeyed and marched off.

Across the intersection, on the main street that the Kalonji procession had originally intended to take, stood about 500 supporters of Bolikango. They are the Bangala, traditionally loyal to the outgoing Belgian rulers and their coworkers in creating the modern Congo. They wanted to join the Kalonji demonstrators. The police, fearing either a fight between rival factions or a demonstration they could not control, blocked the way.

About 50 Negro policemen, led by a Belgian officer, tried to force the Bangala back by holding their rifles horizontally across their thighs, as barriers.

When this failed they rolled six tear gas grenades along the ground in front of the crowd. It broke the front ranks of the Bangala but the rear ranks stood fast. After more gas was used, Bolikango arrived and ordered his supporters to leave. They obeyed him.

But many marched angrily to the Bolikango party headquarters, where they continued to demonstrate.

News From Abroad

The Washington Post Washington, D.C.

Congo Republic President Is Sworn In

Tues. 6-28-60

LEOPOLDVILLE, June 27 (UPI)—Joseph Kasavubu took the oath of office as first president of the Congo Republic today while some 1000 hostile Baluba tribesmen demonstrated outside parliament waving banners saying, "Down with the puppet government."

Two lines of armed Congolese troops ringed the parliament building to keep the protesting tribesmen from disrupting the inauguration.

Inside, the new president, a leader of the Abako Party, swore to uphold the laws of this long-time Belgian territory that will gain its independence Thursday.

Kasavubu, unruffled by the demonstration outside, told parliament that the Congolese must "surmount tribal divisions if we are to maintain unity."

The crowd, which gathered in defiance of a law declaring a square-mile area around parliament as "neutral ground," protested that the Baluba tribe was not represented in Premier Patrice Lumumba's new government.

The tribesmen carried banners demanding a government post for Albert Kalonji, leader of the Balubas in their home province of Kasai.

Inside the building, Kasavubu, appealing for an end to tribal strife, pledged he would act as president of the whole Congo and not as representative of one faction or tribe.

The new president announced a program of national economic and social progress, calling for the establishment of democratic freedom and friendship with all nations.

In Brussels, it was announced that King Baudouin will fly to Leopoldville Tuesday to attend the Thursday independence ceremonies.

Somalias to Unite

HARGEISA, Somaliland, June 27—The Somaliland legislature today endorsed plans to unite this newly-independent country with neighboring Somalia amid continued rumblings that the united republic should join the British Commonwealth of Nations.

Somaliland, formerly a British territory, plans to unite with Somalia Friday, when Italy formally will relinquish its United Nations trusteeship there. The act of union is expected to be ratified Friday in the Somalia capital of Mogadishu.

There has been much talk of the republic joining the Commonwealth but no firm action in that direction has been reported.

Authorities in neighboring French Somaliland clamped a ban on movement between this nation and French Samaliland. The ban is expected to last only until independence celebrations subside.

ELECTED — Joseph Kasavubu, who styles himself as a Ghandi-like foe of African colonialism, was elected president of the new Congo Republic. He will share power with his chief political rival, Patrice Lumumba, newly confirmed premier.

Kasavubu Named Chief of State In Congo as Power Fight Ends

N.Y. Times N.Y.N.Y.

Sat. 6/25/60

Compromise With Premier Lumumba's Bloc Unites 2 Disputing Parties

By HARRY GILROY

Special to The New York Times.

LEOPOLDVILLE, Belgian Congo, June 24—Joseph Kasavubu was elected Chief of State of the new Congolese nation today.

His election followed a compromise with Premier Patrice Lumumba after a fortnight of struggle between rival blocs they headed.

The Congo now looks toward independence on June 30 with a united front of most of its major political parties. The combined houses of Parliament gave M. Kasavubu 159 votes to 43 for Jean Bolikango.

M. Kasavubu is the leader of the Association of the Lower Congo, known as the Abako party. Only yesterday his party had started a general strike in Leopoldville to protest political developments that had handed control of the new state to M. Lumumba.

This morning Abako party members were back at work and tension vanished from the native quarter as military patrols withdrew from the streets.

Sign of Compromise

The first sign of a compromise came this morning when M. Lumumba's new Government received sixty favorable votes out of eighty-four in the Senate on a vote of confidence. Earlier today, in a vote after midnight, M. Lumumba had been able to get only seventy-four out of 137 votes in the House of Representatives.

M. Lumumba and M. Kasavubu discussed the situation during the night and M. Lumumba promised M. Kasavubu all the votes of the Lumumba bloc. M. Kasavubu's supporters then agreed to back the Government in the Senate.

M. Kasavubu was elected at a joint session of Parliament after Ministers of the new government took an oath to uphold the laws of the state. Walter Ganshof van der Meersch, the Belgian Resident Minister, addressed Parliament and promised help from Belgium.

Associated Press

Joseph Kasavubu

A crowd outside the National Palace where the election was held hailed M. Kasavubu with a roar of applause as he was driven away at the end of the session.

The alliance unites M. Lumumba's Congolese National Movement, the largest party, and M. Kasavubu's Abako party, the strongest regional group. Until today it had appeared that the political ambitions of the two leaders would keep the country split.

M. Kasavubu, 43 years old, was educated in Roman Catholic schools. He is married and the father of eight children.

The office of the Chief of State is ceremonial in part, but has the power to call and dissolve Parliament.

Congo Chief Takes Office In Ceremony

Atlanta Daily World

Atlanta, Ga. P.1

Tues. 6/28/60

New President Is Opposed By Banners, Demonstrators

LEOPOLDVILLE (UPI) — Joseph Kasa Vubu took the oath of office as first president of the Congo republic Monday while some 1,000 hostile Baluba tribesmen demonstrated outside the parliamentary palace waving banners saying, "Down with the puppet government."

HEAD CONGO GOVERNMENT—Joseph Kasavubu (bottom), 43, militant leader of the Abako Party, was elected president of the new Congo republic in central Africa. It becomes independent on June 30 after more than 50 years of Belgian rule. At top is nationalist leader Patrice Lumumba, 34, the new country's premier.

Two lines of helmeted Congolese troops armed with rifles ringed the parliament building to keep the protesting tribesmen from disrupting the inauguration ceremonies.

Inside the palace the new president, 43-year- old leader of the Abako party, swore to uphold the laws of this long - time Belgian territory that will gain its independence Thursday.

Kasa Vubu, unruffled by the rumbling demonstration outside, told a crowd in Parliament that the Congolese must "surmount tribal divisions if we are to maintain unity."

The demonstrating crowd, which gathered in defiance of a law declaring a square - mile area around Parliament as "neutral ground," protested that the Baluba tribe was not represented in Premier Patrice Lumumba new government.

The tribesmen carried banners demanding a government post for Albert Kalonji, leader of the Balubas in their home province of Kasai.

Kalonji leads the National Congolese movement, the chief political opposition to Lumumbas coalition government. Many of his Baluba followers have come to Leopoldville to work.

The Balubas made no attempt to enter the Parliament building.

TROOPS MOVE UP

Montgomery Advertiser

Congo Threatens Katanga Frontier

Mon. 8-29-60

ELISABETHVILLE, the Congo (AP)—Congolese army units have moved to within 20 miles of the northern frontier of rebelious Katanga Province, a Katanga army spokesman said Sunday. He announced Katanga's soldiers have advanced to the border to meet the threat.

The spokesman said the Congolese are part of Congo Premier Patrice Lumumba's forces that Saturday captured Bakwanga, capital of the so-called "mineral state" in Kasai Province. The mineral state had joined Katanga in defying Lumumba's authority.

Vowing to defend Katanga against Lumumba's forces, Premier Moise Tshombe of this mineral-rich Congo province announced he will fly to northern Katanga Monday to rally his troops.

BRIDGES BLOWN

Tshombe told a news conference the two main road and rail bridges leading south from Kasai into Katanga have been blown up and roads are mined.

The Katanga army spokesman said latest intelligence reports put troops of the Congolese army at Luputa, an agricultural center about 20 miles from the Ktanga border. Luputa is on the main road and railway leading south from Luluabourg, capital of Kasai.

The spokesman said the Congolese were advance parties of a force which had moved south from Luluabourg by train to Mwene Ditu. Part of this force swung northeast and took Bakwanga. The troops that took Bakwanga were believed still to be in that diamond-mining center, he said.

Another part of the force, however, continued moving south to Luputa, he said, and it was probable that patrols have reached the Katanga border.

Katanga troops flown to Kanama, about 20 miles south of the border, have been moved into the border town of Kabeze, the spokesman reported.

The spokesman said there is still a big force of Lumumba troops at Mwene Ditu. The total force Lumumba sent from Luluabourg has been estimated at 300 men.

CONGO FORCES ON MOVE

Congolese Army units (black arrow) have advanced to within 20 miles of the northern frontier of rebellious Katanga Province. Katanga troops (white arrow) have advanced to the border to meet the threat.—AP Wirephoto

NUMBERS 1,100

Best estimates are that Katanga's army numbers 1,100 men.

Tshombe told reporters Katanga is determined to fight off any aggression from Lumumba forces, but declined to say whether he would make any military move to help the mineral state.

Katanga's small army can count on support from the numerous Baluba tribesmen in both Kasai and Katanga provinces.

At the same time, Tshombe criticized his old ally, President Albert Kalonji of the mineral state, for not staying with his people in Bakwanga when danger threatened.

Kalonji came to this capital of Katanga Wednesday to seek military help, three days before Bakwanga was captured.

Tshombe repeated the claim by Kalonji that Tunisian troops of the U.N. force in Bakwanga had intervened on the side of Lumumba's troops.

A Jungle Intellect

Montgomery Advertiser

It is entirely within the authority of the Congolese premier to order the United Nations out of the Congo. The U.N.'s fastidious regard for sovereignty would leave it no choice but to quit the Congo.

Mon. 8-29-60

But it is typical of the Congo's witless premier that he should make the demand at all.

P. 4-A

The last Belgian forces are to be withdrawn by Monday. When they go, said Lumumba, the U.N. should follow—"We don't want to replace the Belgian military occupation with a United Nations occupation."

But the Belgians agreed to go only on condition that the U.N. remain to try to preserve order and protect the harassed whites of the Congo. They, whom Lumumba detests, will stay if the U.N. goes.

There is no accounting for Lumumba's actions except on the basis of what must be his complete and astounding stupidity.

With the Congo army rioting, Lumumba was compelled originally to ask the U.N.'s help. It was also the only way to get rid of the Belgians. Now he demands that both the U.N. and the Belgians depart, leaving the maintenance of order to the same undisciplined army that prompted the U.N.'s entry into the Congo in the first place.

It is a frustrating and perhaps impossible mission that is assigned to the U.N. With no authority to intervene in purely "internal" squabbles, the U.N. strives for order in a country

GIs Beaten By Africans At Airport

Montgomery Advertiser

Sun. 8-28-60

Transport Crewmen Mobbed As Congolese Attempt Lynchings

LEOPOLDVILLE, The Congo, (UPI) — Rampaging Congolese soldiers beat an eight-man U.S. Air Force plane crew with rifle butts Saturday at Stanleyville and tried to lynch the injured Americans. Other Congolese wounded three whites in a raid on a United Nations office.

All eight Americans were hospitalized with injuries. Several were smeared with blood from the vicious attack and there was blood on the blacktop runway near their Globemaster plane. Two of the airmen were reported to have been kidnaped, but were found in a hospital.

AMERICANS IDENTIFIED

In Washington, the Air Force identified the eight Americans as:

Capt. Elvert L. Mott, Glenmora, La.; Lt Kenneth E. Stickevers, Valley Stream, N.Y.; Lt. Armand A. Kelsenberg, Pierz, Minn.; Lt. William M. Shaw, Asheville, N.C.; T-Sgt. Kenneth E. Bennett, of Norfolk Va.; Lt. Gerald T. Henry, Washington, D.C.; T-Sgt Fred M. Kaiser, Smyrna, Del.; S-Sgt. B.E. Bossa, Sarasota, Fla.

The Air Force said all the men were assigned to units stationed at Dover Air Force Base, Del.

CANADIANS ABOARD

It also disclosed that two Canadians—identified as Cpl. G. W. Gavel and signalman A.L.G. Bone—were aboard the plane but gave no explanation for their presence.

An Ethiopian U.N. force army colonel intervened in the screaming mob beating the Americans and was credited with saving them from death.

Extent of injuries to the Americans was not immediately known.

There was no report on the condition of the three U.N. personnel, two Canadian officers and a Swedish civilian, who were wounded in a raid on the U.N. headquarters in Stanleyville a short time after the airport incident.

LUMUMBA ARRIVES

The Americans were attacked just 45 minutes before Premier Patrice Lumumba arrived in Stanleyville, the eastern Congo capital from Leopoldville to demonstrate to newsmen his belief that he has complete control over the Congo situation. He flew in aboard a Russian-donated plane.

Reviewing an honor guard at the airport, Lumumba noticed the blood on the runway. And as he told a cheering crowd that he personally would lead Congolese troops "in combat dress" into secessionist Katanga province, he saw a flier walking across the landing field, his face bloodied and his uniform torn.

STIFF UN PROTEST

U. N. undersecretary-general Ralph Bunch filed a stiff note of protest with Lumumba. The U.N. advisory committee met on the crisis in emergency session in New York.

The attack on the Americans occurred as their big four-engine plane taxied to a stop, bringing in signal equipment and food supplies for the U.N. garrison.

The names of the Americans were not immediately disclosed.

As they disembarked from their parked plane, the Congolese suddenly attacked them, smashing at them with their rifle butts while others milled around screaming and manhandling the Americans.

Provincial Premier Jean-Pierre Finant said the Congolese had heard rumors that the globemaster carried Belgian paratroopers who wanted to attack Lumumba

Lumumba Pulls Reversal, Asks U.N. Troop Removal

Montgomery Advertiser

Montgomery Ala.

Sat. 8-27-60

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo (AP) — Premier Patrice Lumumba said Friday he wants the United Nations to get its 17,000 troops out of the Congo when the last of the Belgian troops go, supposedly Monday.

The statement represents another sudden turnabout in Lumumba's attitude toward the United Nations. Only four days ago he had dropped his demand that the U.N. revise its military operations here.

1, 7a

"We will assure order with our own troops and police," the Premier said at Friday's impromptu news conference. "We don't want to replace the Belgian military occupation with a United Nations occupation."

NEWEST DEMAND

The newest demand from Lumumba came after rioting against his leadership Thursday outside the Palace of Culture. Lumumba had just begun addressing delegates of 12 African nations he invited to a meeting. Police had to fire shots over the heads of the anti-Lumumba demonstrators.

U.N. headquarters here had no immediate comment on Lumumba's desire that its troops leave. A timetable by Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold calls for the last of Belgium's soldiers to depart by Monday.

Panic would spread through the remaining white population here if U.N. troops left. Their presence is the main reason that any white settlers have stayed in the Congo.

Lumumba, smiling, said Thursday's rioting was insignificant. The rioters had clamored for Lumumba's death in chants and on signboards.

'NO PARADISE'

"The Congo is not a paradise," said the Premier. "Such incidents happen everywhere."

He said the demonstration was the work of the Belgians — "and we know who they are." He again accused Belgium and France of trying to boil up trouble to split the Congo's provinces.

Lumumba said such activity is directed by a Belgian general staff set up in Brazzaville, across the Congo River in the former French Congo. That's why his government closed a ferry line to Brazzaville and cut off communications, the Premier said.

Lumumba repeated his demand that control of all Congo airports be returned to his sometimes undisciplined army. U. N. forces of Sudan and Ghana troops took over Leopoldville airport after a series of incidents. The most serious was the manhandling of Canadian U. N. troops by Congolese soldiers.

Sudanese riflemen are entrenched around the airport. Their officers say: "We have orders to resist any aggression."

TROOPS AIRLIFTED

Congolese troops airlifted eastward into Kasai Province, where tribal clashes erupted, have gained control, according to Lumumba.

He hinted that his troops will soon deal with Katanga Province, further east, where provincial Premier Moise Tshombe announced secession two months ago in defiance of Lumumba's wishes for a strong central government.

"The problem of Katanga will be solved immediately," said Lumumba. "Tshombe is holding on only because of the presence of Belgian troops."

The Pan-American conference Lumumba held Thursday had been billed beforehand as a summit gathering. But it became a meeting of second- and third-string diplomats instead.

"The conference is a great success," Lumumba proclaimed. "All of the African nations have expressed the desire to aid the Congo. African solidarity now is not just a word. We are ready to welcome anybody willing to help us."

The Premier did not say how he reconciled the statement with his demand that U. N. troops get out. He answered no questions at his news conference.

U.N. Firm, Ready To Enter Katanga

Atlanta Constitution
Atlanta, Ga.
8/13/60

By ADRIAN PORTER

ELISABETHVILLE, the Congo (AP) — Katanga's Premier Moise Tshombe raised doubts Thursday night about the arrival of U.N. soldiers in his province, but there were firm indications that the United Nations intends to move in on Saturday as scheduled.

Tshombe, who declared Wednesday that U.N. forces would have to fight their way into Katanga, held a 2½-hour meeting with Ralph J. Bunche, troubleshooting U.N. undersecretary.

The Premier later told newsmen U.N. soldiers may not arrive Saturday. Then he hedged and said he would not be surprised if they come after all.

Bunche declined any comment on his talk with Tshombe, saying only: "I will report fully to the secretary-general, Mr. Hammarskjold, on today's discussions. I must state explicitly that I can take no decisions."

Reliable informants in Leopoldville, capital of the Congo central government, said, however, there has been no change in U.N. plans to move soldiers into Katanga. They added that it is unlikely there will be any change.

Three companies of Swedish soldiers in the Leopoldville area packed their gear to head the units set to come into this self-declared independent province. Troops of some African nation, perhaps Morocco or Tunisia, are expected to join the force.

SECURITY COUNCIL

Tshombe held an impromptu news conference after meeting with Bunche and said he wants the whole question of Katanga put before the U.N. Security Council.

Bunche was sent here to work out a face-saving compromise that would allow U.N. forces into Katanga.

Tshombe was somewhat vague on the matter and said he had put it aside from consideration at the moment. He added he would not be shocked if the U.N. forces do arrive, although he plans to oppose the troops and has already begun drafting men to fight them if necessary.

BECAME INDEPENDENT

Bunche and Tshombe sent a message to U.N. Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold, now in the Congo capital of Leopoldville, asking him about a Security Council session on Katanga. Talks were suspended until Hammarskjold replies. Tshombe said he expects a reply Friday.

Tshombe said Katanga became independent on July 11, while the Security Council resolution calling for Belgian troops to withdraw from the Congo was made only on July 14.

He said this meant Katanga was independent before the Security Council met and that Belgian troops are entitled to remain in Katanga only if his government wants them to.

Tshombe said that if the United Nations tries to intervene in Katanga it will provoke a conflict.

"We want Bunche to see for himself how orderly Katanga is," the Premier added.

Tshombe said Bunche will meet with a congress of the chiefs of Katanga Friday morning and they will explain that their subjects do not want U.N. troops here.

Further complicating the situation was a stiffening attitude against the Belgians displayed in Leopoldville Thursday by Premier Patrice Lumumba's government.

It ordered all Congolese being trained as technicians in Belgium to return home, despite the desperate need here for their training.

"We believe Belgium is indoctrinating our technicians against the Congo government," said information minister Anicet Kashamura.

The Leopoldville government also renounced, for the time being, all economic and technical aid from Belgium. It ordered Baron Jean Van den Bosch, Belgium's ambassador, to leave the country before Monday. Van den Bosch was accused of being responsible for the chaotic series of events in the new nation since Belgium granted independence June 30.

In Tunis, on the way home from a trip to U.N. headquarters in New York, Lumumba threatened to use "radical" measures to get Belgian troops out the country if they have not left when he arrives in Leopoldville Monday.

Congo Trouble Is Being Blamed On Ex-King Leopold's Wife

Atlanta Constitution
Atlanta, Ga.
8/13/60

BRUSSELS (WNS) — Bitterness is boiling up in Belgium around Mary Liliane Baels—the controversial second wife of ex-King Leopold—in the wake of the Congo calamity.

Essentially, it's the same old controversy—the extent of the influence, if any, she wields over King Baudouin—but with sinister new overtones.

The foes of Princess de Rethy, the title conferred upon the commoner Mary Liliane Baels by Leopold, charge that she pressured King Baudouin into premature surrender of the Congo.

It is Liliane, as every coffee-house gossip knows, who wears the pants in Leopold's family. Leopold has vast stakes in the Congo, investments valued at nearly half a billion dollars, treasure inherited through his Congo-colonizing grandfather, the king for whom Leopoldville is named.

The Belgian royal family's interest in the Congo always—and openly—has been commercial. Early in his colonizing career, the old King Leopold dispensed with all pretense of do-goodism. With the latter Leopold, the Congo was always "cash and carry"—and no nonsense.

This same attitude has been preserved intact down through Baudouin, Liliane's stepson. And when the current crisis took shape as storm clouds several years ago, the politicians in Brussels, Premier Gaston Eyskens foremost, floundered helplessly, and ended up buck-passing the Congo bomb to Baudouin.

There are swelling demands that she be banished from Belgium forever. But the Princess' partisans charge she is being made the scapegoat for parliamentary fumbling—of the Congo crisis and all else that ails Belgium.

It was then that Liliane Baels barged into Baudoin's quandary. She persuaded Leopold and Baudoin that Belgium's treasure cache in the Congo, and especially the royal family's fortune, could be better safeguarded by casting the Congo adrift abruptly.

Lumumba Sees U.N. Secretary

The Atlanta Constitution

Atlanta Ga. Mon. 7-25-60

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP) — Congo Premier Patrice Lumumba talked with U.N. Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold for 2½ hours Sunday about the situation in the troubled Congo. He later told newsmen he is "very optimistic."

Lumumba said he plans to continue his talks here Monday and Tuesday. He met with Hammarskjold after saying on his arrival in New York that Belgian troops should leave the Congo immediately.

Speaking in French, Lumumba told reporters here: "I have just had a very fruitful meeting with the secretary of the United Nations on the general situation in the Congo. This meeting is going to be continued Monday and Tuesday. I express my satisfaction for the understanding which has prevailed during our conversation."

Asked if he is optimistic about the Congo situation, he replied, "Very optimistic."

Lumumba said he will talk with members of the U.N. Security Council at a luncheon Monday.

Lumumba, 35, told newsmen earlier peace in the Congo depends on the prompt withdrawal of Belgian troops.

He said he has confidence in the United Nations and "we hope it will find a speedy solution."

INTERNATIONAL OPINION

In addition to meeting with Hammarskjold, Lumumba has said he hopes to appear before the U.N. "to inform international public opinion" about conditions in the Congo.

The Security Council last Friday voted to call on Belgium to withdraw its troops speedily from the newly independent African nation, but the Council has not scheduled any further meetings on the Congo.

The tall, bespectacled premier in a brief statement in French said: "We came here to make direct contact with the secretary-general of the United Nations in order to arrange a speedy solution to the problem of the Congo.

THANKS U.S.

"We extend our compliments and friendship to President Eisenhower and we also thank the American people for all they have done for the emancipation of the African people."

The Negro leader was accompanied by a retinue of a dozen Congo officials.

Several hours later, L. Edgar Detwiler, the American financier who signed a multimillion-dollar development pact with the Congo, arrived at Idlewild. Detwiler had accompanied Lumumba to London from the Congo.

Detwiler, 62, said he had successfully competed with Soviet powers to land the contract.

He said he did not know what the Soviet bloc had offered in the way of agreement but because of the "fantastic mineral wealth in the Congo the offers from other sources must have been almost unlimited."

Belgians Pull 1,500 From Congo

Atlanta Constitution

Atlanta, Ga.

Sat. 7/30/60

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP)—Belgium yielded slightly Friday to pressure for withdrawal of Belgian troops from the Congo. The government announced 1,500 soldiers, mostly parachute troopers, will be returned to Belgium early next week, probably Tuesday.

About 8,500 Belgian military men, numerically a shade under the multiracial U.N. military forces headed by Sweden's Maj Gen. Carl von Horn, will stay on in the former Belgian colony.

NOT QUITTING BASES

Defense Minister Arthur Gilson told a news conference Belgian units will remain as long as necessary to help protect Europeans and the government, at this stage, is not considering abandoning its treaty bases in the Congo.

Though the U.N. Security Council a week ago called on Belgium to speed the withdrawal, Gilson declared the Belgian soldiers will withdraw only in so far as U.N. troops are effectively in a position to replace them.

He noted there soon will be 12,000 U.N. troops in the Congo, but, with an eye on the occasional need for swift deployment, said there will be only one company of parachute troops among them. He added, however, that the U.N. is likely to get more helicopters and light planes than the Belgians have had.

PLAN READY

The Belgian army command, he said, has a withdrawal plan ready to be put into effect when the situation permits.

Belgian troops have occupied about 25 centers in their efforts to bring order out of the chaos that followed the rise of the old colony as a free nation June 30. Gilson said 50 Belgian soldiers have been killed and 68 injured in the operations. Of the dead, 41 perished in the crash of a Belgian air force transport last week near Goma.

The defense minister told newsmen the military bases which Belgium retained under a treaty of friendship and assistance with Premier Patrice Lumumba's Congolese government are needed for the time being, even in the withdrawal plans.

DEMANDS PULLOUT

Lumumba, 35, has declared Belgium voided that treaty by flying in reinforcements after the Congolese army mutiny and demands a complete withdrawal of Belgian forces from the Congo.

The Negro leader reiterated his call for an immediate evacuation at the windup Friday of a visit to Washington. He charged that Belgium threatens all Africa. Then he flew to Montreal to pursue in Canada his quest for money, technicians and medical help to save his faltering country from disaster.

BRITAIN ADJUSTS NYASALAND PLANS

N.Y. Times N.Y.

Macleod Forced to Modify Proposals as Objections Are Raised by Africans

Wed. 8/3/60

By WALTER H. WAGGONER

Special to The New York Times.

LONDON, Aug. 2—Iain Macleod, Secretary of State for the Colonies, has begun to readjust the specific steps of his program for the constitutional advance of Nyasaland.

The Colonial Secretary met yesterday—a holiday for the rest of the Government—with delegates to the Nyasaland Constitutional Conference to discuss details of his "four points" for the protectorate's course toward eventual independence. The four principles envisage greater participation by Africans in the Nyasaland Government, but propose no date for self-government.

The four points recognize the African majority in Nyasaland, call for qualitative voting, recommend that an Executive Council be responsible to a Governor rather than the Legislative Council and propose that the Executive Council members be drawn from the elected members of the Legislative Council.

Proposals Are Modified

A Colonial Office communiqué indicated today that Mr. Macleod's detailed proposals for broadening the voting rights of Africans and enlarging their representation in the Legislative Council had met with resistance. He therefore introduced a modified set of proposals, still faithful to the four points, this morning.

While there have been no serious disputes so far, the stage of hard bargaining has begun. There are clear signs that general agreement on Mr. Macleod's plan is out of the question.

The Colonial Secretary's proposals go considerably further toward getting an expression of African opinion "through the ballot box" than is approved by the United Federal party, the white-dominated multiracial group. However, the proposals fall far short of changes sought by the African nationalists represented by Dr. Hastings K. Banda.

Dr. Banda, leader of the Malawi Congress party, wants universal suffrage, based on "one man, one vote," which would produce substantial African majorities, and a fixed date for self-government some time this fall.

Voting Rights Key

The nationalist leader has shown little readiness to accept anything less than a clear African majority in the Legislative Council, but it is generally felt that the composition of that body will prove less of an obstacle to agreement than the fundamental question of African voting rights.

The Colonial Secretary is allowing himself as much flexibility as possible within the limits of his four points. Having offered one set of details for voting rights and membership in the Legislative Council at the end of last week, he has now introduced another set. For that reason, Colonial Office spokesmen are emphasizing that there is no final "MacLeod plan" at the present time.

Eventually, however, Mr. MacLeod will fix an irreducible minimum for his proposals, as he did at the Kenya Constitutional Conference early this year. Then he will resort to his art of persuasion to bring acceptance from as many delegates as he believes necessary to guarantee success of his formula. The next twenty-four hours may be crucial in this effort, it is said.

The New York Times Aug. 3, 1960

CONGO TROOP MOVEMENTS: Belgian forces are being withdrawn from Leopoldville Province (1), Kasai (2) and Kivu (3). They will quit Katanga (4) as United Nations units move into disputed territory. The United Nations also will be asked to send in troops to prevent destruction in Albert National Park (5).

U. N. GUARD ASKED FOR CONGO WILDS

N.Y. Times N.Y. Herald Trib.

Belgian Urges Troops to Protect the Albert Animal Park From Depredation

Wed. 8/3/60

By HARRY GILROY

Special to The New York Times.

BRUSSELS, Belgium, Aug. 2—The United Nations Command in the Congo will be asked to send troops to the Albert National Park to protect its wildlife and forests. A Belgian official fears the Congolese may kill the animals and destroy the forests.

The park is a renowned game preserve and center for the study of primitive nature. It stretches over 2,000,000 acres and includes the towering Ruwenzori Mountains.

Belgian administrators have been driven from the park by the Congolese according to Prof. Victor van Straelen, president of the Institute of National Parks for the Belgian Congo.

The park official said at his home here today that he had received word that the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization would intervene. A UNESCO delegate is scheduled to go to Leopoldville Thursday with the appeal for protection for the park.

Human Activity Limited

Professor van Straelen said that since 1934 the park had been kept as nearly as possible free from human activity so that the plants and animals in that equatorial region could be observed in their natural state. He said he doubted that the Congolese understood the scientific value of the reserve.

"It is inevitable that they will reduce the number of animals and modify their behavior," he said. "Also, they will burn off vegetation and cut the trees. The scientific loss will be very great if this happens."

Some animals, such as the mountain gorilla and the okapi, might be wiped out, he indicated. Clearing of ground for cultivation could endanger one stretch of woodland in which the entire progression of tropical vegetation from sea level to mountain top now exists, he said.

Clearing of forests in the park would also have a marked effect on the climate of Central Africa, Professor van Straelen said.

"Africa is a continent that is gradually drying up anyhow," he declared. "Ruwenzori acts as the regulator of moisture and temperature for that part of the continent, catching the clouds from the forests and bringing down rain and snow. But if the forests are cut the whole natural economy of the region will be upset."

Scientists and a limited number of tourists have been permitted to enter some sections of the park but only in the company of native guides.

"Unfortunately, these guides have turned aggressive," Professor van Straelen said. "At this point it seems that everything there connected with the white race must be got rid of."

Gorilla Study Cited

Professor van Straelen said the park was full of lions, elephants, hippopotamuses, buffalo, antelope and aquatic birds. As an example of the scientific work that Professor van Straelen says has been interrupted, he cited a study of gorillas by a couple from Chicago, Dr. and Mrs. George Schaller.

"They were working on a grant from the New York Zoological Society and the National Science Foundation," the professor said. "When their work comes out it will be sensational. They were practically adopted by the gorillas."

Professor van Straelen concluded:

"The Albert Park is a rare thing that is of value to mankind as a whole. We do not know exactly what use science may make of this natural laboratory in the future. But we do know that if any species of animal or plant in it is destroyed it cannot be replaced by the ingenuity of mankind, and something will have been lost that science may need. The world should move quickly to protect this heritage."

Request Sent From U. S.

Fairfield Osborn, president of the New York Zoological Society, said last night that Dag Hammarskjold, Secretary General of the United Nations, had been asked whether a small detachment of United Nations troops could be detailed to protect the preserve in the Congo.

Mr. Osborn said that Dr. Schaller and his wife had left the Congo but were eager to return to continue their survey of gorilla life. The two Americans have been living mainly on Mikeno Mountain, a site they chose for their study of gorillas and their habits. They have completed the first phase of their work, which lasted a little more than a year, but the full study is expected to take about five years.

U. N. FORCE TO DEFY KATANGA'S THREAT TO OPPOSE ENTRY

N.Y. Times N.Y. Herald Trib.

Troops to Go Into Province Saturday—Hammarskjold Clarifies Their Position

BUNCHE ADVANCES TRIP

Secretary General Asserts World Body Will Shun Any Internal Conflict

Wed. 8/4/60

Hammarskjold statement is printed on Page 3.

By HENRY TANNER

Special to The New York Times.

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo, Aug. 3—United Nations troops will enter Katanga Province on schedule Saturday despite the provincial Premier's warning that he would "regard United Nations intervention as an act of aggression" and would oppose it by force.

Moise Tshombe, Katanga's Premier, made his statement at Elisabethville this morning.

Tonight Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold of the United Nations made two moves apparently intended to placate the provincial authorities.

He issued a "clarifying statement" in which he declared that the United Nations "force will not be under orders of the [Congo] Government and cannot under any circumstances become a party to an internal conflict."

Bunche Advances Departure

Simultaneously, United Nations headquarters announced that Dr. Ralph J. Bunche, who had been scheduled to go to Elisabethville Friday, would fly there tomorrow morning. The Under Secretary's mission is to pave the way for the entry of the United Nations forces by conferring with Belgian commanders and provincial authorities.

Swedish and Ghanian troops were being prepared here today to go to Katanga.

This was taken to mean that United Nations had decided as a compromise to send both white and African troops into the province. The Congo Government had insisted that task be given to soldiers from an African country while Belgian officials had served notice that the European population of Katanga would not feel safe unless white troops were sent.

A similar compromise was followed in Leopoldville when Swedes and Ghanians were assigned here two weeks ago.

There was no reference to Mr. Tshombe in the "clarifying statement" issued by Mr. Hammarskjold, yet there was no doubt that it had been produced by the provincial Premier's threats. United Nations spokesmen said the decision to issue the statement was taken after Mr. Tshombe's warning.

Two Leaders Disagree

The Secretary General's pledge that United Nations force would not interfere in local affairs and would not take orders from the central Congo Government, was taken to refer to a conflict between Mr. Tshombe and Premier Patrice Lumumba, head of the central Government, over the future of the young republic.

Mr. Lumumba favors a strongly centralistic system of government.

Mr. Tshombe has proclaimed the "secession" of Katanga but has since called for a Congo confederation, with a weak central government and strong provincial governments.

Observers have been predicting that separatist forces would assert themselves in the Congo. They said that unity had been maintained in the past only by a strong Belgian central administration.

When the Belgians left the only strong pressure for unity came from the Belgian-trained Congo Army. This force vanished when the Congolese soldiers mutinied, these observers say.

The United Nations is now seen as the only cohesive force in the Congo. Observers say that while the world organization should prevent the disintegration of the country, it should not stand in the way of a new balance of power that might develop naturally between the central and provincial governments.

Belgians Again Fearful

Last night's announcement that United Nations forces would enter Katanga revived fears among the Belgians still in Leopoldville.

Many of these Belgians feel that Mr. Hamarskjold let himself be "blackmailed" into hasty action by the Congo Government.

These Belgians said they feared that extremists among the Congo leaders sensed a "weakness" in the United Nations position and would move on to a new demand as soon as earlier one had been granted.

They predicted that the Congolese might next demand the immediate evacuation of the Belgian military bases at Kitona and Banana at the mouth of the Congo River and Kamina in Katanga. Belgium holds these bases under a friendship treaty concluded before independence but never ratified.

Belgian diplomats take the position that Belgium would not stay in these bases against Congolese wishes.

Katanga Mobilizing Men

ELISABETHVILLE, the Congo, Aug. 3 (AP)—Premier Moise Tshombe of Katanga announced today his Government had ordered the mobilization of all able-bodied men in Katanga Province to oppose the scheduled entry of United Nations troops Saturday.

"They will have to fight their way in," Mr. Tshombe said.

The Katanga radio broadcast orders for all men to report for mobilization. Mr. Tshombe said he had the support of tribal chiefs in the decision to mobilize.

The Premier's threat to fight was discounted by Belgian authorities here, who noted that his military forces are slim.

Mr. Tshombe said after a Cabinet meeting:

"Katanga is independent and will remain independent. Katanga refuses to allow on its territory troops other than the friendly [Belgian] troops it has itself called in.

"The United Nation does not have the right to enter our territory so long as order reigns and against our will."

The United Nations announcement that it was sending troops to Katanga stunned the white population of Elisabethville. The city has returned to normal pursuits under the protection of the Belgian troops. Yet despite earlier talk of a mass flight when United Nation troops were ordered in, there was no sign of any exodus.

"It seems most of them will wait to see what happens when United Nations troops arrive," a Belgian official said.

Showdown in the Congo

The turbulent situation in the Congo, which confronts the world with the African problem in its most aggravated form, is now moving toward a showdown that involves not only the fate of the newly independent state but also the United Nations and possibly a question of war or peace.

At the insistent demand of Congolese Premier Lumumba, Secretary General Hammarskjold has ordered United Nations forces to take over control from the Belgians of the rich mining province of Katanga, which has seceded from the Congo and has proclaimed its separate independence. But Katanga's Premier Tshombe denounces such a move as "aggression" and has ordered the mobilization of all able-bodied men in the province to fight against it.

This brings to a head not only a conflict between two Congolese Premiers but also the whole issue of the future organization of the state. Premier Lumumba, whose rash statements and actions have unfortunately contributed to the breakdown of his regime as well as of law and order, thereby forcing United Nations intervention, stands for a strongly centralized government under his control and vows to "fight to the last drop of blood" to maintain the Congo's "independence and territorial integrity," even to call in Soviet troops if the United Nations does not assist him in that aim that includes expulsion of all Belgian troops. Premier Tshombe, on the other hand, suspicious of Communist influences, demands as the only alternative to secession a federal structure that will take into account both the differences in the tribal populations and their varying development. Even his local opposition demands a "large degree of autonomy."

All this confronts Secretary General Hammarskjold and the United Nations with a delicate and potentially dangerous task. Their intervention, the most massive since Korea, has already had a salutary effect in stemming the worst violence. But the main task of putting the new state on its feet in the face of local jealousies and suspicions lies still ahead, and the intervention in Katanga may complicate it even further. In this intervention Mr. Hammarskjold is acting entirely in keeping with the Security Council resolutions which deal with the Congo "as a unit" and call on him "to take all necessary action" for the withdrawal of the Belgian troops. He has even obtained the "close cooperation" of the Belgian Government in that task, although the question of Belgian treaty bases remains to be settled. All this lends special irony to Soviet charges against him as pro-Belgian and a pro-American "agent."

It would seem advisable for the United Nations forces to keep certain principles in mind. Their role in the Congo must be to maintain law and order and to help with technical advice and personnel. It cannot be to prop up new native tyrannies in the name of independence or to settle internal problems. These problems can be settled only by the Congolese people themselves, and the United Nations will fulfill its noblest function if it enables them to reach such a settlement in peace, not war.

CONGO DEMANDS U.N. SEND TROOPS TO KATANGA NOW

N. Y. Times Sun. 7/31/60

Hammarskjold Is Reported Pessimistic After 'Stormy' Meeting With Cabinet

EARLY CURFEW REVIVED

Signs of Restiveness Noticed in Leopoldville as Many Workers Wait for Pay

By HENRY TANNER

Special to The New York Times.

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo, July 30—The Congo Government angrily demanded today that Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold send United Nations troops into Katanga Province immediately despite Belgian opposition.

The demands were made at a two-and-a-half-hour meeting this morning between Mr. Hammarskjold and the Congo Cabinet. The meeting was described by Congo sources as "stormy."

Later Mr. Hammarskjold was reported to be pessimistic about the United Nation's success in the Congo.

Meanwhile, a 6 o'clock curfew was restored abruptly and without explanation on orders of the Congo Ministry of Interior. There has been no curfew for the last week. Only during the height of the crisis three weeks ago was there a curfew as early as 6 P. M.

The United Nations headquarters, whose Ghanaian and Swedish troops are responsible for security in Leopoldville, was informed of the curfew decision late in the afternoon.

Restiveness Is Noticed

The decision followed signs of restiveness as many African workers waited, apparently in vain, to receive their fortnightly wages.

[In Ottawa, Premier Patrice Lumumba of the Congo conferred with Prime Minister John Diefenbaker Saturday. After the meeting the Congo leader said he had accomplished his mission to seek Canadian approval of a plan to recruit technicians.]

A joint communiqué issued by Mr. Hammarskjold and the Cabinet ministers after their meeting said that a ministerial commission had been appointed to work with the Secretary General for the "fullest execution" of two Security Council resolutions and calling for the withdrawal of Belgian forces and to deal with the question of Katanga.

Mr. Hammarskjold was understood to have resisted the naming of Katanga in the communiqué but he backed down after more than two hours of debate. The Congo's Information Minister, Anicet Kashamura, said after the meeting that it was up to the Congo Government, not Mr. Hammarskjold, to decide on steps to be taken on Katanga. Mr. Kashamura is regarded as the spokesman of the Leftists in the Cabinet.

The ministerial commission held its first meeting with Mr. Hammarskjold this evening.

Katanga, the richest part of the Congo, is occupied by Belgian troops. The Belgians went there at the request of the provincial Premier, Moise Tshombe, who declared the province's secession from the Congo but who later indicated a willingness to collaborate with a central government in a federal state.

Congo leaders regard the Katanga holdout as a Belgian plot to split the Congo and to maintain control of the vast mineral interests in Katanga.

Mr. Hammarskjold was reported to have assured the Congo Government last night that he regarded Katanga as part of the Congo's territory and, hence, within the United Nations mandate here. He was said to have pleaded for patience.

Belgian diplomats have taken the position that United Nations forces will be free to enter Katanga sooner or later but that further negotiation should precede their entry so as to prevent violent dislocations in the economic life of the province and panic among the Belgian population.

The adamant stand of the Congo Government apparently came as a surprise to Mr. Hammarskjold. After this morning's meeting he was reported to have privately expressed pessimism about the political situation in the Congo and the chances of the United Nations success.

Informed sources reported that Mr. Hammarskjold had been pessimistic even about military developments and had deplored the apparent lack of communications between the headquarters of the United Nations Commander, Maj. Gen. Carl Carlsson Von Horn, and United Nations units in the interior.

United Nations officers here appear to have little reliable information about waht is going on in the interior.

Troops at Three Bases

The Belgian Embassy announced this morning that the first 1,500 Belgian troops would leave the Congo and return to Belgium today and tomorrow. The Belgian decision was overshadowed, however, by the sudden rise of difficulties between the Congo Government and the United Nations.

Belgian forces, which evacuated the Leopoldville area and some regions of the interior have not left the country but have remained in three bases

CORREA PRAISES WORK OF COUNCIL

N. Y. Times Sunday

President of U. N. for July 'Delighted' by Efforts in Dealing With Crises

By JAMES FERON

Special to The New York Times.

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y., July 29—Dr. José A. Correa of Ecuador, the President of the Security Council for July, described today the recent work of the Council as "extraordinary."

He said he was "delighted" with the Council's achievements in dealing with Cuba, the Congo and the United States Air Force RB-47 reconnaissance plane incident. Some diplomats regarded the July session as one of the busiest and most significant in the Council's history.

Members of the eleven-nation body, meanwhile, were looking forward to a two-week rest. Armand Bérard of France, who takes over as President Aug. 1, has promised informally that he would not call another session until mid-August at the earliest.

The activity of the last few weeks was being compared with 1948, when the Council took up crises in Kashmir, Palestine and Indonesia. The Council met 168 times that year, a figure that has never heen equaled.

Dr. Correa Recovers

Dr. Correa, who admitted to "some fatigue" during the past few weeks, said he was now wully recovered. He said the Council spent as much time discussing the Congo this month as it did during all its meetings in 1959, which numbered five.

The Security Council, which met twelve times in July and has convened thirty-three times this year, spent nearly twenty-three hours debating the situation in the Conog. More than fifteen hours were devoted to the Soviet complaint against the RE-47 and over ten hours to a Cuban complaint of United States "aggression" and internal interference.

Almost all of that activity took place in the last two weeks. The lengthy sessions, three of which ended between 1 and 3 A. M., may have taken their toll in the Soviet delegation. Arkady A. Sobolev, who was reported to have suffered a slight heart attack, left early this morning for Moscow on what was described as a "belated home leave."

One Western diplomat said that the Council's work in July might rank as its most significant, exceeding even the accomplishments surrounding the Hungarian, Suez and Korean crises.

He explained that the early debates were overshadowed by Soviet absences or vetoes and that, in any case, the Council's work was largely taken out of its hands.

In the case of the Congo, he said, there was rare unanimity by the major powers. The Cuban debate, he said, resulted in a "full recognition of the Organization of American States." The Soviet Union declined to veto a resolution forwarding the Cuban complaint to the O. A. S.

In the case of the RB-47, the diplomat said, Asian and African neutrals refused to abstain on a Soviet resolution condemning the United States, as they had done before. They chose to cast their ballots against the motion. He said it showed that "when the Soviet Union is wrong, the smaller states are not afraid to say so."

A member of the Security Council said it was probably that the group would meet at least twicce in August, particularly if threats of secession in Katanga Province continued. In any case, the Council will probably meet to hear the report of Secreetary General Dag Hammarskjold on his trip to the Congo.

KATANGA ENVOYS BACK BELGIAN TIE

N. Y. Times

Province's Representatives Favor Presence of Troops —Technical Aid Asked

Special to The New York Times.

BRUSSELS, Belgium, July 20—Three representatives of the Katanga Provincial Government arrived in Brussels today and paid that "the Belgian troops we invited to Katanga should not leave unless we decide they should."

The representatives said that the Katanga Government which has declared its independence of the Congo, does not want military forces of the United Nations in the province.

The Katanga group consists of Joseph Yava, former Economics Minister in the Cabinet of Premier Patrice Lumumba, Jean Kibwe-Latanga, Katanga Finance Minister, and Jacques Masungu, former vice president of the Congolese Senate.

The three men arrived by plane and immediately conferred with Auguste de Schryver and Raymond Scheyven, Belgian ministers dealing with African affairs. The Katanga group presented a request for technical aid.

Financial Help Indicated

It was indicated at the African Affairs Ministry that Katanga would get any financial help it needed and that technical experts would go to help the civil administration. There are a considerable number of Belgian technicians aiready in Katanga.

There is some difficulty in getting the Belgians to remain at their posts. Reports of continuing disorder in other parts of the Congo and the uncertain political future of Katanga have made some technicians determined to return home.

Harold d'Aspremont-Lynden, chief of the Belgian technical-aid mission in Katanga, notified the technicians there in the name of the Belgian Government that they were to remain on the job because they were badly needed.

Aid Assurances Given

This subject was reported to have been discussed by the Katanga envoys. New assurances were given that Belgium would carry through her aid program.

The Katanga representatives were accompanied by Maj. Guy Weber, Belgian military attaché to the Katanga Government. The group will stay in Brussels until Tuesday.

The representatives intend to visit New York and Washington, and possibly other Western capitals, to explain their Government's policies. They said the Government was not thinking of asking technical aid from the United Nations at present.

Belgian sources said that Belgium retained after the 8,500 Belgian soldiers would still be in the Congo after this first withdrawal. About 5,000 men were brought in from Belgium during the crisis, they said. The others had been here before.

Congolese hostility against United Nations soldiers broke out today. A Ghanaian patrol, which had arrested a Congolese for snatching a bag from a woman in the downtown area, faced an angry mob of youngsters who jostled the Ghanaians and tried to free the arrested man.

A number of incidents of this sort have been reported in the last few days.

Ghanaian soldiers were noticed yesterday teaching riot control to the Swedish troops with whom they share the control of Leopoldville.

Some workers received their wages today but the number could not be determined. Many are due to be paid tomorrow and Monday.

Lumumba Calls Trips Success After Talk With Diefenbaker

N.Y. Times
N.Y., N.Y.
July 31, 1960

Special to The

OTTAWA, July 30—Premier Patrice Lumumba of the Congo spent fifty-five minutes with Prime Minister John Diefenbaker today and emerged declaring his mission to Canada had been accomplished.

He came here from Washington to seek Canadian approval of a plan to recruit technicians—physicians, nurses, teachers, engineers and information officers—to help put his troubled new country on its feet.

While the Canadian Government is apparently not opposed to efforts to recruit technicians here, Mr. Lumumba appears to have been told politely that any economic assistance for the Congo would have to come indirectly through such international agencies, as the United Nations.

Ottawa Visit Cut Short

Premier Lumumba had been expected to stay in Ottawa until tomorrow but he said that urgent business required him to return to the Congo. There was no announcement of what the urgent business was.

The bearded Congolese leader expressed some disappointment that Canada had not matched the offer of the United States to provide 300 scholarships for the Congolese. However, he said he had "every confidence" in Canada's goodwill.

When he was asked at a news conference about offers of help from the Soviet Union, Mr. Lumumba, who spoke in French, replied, in the hearing of the Soviet Ambassador to Canada, Amazasp A. Arutynyan:

"I did not go to te Soviet Union. I am on a trip to the United States and Canada."

When he was asked if he was planning a trip to the Soviet Union, Mr. Lumumba replied, "I am returning to the oCngo."

Mr. Lumumba charged that the secession attempt of the Congo's rich Katanga Province had been encouraged by Belgian interests. He said he was certain the majority of Katanga's people were loyal to the Congo.

Soviet Envoy Pays Visit

OTTAWA, July 30 (AP)—Ambassador Arutyunyan paid a thirty-five-minute call on Premier Lumumba at his hotel after breakfast. He declined to say what had been discussed.

Mr. Lumumba, when asked about his talk with the Soviet Ambassador showed the first signs of irritation on his visit.

When he learned that the Ambassador had declined comment Mr. Lumumba replied, "Then that is the business of journalists, not mine. I came here to speak with Canadians, that's all."

Mr. Lumumba was not present in Parliament when Mr. Diefenbaker announced that Canadian signal personnel will be sent to the Congo to assist the United Nations force there.

Word of Mr. Lumumba's decision to depart early came when the Premier interrupted scheduled talks with Marcel Cadieux, a top official in Canada's External Affairs department, to rush his eight-man delegation of Ghanaian and Guinean representatives back to their hotel for an unscheduled meeting.

HAMMARSKJOLD BIDS BELGIUM CLARIFY STAND ON KATANGA

N.Y. Times
N.Y., N.Y.
Mon. 8/1/60

He Is Said to Seek Statement Affirming Right of World Body to Enter Province

ACTS ON CONGO DEMAND

Tshombe Reported Willing to Lift Bars to Troops if Federation Is Backed

By HENRY TANNER

Special to The New York Times.

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo, July 31—Dag Hammarskjold is understood to be looking to Belgium for a move to ease dangerously mounting tension over the future of Katanga Province.

Authoritative sources reported today that the United Nations Secretary General had appealed to Belgium to issue a "statement of intentions" declaring that she would abide by Security Council resolutions and had no objections of principle to the entry of United Nations troops into Katanga.

[In Newport, R. I., President Eisenhower praised the United Nations action in the Congo as an example of world cooperation for peace.]

Mr. Hammarskjold's appeal to Belgium was contained in a letter addressed to the Belgian Embassy for transmittal to Brussels, the sources said, and was sent to the Belgian Foreign Ministry by cable.

Congolese in Angry Plea

The Secretary General acted after having heard angry demands from Congolese Cabinet ministers for immediate United Nations intervention in Katanga.

The mineral-rich province in the southeastern Congo has formally declared its independence from the new Republic of the Congo, which was a Belgian colony. Katanga is the Congo's main source of revenue.

Katanga is controlled by Belgian troops, who intervened at the request of the provincial Premier, Moise Tshombe. He has said he would use force, if necessary, to prevent the United Nations' intervention.

Mr. Tshombe was reported to be willing to withdraw his opposition to intervention if he obtained some assurance that the United Nations would look favorably on his efforts to get the Congo's Constitution changed from a centralized to a federal system. The report came from diplomats who have been in touch with Mr. Tshombe during the last few days.

Cooperation Is Offered

Mr. Tshombe proclaimed Katanga's "secession" from the Congo three weeks ago, when violence beset the new nation but has since declared he would be willing to collaborate with the central Government if his wishes for a federal system, with strong provincial governments, were granted.

The Government of Premier Patrice Lumumba regards Mr. Tshombe as a Belgian puppet and his "secession" as a Belgian plot to maintain control over the vast interests in the province.

Advisers to Premier Lumumba sent a cablegram to the Prmeier, who is in New York, urging him to return to Leopoldville immediately and take charge of the Katanga situation. Mr. Lumumba, in a message of his own, is understood to have called on his Cabinet to be firm in its dealings with Mr. Hammarskjold and to impress on him the need for immediate intervention in Katanga.

The Cabinet has followed the Premier's instructions, but several ministers have let it be known that they would have preferred a more moderate policy.

Mr. Lumumba's advisers apparently fear that divergencies in the Cabinet might turn to open conflict if he extended his absence.

Tension between the Congo Government and the Secretary General over the Katanga issue was brought into the open last night at a Government reception in his honor.

Deputy Premier Antoine Gizenga rose for what United Nations officials expected to be friendly remarks of welcome. Instead he read an exceedingly tough prepared address in which he accused the United Nations, in effect, of complicity in "a war of colonial reconquest" waged by the Belgians.

The Belgians launched their campaign six days after the proclamation of the Congo's independence, M. Gizenga declared. He said that the Congolese could have coped with this threat and won easy victory by proclaiming "a nation in arms."

"They did not do so but appealed for United Nations help and agreed to disarm the people of the Congo," he said.

'Victims of Aggression'

Addressing his statement to Mr. Hammarskjold, Mr. Gizenga declared:

"We do not understand that we, victims of aggression, who are at home here, are being systematically disarmed [by the United Nations force] while the aggressors, the Belgians, who are the conquerors here, are permitted to keep their weapons and their means of inflicting death."

This policy permits the "Belgian invader" to attack the disarmed population, continue "systematic looting" of the country, corrupt the Congolese way of life and incite to conspiracies while accusing the Congolese of "rape," Mr. Gizenga charged.

It appears obvious, since the Congolese people are disarmed, that the United Nations force alone has to assume responsibility for these "crimes," he added, again addressing himself to Mr. Hammarskjold.

The Gizenga address included a statement that independent nations of Africa and Asia, "as well as many anti-colonalist countries of East and West," would have supported the Congo Government had it declared "total war" against the Belgians.

Peace Goal Is Stressed

Mr. Hammarskjold, abviously taken by surprise, replied in an extemporaneous talk in French.

He declared that the United Nations goal for the Congo was "peace, calm and independence." He said that there had been "difficult points" in his meetings with the Congo Cabinet and that "conciliation" had yet to be achieved "with respect to method, though not with respect to objectives."

He promised the Congolese they would get all the help the United Nations was able to provide. He warned them against believing that their problems could be solved without regard to world peace.

"Do not expect us to act against our convictions," he said. "We will not abandon a line of action that in our view is true to our responsibility toward the community of nations."

Mr. Hammarskjold met again with a standing committee of Cabinet Ministers formed yesterday. The committee's sole task is to consult with the Secretary General and other United Nations officials on the Katanga issue.

Katanga in New Plea

By HARRY GILROY

Special to The New York Times.

BRUSSELS, Belgium, July 31—Belgian authorities prevented Katanga from declaring its independence a day before the Republic of the Congo came into being, a Katanga minister said here today.

Finance Minister Jean-Marie Kibwe said at a news conference that Belgian officials learned of the independence move June 29 and prevented it. He maintained that Belgium should "repair her mistakes" and recognize the province as independent now.

Other Katanga officials said that Premier Lumumba planned at one point in the Congo crisis to fly to Moscow and that the party headed by Joseph Kasavubu, Chief of State, might be trying to link the Lower Congo area with the former French Congo, which adjoins it on the north.

Mr. Kibwe accused Mr. Lumumba of having planned the turmoil that swept the Congo three weeks ago. He said the Premier wanted to get his grip on the entire country.

Army Plot Alleged

Mr. Kibwe asserted that Mr. Lumumba set out to create a political vacuum and that he had to drag down the Congolese Army as the only force able to support the rule of law. Men from Mr. Lumumba's party worked in every army camp promising promotions to every soldier if they would drive out their Belgian officers, Mr. Kibwe added.

He said Katanga had accepted technical aid from Belgium solely because she was the only country to offer it. "If we had been offered aid from the Soviet Union, the United States or Germany, we would have accepted that," he said.

"We are not separatists," he continued. "We are closer to our Congolese brothers than to the Belgians. We want to create a steady country. If other parts of the Congo want to join with us, we will be happy."

Joseph Yava, former Minister of the Economy in the Lumumba Government, supported Mr. Kibwe. He said that he had flown around the Congo with Mr. Kasavubu and Mr. Lumumba during the army mutiny and his impression was that the Premier's supporters had caused the trouble and the Premier wanted to appear as a peacemaker.

SOVIET THREATENS BELGIANS ON CONGO

N.Y. Times

N.Y. N.Y.

Vows Resolute Measures If Forces Remain—New Aid Promised Africans

By SEYMOUR TOPPING

Special to The New York Times.

MOSCOW, July 31—The Soviet Union warned tonight that the continued presence of Belgian troops in the Congo would endanger world peace.

A Government statement pledged unspecified "resolute measures to rebuff the aggressors" if the Belgian forces were not withdrawn. It accused the Atlantic Pact powers of having encouraged Belgium's intervention in her former colony.

The declaration published by Tass, the Soviet press agency, was regarded by Western experts here as another in a series of bids by the Kremlin for a link with the new Republic of the Congo against the West.

Congolese Assured on Aid

Moscow assured the Congolese Government that it was ready to render economic and technical assistance without political or military strings.

The Soviet Union cited the United Nations Security Council resolution that called for the withdrawal of Belgian forces from the Congo. It said:

"In case the aggression against the Congo is continued and considering the dangerous consequences for the cause of universal peace, the Soviet Government will not hesitate to take resolute measures to rebuff the aggressors who, as it has now become perfectly clear, are actually acting with the encouragement of all the colonialist powers of NATO."

The statement, noting that the Soviet Union had received a request from the Congolese for economic assistance, said Moscow already had sent 10,000 tons of food relief to the Congo. It continued:

"One more Soviet ship will shortly leave for the shores of the Congo with 100 Soviet trucks on board, spare parts and a repair depot accompanied by a group of instructors."

The statement added that a group of Soviet Red Cross doctors and other medical personnel, medicine and medical equipment would also be sent. The statement concluded:

"The Soviet Government is ready to render the Republic of the Congo economic and technical aid and to develop mutually advantageous economic cooperation and trade with it on a basis of noninterference in internal affairs, full equality, mutual respect and without any political, military or other conditions liable to prejudice the sovereign right of the independent republic of the Congo."

CONGO TROOP PACT WITH U. N. SIGNED

N.Y. Times

N.Y. N.Y.

Hammarskjold Says Force Will Stay Until Peace Is Restored to New State

Sun. 7/31/60

By LINDESAY PARROTT

Special to The New York Times

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y., July 30 — The United Nations and the Congo have agreed that the United Nations force will remain in the Congo until its mission of peace has been "fully accomplished."

Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold circulated a statement to that effect today among members of the Security Council. Between 9,000 and 10,000 United Nations troops have now been deployed over most of the Congo area.

Mr. Hammarskjold said the "basic agreement" on the peace force between the Congo and the United Nations had been "duly initialed" by both sides.

Cooperation Is Aim

The agreement provdies that both parties cooperate to "hasten the implementation of the guiding principles" laid down by the Security Council. The Congolese Government has made it plain that its first desire is for a quick evacuation of Belgian troops, a request the Council has supported.

The Congo, the agreement said, will collaborate in solving supply, communications and maintenance problems of the United Nations force.

Information received here from Geneva said Mr. Hammarskpold had requested that the International Labor Organization send a group of specialists to the Congo. David A. Morse, director general of the I. L. A., announced that a first contingent had arrived already.

Following is the text of the agreement between the Congo and the United Nations:

"1. The Government of the Republican of the Congo states that, in the exercise of its sovereign rights with respect to any question concening the presence and functioning of the United Nation s force in the Congo, it will be guided, in good faith, by the fact that it has requested military assistance from the United Nations and by its acceptance of the resolutions of the Security Council of 14 and 22 July 1960; it likewise states that it will insure the freedom of movement of the force in the interior of the country and will accord the requisite privileges and immunities to all personnel associated with the activities of the force.

"The United Nations takes note of this statement of the Government of the Republic of the Congo and states that, with regard to the activities of the United Nations Force in the Congo, it will be guided, in good faith, by the task assigned to the force in the afore-mentioned resolutions; in particular the United Nations reaffirms, considering it to be in accordance with the wishes of the Government of the Republic of the Congo, that it is prepared to maintain the United Nations Force in the Congo until such time as it deems the latter task to have been fully accomplished.

"3. The Government of the Republic of the Congo and the Secretary General state their intention to proceed immediately, in the light of paragraph 1 and 2 above, to explore jointly specific aspects of the functioning of the United Nations Force in the Congo, notably with respect to its deployment, the question of its line of communication and supply, its lodgings and its provisioning; the Government of the Republic of the Congo, confirming its intention to facilitate the functioning of the United Nations Force in the Congo, and the United Nations, have agreed to work together to hasten the implementation of the guiding principles laid down in consequence of the work of joint exploration on the basis of the resolutions of the Security Council.

"4. The foregoing provisions shall likewise be applicable, as appropriate, to the nonmilitary aspects of the United Nations operation in the Congo."

DISCUSSING AFRICAN PROBLEMS—Sen. John F. Kennedy, conferring with African nationalist leader Tom Mboya in Hyannisport, Mass., last week, called for increased attention to African needs, particularly in education. Mboya, 29-year-old Kenyan labor leader, arrived in Hyannisport from NYC with his brother, Alphonse Okuku, 24, and Franw Montero, president of the African American Student Federation in New York.

Lumumba views Howard as 'pride of world'

By FRANK HUNT

WASHINGTON

"The presence of this University in the United States proves irrefutably that the black man is quite as capable as the white man, in doing everything."

Patrice Lumumba, Prime Minister of the Republic of the Congo expressed his admiration of Howard University in these words during a 30-minute reception at the University as part of his tour of the city, Wednesday.

Referring to the University as the "pride of the Black Race," the Congolese leader promised to send Congolese students to matriculate there in a "few weeks or months."

"We have in the Congo today, Mr. Bunche, who has taught in your school and who today is liaison between us and the United States", he pointed out.

* * *

"WE HAVE heard of the many eminent people who have graduated from this University.

"We thank the faculty and professors of the University for the efforts they have made toward the liberation of the Black Race," the African head of state declared.

* * *

"UNTIL YESTERDAY our brothers in the United States were cut off from Africa. Now communications enable us to communicate with one another.

"I hope that in the future many more of you will be able to come to the land of your ancestors."

Mr. Lumumba also invited Howard University President James M. Nabrit to Africa, "to appreciate for himself the progress of the country.

* * *

THE PRIME MINISTER, who speaks only French, made use of an intepreter during his visit.

Dressed in a medium - blue suit, with a tie of a lighter blue, he appeared relaxed and at ease at the Howard University reception.

Noting the number of African students who greeted him, he stated that here he felt "a little bit like in Africa."

He was greeted upon his arrival at the front of the Administration Building on Howard's campus by President Nabrit, who in a brief talk later during the reception, apologized for the lack of Congolese students at Howard, promising to facilitate the matter as soon as possible.

The University president pointed to Howard's 83 African students from 12 countries, and declared that the institution had "many ties with Africa."

Faculty members from the Departments of Economics, medicine and liberal arts, and religion, have studied in Africa, he revealed.

Ten African students were on hand during the reception to greet the fifth African head of state to visit Howard University since 1955.

* * *

THE PRIME MINISTER arrived 45 minutes late for the reception which was scheduled for 4:30 p.m. He left a prolonged conference with the Secretary of State and other state officials.

Earlier during the day, he had been greeted at Washington National Airport by Secretary of State Herter, the chiefs of nine African missions in Washington; Admiral Arleigh E. Burke, Chief of Naval Operations, and Nicaraguan Ambassador Sevilla Sacass, dean of the diplomatic corps.

The Congolese premier expressed confidence in the United States' desire to help his country, in response to Secretary Herter's assurances to that effect.

* * *

THE AFRICAN LEADER resided at Blair House during his stay here. His itinerary included a dinner and a big diplomatic reception in his honor Wednesday night sponsored by the African ambassadors in order to demonstrate their backing of the newest independent African nation.

He received a 19 gun salute

'Belgians told lies'

—LUMUMBA

By CHARLES P. HOWARD SR.
U.N. Correspondent

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. —

"A campaign has been conducted by the Belgian press agencies to deceive world public opinion and to inflate the significance of the incidents. Today is the great day of truth."

This was Patrice Lumumba, Prime Minister of the Congo Republic, as he addressed himself to a press conference of 400 newsmen here this week. Mr. Lumumba is in this country to confer with Dag Hammarskjold, secretary - general of the United Nations.

Speaking of the reports of widespread violence in the Congo including rape and other atrocities, he said:

"I, myself, as Head of State, went to military camps in the lower Congo—Thysville, in Matadi, In Boma— to investigate on the spot and to appoint Congolese officers.

"I directed at that time that Belgian magistrates begin an investigation immediately. I said at that time, if indeed such inadmissable acts had been committed—regardless of whether white or African women were the victims— justice had to take its course immediately, because our government was duty - bound to protect all nationals and all foreigners without distinction.

"Since I gave these instructions and insisted that immediate measures be taken, not a single culprit has been arrested. This indicates that the facts which have been communicated to us were probably false."

Mr. Lumumba emphasized that all magistrates in the Congo are Belgian.

* * *

AS TO the reasons for the revolt of the Force Publique (army), the young leader said:

"In all the (African) countries which have attained independence, the accession to independence had always been preceded by a period of organization, but nothing like that happened in the Congo.

"On June 30, we acceded to sovereignty. On July 1, not one responsible post was in the hands of Africans. Administration, police, army— everything, absolutely everything— was operated 100 per cent by the officials of Belgium.

Discontent was not slow to come. The military demanded reforms in the armed forces even before accession to independence. Three times we called on General Gheysen, after independence, to set up an Africanization of the army and the staff.

"Each time, the demands were refused."

When it became evident that no changes were to be made and the Belgians intended to continue running the army, "I can assure you that the discontent of the Congolese military was provoked by Belgian officers.

He emphasized that there was not one colored commissioned officer in the entire Congolese army of 25,000 men.

When the revolt took place, he said, "it was a legitimate demand resulting from grave psychological errors committed by the Belgian officers.

* * *

ON THE question of Katanga, Mr. Lumumba said: "Every day I receive telegrams coming from Katanga and the overwhelming majority of the population of that province is against secession of Katanga.

"The overwhelming majority of the population vehemently condemns the Belgian Government.

"Here in the United States, as well as throughout the world, international opinion is being deliberately deceived and the impression is being created that the secession would be the expression of the will of the Katanga people.

"This is a stroke prepared by the Belgian Government in advance of independence. The intention of Belgium is to take over Katanga, the richest province of the country, because without Katanga and without the Congo, Belgium itself admits that it could not live."

* * *

OF THE contract signed with an American firm for industrial development of the Congo's natural resources the Prime Minister said: "The project submitted. . .will be the object of appropriate study by a ministerial commission and after that the matter will go before the Parliament.

"It is only after ratification by the Parliament of the project that a contract may finally be signed."

Mr. Lumumba was asked: "Do you foresee any special role in the development of the Congo which might be played by individual citizens from among American colored persons?"

He replied: "It is with pleasure and with sympathy that we would welcome them in our country. In the Congo, even the illiterate people always remember their American brothers and say, 'one day our American brothers will come to visit us.'

"If there should be any technicians among them (American colored persons) they can write to us, even individually and they will be welcomed with open arms."

Red made to wait, but still didn't see Lumumba of Congo

WASHINGTON

No one would say why, but the highest ranking Soviet diplomat was denied permission to see Premier Patrice Lumumba of the Congo at the Blair House Friday.

Mikail Smirnovsky, charge d' affairs, added to the mystery. He did, however, confirm that he cooled his heels in the waitingage room for 30 minutes, until it was obvious that he would not get to see Lumumba.

The Soviet official claimed he had an appointment and blamed "local protocol" on his unsuccessful attempt to deliver "a message" to the Congo leader.

Signs of Strife Remain in the Congo

Barbed wire forms a hazard for a pedestrian attempting to cross one of the main streets in Leopoldville, capital of the Congo. Wire was strung around a Belgian encampment.

United Press International

Swedish troops, part of the United Nations force in the new republic, patrol the streets of the capital, drawing slight interest from Congolese women waiting for a bus.

U. N. CHIEF URGES PATIENCE IN CONGO ON KATANGA ISSUE

But He Reassures Cabinet on Support of Unity—Confers With Aides

BELGIANS SEEK TALKS

Funds Raised for Nation's Payroll—World Body May Pay Congo's Soldiers

By HENRY TANNER

Special to The New York Times.

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo, July 29 — Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold met with the Congo Cabinet today. He is understood to have appealed for patience concerning the United Nations entry into Katanga Province and the withdrawal of Belgian forces there.

Katanga is still occupied by Belgian forces that went there at the request of the provincial Premier, Moise Tshombe. Mr. Tshombe has declared the secession of the province from the Congo, but has taken a more moderate position in recent days.

Mr. Hammarskjold has made it plain that he regards Katanga as covered by the United Nations mandate in the Congo. He was said to have repeated this assurance today to the Congolese Ministers.

Belgians Seek More Talks

Belgian diplomats here have taken the position that "further negotiation" was needed before United Nations forces could enter Katanga.

Mr. Hammarskjold has not yet conferred with the Belgian Ambassador, Jean van den Bosch, who was not invited to a state dinner given last night in the Secretary General's honor by Chief of State Joseph Kasavubu.

Mr. Hammarskjold's consultations were surrounded by strict secrecy.

He spent most of the day closeted with Under Secretary Ralph J. Bunche and other United Nations aides.

The United Nations, meanwhile, was reliably reported to have taken steps to make sure that the Congo Government would be able to meet the state payroll this week-end.

United Nations sources reported privately that the Congo Army, whose mutiny precipitated the crisis here three weeks ago, would be paid not by the Government but by the world organization. No official comment was available.

It was not clear whether funds to pay the army were actually provided by the United Nations or whether the world organization merely intervened to raise money from outside banking sources.

An order was reported to have been placed through United Nations channels for the printing Britain of Congo banknotes worth $400,000.

There have been fears of new unrest if the Government could not meet its payroll.

Many employes of Belgian-owned private companies will not be paid because the owners have left. Other companies have drastically reduced their operations and have laid off many of their Congolese employes.

Patrols Are Increased

As a precautionary measure the United Nations military headquarters doubled Swedish and Ghanaian patrols in Leopoldville tonight and canceled all leaves tomorrow.

About 700,000 persons are unemployed in Leopoldville, according to United Nations estimates, and about 500,000 are affected by the economic crisis in the Congo as a whole.

United Nations officials declared today that there was enough food in the country now but that a large part of the population did not have money to buy it. A second problem is that the distribution system has broken down.

A system of issuing cards for free food to the needy is being considered as a possible form of United Nations assistance, officials said.

The Congo Government is reluctant to adopt this method, however, and would prefer to rely exclusively on a longer-range policy of reducing unemployment through public works, they added. They expressed fear that there was not enough time left for the second method.

Sugar, condensed and dried milk and other foodstuffs donated by foreign countries have been turned over to the Congo Red Cross for distribution. Flour contributed by the United States is being sold and the proceeds put into a trust fund to be used to buy more food.

Soviet Aid Put in Pool

The Soviet Union attempted to circumvent the United Nations and delivered four plane loads of sugar and condensed milk directly to the Congo Government. The Soviet gift was placed in the same pool of supplies as those from all other countries, United Nations officials said. They said that no Soviet food had been distributed directly to the Congolese.

The only other country that attempted to give aid independently was Cameroon, which sent a shipment of meat and rice.

The decision to pay the Congo Army through the United Nations was not a surprise.

The army, which was about 25,000 men strong before its mutiny, has been one of the United Nation's principal preoccupations. It has been under United Nations control since United Nations forces arrived.

The United Nations forces asked Congolese soldiers to lay down their arms or stay in their barracks and the Congolese complied in most regions.

One exception was in Stanleyville, capital of Oriental Province, where Congolese soldiers, after being addressed by Premier Patrice Lumumba, refused to lay down their arms. They have since persisted in their refusal.

Irish Troops Cheered

GOMA, the Congo, July 29 (Reuters)—Irish soldiers arrived here today and were almost mobbed by thousands of cheering Congolese.

The contingent, the main body of a 650-man Irish battalion assigned to the United Nations force in the Congo, is the first big body of troops ever sent overseas by the Irish Republic.

The first act of the Irish troops upon moving into their quarters was to switch to tropical uniforms issued in Libya on their way here.

Katanga Mission Leaves

ELISABETHVILLE, the Congo, July 29 (Reuters) — A delegation from Katanga Province left here by air today for Brussels and the United Nations to plead the case for recognition of Katanga as independent. It also will tell the United Nations that there is no need for United Nations troops to be sent to Katanga.

Belgian Pull-Out to Begin

By HARRY GILROY

Special to The New York Times.

BRUSSELS, Belgium, July 29—The Belgian Government announced today that it would bring home 1,500 of the 10,000 Belgian troops in the Congo.

The first troops will arrive in Brussels Tuesday. The United Nations Security Council has called for the Belgians to withdraw "speedily" from the Congo.

Defense Minister Arthur Gilson said the men would be mostly paratroopers who had been called from a reserve status to serve in the Congo and young soldiers who had finished their one-year term of service.

He said that no plan had been made for withdrawals of the 8,500 Belgian troops who will remain in the Congo after return of the first units. That will depend on the existing situation, he added.

There are still enough Belgian paratroopers in the Congo to take care of emergency rescue operations, he said.

The defense minister listed two points about Belgian bases in the Congo he had emphasized to Secretary General Hammarskjold in their talks here Wednesday.

Kamina, the base in Katanga, provides logistical support for Belgian troops in Ruanda-Urundi, M. Gilson said, while Kitona, in the lower Congo, is the subject of a treaty between Belgium and Portugal.

Ruanda-Urundi is administered by Belgium as a trust territory. Belgian troops are used jointly with local troops to maintain order there.

LUMUMBA OBTAINS PLEDGE OF U. S. AID

N. Y. Times

But Washington Refuses to Condemn Katanga or Belgium—Visit Ends

WASHINGTON, July 29 (AP) — The United States promised economic aid for the Congo today but adopted a hands-off attitude toward Premier Patrice Lumumba's fight to keep Katanga Province from seceding.

The State Department mixed kind words for the visiting Congolese leader with applause for the Belgian Government, which Mr. Lumumba has denounced, as an aggresor against his riot-ridden young nation. The Premier ended a two-day stay.

There were backstage signs that top Administration officials were irked with Mr. Lumumba for trying to portray his reception as a sign that the United States sided with him against Belgium.

While Under Secretary of State Douglas Dillon stood by at the airport, Mr. Lumumba wound up his visit with a farewell blast at the Belgians.

Mr. Dillon appeared embarrassed as the Premier, boarding a plane for Canada, declared "today the whole of Africa is threatened by Belgium."

Within a few hours the State Department issued a statement lauding the Belgian Government for announcing plans for immediate evacuation of 1,500 of the 10,000 troops rushed to the Congo during the rioting that followed the proclomation of the republic June 30.

"We welcome this further evidence of Belgian cooperation with the United Nations," the department said.

At the same time, the department pledged to provide "a fair share" of the economic and technical emergency help that Mr. Lumumba requested in his talks with Secretary of State Christion A. Herter. A spokesman again stressed that this aid would be channeled through the United Nations. No figures were given.

Asked whether the United States backed the Congo against Belgium. Lincoln White, press officer, said emphatically: "We are not backing any party in this tragic situation. We are supporting the efforts of the United Nations."

As he departed, Mr. Lumumba said his stay had convinced him that the United States would never back the efforts of Premier Moise Tshombe of Katon, who has declared his province independent from the Congo.

Mr. White said the Katanga problem never came up in the talks with Mr. Herter. "We are hopeful that the matter of Katanga can be peacefully settled within the Congo itself," he added.

Meanwhile, it was learned that the Soviet chargé d'affaires, Mikhail Smirnovsky, called twice at Blair House, where Mr. Lumumba was staying, but did not get to see the Premier.

Audience Was Denied

WASHINGTON, July 29 (UPI)—The Soviet charge d'affaires, Mikhail Smirnovsky, said today that he was denied an audience was Premier Lumumba.

Mr. Smirnovsky said that he had a message for Mr. Lumumba, but he declined to disclose its contents. He indicated, however, that it was not an invitation to Moscow.

Although Mr. Lumumba refused to see Mr. Smirnovsky, the Premier granted a lengthy interview to a correspondent of the Soviet press agency Tass. In the interview, Mr. Lumumba charged that United Nations forces were disarming Congolese troops but not Belgians.

Mr. Smirnovsky said "local protocal" was the reason given for denying him an audience with Mr. Lumumba.

This apparently reflected someone's belief that such an interview would not be proper while Mr. Lumumba was an official guest of the United States. A State Department official was reported to have been present when Mr. Lumumba refused to see the Russian.

However, State Department officials disclaim any responsibility for influencing the Premier to turn down the request.

Rape Charges Denied

MONTREAL, July 29 (UPI)—Premier Lumumba said today that not one white woman had been raped by Congolese soldiers.

Mr. Lumumba angerily denied a charge yesterday by a Belgian royal commission, which said its investigation had disclosed that at least 291 white women had been raped. He said the reports were fabrications by foreign newspaper men.

The Premier said his Government had begun an inquiry which has not disclosed one case of rape. He explained that the inquiry was headed by Belgian magistrates because the Congo does not have any magistrates.

Mr. Lumumba arrived here from Washington on a mission seeking economic help.

He said the Brussels announcement earlier today that it would begin withdrawal of the first 1,500 of its 10,000 troops from the Congo sounded like "another of Belgium's propaganda moves."

"I have been made out as a Moscow agent," he said. "But I am not. I have come here in friendship. Our country is going through a revolutionary period —a period most countries in the world have gone through. We will have calm as soon as the Belgian troops pull out."

GHANA BARS GOODS OF SOUTH AFRICA

N. Y. Times

Apartheid Protest to Block Travelers From Union

By Reuters.

ACCRA, Ghana, July 29 — Ghana announced today a total boycott of South African goods and ordered all Ghanaian seaports and airports to be closed starting Monday to South African ships and planes.

The measures were taken in an all-out offensive against South Africa's apartheid policies of racial segregation. They include a ban of the entry of all South Africans who do not declare their opposition to apartheid.

The moves are believed to be the strongest yet taken by any government in protest against apartheid.

Airlines Must Declare Names

Pan American World Airways, which runs a trans-African service through Accra, is likely to be hit by the new regulations, sources here said.

Officials said that if other Africans countries followed Ghana's lead, no South Africans could leave their country by air unless they declared their opposition to apartheid.

The airlines using the airport at Accra will have to declare the names of South Africans aboard their planes or will be guilty of an offense.

The measures, announced in Parliament this afternoon, revoke all licenses authorizing the importation of South African goods, irrespective of the country from which they are shipped.

Goods shiped before Aug. 1 wil be allowed to enter, as well goods ordered before that date that are not obtainable except from South Africa.

Import licences will be needed even for personal effects or goods sent by mail.

If South Africans working in Ghana leave the country, they will need a visa to re-enter and will be required "solemnly and sincerely" to make an anti-apartheid declaration.

The economic boycott will mean the loss of more than £2,200,000 ($6,160,000) worth of business a year to South Africa. Ghana's exports to South Africa last year amounted to £1,000,000 ($2,800,000).

It was understood that Ghana had consulted the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and was satisfied that her action was legal.

The action was timed to coincide with a Malayan boycott of South Africa, which also is due to start Monday.

"We thought it proper that two Commonwealth countries should begin their boycott on the same day," officials said here.

President Kwame Nkrumah signed an order today providing that all South Africans not in possession of valid Ghanaian travel documents or visas be declared "prohibited immigrants."

The Government's action was supported by Ghana's opposition United party. Cries of "Hear, hear!" achoed from both sides of Parliament as details of the new measures were read.

British Boycott Urged

LONDON, July 29 (Reuters) —A call for a boycott of South African goods by Britain was made by the National Committee of the British Anti-Apartheid Movement.

Miss Rosalynd Ainslie, committee secretary, said it was particularly important for Britain to impose sanctions against South Africa "because of the strain South Africa is imposing on Britain's relations with Africa, Asia, and the Commonwealth."

U. N. Group Assails Apartheid

Special to The New York Times.

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y., July 29—A United Nations committee on South-west Africa adopted a recommendation today deploring the practice of apartheid in the territory administered by South Africa.

The recommendation will be embodied in a report by the nine-nation committee to the General Assembly.

The recommendation said the committee deplored the continued implementation of a system based on apartheid. It said such a system "deprives the whole territory of political institutions representative of the population as a whole and denies the 'non-European' inhabitants the right to vote and seek office and the opportunity to participate in the administration as well as to participate fully in the economic, social and educational development of the territory."

Proposals for economic sanctions against offending nations have been fairly frequent here, but no United Nations body has ever seen fit to impose them.

Theoretically, the Security Council may order economic sanctions against any nation and ask members to comply but it has never taken such action.

18a 1960 CONGO

Belgians Give In To U.N., Agree to Quit All of Congo

Atlanta Constitution

Atlanta, Ga.
Wed. 8/3/60

P. 1

U.N. Force Moving to Katanga

By LYNN HEINZERLING

LEOPOLDVILLE, Congo (AP)—Belgium agreed with great reluctance to give up its last lingering hold on the Congo and the U.N. announced Tuesday night its troops would move Saturday into the rich, secessionist Katanga Province.

That meant U.N. forces would be in occupation of all the turbulent Congo in lieu of the last departing Belgian forces.

U.N. Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold's announcement of what may amount to complete peaceful military domination came quickly after the Belgian government in Brussels told with tinges of bitterness of its reluctant capitulation under U.N. pressure. It expressed both hope and skepticism over the eventual outcome.

YIELDS RICHEST PRIZE

Katanga was the last of the Congo to yield to the 19th Century Belgian conquerors and the last to stay with the Belgians after independence.

It was the richest prize of all and the secessionist government, refusing to share its wealth with the poor and more primitive Congo, had effected a sort of post-independence alliance with Belgium. The Katanga government said it wanted Belgian troops to stay, and no U.N. forces to move in.

The electric announcement from Hammarskjold that his troops would start taking over Saturday replacing the Belgians, came in the late uneasy hours of the tense Congo night.

ENDS DISPUTE

The announcement marked the end of a bitter dispute between the new Congo government and Belgium over the future of the copper rich Katanga province.

Hammarskjold, through intense negotiations with the Congolese and Belgians, succeeded in resolving the problem apparently to the satisfaction of both sides.

The secretary-general disclosed that U.N. trouble shooter Dr. Ralph Bunche will go to Katanga Friday to prepare for the entry of U.N. soldiers. The withdrawal of Belgian forces in the province is expected to follow immediately.

"About two weeks after the final decision of the Security Council confiding in me the task of executing its will, the troops of the United Nations will be in control of security in all the territory of the united Congo," Hammarskjold said in his statement.

The secretary-general has postponed his departure for South Africa for the second time. He was expected to leave Wednesday but now the date of his departure is uncertain.

The secretary-general here obviously was pleased with the success he had achieved.

"I daresay," he said in his statement, "that in the given circumstances of which we are not the master the United Nations has done what the organization promised to do and it has done it with all the speed possible."

He added the hope that it had been done with "all the wisdom necessary for maintaining in your country the calm unity which you wish."

The Katanga problem was the most difficult faced by the United Nations. The province's uranium and vast copper mines provide most of the wealth of the nation.

Moise Tshombe, president-premier of the province, had sought to take the province out of the new republic and make it an independent state.

This would have meant the economic collapse of the Congo. Sixty per cent of its revenues come from Katanga.

The Belgian government, after first providing some support for Tshombe, later saw that it could not fight the United Nations on the issue and accepted the principle of national unity and the entrance of U.N. troops.

Katanga Premier Threatens War If U.N. Moves In

The Atlanta Constitution

Atlanta, Ga.

Thurs. 8-4-60

P. 1

Troops Going in Anyway

By ANDREW BOROWIEC

LEOPOLDVILLE, Congo (AP)—The secessionist government of Katanga Province made a defiant mobilization-for-war move Wednesday as a threat against the scheduled entry of U.N. troops there Saturday. And the Belgian government in Brussels gave the U.N. a tongue-lashing over Katanga.

Shunting aside Katanga's war threat, the U.N. Congo Command announced: "Our troops are going to enter Katanga as planned."

PREMIER DEFIES U.N.

Katanga Premier Moise Tshombe said in Elisabethville, his capital: "They will have to fight their way in."

U.N. Secretary-General Hammarskjold declared in a statement in Leopoldville that the entry of U.N. forces into Katanga "in no case constitutes interference nor can it be permitted to develop into interference in the internal affairs of the Republic of the Congo or the province."

Hammarskjold said any intervention in Katanga would be the result of the decision of the U.N.

CLARIFIES POLICY

The statement was issued, he said, "in response to requests for clarification of the role of the U.N. in the province of Katanga and in reference to the problems of the interior policy of the Republic of the Congo."

But in Brussels, Belgium's Premier Gaston Eyskens and Foreign Minister Pierre Wigny accused Hammarskjold of rising anarchy, chaos and misery in Katanga. They told a news conference the United Nations "does not have the right, under the cover of a replacement of Belgian troops, to indulge in a political operation."

UPI

The Premier: A united nation in 'the soil of Africa'?

THE CLASH: SPECIAL SECTION

Newsweek Dayton, Ohio

Lumumba From the Congo

The passenger arriving at Idlewild airport early this week looked more like a beatnik student hurrying off for a poetry reading than a Prime Minister urgently bound for the United Nations. Blinking through thick-lensed glasses, Patrice Emergy Lumumba, first African Premier of the Congo, seemed bothered and slightly bewildered. His nervous expressive hands (photo) kept fingering his wispy goatee, pulling at his bow tie. Then U.N. Cadillacs took his party to a pastel suite in New York's Barclay Hotel where he breakfasted hurriedly on bananas and grapes before taking off in a rush—and another Cadillac—for the Ghanaian Embassy.

"Un garçon formidable," his traveling companions said of him—a phrase the Belgians are also using now. For Lumumba, whose very name sounds like muted drums in the rain forest, is a driving, kinetic leader, a persuasive orator, and a fanatic Congolese patriot who means by hook or crook to build and lead a unified Congolese state. He lacks administrative judgment; he tends to feel that every detail requires his personal attention. Lumumba also makes snap decisions and seeks snap solutions (as witness his recent frantic outpouring of messages to the U.S., the U.N., the Soviet Union).

But if Lumumba is impatient and inexperienced, the fault is by no means all his. Lumumba was not trained for leadership—and neither was any other Congolese.

Born into the Ntentela tribe in the Central Congo on July 2, 1925, Lumumba sometimes suggests that his father was a chief by donning a feathered sheepskin cap, a chieftain's traditional headdress. In school he went as far as the Belgians would let him: Through high school. Then, at 19, he went to work in a post office where for twelve years he sorted letters and studied French law by mail. An introspective youth who never smoked and took only an occasional swig of local home-brewed liquor, Lumumba became an expert dancer and a dedicated nationalist. By 1956 he was under arrest for embezzling $2,400 to help his nationalist cause; Lumumba proudly admitted it and spent a year in jail.

Beer and Bow Ties: Released, he became salesman for Polar beer, rolled up a fortune, made his European wardrobe into one of the best in the Congo. (He likes dark gray or tweed suits, and bow ties.) Simultaneously, he founded the Congolese National Movement (MNC). Its goal: Independence—at once.

As the winds of change howled across Africa, the Belgians accepted the inevitable. Independence was set for June 30. Lumumba left his shy young wife and three children (a fourth is expected) at home and threw himself into electioneering. By putting together a clear majority of 83 seats in the 137-member legislature, he earned the job of Premier.

Some Belgians have called him a Communist, but most observers believe that Lumumba's goal is to build in the Congo the same kind of strong African nation that President Kwame Nkrumah has created in Ghana. As he flew in to the U.S. this week, Lumumba himself had this to say: "I am not a Communist. I am deeply attached to the soil of Africa."

UN in Congo Dilemma As Guinean Balks at Role

The Christian Science Monitor p. 1

Boston, Mass.

Compiled from Associated Press and Reuters Dispatches

Léopoldville, Congo

The Guinean detachment with United Nations troops says it wants to pull out until the UN ceases "its flagrant interference" in internal Congo affairs.

The Guinean action came soon after erratic Congolese Premier Patrice Lumumba said he had taken over the functions of head of state in addition to his present post of Premier.

Fri 9-9-60

The head of the Guinean command told a press conference Sept. 9 that Gen. Diane Lansana had asked Guinean President Touré to agree to the "provisional withdrawal" of the contingent from the West African nation.

Tibu Tunkara, Guinean mission chief, said Guinean troops could not continue in the UN force until the UN had "ceased its flagrant interference in internal Congo affairs and had gone back to following the Security Council decisions on the Congo." Mr. Tunkara did not say whether the Guinean troops in the Congo—one battalion out of two destined for the Congo—would be put at Mr. Lumumba's disposal. On Sept. 7, Mr. Lumumba asked other African states for immediate military help.

Interference Charged

Mr. Tunkara said the UN had "clearly taken sides to influence the results of an internal dispute" in the Congo.

He said members of the Congo Government who went to see the Indian UN special representative, Rajeshwar Dayal, were told that President Kasavubu was the head of state and that, since his broadcast dismissing Mr. Lumumba, the latter had been out of office as Premier. "The United Nations thus even tried to interpret the basic law [of the Congo] as if this were a matter for it," he said.

He was also very surprised, he said, to learn that Mr. Dayal had refused to see members of the central government "on the pretext that they had been dismissed."

African Support for UN

There were loud cheers from Congolese and Guineans present at the conference when Mr. Tunkara said: "Guinea cannot be an accomplice in any action which is turned against any African people. We find it impossible to continue in the United Nations force in the present circumstances."

In Accra Sept. 9, Ghana and the Mali Federation urged the United Nations Secretary-General "to take positive steps to assert the authority of United Nations troops to maintain law and order in support of the central government of the Congo."

A joint communiqué to this effect was issued in Acca by President Nkrumah and Modibo Keita, who signed as "Prime Minister of the Mali Federation and of Sudan."

Meanwhile, a special Ghanaian mission headed by Agriculture Minister Kojo Botsio left Accra Sept. 9 for Léopoldville.

Confusion Compounded

No official indication was given of the purpose of the mission, but it was understood Mr. Botsio was going on a special assignment for Dr. Nkrumah, who saw the mission off at the airport.

Mr. Lumumba made his claim to being head of state in a speech released here less than 24 hours after he told a press conference that he did not want to be President.

Adding to the confusion was the fact that the speech was made two days earlier to the Army but not made public until Sept. 9. The announcement said that in the dual capacity of head of state and Premier, Mr. Lumumba also was commander in chief of the Congolese Army.

Despite the confused and conflicting claims by Mr. Lumumba, he appeared to be firmly back in the saddle as he turned again on one of his favorite targets—the United Nations.

The young politician sent a cable Sept. 8 to the UN Secretary-General, Dag Hammarskjold, asking that the Security Council meet in Léopoldville so its 11 members could "see for themselves the situation existing in the Republic of the Congo as a result of the United Nations authorities' interference in the Congo's domestic problems."

He also sent a letter to UN headquarters here demanding the reopening of Congolese airports and Radio Léopoldville, closed down by the UN three days ago to prevent troop movements and propaganda incitements.

Move Confirmed

Meanwhile, in Elisabethville, capital of breakaway Katanga Province, the UN command said Sept. 9 that it has received reports that 300 or more of Premier Lumumba's Congolese troops have invaded the province.

Jan Berendsen, UN political adviser, reported the Mali UN contingent based at Kongolo confirmed that the Congolese moved in Sept. 8 from Kivu Province, crossing the Luika River that forms the Katanga-Kivu border.

All airports in Katanga, as elsewhere in the Congo, are under complete UN control.

But at Elisabethville Sept. 9 armed Katanga police forced the UN to allow two planes to take off from the local airfield for the northern part of the province to meet the invasion by Congolese central government troops.

The UN command immediately protested over the action, and orders were given for Swedish troops at the Elisabethville airport to "stand firm" if any more attempts were made. The UN would not say if the troops had been ordered to fire if necessary.

Hammarskjold Summons Council

By the Associated Press

United Nations, N.Y.

Secretary - General Dag Hammarskjold has requested the UN Security Council to convene in emergency session late Sept. 9 to deal with the worsening Congo situation.

The Council was to meet at 8:30 p.m. e.s.t., and was expected to remain in session until late into the night.

[Reuters reports the Soviet news agency Tass as saying the Soviet representative on the Council has been instructed to demand that the United Nations return Radio Léopoldville and Congolese airfields to the Congo Government.]

By William R. Frye

United Nations Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

United Nations, N.Y.

The United Nations now comes face to face with the Congo decision on which everything else hinges: whether to remain in the country against the express wish of Premier Patrice Lumumba.

Mr. Lumumba has said he wants UN troops to leave unless basic policies of UN Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold are reversed. Mr. Hammarskjold has made clear he does not intend to alter them, lest the Congo slip into all-out civil war.

In the past, it has been assumed that the UN—whatever its legal rights—could not in practice maintain a pacific "presence" in an area where the host government was hostile. Some lawyers have even argued that the UN could not properly remain, even in legal theory, unless aggression had been committed.

Now, however, it is widely felt that the UN must stay in the Congo. Unless Mr. Lumumba alters his stand—and he has changed his mind frequently before—this must be done by force of arms. UN pacification must, in effect, be imposed upon the Congo in the interest of world peace.

Police Force?

This could put the UN into precisely the position it has tried hardest to avoid: that of a hostile occupying force. It would utterly transform the nature of the exercise, observers point out: Instead of a peace force, the UN army in the Congo would become a fighting police force, at least to a limited degree.

A fighting force normally is sent into action to put down aggression, as in Korea. The Congo would be the first time such a force would have been used against a government engaged in civil war against its own people. It also would be the first time a peace force, invited in, would have outstayed its welcome—a precedent which could have sobering implications for future forces seeking admission to other countries.

There are two possible ways out of the dilemma, as observers here see it, which would not bring the UN to such an extremity:

¶ The collective pressure of other independent African states could—even at this late date, after many unsuccessful attempts—persuade Mr. Lumumba to abandon his present course and cooperate with the UN, compromising his differences with rival politicians.

¶ Or, the UN could impose peace with such tact and skill that it would earn the gratitude rather than the hostility of the population. The awkward fact that UN action was directed primarily against the Premier could be "fuzzed up" to save face for him and to obscure the legal anomalies involved.

Blistering Cable

The latter course appears to be the one Mr. Hammarskjold plans to follow, and indeed is following.

He is going out of his way to preserve the appearance and, where relevant, the substance, of impartiality.

When Belgium flew nine tons of weapons to secessionist Katanga Sept. 7, landing them at Elisabethville Airport, he promptly investigated and on Sept. 8 dispatched a blistering cable to Brussels. He then clamped down on Elisabethville the same controls which previously had been exercised on other Congo airports. Katanga protested.

The fact that the arms had been successfully imported was particularly embarrassing to Mr Hammarskjold in that it obscured an otherwise clear picture of Lumumba responsibility for current difficulties, and undermined willingness of some delegations at headquarters to crack down on the Premier.

Yugoslavia, for example, used the incident to charge that Belgium was interjecting "outside interference" into the Congo civil war.

The Yugoslav delegate, Dobrivoje Vidic, also blamed "outside interferences" for what he called "the recent attempt to overthrow the legal government" of the Congo.

He said that in both instances—the arms shipment and the attempted coup—action against Mr. Lumumba had "unfortunately been facilitated by the practices adhered to by the command of the UN force."

Impartiality Vital

It was this impression—that the UN had taken sides—which Mr. Hammarskjold sought to counter by his protest to Brussels and his closure of Elisabethville airfield. He also put new pressure on Belgium to complete its much-delayed troop withdrawal. But a great deal of damage had been done, it was agreed.

Curbs on Mr. Lumumba would be acceptable to the Security Council majority, it was felt, only if they appeared to be directed equally at Mr. Lumumba and his opponents. At the same time any motion condemning outside intervention in the Congo would have to seem to be directed impartially against Belgium and the Soviet Union.

Then the Soviet Union, Yugoslavia, and Guinea—Mr. Lumumba's principal supporters here—would have minimum ground for complaint. The UN would then be in a legally defensible role, and the majority would feel justified in "getting tough."

The showdown meeting of the Security Council, in which decisions must be made on whether the UN should stay in the Congo and, if so, what role it is to play, is scheduled for the evening of Sept. 9.

Mr. Lumumba invited the Council to hold the next session in Léopoldville, but this kind of change of venue would not be practical on such short notice.

Backing the Congo Referee

The Christian Science Monitor

The United Nations now enters the most crucial lap of its race to keep ahead of crisis in the Congo.

Security Council debate will center on whether UN forces in the Congo can remain there, and if so whether they can extend their powers in order to start rehabilitating the strife-rent area. The key question underlying the weekend debate will be contentions by various interested parties to the African free-for-all that the UN referee has been partial to one contestant or another.

Boston Mass.

The United States and many European members will say that despite the presence of the referee on the field, Moscow, a supposed spectator, has jumped down from the stands and started handing clubs to what looks like the winner.

Sep 9 1960

Many leaders of African nationalism have shown a quiet recognition of this danger. Ghana's Premier Nkrumah, after careful political sounding, made a statement of warning about it.

p. 14

But the leaders of African nationalism are also likely to agree to Moscow's objection that the referee is also permitting the Belgians to slip out of the stands and hand out weapons to Mr. Lumumba's rivals.

In fact, the well-publicized arrival of nine tons of Belgian small arms in Katanga Province unfortunately slowed down a movement of uncommitted nation sentiment away from Mr. Lumumba and his backers.

However, Secretary-General Hammarskjold appears to have made the best out of this upset. His wrist-slap at the Belgians for allowing the arms to be shipped may help preseve the backing for his original veiled warning to the Russians for exactly the same kind of intervention.

If the Security Council can appear to be helping the referee push unruly fans back into the stands on rival sides of the stadium, the needed solid majority of African and world opinion may back it and force Moscow to withhold its veto.

Then the stage would be set for Mr. Hammarskjold to get back to his original problem: how to put the Congo into minimum working order again without seeming to reimpose white rule or to take sides in the Congo's political civil warfare.

Mr. Hammarskjold deserves strong and prompt backing for his courageous, and scrupulously fair, stand. He is beseeching the world once again not to allow the Congo to become the scene of either an international war like Spain or Korea, or a tragic civil war. And then he is asking that this double preventive effort be followed by a double constructive job involving: (1) outside mediation of personal political differences in the Congo, and (2) a UN-backed recovery program.

The Secretary-General's struggle with Mr. Lumumba's erratic behavior is not over. The Congo Premier has used the UN as one of his three chief scapegoats to divert Congolese disappointment at the sorry mess that the ecstatically awaited "Freedom" has turned into. But if the Security Council is resolute. Mr. Lumumba may have to change his mind about the UN once again. If so, the Congolese people and the cause of African nationalism will gain.

U.S. Accuses Soviets

The Christian Science Monitor

By William R. Frye

United Nations Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

United Nations, N.Y.

The United States has denounced the Soviet Union for deliberate sabotage of United Nations rescue operations in the Congo.

Boston Mass.

The Soviet purpose, Washington has charged, is to set up "a Soviet satellite state in the heart of Africa."

This emphatic declaration, made to the UN Security Council Sept. 15 by chief United State Delegate James J. Wadsworth, was seen as aimed at two principal purposes:

Sept. 15 - 60

¶ To place the counterweight of the United States against Soviet diplomacy, thus bolstering the UN operation and shoring up Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold.

¶ To rally independent African states behind Mr. Hammarskjold. Some had wavered in their support.

Tunisia Acts, Too

The American move came less than 24 hours after Moscow had unleashed by far its bitterest attack on Mr. Hammarskjold, charging that he was the conscious tool of colonialists who were trying to snatch away the Congo's freedom.

A parallel effort to solidify African support for Mr. Hammarskjold is being made by Mongi Slim, chief Tunisian delegate. Mr. Slim is also proposing a good-offices mission to the Congo by Afro-Asian mediators in an effort to bring together warring factions.

Mr. Wadsworth, in his first major speech as chief American representative, said he was "confident that the responsible leaders of African countries will not be fooled by the machinations of a country whose record of colonialism is without parallel in our times."

He called upon the Security Council to "make it unmistakably clear once again" that no military "aid" should be given to the Congo outside UN channels. He strongly implied that if Moscow continued to bypass the UN, the United States would take counteraction on its own.

Veto Overshadowed

A UN embargo on arms, ammunition, and military equipment undoubtedly would run up against a Soviet veto in the Security Council. The issue then would have to be taken to the General Assembly.

Success there would largely depend, observers believe, on African support.

"The Soviet Union does not want the United Nations to succeed in Africa," Mr. Wadsworth said. "A strong United Nations means stability and order. Most of all, it would close the door to outside intervention by the Soviet Union. The United Nations offers an alternative to dependence by the Congo on any other nation."

Zorin Speech Bitter

Mr. Zorin struck hardest where the Secretary-General is believed to be weakest: in the area of African support. Several Africans have balked at UN moves which have clamped down on Congolese Premier Patrice Lumumba. Mr. Zorin encouraged this revolt, in effect calling upon the African states to pull their troops out of the UN command.

He charged that the Secretary-General was a conscious tool of colonialists who are trying to snatch away the Congo's freedom. He asked the Africans whether they wished their soldiers to help the UN "strangle" their brother state.

The Soviet Union, he said defiantly, will continue to "assist" the Congo, bypassing the UN.

Mr. Hammarskjold, in one of his sharpest public utterances, replied that he was confident African states "for which the Soviet Union regards itself as spokesman' could and would speak for themselves.

The United Nations command, he pointed out, consists of a Swedish commanding general plus Ethiopian, Moroccan, and Indian general officers. It seems, he remarked with acid irony, "that even some African countries have now turned 'colonizers.'"

Action Defended

"The United Nations is engaged," he said, "in a major effort to give life and substance to the independence of the Republic of the Congo. No misunderstandings, no misinformation, no misinterpretations of the actions of the United Nations organization should be permitted to hamper an operation the importance of which I know is fully appreciated by all those African countries which, with great efforts of their own, support the work of the United Nations in the Congo and, indeed, which seem to me to deserve better than to be told they are misled."

The clash between Moscow and Mr. Hammarskjold gave rise to speculation as to their future relationships. As he himself often has said, a Secretary-General who loses the confidence of any major power bloc undermines or destroys his usefulness. Former Secretary-General Trygve Lie ultimately was driven to resign when he feuded with the Kremlin.

Most non-Communist diplomats, however, would be dismayed if Mr. Hammarskjold were pushed to that point. He has the confidence and affection of an overwhelming majority.

Mr. Slim, who speaks for the moderate wing of the African bloc, and who has been a tower of strength for the Secretary-General in behind-the-scenes diplomacy, supported Mr. Hammarskjold's conduct of the Congo operation and paid tribute to his dedication.

He reminded fellow Africans that the Léopoldville conference of independent African states in August called for "frank and loyal cooperation" between the Congo and the UN. The UN is Africa's "best refuge" from attacks on its independence, he said.

Mr. Slim gave the Security Council the broad outlines of a plan of action which, it is understood, he has embodied in a draft resolution circulating privately.

In it he proposes establishment of a UN fund to help the Congo balance its budget—something Mr. Hammarskjold has already asked for. He supports the Secretary-General in generalized terms without, however, giving him any major new authority; and establishes a good offices committee, to be made up primarily of Africans and Asians, to try to bring together the many different Congolese actions.

Congo Cost Stirs Gasps

The Christian Science

By Mary Hornaday

Staff Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

Monitor

United Nations, N. Y.

Aside from the presence of Nikita S. Khrushchev, the thing expected to cause most concern to Americans at the 15th United Nations General Assembly will be the major financial crisis faced by the world body.

An overflow meeting of the American Association for the United Nations in the Waldorf Astoria's starlight roof just prior to the Assembly opening let out a muffled gasp as they heard Francis O. Wilcox, Assistant Secretary of State for International Organization Affairs warn that the Congo force alone will cost the UN between $75,000,000 and $100,000,000 a year.

Mr. Wilcox did not even mention a figure for economic rehabilitation and technical assistance for the Congo. Recently, Secretary of State Christian A. Herter, told a congressional committee that the United States would probably have to pay half of that bill, which may run as high as $150,000,000 a year.

Voluntary Contribution

The United States already is paying 48.5 per cent of the cost of the United Nations Emergency Force set up in 1956 to stand between the armed forces of Egypt and Israel after the Suez crisis.

Explaining a voluntary contribution of $3,200,000 over and above its assessed share made by the United States in 1960, Mr. Wilcox declared: "We have found it necessary in the past to make such voluntary contributions in order to enable those least able to pay to give some measure of support for the force."

Another call on Americans' pocketbooks may come if and when the General Assembly decides to establish a "peace and security fund," recommended by its advisory committee on administrative and budgetary questions. This fund, to be financed partially from the regular UN budget and partially by voluntary contributions would give the UN a "bank account" so that it would not step in "broke" as it has into the current Congo crisis.

Support Pledged

Mr. Wilcox pledged American support to such a fund if it is recommended to the Assembly.

In view of the UN's mounting financial crisis, increased pressure will undoubtedly be put on the Soviet Union to "pay up." The Soviet Union has flatly refused, for instance, to pay its share of the assessment for UNEF, of which it does not approve.

There is in the UN charter, a punitive provision for delinquents, but this has never yet been called into use. Article 19 of Chapter 4 says: "A member of the United Nations which is in arrears in the payment of its financial contributions to the organization shall have no vote in the General Assembly if the amount of its arrears equals or exceeds the amount of the contributions due from it for the preceding two full years.

Loophole Added

This loophole is added: "The General Assembly may, nevertheless, permit such a member to vote if it is satisfied that the failure to pay is due to conditions beyond the control of the member."

Speaking to a group that was eager to have information to support the United Nations, Mr. Wilcox, told the AUN members that in the United States last year the individual American's contribution to all UN programs amounted to only 61 cents per capita. He forecast that even with added expenditures of the Congo and other emergencies, the cost of supporting the United Nations will be "incredibly small."

Mr. Wilcox, who has briefed Americans on the eve of UN General Assemblies since 1955, is slated to turn over his State Department job to Charles E. Bohlen, former Ambassador to the Soviet Union on Sept. 26.

Associated Press Wirephoto

Rival Congolese Factions Smile Together at United Nations

Thomas Kanza (left), representing Congo Premier Patrice Lumumba, stands with Justin Bomboko, representing Congo President Kasavubu. In center is Jacques Lumbala, another member of Lumumba delegation. The apparently unstrained meeting took place at the UN headquarters in New York, where the Security Council has been debating over the Congo.

The New York Times Sept. 20, 1960

CONGO CRISIS RENEWED: An attempt to assassinate Col. Joseph Mobutu was thwarted in Leopoldville (1). A group of 800 soldiers near Kongolo (2) withdrew from Katanga, along with a smaller force to the west. Luena (3) was gripped by terror as violence by Baluba tribesmen continued.

CONGOLESE TROOPS QUITTING KATANGA

The N.Y. Times

Invaders Begin Withdrawal at Leopoldville Order—U.N. Sets Neutral Line

New York

By A. M. ROSENTHAL

Special to The New York Times.

ELISABETHVILLE, The Congo, Sept. 18 — Congolese government soldiers received orders today to withdraw from the secessionist state of Katanga and South Kasai.

In Katanga, Congolese troops that had struck from the North immediately began carrying out the orders. A column of 800 men advancing on the mining town of Kongolo was reported by United Nations officers on the spot to have left Katanga territory.

To the west, a band of 300 invaders was also reported by the United Nations to be withdrawing. United Nations officers who had flown to northern Katanga set up a cease-fire line about eighteen miles inside Katanga.

No Advance Planned

Katanga officials said that as long as the troops did not return, their own men would not advance beyond the line.

There was no immediate information from South Ksai formerly known as mining state. Congolese soldiers and Baluba tribesmen loyal to Albert Kalonji, secessionist leader have been in a bitter battle there for weeks.

But a Belgian officers attached to Mr. Kalonji's tiny army said exultantly that South Kasai would be free of the central government's soldiers in a few days.

The orders from Leopoldville, picked up by radio here apparently came from Col. Joseph Mobutu, army chief of staff, who seized power in the capital last week.

Elisabethville had a few hours of hope that the Congo crisis was on the way to settlement. Then came the report that Patrice Lumumba, Katanga's bitterest foe, seemed to be returning to influence.

Katanga officials, puzzled by the events in Leopoldville, reduced their delight to the hope that Mr. Lumumba would now be restrained by the influence of "moderates" and would not risk another invasion of Katanga.

Meanwhile, Moise Tshombe, President of Katanga, sent a message to his two representatives in Brazzaville, in the former French Congo, to assure Colonel Mobutu of his backing. Mr. Tshombe told his representatives that Colonel Mobutu, President Joseph Kasavubu and Premier Joseph Ileo represented the best in Congo opinion and politics.

CONGO AIDE FLEES U.N. AS TOO RISKY

The N.Y. Times

Former Laundryman Tells in Paris of Threat to Life Over Shifting Regimes

New York

By W. GRANGER BLAIR

PARIS, Sept. 18—A brief whirl in international diplomacy at the United Nations so confused a Congolese laundryman-turned-diplomat that he decided it was time to get back to the Congo and his laundry.

This was the essence of a tale told here today be 35-year-old Robert Kinda, who until two weks ago apparently had no greater problem than seeing to it that the right shirts got to the right customers in Leopoldville.

Mr. Kinda arrived at Orly Airport this morning from New York. Het said he was able to leavet safely only with the help of the New York police.

Asks Police Protection

Then, proclaiming himself a former diplomat of fifteen days' standing and in fear of his life, he sought the protection of the French police.

He said protection was needed because another Congolese who had traveled on the same plane with him from New York had been ordered by Patrice Lumumba's delegation to the United Nations to assassinate him.

His eyes darting fearfully as he spoke in the lobby at the airport, Mr. Kinda told the following bizarre story of his odyssey from Leopoldville to the towering glass palace of world diplomacy in New York and on to Paris.

"Two weeks ago," he began, "Thomas Kanza, who was a client of my laundry and for whom I had done some personal favors, came to me and asked me if I would like to be a member of the Congolese delegation bound for New York."

Never having been to the United States, Mr. Kinda recounted, it seemed a fine idea; so he accepted the offer and closed his shop. He said that Mr. Kanza had told him that he would serve the delegation chief as "boy and secretary" and would participate in all meetings at the United Nations.

When he got to New York, he said, he was informed by Mr. Kanza that, in addition to his other duties, he was to serve as Mr. Kanza's bodyguard.

"I didn't care for that at all, but I agreed anyway," Mr. Kinda said.

Several days later, he went on, he encountered "some other Congolese" in corridors of the United Nations. They informed him that "they alone represented the Congo Government," presided over by Joseph Ileo, who has been designated Premier by President Joseph Kasavubu.

"Now, as for me," Mr. Kinda said, "I am a friend of Kasavubu, and I thought that Kanza was obedient to his orders. Then, a few days ago, I learned that neither Kasavubu nor Lumumba were anything anymore and that someone I did not know was in command.

"I no longer understood what was going on and wanted to go home."

When he told Mr. Kanza of his desire to get back to laundering, Mr. Kinda said, Mr. Kanza warned him against trying to abandon diplomacy.

"So I went to the American police, who hid me until my departure for Paris," Mr. Kinda went on.

He explained that before returning to Leopoldville, he wanted to go to Brazzaville to seek the advice of Fulbert Youlou, Premier of the Congo Republic that is a member of the French Community.

'CONGO ANSWER'

The N.Y. Times

TO THE EDITOR:

Harry Gilroy, in "The Antiphonous Voices of Belgium" (Sept. 4), starts well and ends well but goes wrong in the middle. Belgium's "great crime of neglect" consisted neither in giving the Congolese "independence without a fight," nor in failing to train a class of native military and political leaders. It consisted in setting up a unitary state and consigning it to a minority government.

As things stand, the answer to the Congo question is for the U. N. to enforce provincial autonomy in Kasai and Katanga. This of course would annoy Mr. K. But Mr. K. can no more stop the U. N. in the Congo than he could stop the United States in Cuba, if we would but decide to act.

J. J. HOOKER,
The Catholic University of America.
Washington, D. C.

CONGO CRISIS DELAYS MEETING ON AFRICA

The N.Y. Times

Business, governmental and academic experts on sub-Sahara Africa are being invited to a conference on African resources to be held at New York University next March 20, 21 and 22.

The conference, originally scheduled for this week, was postponed because of "the troubled situation in the Congo."

Co-sponsoring the conference with the university is African Fair, Inc., of 6 Washington Square North, a nonprofit organization formed for the purpose. The group's president, Fred S. Haggerson, said yesterday that "to hold a conference while there is so much turbulence and ill-feeling might defeat its very purpose, that is, exposing the great economic, industrial and cultural potential of emerging Africa to the American business community."

Corporate members of African Fair include the United States Steel Corporation, Union Carbide, Vanadium Corporation of America, Olin Mathieson, Texaco and the American Express Company.

Eric Johnston, president of the Motion Picture Association of America, is chairman of the conference. Former Gov. W. Averell Harriman is honorary chairman.

CONGO PARKS REVERTING

The N.Y. Times

Game Reserves Abandoned—Poaching on Increase

New York

Africa Argus News Service

BUKAVU, the Congo, Sept. 12—The chaos in the Congo has given back vast stretches of darkest Africa to their original inhabitants, the animals.

More than thirty national parks in the Congo are going back to nature, free for the first time in decades of tourists and their cars and cameras. The parks have been largely deserted by their European overseers and poaching by hungry Africans has grown.

At the finest game reserve of them all, the 2,000,000-acre Albert National Park in Kivu Province, however, provincial authorities have taken firm steps to control poaching, United Nations officials said.

The African rulers of the new state have shown they are determined to protect the park's heritage of game, which includes vast herds of elephants, gorillas and rare okapis, the officials said.

CONGO'S TRIAL

The N.Y. Times

Whether the chief of government calls himself Lumumba, Ileo or Mobutu, the fact remains that creating a cabinet is not enough to control a country. Even more, it is necessary that the directing organization have some means of authority. Such means are totally lacking in the Congo.—LE MONDE, Paris.

New York

Many plots have been made in connection with [the Congo] and against it all possible encirclements are being organized because [Lumumba's] Government is regarded by powerful circles in many Western countries as their opponent * * *. The West, in point of fact, would not like to have a new Nasser in the heart of Black Africa, and that is why war has been declared on the Government of Lumumba.—VJESNIK, Zagreb, Yugoslavia.

Serious consideration should be paid to the divisive tendencies in the United Nation's own forces from the United Arab Republic, Ghana and Guinea, which would like to let their troops stay in the Congo for Lumumba, or go home. Such a policy is contrary not only to the interests of the Congo, but also to their own interests, being in reality indirect support of Soviet sabotage of United Nations activity and Soviet plans to drag Africa into the cold war.—AFTENPOSTEN, Oslo.

Muddled Congo Scene Deals U.N. Embarrassment, Pain

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP) —The Congo's struggle to make itself look like the sovereign nation it proclaimed itself June 30 is causing some embarrassment here in addition to actual pain.

The embarrassment is over the question of whether the Congo measures up to the U.N. charter definition of what a U.N. member should be and whether the General Assembly opening here Sept. 20 should elect the Congo to membership.

The charter says membership is open to "peace-loving states which accept the obligations contained in the present charter and, in the judgment of the organization, are able and willing to carry out these obligations."

That "able and willing" clause is the sticker, although it appears that world politics being what they are the U.N. will somehow choke down its embarrassment and find a way to vote the Congo in.

Ralph J. Bunche, American Negro undersecretary of the United Nations and Nobel Peace Prize winner, went to the Congo to represent the United Nations at ceremonies June 30 celebrating Congo independence from Belgium.

Bunche sized up the country after two months here, during which he was hustled out of his hotel with scores of others at the business end of a submachine gun and underwent other frustrations.

"It is a society in which frustration and fear are very abundant psychological qualities; they are in fact a heritage from the very recent colonial past, fed very much by the disappointments and disillusionments immediately following independence in a society where, among 14 million people, there are few more than a dozen people who have had university training; where there has been literally no experience in carrying any sort of government responsibility; where technicians are nonexistent on the African side; where there is so complete a void in education and training and experience as one finds in the Congo," Bunche said.

That describes a member of the United Nations? That is a country that has one vote, just as does the United States or India or Brazil or France, or the Soviet Union?

Just about two months ago, U.N. orators used glowing words about the new country's independence from Belgium as they urged the Security Council to take the first step recommending U.N. membership for the Congo. It was voted unanimously.

Since then the Congo has wallowed in a combination of throwback to tribal war, just plain rivalry over who should sit at the head of the Congo table, whether the Soviet Union should have an honored seat at the table, and where the Congo is going to get the money and men to keep going.

Its chosen leaders—chosen in a welter of tribal compromise and still dubious over who precedes whom—have defied the U.N. and railed at the Belgians who succumbed to U.N. and world pressures to speed up independence day. Some have muttered the Communist line about what they called "the new colonialism" by the U.N.

Through all this there is the painful expenditure of U.N. energy, time and money in an attempt to help the Congo along its jungled road while its leaders brawl and the Soviet bloc enjoys the internal disorders.

Officially, Bunche declares he is still optimistic that the largest U. N. operation in history—an army of 18,000 soldiers from a score of U. N. members, a civilian army of technical experts—will fulfill the U. N. program of restoring order and get going the usual functions of a country—government, education, finance, industry, health services, communications.

Kasai Volunteers Reported Advancing Against Congolese

ELISABETHVILLE, the Congo (AP)—A column of secessionist Albert Kalonji's volunteers was reported advancing in Kasai Province Sunday against Congo Premier Patrice Lumumba's forces. But another column pulled back without fighting a battle, according to information reaching here.

The column that pulled back crossed from this rebellious province of Katanga Saturday and headed for Luputa. This town is 20 miles inside Kasai. It was considered a potential jump-off point for Lumumba's invasion of Katanga after he disposed of Kalonji's Kasai "army."

But advices reaching this Katanga capital said scouts found most tribes in the Luputa area favored Lumumba. There was little support for Kalonji and the Kasai "Mineral State" he proclaimed recently and allied with Katanga.

APPEARS SMALLER

The column near Luputa appears to be much smaller than the 250 men reported. It will probably join with a second and larger column farther east.

This larger column consists of about 250 uniformed troops armed with rifles and a few Belgian automatic rifles, plus 250 porters carrying ammunition and supplies.

The men with rifles and automatic weapons are mostly former members of the Congo army who had considerable training in the handling of firearms.

Kalonji's youth movement—militant supporters of Kalonji's old political party—are believed to be harassing the Congo troops in southern Kasai. Kalonji's invasion force will probably try to join with them and other supporters in the area which was always known for its anti-Lumumba sentiments.

The invasion force now is reported firmly established across the border river of Lubilash 20 miles from the nearest road center of Gandajika northeast of Luputa. About 60 Congo soldiers are said to be garrisoning Gandajika.

WHITE ADVISERS

A Katanga army spokesman refused to give the position of Kalonji's little volunteer army with its white advisers—mostly Belgians. But no opposition has been reported.

The announced objective of the volunteers is to win back the "Mineral State" Kalonji created.

Bakwanga, Kalonji's capital was seized by Lumumba's Congo army last week. Baluba tribal guerrillas at last report were harassing Congolese troops holed up in Bakwanga, a diamond center.

A. U.N. spokesman had no information on the progress of the volunteers. Nor was there confirmation of charges by Premier Joseph Ngalula of the "Mineral State" that Congo army soldiers massacred 300 Negroes in Bakwanga a week ago, including David Odea, the Mineral State's public works minister.

The Katanga army spokesman also showed concern about reports that the Congo army was building up for a strike into Katanga Province.

Emboldened Lumumba Blasts U.N.

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo (AP)—Backed by a smashing Senate confidence vote, Premier Patrice Lumumba Thursday night called for U.N. forces to get out of the Congo unless the United Nations changes its policies.

He accused the U.N. of obstructing his government by closing airports and radio stations and denounced what he called a campaign of hate against the Congo.

Lumumba told a news conference he had sent a telegram to Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold asking that the next session of the U.N. Security Council be held in Leopoldville.

He thanked the Soviet Union "sincerely for the help it has given to the Congo" and assailed a list of actions by the United Nations.

BLOCKED AIRFIELDS

Lumumba's main immediate difference with the United Nations is over the fact that U.N. forces hold Congo radio stations and airports. U.N. forces seized the Leopoldville radio Tuesday after President Joseph Kasavubu and Lumumba, in turn, had used it Monday night, each declaring the other was fired. The United Nations acted on the principle that rival hot-headed broadcasts amounted to incitement to violence.

The United Nations blocked the Congo airfields, also on Tuesday, to stop the ferrying of Congolese forces about the country in troop-carrier planes, some of them from behind the Iron Curtain.

The U.N. Command said it had decided to exercise more effective control under its mandate from the Security Council because of the growing crisis.

Congo Power Fight Marked By Gunfire

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo, (AP) — Gunfire crackled for an hour Tuesday evening after police broke up a demonstration by opponents of Patrice Lumumba, who was deposed as premier by presidential order but has refused to quit office. The demonstrators were partisans of Congo President Joseph Kasavubu.

The security guard at United Nations headquarters was immediately strengthened but there was no indication of heavy or continued fighting.

(This dispatch was timed 6:45 p.m. Leopoldville time. Several hours later the South African radio said all communication with Leopoldville had been cut off for the night after the evening's shooting).

Several hundred members of opposition parties in trucks, cars, buses and bicycles headed for Lumumba's residence to demonstrate their dissatisfaction with the unpredictable left-leaning political leader.

FIRED VOLLEY

Along the Avenue Valke, a few hundred yards from Lumumba's residence, gray-clad police directed by a civilian stopped the procession.

The policemen dropped to their knees and fired a volley over the procession. A truck careened into the ditch. The terror-stricken demonstrators fled between villas bordering the road.

Police fired for long periods and then followed the luckless demonstrators. Some took refuge in the homes of whites.

A Red Cross station reported seven persons including two policemen were treated for injuries —none by gunfire.

Witnesses said police arrested about 15 demonstrators and beat them with fists and rifle butts.

One woman was hit over the head with a rifle butt and then poked in the face with the same weapon. Prisoners were bundled into jeeps or trucks and taken away.

Police slashed tires on the demonstrators' vehicles and smashed bicycles. From jeeps racing through the downtown section, police fired at running figures.

7 BATTERED AIRMEN

Victims Of Congolese Mob Honored On Return To U.S.

The Montgomery Advertiser

McGUIRE AIR FORCE BASE, N.J. (AP)—Seven battered airmen, victims of a beating from a Congolese mob, came home Wednesday and told of their nightmare experience. P. 29A

Their hospital plane dropped onto a wide runway of this giant military terminal and they gazed into a sea of friendly faces as they got medals for "outstanding performance and devotion to duty."

It was a stark contrast from their experience Aug. 27 at Stanleyville in the Congo, when their plane settled on a tiny runway of an airport in the jungle and they soon were surrounded by a hostile mob.

Three of the injured crewmen were still on stretchers. One had both of his smashed hands wrapped in bandages. White bandages on the heads and limbs of others attested to the violence of the attack.

"I was hit with clubs and sticks and guns and fists," said 1Lt. Kenneth Stickevers of Valley Stream, N.Y.

"I thought maybe the whole world was against me," continued Lt. Gerald T. Henery of Washington, D.C.

The crew members estimated 10,000 persons were gathered at the Stanleyville airport in the heart of the jungle Aug. 27.

CROWD VIOLENT

They were landing communications equipment for the U.N. forces when Congolese soldiers and civilians suddenly turned violent. U.N. officials said then that the Congolese suspected the airmen had landed some Belgian troops.

They said they were pummeled with a variety of weapons for 15 minutes to half an hour. Then Ethiopian U.N. troops rescued them.

After treatment at a hospital in Germany, the seven Tuesday boarded a C118 plane, converted for hospital use, and landed here Wednesday morning after an 18-hour trip, interrupted by a stop in the Azores. Left was the pilot, Capt. Elbert Mott of Glenmore, La., who could not be moved yet.

GIVEN CITATION

Maj. Gen. William P. Fisher, commander of the transport section here, met them as a bright sun bathed the concrete runway where the plane stopped.

The general escorted them to the passenger terminal where he read a citation and pinned blue and gold commendation medals on each man's bathrobe or uniform.

The citation said that "with no provocation of any kind, they were attacked and brutally beaten without warning by armed men as they were unloading their aircraft."

Congo Affair May Cost U.N. $75 Million In '60

Montgomery, Ala.
Montgomery Advertiser

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP)—Dag Hammarskjold is expected to break the news Thursday to the U.N. Budgetary Control Committee that the Congo operations may cost $75 million by the end of this year. N.Y. 9-8-60

An authoritative source said the secretary-general will ask the watchdog group to approve an expenditure of $40 million for the first three months in the Congo and will tell the committee another $35 million probably will be needed by Jan. 1.

U.N. officials still will not concede that the U.N. military force will remain in the Congo throughout 1961, but if it does they say it probably will cost about $100 million for the year.

Even the estimated $75 million for 1960 will make the Congo venture by far the most costly yet undertaken by the world organization. The U.N. general budget amounts to only $60 million for this year.

VOTE ASSESSMENT

Hammarskjold plans to raise the huge sum by calling on the General Assembly later this month to vote an assessment on all members. The payments would be based on the sliding scale now used to finance the U.N. budget.

This ranges from 32.51 per cent for the United States to .04 per cent for the smallest and poorest countries.

Efforts to finance the U.N. Emergency Force in the Middle East by a similar assessment has run into difficulties because the Soviet bloc and the Arab nations refuse to pay. U.N. officials, however, do not expect the same situation on the Congo operation since all members of the Security Council, including the Soviet Union, voted for the U.N. Congo force.

MANDATORY OBLIGATION

There is another difference. The UNEF plan was adopted by the General Assembly, whose decisions are not binding. The Congo plan, on the other hand, was approved under a provision of the U.N. Charter which places a mandatory obligation on all U.N. members.

The Charter says: "The members of the United Nations shall join in affording mutual assistance in carrying out the measures decided upon by the Security Council."

The biggest part of the Congo cost is the support of the United Nation's military force which is expected to reach a total of 18,000 men shortly. This is almost four times the size of the U.N. force in the Middle East, which has an annual budget of $20 million. The estimated U.N. cost does not include the salaries and foreign service allowance of the troops, which are paid by the countries that contribute them. The U.N. pays for the maintenance of the troops and gives each man approximately a dollar a day.

Kalonji's Recruits Enter Kasai to Join Anti-Lumumba War

By The Associated Press

ELISABETHVILLE, the Congo, Sept. 3 (AP)—The vanguard of Albert Kalonji's volunteer army moved into Kasai Province today to help guerrillas battling Congolese Government troops. Casualties there now are reported at 1,000, with 300 slain.

About 250 volunteers crossed from Katanga Province, which is allied with Mr. Kaloji and his secessionist mining state in Kasai Province, a Katanga army spokesman said. He reported that the force had met no resistance.

The spokesman said the volunteers were "supervised by white technicians"—presumably Belgian officers. Mr. Kalonji has charged that the Congolese Army in Kasai is led by three Czechoslovak officers.

The invaders headed west for Luputa, a town twenty miles inside Kasai Province. Premier Patrice Lumumba's Congolese Army was expected not long ago to use Luputa as a jumping-off point for an invasion of the Katanga capital.

But the town now is reported to have been cut off from supplies by guerrilla activities. The Katanga Army spokesman said Mr. Lumumba's main force had been driven back to the defensive by guerrillas at Bakwanga, Mr. Kalonji's captured capital.

United Nations officials reported that casualties in the Kasai fighting had reached 1,000, with nearly 300 dead. The brunt of this fighting has been carried by anti-Lumumba guerrillas who are said to have upset the Congo Government's timetable for invasion of secessionist Katanga.

The Katanga Army spokesman said Mr. Kalonji's invading force was armed with automatic weapons and rifles.

The force is part of a volunteer battalion Mr. Kalonji recruited in Katanga from tribesmen hostile to Mr. Lumumba. After a few days of military training, they left Elisabethville, Thursday by train for the border.

The invaders crossed the frontier formed by the crocodile-infested Lubilash River, traveling in trucks and automobiles over the main road bridge. The bridge previously had been mined by the Katanga Army to prevent Premier Lumumba's forces from crossing eastward into Katanga Province.

The invading force is expected to clear pro-Lumumba forces from Lupunta. There were reported to be about ninety Congo Army men at Luputa, but their morale was said to be low and some desertions have been reported.

Reports said some members of Mr. Kalonji's private army might try to join with 500 guerrillas holding a vital bridge across the Bushimai River, fifty miles northwest of Luputa. By holding this bridge, the guerrillas have cut the supply lines of Congolese troops in Luputa and Bakwanga. The bridge is on the main road from Luluabourg, capital of Kasai Province.

The Katanga Army spokesman said Congo Army units had taken up defensive positions around Bakwanga, seventy miles north of Luputa, and were encircled by Baluba tribesmen loyal to Mr. Kalonji.

Katanga's northern front, bordering on Kivu Province, is quiet, he asserted, and no Congo troop movements have been reported.

The spokesman said the Congo Army was training about 1,000 tribesmen at a center in Lokandu, more than 100 miles north of the Kasai border.

He asserted that the Congo Army intended to send troops south from Stanleyville and Watsa in the northeast Congo, but that it would be some time before they reached positions on Katanga's border.

Associated Press

BALUBA TRIBESMEN ON THE MOVE: Members of a force recruited by Albert Kalonji, head of the self-proclaimed Mining State in the Congo's Kasai Province, at the start of journey from a camp near Elisabethville. They oppose central Government.

The New York Times Sept. 4, 1960

TROOPS ON THE MOVE: An invasion force based in Katanga Province (1) was reported to have entered the Kasai territory (2).

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo, Sept. 3 (AP)—Opposition to Patrice Lumumba's swing toward Leftist dictatorship mounted today as the Premier pressed his campaign to stamp out rebellion in the eastern Congo.

In the Congolese Senate, meeting here with far less than full membership, angry Opposition members demanded that Mr. Lumumba cancel all decrees restricting fundamental freedoms. They warned against dictatorship.

Even Senator S. Romandeke, a Government supporter, urged the Lumumba regime not to issue decrees without consulting Parliament. While criticizing the Opposition's cries of "communism and dictatorship," Mr. Romandeke said Premier Lumumba should not close opposition newspapers but should impose censorship instead.

Senators complained that they had not even received copies of Mr. Lumumba's decrees closing newspapers and clamping rigid controls on political meetings and demonstrations.

The Opposition fight in the Senate was led by Senator Syrille Adoula, a member of the National Unity party, whose president, Jean Bolikango, has been arrested and sent to Leopoldville's military prison. Mr. Adoula angrily declared that "when freedom is finished, other things began—dictatorship."

"Now that we are free, we are returning to the methods we condemned in our fight for freedom," he declared. "Each of you should exxamine your conscience and accept your responsibilities."

Because of the chaotic conditions in the Congo, the upper house of Parliament never has had more than forty of its seventy-eight members present.

Congo Army Said to Gain In Heavy Fighting in Kasai

By Reuters.

BAKWANGA, the Congo, Sept. 4—Forces of the Congo central Government appeared tonight to have captured the village of Tshilenge, seventeen miles southeast of here, after heavy fighting with Baluba tribesmen.

Thousands of Balubas have fled from the village on their way from Bakwanga, capital of this secessionist, self-proclaimed Mining State in Kasai Province, toward the border of the adjoining province of Katanga, where Moise Tshombe, Provincial President, has declared independence from the central Government of Premier Patrice Lumumba.

Bakwanga, just six degrees south of the Equator, was recaptured by Government forces last week from the Baluba supporters of Albert Kalonji, who prolaimed the Mining State and now is in refuge in Katanga.

During a flight over the rolling jungle and brush around the town, Congo Army detachments could be seen fanning out along the dirt roads through villages where some backers of Mr. Kalonji were hiding.

Many of the Kalonji supporters are armed only with ancient muzzle-loading rifles, but others, according to Congolese officers directing operations from Bakwanga, have machine guns and sub-machine guns.

The rattle of automatic fire could be heard along the road to Tshilenge.

The Lumumba forces had been halted near a river where Baluba tribesmen were trying to blow up a bridge, but tonight Tshilenge appeared to be in the hands of Government troops.

There were no substantial reports of how far south the fighting has spread in Kasai.

However, pilots operating a bush air service from Luluabourg, the Kasai capital, reported that airfields were still out of use because of sporadic skirmishes at Kabinda, near the Katanga border.

Skirmishes were also reported at Luebo, Luputa and Gandajika, which Mr. Kalonji says his forces have recaptured.

United Nations officers said they believed fewer than 100 persons had been killed in the main battle for Bakwanga, although other reports spoke of a "massacre." The officers discounted reports of many hundreds or even thousands dead.

One officer said he had counted forty-three bodies in the town and did not think scattered bush fighting could have accounted for more than a few dozen others.

Warriors Holding Army

ELISABETHVILLE, the Congo, Sept. 4 (UPI)—Warriors of the Baluba tribe armed with bows and arrows have pinned down Congolese forces of Premier Patrice Lumumba around Bakwanga and the Premier is sending in reinforcements aboard Soviet planes and trucks, according to reports reaching here today.

Balubas also were said to control the villages of Luputa, Mwene Ditu and Gandajika, near the Kasai-Katanga provincial border, as well as large areas outside the towns.

No fighting had been reported in the villages, but yesterday Luputa and Mwene Ditu were said to have been held by the Congo Army.

Belgian diplomatic sources in Elisabethville said the Balubas, fighters all their lives, were in a "virtual frenzy" over Congo Army atrocities and were fighting in "show-no-mercy" attacks against the much better equipped Congolese.

Reports reaching Elisabethville said Mr. Lumumba had sent ten Soviet-provided Ilyushin airliners loaded with supplies and reinforcements to Luluabourg, capital of Kasai. Soviet-made trucks also were reported to have been pressed into service to supply the Congolese forces battling the Balubas on the Kasai frontier.

The 120 Europeans still in Bakwanga were under the protection of United Nations forces. The United Nations was trying to arrange for their removal.

A Kalonji Force Pulls Back

ELISABETHVILLE, Sept. 4 (AP)—A column of volunteers was reporting advancing in Kasai Province today against Premier Patrice Lumumba's forces. Another column pulled back without fighting a battle, according to word received here.

The column that pulled back left here yesterday and headed for Luputa, twenty miles inside Kasai. It was considered a potential jump-off point for Mr. Lumumba's invasion of Katanga after he had disposed of Albert Kalonji's Kasai "army."

But reports reaching here said scouts had found most tribes in the Luputa area favored Mr. Lumumba. There was said to have been little support for Mr. Kalonji and the Independent Mining State that he proclaimed recently.

The other column, which is larger, consists of about 250 uniformed troops armed with rifles and a few Belgian automatic weapons and 250 porters carrying ammunition and supplies.

Most of the men with rifles and automatic weapons are former members of the Congo Army who have had considerable training in the handling of firearms.

Mr. Kalonji's youth movement—militant supporters of the dissident Kalonji wing of Premier Lumumba's Congolese National Movement—is believed to be harassing the Congo troops in southern Kasai. Mr. Kalonji's invasion force will probably try to join with them and other supports in the area.

The invasion force now is reported to be firmly established across the border river of Lubilash, twenty miles from the nearest road center at Gandajika, northeast of Luputa. About sixty Congo soldiers are said to holding Gandajika.

The New York Times Sept. 5, 1960

Congolese troops drove dissidents from a village near Bakwanga (cross) after heavy fighting.

SUPPORT U.N. RESOLUTION

16 African, Asian States Back Dag

The Montgomery Advertiser

Montgomery, Ala.

Sharp Slap At Russians Anticipated

Mon, 9-19-60

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y. (AP) —Sixteen countries of Africa and Asia proposed Sunday night that the U.N. General Assembly endorse the Congo policies of Secretary - General Dag Hammarskjold, now under attack from the Soviet bloc.

They introduced a resolution in support of Hammarskjold—and against non-U.N. military aid to the Congo—amidst the 82-nation Assembly's weekend emergency session on the situation in that African republic.

Eight African and eight Asian countries joined in the proposal. They were Ceylon, Ghana, Guinea, Indonesia, Iraq, Jordan, Lebanon, Liberia, Libya, Morocco, Nepal, Saudi Arabia, Sudan, Tunisia, the United Arab Republic and Yemen.

'TIME TO ACT'

Alex Quaison-Sackey of Ghana presented the resolution formally to the Assembly.

"This is the time to act. The fate of millions of people in the Congo is at stake. The Congolese people cannot be immolated on the altar of great power missions and vested interests," he said.

Quaison-Sackey said the sponsors of the proposal feel very strongly that countries now contributing to the U.N. Congo force should continue to do so and that no help should be sent to the Congo except by U.N. request.

"The great powers are playing with fire," he declared, "if they think that under any pretext they can interfere in the affairs of the Congo."

Mongi Slim of Tunisia, referring briefly to the Asian-African resolution, praised Hammarskjold and spoke of "the vigorous way" in which the secretary-general had carried out the U.N. task in the Congo.

The resolution would amount to a vote of confidence for the U.N. secretary-general in his bitter fight with the Soviet Union.

The United States and other Western powers were certain to press for overwhelming approval of the resolution, probably sometime Monday, and thus administer a defeat to Soviet policy in advance of Premier Nikita Khrushchev's arrival for the regular Assembly opening Tuesday.

COMPROMISE MADE

Guinea and Ghana decided to support the resolution, informants said, after a compromise was worked out on the issue of foreign military aid to the Congo outside the U.N. operation.

The resolution, as drafted, contained a provision calling on U.N. members to refrain from supplying direct or indirect military aid to the Congo "during the temporary period of military assistance by the United Nations."

Guinea and Ghana agreed after a clause was inserted that safeguarded the "rights of sovereign states" in the matter of extending aid.

The resolution calls on Hammarskjold to carry out the provisions of Security Council resolutions giving him the go-ahead for the entire U.N. Congo operation.

DRAMATIC REPLY

Hammarskjold himself brought the issue squarely before the emergency session in a brief but dramatic intervention early Sunday.

Replying in anger to a harsh attack upon him by Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Valerian Zorin, the secretary-general declared: "The representative of the Soviet Union used strong language which, quite frankly, I do not know how to interpret.

"The General Assembly knows me well enough to realize that I would not wish to serve one day beyond the point at which such continued service would be, and would be considered to be, in the best interests of this organization."

It was the strongest language used by the secretary-general since the Soviet Union began its attack upon him over the way he is directing the U.N. operation in the Congo.

Zorin charged him with softness in dealing with Belgium in evacuation of Belgian troops, and with taking action in sympathy with those opposing Patrice Lumumba, the deposed Congo premier.

ASKED BY U.S.

The United States asked for the emergency session after the Soviet Union killed an Asian-African resolution in the Council affirming confidence in Hammarskjold and giving him even greater authority by setting up a special fund to pay for the Congo operation.

A similar resolution is expected to be approved in the emergency session. Consultations were under way on its exact wording. A two-thirds majority is reauired for approval.

In his opening speech Sunday U.S. Delegate James J. Wadsworth praised the "selfless dedication" of the secretary-general and his entire staff in carrying out the Congo operation.

He warned that unilateral action must not be permitted to obstruct the United Nations in its efforts to restore peace and order in the Congo.

Referring to dispatch of Soviet planes and other equipment to the Congo, he added: "It would be particularly dangerous if any power were again to send personnel or equipment into the Congo which would frustrate the purposes of the United Nations.

GRAVE CONSEQUENCES

"The alternative to United Nations action to prevent this is unilateral action — with all the grave consequences this would entail."

The United States has made clear on previous occasions it would not stand idly by and permit outside powers to obtain a foothold in the newly independent nation.

The United States failed in an effort to obtain admission of 14 new African nations at the emergency session. Wadsworth said he wanted to give them an opportunity to take part in the Congo debate.

But the Assembly voted to postpone the action after both the Soviet Union and African nations said it was impossible to notify the new nations to have delegations present in such short order.

The Assembly adjourned its afternoon session after hearing delegates of eight nations air their views on the Congo crisis.

Hammarskjold spoke just before adjournment in defense of his policies.

Reds, Asia-Africa Bloc Clash Over Congo Issue

Montgomery, Ala.

The Montgomery

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP) —The Soviet Union clashed head on with the Asian-African nations Monday over support of Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold in his policies on the Congo.

Valerian A. Zorin, the Soviet deputy foreign minister, submitted a resolution to the emergency session of the General Assembly seeking to hold Hammarskjold responsible for the overthrow of Patrice Lumumba, the sometimes Congo premier.

But the assembly appeared headed for certain approval of an Asian-African resolution backing the secretary-general.

This would be a rebuke to Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev, who arrived in New York to attend the regular fall assembly opening Tuesday Afternoon. He has accused Hammarskjold of backing "Belgian colonialists" in the Congo.

Zorin declared the Soviet Union could not accept the Asian-African resolution because it failed to make any reference to what he called "direct acts of subversion in the Congo by colonialist elements."

Then he introduced the Soviet resolution amounting to a virtual indictment of Hammarskjold and seeking condenmnation of Belgium for armed aggression against the Congo "with the support of her NATO allies."

It would have the assembly note failure of Hammarskjold and the at the diplomatic tables, we must insist that any competition for ideas must take place on the other side of the Iron Curtain as well as on this side.

"We must achieve our goal without war and we can achieve it without war."

Afterward, the nationalities group went to the White House rose garden where they heard President Eisenhower speak about the problems of the free world—mentioning, among other things, that "there seem to be some troublemakers coming to this country."

"I have difficulty in speaking to a Jewish group or a Catholic group, or any other group," Eisenhower said.

"I would like to just talk to Americans."

SHAKEUP IN CONGO

Lumumba Fades As Soviets Exit

The Montgomery Advertiser

Montgomery, Ala.

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo (AP)—Soviet-led Communists burned documents and packed up Friday night in preparation for a dismal getaway from the Congo.

Their adventuring effort to exploit a foothold in central Africa appeared to be ending in failure.

Patrice Lumumba, the puppet they had been shaping up, had vanished, and the facade of Soviet power with him.

The Communists from Eastern Europe started their preparations to leave on renewed orders from the new Congolese army strongman, Col. Joseph Mobutu. He said they must clear out before another nightfall.

Papers were burned in the courtyard of the Czech Embassy. Workmen then nailed covers on big wooden crates.

TASS AGENT

Three carloads of Soviet officials left the Soviet Embassy. Other cars loaded with suitcases stood in the courtyard.

"We are all leaving tomorrow," said a correspondent for the Soviet news agency Tass.

The correspondent said the Soviet Embassy had received a formal request to leave the country from President Joseph Kasavubu.

Col. Mobutu Wednesday announced he was giving the Communist bloc 48 hours to leave the Congo. The first signs that they would obey came Friday night.

SHARP DISPUTES

The Russians and their Communist allies had moved into the Congo in a big way after independence June 30. They poured in men and equipment outside the U. N. Congo effort, setting off sharp disputes with Western nations and the United Nations.

The collapse of the Communist venture came as Mobutu moved swiftly to consolidate his power.

Congolese troops arrested 20 members of Lumumba's personal staff at his luxurious villa, and there were reports that the disputed premier himself had been nabbed at a hideout in town.

STAR RISING

Roundabout reports received in Europe indicated Lumumba may have fled the Congo, but there was no confirmation. The Belgian radio said Lumumba had left his residence in Leopoldville under protection of U. N. Guinean soldiers. The Brussels report said he was taken to a hiding place but gave no other details. It attributed its information to military sources in Leopoldville.

Mobutu, the young army staff chief whose star is rising as Lumumba's fades, staged a dramatic show of force with the arrests. His soldiers also banned a scheduled meeting of Parliament, which has been inclined to string long with Lumumba.

A company of grim-looking Negro infantrymen made the raid on the villa, with rifles cocked.

NO RESISTANCE

U.N. Ghana soldiers on guard duty there stood by idly.

The Congolese raiders rounded up all the staff they could find. The Lumumba men emerged sullenly, but offered no resistance. They were herded into a truck and driven away, presumably to Camp Leopold II.

That is the military base on Leopoldville's outskirts where Lumumba narrowly escaped lynching Thursday by Congolese soldiers infuriated over reports of kinsmen massacred in Lumumba's recently halted war against secession-minded Baluba tribesmen in Kasai Province.

President Joseph Kasavubu protested to the United Nations that the Ghana soldiers who sheltered Lumumba in their officers' mess building had prevented service of a warrant he issued for Lumumba's arrest. The president declared this was interference in the Congo's internal affairs.

Soldiers loyal to Kasavubu in fact arrested the Communist-backed nationalist leader for a couple of hours last Monday, but he talked his way out of it.

Mobutu, 29, had put teeth in his Wednesday proclamation that the army was taking over for the rest of the year to oust the Communists and run the government with Western technical help.

He reiterated Friday that Soviet and other Communist-bloc diplomats have been ordered to leave the Congo within 48 hours. But there was no immediate evidence that they are packing.

The main aim of Friday's arrests was believed to be to prevent the Lumumba group from escaping to Stanleyville, 800 miles northeast of the capital. Stanleyville is the Congo River city where Lumumba—twice sentenced there to prison while the Congo was a Belgian colony—claims his strongest support.

UTTER CHAOS, CHA CHA CHA

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo (AP)—"The Independence Cha Cha Cha" is still a smash hit in Leopoldville.

Political leaders come and go and coup follows coup, but grinning Congolese still wiggle to its tune.

The words of the "Independence Cha Cha Cha" could not have been better chosen. They consist of the names of prominent Congolese leaders, regardless of party affiliation, followed by "cha cha cha."

If a supporter of Patrice Lumumba gets angry when the band roars "Kasavubu cha cha cha" for the president, two bars later his grin is restored.

"Patrice Lumumba cha cha cha," yell the bongo drummers.

LUMUMBA DEFIES OUSTER ORDERED BY PRESIDENT; CHAOS SPREADS IN CONGO

The New York Times p. 1

New York Times 9-6-60

Black Star

Joseph Kasavubu

The New York Times

Patrice Lumumba

LEADERS DISAGREE

Kasavubu Picks New Premier but Action Meets Challenge

By THOMAS F. BRADY

Special to The New York Times.

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo, Sept. 5—President Joseph Kasavubu dramatically ousted Patrice Lumumba from the Premiership of this tortured country tonight, but a later broadcast by Mr. Lumumba challenging the legality of the move spread chaos in the Congo.

In his move against the Premier, Mr. Kasavubu called on the United Nations to take over the entire responsibility for law and order.

In an unheralded radio broadcast announcing these decisions shortly before 8 P. M., Mr. Kasavubu named Joseph Ileo, President of the Congo Senate, Premier to replace Mr. Lumumba.

The immediate reaction of United Nations authorities was that Mr. Kasavubu "has given us a legal mandate to act."

Lumumba Leaves Mansion

At 8:55 P. M. Mr. Lumumba rode out of his mansion in a black limousine with two Congolese military policeman. His destination was not immediately determined.

[A few minutes later, Mr. Lumumba made a broadcast asserting that he was still in power and saying that Mr. Kasavubu "is no longer Chief of State," United Press International reported.]

At the radio station blue-helmeted Ghanaian troops were on guard with instructions to admit no one without special passes.

Within was the director of the station, a Lumumba appointee, a Congolese military policeman and five Europeans, believed to be citizens of Communist countries. The director said he had no text of Mr. Kasavubu's speech and that he could not say what the President had said. A Congolese was busy typing.

Mr. Kasavubu told the Congolese people that Mr. Lumumba had failed and had "plunged the nation into fratricidal warfare." He charged Mr. Lumumba with curtailing freedom of expression.

Despite the United Nations guard at the radio station, Mr. Lumumba was able to strike back by broadcasting an appeal to the Congo army to stand by him against Mr. Kasavubu and the United Nations. This broadcast was transmitted, with apparent technical difficulty, shortly after 9:30 P. M. Lumumba was heard again at 10:05 P. M. announcing an immediate meeting of his cabinet.

Army Is a Problem

In his first broadcast Mr. Lumumba both appealed to the army and declared that the army was behind him. The Congo Army of about 20,000 men was left without commissioned officers after the Congolese mutinied in July against their Belgian officers.

It was the Belgian military re-entry into the Congo following these mutinies that led Mr. Lumumba to ask the United Nations to intervene in the Congo to assure the Belgian withdrawal. The commissioned grades of the army have been filled by noncommissioned officers who served under Belgian leadership before independence.

The greatest disciplinary problem, according to military observers here, is that noncommissioned vacancies have been filled hastily and haphazardly from the ranks by soldiers who do not take orders seriously.

The Ghanaians on guard at the radio station were reported to have permitted Mr. Lumumba to enter either because of the lack of clear orders or because of a misunderstanding of orders.

Mr. Lumumba said in his broadcast that Mr. Kasavubus' act was "illegal" and that "no notice should be taken of it."

Mr. Ileo, the new Premier designate, is a conservative Congolese nationalist and an advocate of a constitution that would make the Congo a confederation instead of the highly centralized republic favored by Mr. Lumumba.

He was once allied with Mr. Lumumba and the now-dissident leader Albert Kalonji in the Congolese National Movement. When the party was split by a conflict between Mr. Lumumba and Mr. Kalonji in 1959, Mr. Ileo adhered to the Kalonjist faction.

Ileo an Early Nationalist

The 38-year-old Mr. Ileo was the author of the first "manifesto of Congo nationalism," published in June, 1956. The manifesto asked for Congolese independence in thirty years at the stage of Beligan colonial history. The idea of independence, even with a long delay, was then extremely daring.

At a recent news conference, which was interrupted by Government police, Mr. Ileo said he favored a confederal structure for the Congo because he believed tribal antagonisms could be "contained" in that way while the nation was being built. He said the fundamental law bequeathed to the Congo by the Belgians was too centralist. Mr. Ileo said he was not a tribalist but that Mr. Lumumba's centralism was leading the country toward bloodshed because it took no account of ethnic divergences.

Mr. Kasavubu, leader of the Association of the Lower Congo, known as Abako, has always been regarded as sympathetic to the confederal system.

At his request, it is understood, United Nations Moroccan troops took over guard at Mr. Kasavubu's big house overlooking the Congo River outside Leopoldville. The Moroccans on guard tonight said no one could enter without a special pass. Previously, Congolese military police had guarded the Presidential mansion.

Earlier in the day, when the National Assembly opened its new session, the debate in the lower chamber broke into an unroar over the "freedom of opposition" and the arrest last week of Jean Bolikongo, an Opposition leader and bitter antagonist of Mr. Lumumba.

Two Leaders Are Rivals

LEOPOLDVILLE, Sept. 5 (AP) — Joseph Kasavubu and Patrice Lumumba both contested the leadership when the Congo gained her freedom from Belgium.

A compromise gave the largely figurehead job of chief of state to Mr. Kasavubu, whose Abako party holds twelve seats in the House of Representatives. Mr. Lumumba won the Premiership—the executive post—as chief of a coalition claiming eighty-four votes in the House.

The two rivals are dissimilar in physical outlook.

The 42-year-old Mr. Kasavubu is short, bulky and so quiet he has a reputation as a mystery man.

Mr. Kasavubu studied for the Roman Catholic priesthood but left in 1942 to take a job as a clerk in the Leopoldville government offices. He created the Abako cultural movement of Lower Congo Africans, which became the first important Congolese political party. His aim at one time was to separate the Lower Congo province from the rest of the territory as his own kingdom.

First to Urge Freedom

Mr. Kasavubu was the first African leader heard to raise his voice against Belgian rule. He was the first to demand a constitutional assembly to prepare for independence for the Congo.

The New York Times Sept. 6, 1960

DEEPENING CRISIS: While Congo's President and Premier fought each other for political control at Leopoldville (1), nationalist troop reinforcements were rushed to Bakwanga (2) in Soviet planes from Stanleyville (3) to fight the dissidents in Kasai Province.

Belgian authorities said Mr. Kasavubu planned an attempt to oust the Belgian Government by force in early 1959 but dynamite he had prepared exploded prematurely.

Mr. Kasavubu has always stood for a loose confederation of the Congo's six provinces with a large amount of autonomy left to the provinces. Mr. Lumumba has insisted on a strong central government.

Joseph Ileo, nominated for Premier by Mr. Kasavubu, has been a bitter opponent of Lumumba's policies. Mr. Ileo was accused July 20 of an assassination plot against Mr. Lumumba and Mr. Kasavubu. The charge was made by the youth wing of Mr. Lumumba's party.

At Mr. Lumumba's home late tonight there appeared to be only United Nations troops from Ghana on guard. Usually the Ghanaians have been reinforced by members of the Congo army.

POLICEMEN FIGHT CROWD OPPOSING LUMUMBA'S RULE

Kasavubu Backers Wounded —U. N. Closes Airports and Radio Station

By HENRY TANNER

Special to The New York Times.

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo, Sept. 6—Shots echoed through the downtown area of Leopoldville for nearly an hour tonight as the police broke up a demonstration of several hundred young supporters of President Joseph Kasavubu.

The demonstraters, in trucks, on bicycles and on foot, were halted by the police as they moved toward the residence of Premier Patrice Lumumba, Mr. Kasavubu's opponent.

Mr. Kasavubu declared Mr. Lumumba deposed in a radio speech last night and asked the United Nations to assume responsibility for the maintenance of law and order in the Congo.

Mr. Lumumba continued to operate today as Premier, however. He called his Cabinet into session and in turn declared Mr. Kasavubu "deprived" of his functions as Chief of State.

U. N. Closes Radio Station

The United Nations, in what appeared to be a favorable response to Mr. Kasavubu's appeal, closed down the Leopoldville radio station this afternoon, a few hours before a scheduled broadcast to the nation by Mr. Lumumba.

The United Nations also blocked all important airports in the Congo. This prevented the Congo Army commander, Gen. Victor Lundula, a Lumumba man, from returning to the capital from the interior.

Today's demonstrators wore signs saying "Long Live Kasavubu, Chief of State, savior of the Congo." Supporters of Albert Kalonji, head of the secessionist region called Mining State, also were in the group, as were followers of Jean Bolikango, influential Opposition leader arrested by Mr. Lumumba last week.

Several Are Injured

The demonstration was broken up at a police road block about half a mile from the Premier's office. Seven persons with injuries from rifle butts and broken glass were taken to a near-by Red Cross station but the number injured is believed to be considerably higher.

There were reports that two persons were killed, but the deaths could not be confirmed.

Many demonstrators were arrested. The rest fled toward Leopoldville's African quarter.

Sporadic shooting continued as policemen cruising in jeeps shot in the direction of any Congolese they saw running or any car, Congolese or European, they felt was driving suspiciously fast.

Later in the evening unrest broke out in the African quarter. Several persons, including a child, were reported severely wounded in clashes between the police and political and tribal groups.

The United Nations headquarters in a residential hotel near the scene of the demonstration was surrounded by a cordon of Ghanaian troops tonight in the most spectacular display of military force the United Nations has made here since the first days of its intervention nearly two months ago.

Ghanaian troops also cordoned off the radio transmitting station.

Airport Runways Blocked

At Ndjili Airport, guards were increased and jeeps, fire trucks, stepladders, oil drums and other obstructions were strewn over the runway and taxiing strips.

Similar obstructions were placed on airports throughout the Congo at nightfall last night. One of the last planes aloft yesterday was the United States Embassy plane that brought the body of Henry N. Taylor, American correspondent killed in Kasai Province, to Leopoldville.

There was a suggestion from an official quarter that the United Nations, advised of Mr. Kasavubu's impending broadcast, had wanted to close the airport here earlier but had decided to wait for the arrival of the American plane.

Incidents were reported today from Stanleyville and Luluabourg. All morning, according to reliable sources, Soviet Ilyushin planes with Soviet crews transporting Congolese troops took off and landed on the grass after the United Nations forces had blocked the runways of airports in the two cities. Only toward noon was the United Nations able to seal the two airports completely.

Congo Army troops were being moved from Stanleyville to Luluabourg to participate in the Lumumba Government's offensive against Baluba tribesmen loyal to Mr. Kalonji.

Estimates of the number of Balubas killed in this campaign range from 400 to 5,000. The savagery of the campaign is known to be one of the principal reasons behind Mr. Kasabuvu's decision to declare Mr. Lumumba deposed.

Neither the President nor the Premier made any decisive moves in the conflict today.

Mr. Kasabuvu remained silent in his residence overlooking the rapids of the Congo River a few miles west of the city.

Lumumba Makes Charges

The Premier fired a few salvos. He accused the Chief of State and Finance Minister Pascal Nkayi of conniving with the United Nations and with Belgians to leave the Congo's foreign affairs under foreign control.

Mr. Nkayi belongs to the Association of the Lower Congo, known as Abako, which is headed by Mr. Kasabuvu. He has been closely associated with recent negotiations at Geneva with the Belgian Government over the transformation of the pre-independence Congo Central Bank into a new national bank. United Nations financial experts have been advising the Congolese in these negotiations.

Mr. Lumumba also had a letter delivered at the United Nations headquarters, at 4 A.M. today, requesting that the world organization deal exclusively with his Government.

In a second letter later in the day, Mr. Lumumba asked the United Nations mission for an explanation of the measures it took at the airports.

A United Nations spokesman said the radio station and the airports had closed following Mr. Kasavubu's appeal to the United Nations. These moves were in keeping with the Security Council resolutions on the United Nations role in the Congo, he said.

He said political broadcasts at this time might have a "damaging effect" on law and order. Mr. Lumumba made two radio broadcasts last night after Mr. Kasavubu had declared him deposed. The station was taken off the air today after Mr. Lumumba's office announced the Premier's intention to speak again.

The most important element of uncertainty in the conflict between the twto leaders today was the attitude of army units and the police stationed in the Leopoldville area. Both sides claimed the loyalty of these units.

Reports on Fighting Conflict

LEOPOLDVILLE, Sept. 6 (AP)—There were conflicting reports here today on a battle between Premier Lumumba's troops and the secessionists of Albert Kalonji at the Kasai Province town of Gandajika.

Victor Tignee, Interior Secretary of rebellious Katanga Province, announced a 150-man Congolese garrison had been run out of Gandajika by a private army of about 500 Kalonji recruited in Katanga, plus guerillas who had been harassing the garrison.

However, reports from usually reliable people in the Katanga border town of Kaniama, from which Mr. Kalonji's army launched its invasion yesterday, said it had been stopped by a barrage of mortar shells and heavy machine gun fire on Gandjika's outskirts and had retreated three miles.

Both Mr. Kalonji and Katanga's President, Moise Tshombe announced their support for President Kasavubu, who favors a federation instead of the strong centralist regime desired by Mr. Lumumba. Tshombe has declared his province independent of the central government and has allied with Mr. Kalonii.

Time Is Running Out In Congo and Africa

The Atlanta Constitution

Chaos in the Congo worsens with each passing day. While it is obvious that it is being aggravated and prompted by Communists, it is equally apparent that only the United Nations can prevent a Communist takeover in a matter of weeks.

There is now no effective government in this vast and potentially rich African region. Its economy is completely disorganized. Tribal warfare in the absence of authority is skillfully being fostered and exploited by Moscow.

Communist-supported Premier Lumumba was slapped down by African U.N. members last week and President Joseph Kasavubu has ordered his ouster from office. Lumumba in turn has returned the compliment. Presumably the Congolese parliament will decide.

The United Nations must act quickly and decisively or the rest of Africa will become embroiled. The extent of Communist penetration of the whole continent is now realized as much greater than anyone had thought. The stakes indeed are the whole continent and the future of the world.

Congo's Congress Cancels Firings

The Atlanta Constitution

By WILBUR G. LANDREY

LEOPOLDVILLE (UPI)—The Congolese parliament met in an uproarious session Wednesday and canceled out the efforts by Premier Patrice Lumumba and President Joseph Kasavubu to fire each other.

The 60-to-19 vote in the Chamber of Deputies postponed a political showdown between the rival leaders. The chamber then voted to appoint a committee to attempt to mediate the dispute that has threatened the Congo with anarchy. Lumumba suggested this move.

Thurs. 9-8-60

There was a minor incident when two Sudanese troops of the United Nations forces followed Lumumba into the chamber. They were ordered out by assembly President Joseph Kasongo, a Lumumba man, who said, "We cannot tolerate foreign troops in this assembly."

Americans beaten in Congo arrive in U.S. Page 3.

Lumumba had sought a vote of confidence and Kasavubu had demanded that the assembly oust the goateed premier. But six hours of noise, shouting and rude murmurs produced only the amazing vote which left matters virtually as they were.

Most of Kasavubu's legislative followers were not in the chamber when the vote was taken. Kasavubu himself remained in his mansion under United Nations protection while some of his loyal troops poured into Leopoldville to strengthen his hand.

U.N. CONTROL

Though remaining in his home, Kasavubu telephoned the Brazzaville Radio station across the Congo river in the former French Congo and broadcast an announcement he had fired five members of Lumumba's cabinet as well as Lumumba.

Thurs. 9-8-60

U.N. forces still controlled the Leopoldville Radio and Lumumba was unable to reply to the broadcast, but in a speech to the national assembly Wednesday again castigated Kasavubu and lambasted the U.N.

Lumumba voted for Wednesday's motion after criticizing the U.N. action in closing the radio station and shutting down the Congo's airfields. Then he strode out of the chamber while his followers shouted "Uhuru!" (Independence).

The surprise vote came as these other major Congo developments were reported:

1. In Washington, President Eisenhower called on the Soviet Union to refrain from any unilateral action in the Congo which would cause the civil war to spread. He especially condemned Russia's action in supplying 15 Ilyushin transport planes to Lumumba to fly his troops into battle. (Story elsewhere on Page 1.)

2. Vice Premier Antoine Gizenga presented the U.N. command with a written protest against closing the radio station and airfields, called it interference in Congo internal affairs and demanded a Security Council hearing.

3. A dispatch from Elisabethville, capital of seccessionist Katanga province, said U.N. seizure of the Congo airfields had brought the Russian airlift to a halt. One Soviet plane flew around for hours today unable to land at Bakwanga and Luluabourg airports and then returned to Stanleyville.

4. U.N. sources reported bloody fighting still raging in the mining state set up in Kasai Province by Baluba tribal leader Albert Kalonji. Casualties were reported "heavy" but no details were available.

5. Reports in Elisabethville said a non-commissioned Belgian officer and nine Katanga Province gendarmes were killed in northern Katanga when they were ambushed by local tribesmen loyal to Lumumba. The dispatch said reinforcements were sent to the ambush area in the Malemba-Nkulu region and that the situation was very tense, with Katanga troops expected to attack the 100 Lumumba men there.

U.N. Caught In Congo's Civil War

The Atlanta Constitution

Atlanta, Ga.

Sat. 9-3-60

From Press Dispatches

LEOPOLDVILLE — The Congo careened crazily and bloodily toward civil war, anarchy and possibly a communist-style dictatorship Friday night. For the first time U.N. African forces resorted to gunfire to keep order.

Bodies littered the streets of Bakwanga, the diamond mining center where Congolese army troops have been fighting secessionist forces of Albert Kalonji. U.N. officials counted at least 270 dead.

U.N. SKIRMISH

At Moerbeke, near the army base of Thysville in Leopoldville province, U.N. Moroccan troops opened fire on a belligerent group of armed civilians. First reports said one civilian was killed.

In Leopoldville Premier Patrice Lumumba proceeded vigorously to wipe out political opposition to his martial regime by throwing political opponents in jail.

Veteran diplomats in the capital watched anxiously as the Lumumba government proceeded along the path that leads usually to dictatorship and a police state.

RED ADVISERS

Scores of Russians and Communist advisers have poured into the Congo in recent weeks. Observers who know well the pattern of Communist infiltration said the trend of events here is almost classical in design.

From the suppression of newspapers, the banning of political meetings, the rough and ready employment of troops and police to the arrest of political opposition, the course taken by the Lumumba government has followed the familiar pattern, they say, and they believe the chaos and confusion is all a part of the pattern.

SOVIET PLANES

A belief was growing among observers that the U.N. nations could not restore order in this chaotic two-month old nation unless the Congolese army somehow could be disarmed. There is slight hope of this in the face of Lumumba's militant determination to use the army to quell opposition in both Kasai and Katanga provinces.

The rich Central African nation from which so much was expected seems in grave danger of dividing hopelessly along tribal lines.

A consignment of 10 Ilyushin-18 Soviet planes now has arrived in the country. A hundred Soviet trucks capable of transporting troops already are in the interior.

QUIET REPORTED

The United Nations had reported only quiet in the Bakwanga region until Friday.

Then they reported that Congolese troops had engaged the armed supporters of secessionists and that "there was shooting for hours."

The incident at Moerbeke marked the first time the U.N. African troops resorted to gunfire.

OPPONENT ARRESTED

Premier Lumumba announced he had arrested Jean Bolikango, and unsuccessful candidate for the Congolese presidency, who opposed the Lumumba Nationalist Congolese Movement Party. Several of Bolikango's aides were seized and accused of plotting to assassinate both Lumumba and President Joseph Kasavubu.

Bolikango himself was not accused in the alleged plot but was held for trying to set up an independent republic in Equatorial Province.

Lumumba's government feared rioting as word of the arrest spread and his Leopoldville home was being guarded by a heavy cordon of Congolese police.

MORTAR FIRE

Dispatches from Kasai said fighting between Congolese troops and Balbua tribesmen representing the would-be independent "mining state" had intensified, with both sides using mortars.

The dispatches said a massacre occurred when Congolese soldiers, who had been under fire by troops of Kalonji, spotted a crowd of Africans running into a mission.

The troops hacked their way into the mission and killed 70 men and women with machetes and knives, the reports said.

The dead were believed to have been Baluba tribesmen.

Red Planes Rush Aid to Hard-Hit Lumumba Forces

The Atlanta Journal and Constitution

P. 1 Mon. 9-5-60 Atlanta, Ga

Invaders Showing 'No Mercy'

The Atlanta Journal and Constitution

By RAY MOLONEY

ELISABETHVILLE, The Congo (UPI)—Bow and arrow - armed warriors of the Baluba tribe have pinned down Congolese forces of Premier Lumumba around Bakwanga and the premier is sending in reinforcements aboard Russian planes and trucks, reports reaching here said Sunday.

Mon. 9-5-60

The "no mercy" fighting at Bakwanga, capital of the "Mining State" of Premier Albert Kalonji, and clashes elsewhere along the Kasai-Katanga provincial frontier appeared to be softening the independence demands of both Kalonji and Katanga President Moise Tshombe.

Diplomatic sources in Elisabethville, capital of Katanga, said both men were tending more toward the idea of membership in a federal Congo—something Lumumba in Leopoldville has been insisting on.

But fighting was continuing at Bakwanga, and dispatches from the frontier said that the Baluba tribesmen had pinned down Lumumba's Congolese army forces.

Balubas also were said to control the villages of Luputa, Mwene - Ditu and Gandajika on the borders of the Kasai and Katanga provinces border as well as large areas outside the towns.

No fighting had been reported in the villages, but Saturday Luluta and Mwene-Ditu were said to have been in Congolese army possession.

Belgian diplomatic sources in Elisabethville said the Balubas, fighters all their lives, were in a "virtual frenzy" over Congolese army atrocities and were fighting in "show no mercy" attacks against the far better equipped Congolese.

The Atlanta Journal and Constitution

Reports reaching Elisabethville said Lumumba had sent 10 Russian - supplied Ilyushin airliners loaded with supplies and reinforcements to Luluabourg, capital of Kasai. Russian-made trucks also were reported being pressed into service to supply the Congolese forces battling the Balubas on the Kasai frontier.

Mon. 9-5-60

In Leopoldville, Lumumba's capital, sources reported that the United Nations and officials of other African states have held private talks with the 35-year-old Lumumba to protest against the massacre of 70 Africans in a Bakwanga mission last week by Congolese army soldiers.

It was this massacre, apparently, which inflamed the Balubas to fight fiercely.

CIVIL WAR FEARED

Some 500 reinforcements headed for Bakwanga from Elisabethville Saturday to bolster the Balubas, but it was not yet known whether the men, trekking 100 miles through the jungle, had reached the scene.

The 120 Europeans still in Bakwanga were under the protection of United Nations forces, and the U. N. was trying to arrange for their removal.

Sources said the U. N. was trying desperately to keep the Baluba-Congolese fight, which has tribal overtones, from spreading into all-out civil war.

3 NEWSMEN SEIZED

Among the whites in Bakwanga are three British newsmen who were seized by Congolese forces Friday when they flew in from Elisabethville. The Congolese released them, and they now are under U. N. protection with the other whites in the town.

The presence in the Congo of Russian airliners, manned by Russian crews, was causing considerable discussion both in Elisabethville and Leopoldville.

Some report said Lumumba intended to use them primarily as troop carriers for an invasion of Katanga. Other reports said he would use them only as the basis of a Congo airlines.

At present, despite his animosity toward Belgians, Lumumba's Air Congo is operated by the Belgian Sabena Airlines.

Congo President Moves To Kick Out Lumumba

Montgomery Advertiser, Montgomery Ala., Tues. 9-6-60

Bold Action Challenged By Premier

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo (AP) — The Congo's soft-spoken President Joseph Kasavubu made a sudden bold move Monday night to fire the erratic Premier Patrice Lumumba, but Lumumba refused to quit his office.

Instead, Lumuma appealed by radio to youth and workers to "defend the republic." He said he had fired Kasavubu from the presidency.

Kasavubu said he was trying to stop the Congo's lunge under Lumumba toward the Soviet bloc.

All United Nations forces in the capital were put on a state of alert and a special U.N. guard was posted around President Kasavubu's residence.

SHOWDOWN LOOMS

A showdown of force between the president and Lumumba appeared to loom over the capital.

Two hours after Kasavubu accused Lumumba on the radio of having plunged the Congo into a fratricidal war and disaster, the premier took control of the network building.

"Forward, youth and workers of the Congo," shouted Lumumba. "You must defend the republic."

A group of supporters clapped and shouted "vive Lumumba" in the studio as Lumumba spoke.

He said Kasavubu was no longer chief of state and shouted: "I am still chief of the national army."

There was no doubt that the army—an ill-trained, ill-disciplined mass of men commanded by new officers—will have a decisive role to play in the days to come.

The muzzles of U.N. machine-guns manned by British-trained Ghana and Sudan soldiers and crack Moroccan riflemen kept a tense and determined watch over the city.

BACKED BY LAW

Under Article 32 of the fundamental law theoretically serving as the country's constitution, the president can dismiss the premier if he deems such action necessary.

Kasavubu announced dramatically in mid-evening that Lumumba was fired. The president asked the U.N. to restore order.

Kasavubu's avowed aim was to frustrate a Soviet-led Communist attempt to move into Central Africa through material and technical aid to the Lumumba government.

Moving swiftly behind the scenes of Lumumba's leftward lunge, Kasavubu asked the United Nations to take over the preservation of order.

He asked Senate President Joseph Ileo, a notably moderate political leader of the National Congolese Movement, to form a new government in place of Lumumba.

Whether Kasavubu's action would succeed was still a question.

Lumumba, accompanied by Congolese troops, sped out of his home shortly before 9 p.m. His destination was not known.

Just what the largely undisciplined Congolese army would do was uncertain.

REDS POUR IN

Kasavubu acted as Soviet and Eastern European "advisers" were pouring into the country.

Russian Ilyushin planes already were being employed to move Lumumba's troops against his political foes.

It appeared certain that the question of Soviet intervention would come before the United Nations, Western diplomats here said.

President Kasavubu, 42, was guarded by hastily posted troops of the United Nations. Lumumba, 34, frequently had been at odds with the U.N. troops, administrators and other personnel.

(At United Nations headquarters in New York a staff member said Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold has been advised of the momentous development but declined to comment.)

Kasavubu's so far bloodless coup to rid himself—and the United Nations—of the troublesome premier was announced dramatically on the state radio by the president himself.

U.N. TROOPS ALERTED

U.N. troops in the capital immediately were put on alert and a U.N. official warned: "Anything may happen now."

Kasavubu, an old political rival of the ousted premier, said Lumumba had betrayed the Congo's trust since the country became independent of Belgium June 30. The president reaffirmed his faith in the U.N. and asked its troops to restore order.

It was not known immediately where Lumumba was. Rumors sweeping through the dark, tense city said he had fled. He last was reported seen in a car heading in the general direction of the airport.

Kasavubu's move appeared to be a desperate effort to halt the Congo's steady decline into disaster.

Civil war already is raging in the southeast where Lumumba's unruly army is contesting secessionist movements.

The ocuntry's finances are in disorder and only the presence of U.N. medical units has kept plagues and epidemics from ravaging the new nation.

Kasavubu and Lumumba contested the leadership when the big African territory gained its freedom from Belgium.

FIGUREHEAD JOB

A compromise gave the largely figurehead job of president to Kasavubu, whose Abako party holds 12 seats in the House of representatives. Lumumba, unpredictable chief of the National Congolese Movement, won the premiership — the executive post — as chief of a coalition claiming 84 votes in the new House.

The two rivals are dissimilar in physical appearance and outlook.

Kasavubu is short, bulky and so quiet he has a reputation as a mystery man.

Kasavubu studied for the Roman Catholic priesthood but left in 1942 to take a job as a clerk in the Leopoldville government offices.

He created the Abako cultural movement of lower Congo Africans, which became the first important Congolese political party.

Kasavubu has always stood for a loose confederation of the Congo's six provinces with a large amount left to the provinces.

Lumumba has insisted on a strong central government.

BITTER OPPONENT

Ileo has long been a bitter opponent of Lumumba's policies, which had been gradually surrendering the Congo into the hands of the Soviet bloc. Well informed sources said more than 200 Russians had supplied Lumumba with planes and military vehicles.

Ileo was accused July 20 of an assassination plot against Lumumba and Kasavubu. The charge was made in the Chamber of Deputies by the youth wing of Lumumba's party.

At Lumumba's home late Monday night there appeared to be only U.N. troops from Ghana on guard. Usually the Ghanians have been reinforced by members of the Congolese army.

If Kasavubu succeeds in making his coup stick, it could lead to a solution for this nation's problems.

Since independence came on June 30 there has been chaos. First came a mutiny in the army. Then came the flight of the Belgians who had made the old colony vital and viable.

RECEIVED BLOW

The economy received a blow when technicians and businessmen departed. It can recover only with complete tranquility and the importation of thousands of technicians.

Lumumba ignored the danger signals. It appeared he had decided only the Communists could save him. Only Monday night a group of 20 Czechs left Leopoldville for a tour of the country. They were to study the economic and social situation and make recommendations to the government.

Congo Army To Withdraw

The Montgomery Advertiser

ELISABETHVILLE, Katanga, (AP) — The United Nations Command here announced Sunday the commander of Congo forces which crossed into Katanga Province has agreed to withdraw to a position 35 miles inside Kivu Province to the north.

The spokesman said this meant there would be a neutral zone extending about 30 miles on either side of the Katanga-Kivu border. This no-man's land, 60 miles wide, would be patrolled by Mali troops of the U.N. force in northern Katanga.

P. 2-A

The withdrawal of Congo troops from Katanga was achieved by Col. Mauritz Mollersward of Sweden, head of the U.N. Armistice Commission which arrived in Katanga last week. The U.N. Command proclaimed an armistice here Sept. 10.

The Congo Comedy

Montgomery Advertiser

The Congo situation would be great opera bouffe if it didn't entail such perils for the world in the heartland of Africa. Consider the comic elements:

Adv. 9-9-60

After the new "republic" won its liberation, the Congolese army ran amuck in boyish exuberance, raping, sacking and killing.

Katanga Province seceded from the general mess.

The U.N. dispatched troops to restore order, but the original action was restricted largely to colorful parades.

Premier Lumumba said to hell with the U.N. and ordered his crazed, motley troops to clean up the mess he said the U.N. forces had made.

Katanga took up spears and threatened to fight if the U.N. entered the independent nation within an independent nation. The U.N. backed down, but Lumumba didn't.

Congo President Kasavubu announced that he had canned Premier Lumumba. In this coup he was joined by Foreign Minister Bomboko who agreed that as a premier, Lumumba would make a better crocodile hunter.

Then Lumumba fired Kasavubu.

The Congo National Assembly and later the Senate voted to void Kasavubu's expulsion of Lumumba but wire reports said the debate was idiotic, reflecting "little knowledge of the problem and even less idea of how to cope with it."

Capping it all, the British postal service announced stuffily that it would no longer insure mail and packages to the Congo. While willing to underwrite ordinary risks, utter chaos was considered a poor bet.

All of which, but for the tragic implications, is one of the zaniest burlesques on democracy in modern times—certainly since some of the howlers that took place in the banana republics a few years back.

Had Congo liberation occurred in the days of Gilbert & Sullivan, The Mikaido would be an obscure little work by comparison to what they could have done with Lumumba, Tshombe, Kasavubu and Bomboko.

Reporter's Final Story From Congo Has Touches Of Humor, Foreboding

Montgomery Advertiser

NEW YORK (AP) — Henry N. Taylor's last story before he was killed in the Congo was printed Tuesday—a story with a touch of humor and a mood of forboding.

Taylor, a foreign correspondent for the Scripps-Howard newspapers, sent with the story a message saying: "This dispatch is for use Tuesday in case I am unable to file Monday from the Bakwanga hot spot."

Adv. 9-7-60

The story, appearing today in the New York World-Telegram & Sun, was written Saturday. Taylor was killed by gunfire while covering a battle Sunday, five days after arriving in the Congo.

His story, datelined Leopoldville, started out:

"The wholesale weirdness of this chaotic Congo swallows the newcomer before he can even get clear of this ghost city's unnaturally busy airport.

"All elements are there at first glance:

"The semiliterate Congolese official who stamps your Indonesian visa by accident.

"The airport bus which runs out of gas.

"Four Red Chinese diplomats arriving with smiles and perfect French, and trunkloads of propaganda."

Taylor wrote that the Congo spectacle would be awesomely entertaining if it were not such a threat to world peace.

"The Congolese platoons collide with one another in drill practice," he wrote. "They roll on the sidewalk in mirth and break ranks to play mumblety-peg with bayonets—yet these same comic opera corporals are slaughtering civilians this week in Bakwanga."

Taylor told of a Congolese general being interrupted in a news conference by a buck private accusing him of giving away military secrets.

"It is a hilarious thing to see—until you remember this army's total lack of discipline is what has brought the Congo to its present shattered state," he wrote.

"Things are bound to get progressively worse here no matter how many times U.N. Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold crosses the Atlantic—worse physically as well as politically."

Report Says 200 Russians Aiding Congo

Montgomery Advertiser

Mon. 9-5-60

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo, (AP) — More than 200 Russians have moved into the Congo in recent weeks and they still are coming, well-informed sources said Sunday night.

The most recent arrivals were 11 men who traveled to Brazzaville in the old French Congo by commercial plane Saturday and then came across the Congo River by ferry to Leopoldville.

Many of the Russians are housed in Camp Leopold II, the Congolese army compound in Leopoldville where small villas were left vacant after Belgian officers of the old Force Publique were expelled.

Other Russians drift into the obscurity of the city where they receive some cover from the hundreds of other strangers now working with the United Nations here.

The 14 Ilyushin-14 planes sent to the Congo by the Soviet Union each brought between six and eight Russians. Another plane is expected.

The planes received their military baptism Saturday when one was used to take Gen. Victor Lundula, commander of the Congolese army, and a group of officers to Luluaborg.

Premier Patrice Lumumba's army in that region has been fighting armed civilians supporting Albert Kalonji's move to carve out a separate state in Kasai Province.

It seemed almost certain to diplomats here that the Soviet aid to the Congolese army entirely outside the U.N. effort would become an issue in the U.N. Security Council.

Congo Chief Offers Rival Cabinet Job

The Montgomery Advertiser

Montgomery Adv.

Reconciliation Bid Made By Kasavubu To Ousted Premier

Tues. 9-20-60

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo, (AP) — President Joseph Kasavubu's pro-Western government sought Monday to make peace with its bitterest enemy, Patrice Lumumba, by offering the deposed, Communit-backed premier a Cabinet post.

There was no immediate reply from Lumumba whose office earlier had said a conciliation had been reached between Lumumba and Kasavubu under which Lumumba would remain premier.

Kasavubu acknowledged he had discussed a possible reconciliation with sources close to Lumumba but said he refused to sign any accord and subsequently repudiated the Lumumba announcement. Kasavubu's premier is Joseph Ileo.

AGREEMENT HOPED

Jean Bolikango, Ileo's information minister, told a news conference the new government named by Kasavubu has not taken over effective power in the Congo because it hopes to reach an agreement with Lumumba.

Bolikango also said the Ileo group was awaiting representatives from secessionist Katanga Province to negotiate their entry into a central government. If these representatives fail to arrive "we will have to proceed without them," Bolikango declared.

Bolikango conceded that army Col. Joseph Mobutu, the Congo's reigning strongman, was not fully in control of the 3,000 or so soldiers stationed in Camp Leopold on the outskirts of the capital.

"Unfortunately there are still several hundred soldiers who follow the orders of a government which has no authority," Bolikango said in reference to Lumumba.

RIVAL FRACTIONS

Kasavubu fired Lumumba as premier Sept. 5 and appointed Ileo to replace him. Lumumba countered by firing Kasavubu and the Congolese Parliament subsequently nullified both firings. Since then, the Congo has had two rival factions claiming to head the government. Neither has been able to get the government machinery back into motion.

Mobutu subsequently staged a bloodless military coup to "neutralize" the disputing factions. He has clearly favored Kasavubu and Ileo, however, and forced the departure from the Congo of Soviet and Czech missions which were giving Lumumba military and technical aid.

Mobutu has repeatedly prevented the pro-Lumumba majority of Parliament from holding a session in defiance of Kasavubu's suspension order.

INEFFECTIVE CONTROL

But this show of strength has not permitted Ileo to take effective control of the government. None of the ministries is operating normally and what government activities continue at the technical and administrative level are conducted under the guidance of U.N. technical assistance experts.

Bolikango made it clear that it was mainly Ileo's hope of persuading Lumumba to enter his government as a minister that held up Ileo's assuming full control of the government machinery.

Political observers doubted whether Lumumba would accept the loss of face which he would inevitably incur through agreeing to serve under Ileo.

VOWS U.N. SUPPORT

President Prods Reds On Agitation In Congo

Montgomery Advertiser

Montgomery, Ala.

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Eisenhower vigorously prodded the Soviet Union Wednesday to stop sending planes and other equipment for military purposes into the seething Congo.

The U.S.S.R., the President said, seems to be motivated by political designs in Africa. He said the Soviet action is "aggravating an already serious situation which finds Africans killing other Africans" and that the United States deplores and takes a most serious view of it.

Eisenhower therefore urged the Soviet Union "to desist from its unilateral activities and to lend its support instead to the practice of collective effort through the United Nations" to bring a peaceful solution.

Then, at a news conference, the chief executive added that the United States intends to support whatever steps the United Nations finds necessary to keep peace in the Congo. This could be interpreted as an intention to go all the way with the United Nations, even to the extent of sending U.S. troops to the Congo if the international organization asks for them.

Matters of world concern dominated the news conference, rather than such domestic affairs as politics and Congress.

But Eisenhower did say he hoped the religious issue in the presidential campaign — Democratic presidential nominee John F. Kennedy is a Roman Catholic — "could be laid on the shelf and forgotten until after the election is over." Certainly no Republican has come to him and said he believes the party should use religion as an issue, the President told a questioner.

"I not only don't believe in voicing prejudice," Eisenhower said, "I want to assure you I feel none."

He said he is sure Vice President Richard M. Nixon, the Republican presidential candidate, feels exactly the same.

This was by way of a politic comeback to former President Harry S. Truman, who said of Nixon in a Labor Day speech at Marion, Ind.: "While he stands at the front door proclaiming charity and tolerance, his supporters are herding the forces of racial, religious and anti-union bigotry in by way of the back door. And no one will ever make me believe he is not smart enough to know what is going on."

Nixon, too, has said he will never raise religion as a campaign issue.

'IF NOT DISMAY'

As for the short session of Congress just concluded, Eisenhower said its record was "such as to cause some disappointment, if not dismay, throughout the American nation."

Told that Kennedy and other Democratic leaders are saying it is mostly his or the Republicans' fault that Congress quit without acting on many items of importance, Eisenhower got a laugh by quipping that apparently, "This other party is making me responsible for splitting theirs."

Congress was in session a long time, he said, and the Democrats had a 2-1 majority. With just a little give and take, he said, it would have been possible to obtain a reasonable boost in the minimum wage and some aid for schoolroom construction.

The presidential session with newsmen had its lighter touches here and there.

"Yes, sir," Eisenhower said with crisp enthusiasm, he would consider attending a World Series game only 40 miles away.

That would be in Baltimore, currently leading the American League.

SERIOUS BUSINESS

For the most part, the session was serious business. All along the way, it had plenty of references to the Soviet Union and communism.

The defection of two American code clerks to the Soviet Union came up, of course, in a question as to what should be done to try to prevent the hiring of such persons by security agencies.

"I would think we must go through our entire procedures to see if there is any one way we could better it," Eisenhower said.

Eisenhower went into the news conference expecting and getting a question about the Soviet Union supplying planes to the Congo outside of U.N. jurisdiction. He pulled a piece of paper from his coat pocket, saying he had put the response in writing "because I want to make perfectly clear what we feel."

"The statement said that "if" Soviet military personnel are flying the planes for the Congolese it would violate principles under which the larger powers agreed to withhold military forces from the U.N. troop contingents on the scene.

'UGLY OVERTONES'

"As far as I know," the President said, "these rules have previously been upheld by the Soviet Union itself. Therefore, it would be doubly serious if such participation by military units were part of an operation in the civil war which has recently taken on very ugly overtones."

The emphasis and choice of words left little doubt that Eisenhower shares with key American officials a strong suspicion that Russian military men in civilian clothes are flying for the Congo.

State Department officials have said also that on the basis of field reports, they believe the Soviet Union is supplying small arms and machineguns to the forces of Congolese Premier Patrice Lumumba.

Terror, Anarchy Loom In Congo, U.N. Guns Blaze

Montgomery Advertiser

Montgomery, Ala.

Sat. 9-3-60

LEOPOLDVILLE, The Congo (AP) — The Congo careened crazily and bloodily toward civil war, anarchy and possibly a communist-style dictatorship Friday night. For the first time U.N. African forces restored to gunfire to keep order.

Bodies littered the streets of Bakwanga, the diamond mining center where Congolese army troops have been fighting secessionist forces of Albert Kalonji. U.N. officials counted at least 270 dead.

At Moerbeke, near the army base of Thysville in Leopoldville province, U.N. Moroccan troops opened fire on a belligerent group of armed civilians. First reports said one civilian was killed.

WIPE OUT OPPOSITION

In Leopoldville Premier Patrice Lumumba proceeded vigorously to wipe out political opposition to his martial regime by throwing political opponents in jail.

Veteran diplomats in the capital watched anxiously as the Lumumba government proceeded along the path that leads usually to dictatorship and a police state.

Scores of Russians and Communist advisers have poured into the Congo in recent weeks. Observers who know well the pattern of Communist infiltration said the trend of events here is almost classical in design.

From the suppression of newspapers, the banning of political meetings, the rough and ready employment of troops and police to the arrest of political opposition, the course taken by the Lumumba government has followed the familiar pattern, they say, and they believe the chaos and confusion is all a part of the pattern.

SLIGHT HOPE

A belief was growing among observers that the U.N. nations could not restore order in this chaotic two-month old nation unless the Congolese army somehow could be disarmed. There is slight hope of this in the face of Lumumba's militant determination to use the army to quell opposition in both Kasai and Katanga provinces.

The rich Central African nation from which so much was expected seems in grave danger of dividing hopelessly along tribal lines.

A consignment of 10 Ilyushi-18 Soviet planes now has arrived in the country. A hundred Soviet trucks capable of transporting troops already are in the interior.

It is not known who is directing the army's operation in the Bakwanga area which seeks to become a separate province for Baluba tribesmen. But it certainly is not Gen. Victor Lundula, the one-time sergeant who now is commander of Lumumba's Congolese army. Lundula has been observed arguing with his sergeants about the proper conduct of the army.

SHOOTING FOR HOURS

The United Nations had reported only quiet in the Bakwanga region until Friday.

Then they reported that Congolese troops had engaged the armed supporters of secessionists and that "there was shooting for hours."

The incident at Moerbeke marked the first time the U.N. African troops resorted to gunfire.

Moerbeke is a hamlet about 85 miles southwest of Leopoldville. It lies between Thysville, the garrison town where Congolese soldiers mutinied shortly after Belgium freed the Congo June 30, and the frontier of Portuguese Angola.

Tug-Of-War Over Congo Left In Air

Montgomery Advertiser

Montgomery, Ala.

Sat. 9-8-60

Parliament Voids 2 Ouster Actions, Settles Nothing

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo (AP)—The Congo's National Assembly decided in a table-thumping, six-hour debate Wednesday that both President Joseph Kasavubu and Premier Patrice Lumumba should keep their jobs.

The issue of Communist infiltration went unresolved, but Lumumba told the Assembly he had turned to the Soviet Union for help because they "were refused aid by the United Nations and the United States, which support our enemies."

Seeking to stem a government feud that racked the nation, deputies voted 60-19 to void both the conservative president's dismissal of the left-leaning premier and the premier's order ousting the president.

VOTED WITH MAJORITY

This threw the conflict right back where it was before Kasavubu announced in a dramatic broadcast over Radio Leopoldville Monday night that he was dismissing Lumumba to check the Congo's drift toward chaos and communism.

Lumumba, himself a deputy, voted with the majority.

The lanky Lumumba, who turned to the Soviet bloc for arms, transport and technical help, answered anti-Communist speeches by other members with the shouted declaration: "I have never been nor will be a Communist."

CREATE COMMITTEE

He gave ground and urged unity and cooperation after screaming against what he called a Kasavubu plot with colonialists to partition the country, charging that U. N. soldiers are taking independence from the Congo; and attacking what he called propaganda of the Roman Catholic Church.

Lumumba asked for creation of a committee to iron things out. The Assembly chairman, Joseph Kasongo, said a committee will be formed.

The premier's attack on activities of the Catholic Church in the Congo was followed a few minutes later by the remark: "My father and mother were married in the Catholic Church. My children are learning the catechism. How could I be a Communist?"

GIGGLING STATESMEN

Congolese military police bearing Czech-made arms and Ghana U. N. soldiers guarded the new National Palace for the noisy deliberations. Parliament members and newsmen alike were searched upon entering.

At the windup of the confused session, the deputies rushed out giggling and slapping each other on the back.

7 BATTERED AIRMEN

The Montgomery Advertiser
Montgomery, Ala.
Thur. 9-8-60

Victims Of Congolese Mob Honored On Return To U.S.

McGUIRE AIR FORCE BASE, N.J. (AP)—Seven battered airmen, victims of a beating from a Congolese mob, came home Wednesday and told of their nightmare experience.

Their hospital plane dropped onto a wide runway of this giant military terminal and they gazed into a sea of friendly faces as they got medals for "outstanding performance and devotion to duty."

It was a stark contrast from their experience Aug. 27 at Stanleyville in the Congo, when their plane settled on a tiny runway of an airport in the jungle and they soon were surrounded by a hostile mob.

Three of the injured crewmen were still on stretchers. One had both of his smashed hands wrapped in bandages. White bandages on the heads and limbs of others attested to the violence of the attack.

"I was hit with clubs and sticks and guns and fists," said Lt. Kenneth Stickevers of Valley Stream, N.Y.

"I thought maybe the whole world was against me," continued Lt. Gerald T. Henery of Washington, D.C.

The crew members estimated 10,000 persons were gathered at the Stanleyville airport in the heart of the jungle Aug. 27.

CROWD VIOLENT

They were landing communications equipment for the U.N. forces when Congolese soldiers and civilians suddenly turned violent. U.N. officials said then that the Congolese suspected the airmen had landed some Belgian troops.

They said they were pummeled with a variety of weapons for 15 minutes to half an hour. Then Ethiopian U.N. troops rescued them.

After treatment at a hospital in Germany, the seven Tuesday boarded a C118 plane, converted for hospital use, and landed here Wednesday morning after an 18-hour trip, interrupted by a stop in the Azores. Left was the pilot, Capt. Elbert Mott of Glenmore, La., who could not be moved yet.

GIVEN CITATION

Maj. Gen. William P. Fisher, commander of the transport section here, met them as a bright sun bathed the concrete runway where the plane stopped.

The general escorted them to the passenger terminal where he read a citation and pinned blue and gold commendation medals on each man's bathrobe or uniform.

The citation said that "with no provocation of any kind, they were attacked and brutally beaten without warning by armed men as they were unloading their aircraft."

U.N.'s New Role

N.Y. Times, N.Y., N.Y.
Jan. 17, 1960
p. 9

Congo Venture Is Success So Far But Big Financial Problems Lie Ahead

By THOMAS J. HAMILTON

Thanks to Secretary General Hammarskjold, the first phase of the United Nations program for the Congo is going more smoothly than anyone would have dared hope two weeks ago, when Soviet intervention was threatened.

The United Nations' Congo force is being deployed by airplane and barge throughout most of the territory of the Congo—Katanga Province and the Belgian bases excepted. In the latter areas Belgian troops are staying on, but their withdrawal from the rest of the Congo is now already under way.

This does not mean that the crisis is over. The Secretary General seems to have gotten nowhere during his talk with the Belgian Cabinet about an across-the-board withdrawal. Resentment in the Congo is so strong that Premier Lumumba may demand another meeting of the Security Council, or ask for more drastic measures, unless the Belgians yield fairly soon.

If the Congolese Government shows enough patience, there is a good chance that the problems can be settled by negotiation. Once the United Nations force is clearly in a position to maintain order, the Belgians will be under tremendous pressure to get out entirely, without conditions.

The secessionist government in Katanga Province may give up the struggle when it no longer has the protection of Belgian soldiers. If it holds on, and can show that a majority really wants secession, the issue will have to be settled by the two Governments, not by the United Nations, since it is not authorized to intervene in domestic affairs.

Basic Task

Certainly it is to be hoped that the Secretary General and the Security Council will not be burdened with this phase of the Congo problem. All their energies, all the resources of the organization in men and money, will be needed for the basic task of supplying the Congo with a workable government. The chances are, in fact, that the Congo will become a virtual ward of the United Nations for years to come.

The extent of the task facing the United Nations baffles description. As all the world knows, the people of the Congo are confronted with the necessity of learning the art of government and the techniques of the twentieth century over night.

If it were merely a question of providing civil servants and teachers, that would be difficult enough in a country of 13,000,000 inhabitants that possesses only a few college graduates. In addition, technical personnel at all levels are needed for the water system, the public health service and the railroads.

The minimum needs can be gauged by the fact that Brussels had planned to maintain 10,000 trained Belgians in the Congo, and to provide the new Government with a subsidy in the neighborhood of $100,000,000 a year, under the treaty of friendship and cooperation.

There is no precedent in the United Nations for a task of such magnitude. If the Arabs had not gone to war against the partition of Palestine, the five-man commission established by the General Assembly in 1947 would have blazed the trail. That commission was instructed to go to the scene, help set up provisional councils of government in the proposed Arab and Jewish states, and arrange for an extensive system of economic cooperation between them. But it never left Lake Success.

Help to Libya

Three years later, Adrian Pelt, a United Nations Commissioner, helped draw up the constitution of Libya and provide her with other assistance.

However, the financial and technical aid required by the new state has been supplied almost entirely by the United States, Britain and France, not by the United Nations.

It is necessary to go back to the Nineteen Twenties, and the rehabilitation of Austria's finances by the League of Nations, to find anything remotely comparable to the responsibilities that the United Nations is having to assume in the Congo.

But the League of Nations merely applied enough pressure on Austria to cut governmental expenses to a point where bankers in New York, London and Paris were willing to make a $120,000,000 loan. The difficulties in Vienna were caused by too many civil servants, not by their absence.

The most conservative estimate available at the United Nations is that the first year of the Congo operation, including the hundreds of officials and technicians who must be provided, will cost $100,000,000. This would be about $40,000,000 more than the total United Nations budget for 1960. At the start of the Congo program Mr. Hammarskjold obtained an emergency authorization of $15,000,000, but this was only to carry him until the General Assembly meets Sept. 20.

Moise Tshombe, Premier of rebel province of Katanga.

Since the Soviet Union voted in favor of the Congo force, there is a chance that the Soviet bloc will pay its share of the resulting assessment. But it is already obvious that most of the underdeveloped member countries will plead poverty. Special donations from the United States, which is paying nearly half the cost of the United Nations Emergency Force in Egypt, will be necessary to keep the Congo program going.

Small Price to Pay

This would be a small price to pay for the restoration of stability in one of the most threatening trouble centers of the world.

Two more important questions are whether Belgium will agree to go ahead with the aid program originally envisaged, even if the Congo requires the surrender of the Belgian bases, and whether the United States and other developed countries should channel all their assistance through the United Nations.

Since so much needs to be done, it might be more practicable for individual countries to provide aid to supplement the United Nations program rather than try to construct one huge development agency. The vital point is that all assistance should be coordinated by the United Nations and administered under Mr. Hammarskjold's aegis to prevent the introduction of "cold war" rivalries into a situation that is beginning to offer some hopes.

Congo Port City Has Glum, Silent Outlook

MATADI, the Congo (AP) — Matadi is a city without a smile, without women or children, black or white.

Stores are empty and window panes smashed, but there would be nobody to shop even if the ransackers had left anything. For the populace has not been able to draw wages and the banks are closed.

This once-busy river port of West Africa, the Congo's only sea gateway, is silent. Its cranes stand erect and silhouetted against the sky, matching the idle men in the streets.

The Negro population sits silently on the doorsteps with nothing to do but watch U. N. Moroccan soldiers patrol the city—which had a population of about 22,000 in normal times.

The only visible whites — no more than a score or two—are Portuguese who come back every time there is a chance to try to restore their businesses and recover whatever may have been left in their homes.

In the administration building across from Matadi's major hotel, which is now U. N. army headquarters, U. N. representatives and the new republic's local authoritiies hold long discussions about the strain of the economic and social situation in this part of the Congo.

The Congolese seem determined on one point—no Belgians. And without technicians and trained experts, things will not move in Matadi for a long time.

The American canal clearing expert, Lt. Gen. Raymond A. Wheeler, who visited this port, insisted dredgers resume their activity in the river without delay. But the experts who manned them are Belgian, and thus unwanted.

Delay could be fatal for this port, which is 100 miles inland from the Atlantic and 190 miles downriver from the capital at Lepoldville.

There was fighting here July 11 and 17, by Belgian count; or 19 by Congolese count, Negroes were slain. These figures are surprising when one sees the large number of recently closed graves in the local cemetery. Last weekend Negroes were digging a 50-yard long grave—for whose bodies no body seemed to know. This was but a few hundred yards from the Portuguese border at Noqui, Angola.

At the gates on the Portuguese side a white girl played with a Negro boy, each about 5, on a toy jeep that bore the sign of an American military police car.

There was no armed guard on the Portuguese side, only a customs official.

The Tragedy Of Africa

Noted Author Believes Congo Independence Is A Disaster That The Jungle, Which Has Waited Patiently, Will Again Take Over And Savages Rule

Stuart Cloete In Life Magazine

¶ The author, an acknowledged authority on Africa through his books (African Giant, Congo Song), has lived more than 20 of his 63 years in Africa. His blunt point of view is that of a man who loves Africa but sees the onrush of premature independence for the black man as tragic folly.

THE Congo was a black giant whose bones, sinews and nerves were white. Now, unsupported by the bone, the nerves destroyed, the sinews cut, the giant has collapsed and lies writhing in the jungle from which he had almost risen.

The effort was too much for him. He has reverted to type and has dropped 52 years of Belgian instruction and help as if it was a Mother Hubbard falling about his feet. He is once again exposed to the world in all his naked savagery. A land that up till now was a model of African colonialism, a land without politics, either black or white, a land where the Negro was treated with unprecedented consideration, has gone.

When I interviewed the governor general of the Belgian Congo, Léo Pétillon, in 1954, he said of the independence movement that the next 10 years would be the worst. It has taken only six years to prove him right. What would happen, I asked, if you left the country? He replied that grass would grow in the streets. The buildings may last 10 years, he said, because we have built well, but after that the jungle will close in; it will take over what we have wrested from it.

His comment about the return of the jungle was not merely a figure of speech. The climate is a factor that can never be forgotten in tropical Africa. A palm oil plantation must be cleared every nine months if the palms are to survive. In less than a year well-built houses are overwhelmed if abandoned, crushed in the arms of the lianas. Mold grows on shoes overnight. Only unremitting supervision can arrest these elemental forces, can hold them back in the endless war against the terrible fecundity of the forest.

THE TALENT IS GONE

Now the men with necessary skill have been driven out, leaving a vacuum that none else can fill. Their life work has gone, as ephemeral as the smoke from their burning homes. Their careers are finished, their lives broken. How can anyone imagine that these men will return to the Congo? What is the state of a man's mind who has seen his wife raped 20 times? And yet they alone have the knowledge to run it. They alone can speak the four "vehicular" languages which are the only semantic bridge between the white man and the black.

The Belgian officials of the Congo were handpicked men. Every one was a university graduate. They were men who loved Africa and the African so much that they were ready to devote their lives to the creation of a great modern state in the womb of the continent though they could all have earned far more in a booming Belgian economy.

There are a lot of mistaken ideas about colonial civil servants. Above all they are men with an ideal of service to humanity, doing a job they love, bringing peace, health, education and justice, creating order where there had been chaos. The white man's burden is no joke to them—many have gone down under its yoke, often giving their lives and always sacrificing their health.

How many missionaries have died bringing the word of Christ to these savages, worshipers of the fetish and the juju, bringing them medical aid and education? Every educated Congolese has been taught in a mission school. There was little feeling about color. Multiracial universities were built. Insults to Africans by Belgians were punishable by law, and to strike an African was a serious offense.

FREEDOM MEANS IRRESPONSIBILITY

To many Congolese freedom means license. They have no sense of reciprocity or responsibility. The bush native thought freedom was a thing, an object that he would be given. Boxes of dirt sold to him by witch doctors were to be transmuted into cash when the magic word was spoken. There would be no more work. Everyone would have a car and a radio. The white man's houses and women would be at his disposal. This is, in a Freudian sense, every man's dream of orgy. But the repression developed in the Western world by a thousand years of discipline and education—by fear of God and the law and conscience—do not exist in Africa.

Aside from what it means in a personal way, what does freedom mean in a political sense in an undeveloped country? It means a flag, a government by natives, of natives, for the benefit of those who govern, a seat on a basis of full equality in the counsels of the United Nations and the right to have ambassadors in every capital. Mainly this benefits the leaders—a minuscule elite given the right to govern and exploit the great illiterate mass. These people were being slowly led, coaxed and teased into a civilized way of life by the white man and may now revert to barbarism.

The fact that in the Congo we are dealing with savages has already had important consequences. The army, the 25,000-strong Force Publique, equipped with modern weapons, was drawn from savage and cannibalistic tribes. It was a minority of this force which ran amuck. But these are not the only ones with whom we must be concerned.

At the end of World War I a group of native soldiers turned brigand. It took years to put them down—and there were only a few of them. Today, by and large, the native population is probably behind the mutinous troops, disorder and anarchy being a pleasant change from the ordered routine enforced by the Belgians. Civilization was too difficult, too much of an effort, Christianity too unnatural—and the love of a neighbor, if he came from a different tribe, an emotional impossibility to the African in the bush.

BELGIANS ALSO AT FAULT

The Belgians must bear their share of the responsibility. To understand fully what has happened we must look back at our own pre-Roman past when we lived, as the African lives today, in huts as hunters and warriors under the thrall of the witch doctor and the chief. There is a European parallel with the Congo, but with a vital difference.

When the Roman legions left their colonies after several hundred years of occupation changes ensued. But they had to leave. Rome was in danger. The Belgians did not have to leave the Congo and their going was a breach of trust, a breach of the relationship that must exist between the white man and the black in Africa, if Africa is going to progress.

As to the U.N. forces, I see no possibility that they will have a permanent success. The real enemy is the tribesman's instinct to return to the warm womb of his past, to the security of tribal law where every act is prescribed by precedent and there are no surprises.

Nationalism has become a racism, and racism itself tribalism. There is no pan-Africanist movement except for a xenophobia that begins with hatred of the white man and ends with hatred of any man bearing different tribal marks. Ralph Bunche, a Negro, is no safer in the Congo than a white man.

This is the fact and the tragedy. We are dealing with a psychic force in an abominable climate with a mixed bag of troops who will be faced with problems which are entirely unforeseen by anyone who does not know the country. Troops alone cannot administer a country, for as the Italian statesman Cavour said, "You can do anything with bayonets except sit on them," and to administer, a man must sit in peace and security. He must also talk the language. He must have faith in the future and in his purpose.

A FEATHER IN THE WIND

There have been other civilizations in Africa, civilizations that have come and gone, leaving no more trace than a stone thrown into a pond. Why should the white man's sojourn here have a more lasting effect?

So perhaps it has all been for nothing, perhaps from David Livingstone in the last century to the ravished women of yesterday the white man in Africa has died to no purpose—his effort no more than a feather in the wind, a feather that was there, a pretty thing for an instant, and then was blown away in this hurricane of license miscalled liberty.

18a 1960 CONGO

CONSOLIDATED SECESSION

Montgomery Advertiser

Congo Official Charges Mission By U.N. Failed

Montgomery, Ala.

Mon. 8/1/60

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo, (AP) — A Congo leader told U.N. Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold to his face Saturday night that U.N. forces had fallen down on the job and had permitted "secession to consolidate" in Katanga Province.

Vice Premier Antoine Gizenga spoke at a dinner honoring Hammarskjold and attended by an array of diplomats and U.N. and Congo officials. Most sat grim and silent as Gizenga spoke.

White-faced, Hammarskjold did not applaud when the vice premier had finished. And in a brief speech in reply he declared: "We cannot adopt the line of action which in our minds would not correspond with our responsibility to the community of peoples."

While asserting "we have not lost confidence in the United Nations," Gizenga insisted Belgium pull all its troops from this nation to which it granted independence on June 30.

POWER OF DEATH

"The people of the Congo do not understand why we, against whom an aggression has been committed, we who are in our land, we who have made an appeal to international armed forces, are systematically and methodically disarmed while the aggressors, the Belgians, who are here in a conquered country, still have their arms and their power of death and are simply being asked to regroup in certain parts of our Congo which some dare call 'Belgian bases.'"

This was a reference to the efforts of U.N. troops to disarm Congolese soldiers, whose revolt against their white officers plunged the country into turmoil.

Gizenga bitterly accused the U.N. of permitting the rulers of Katanga, who have declared their independence, to consolidate their secession. Katanga has warned U.N. troops to stay out and the U.N. has ignored Congolese demands to send forces into the province.

"Excellency, we thus have the right to wonder if one day history will say that in the year 1960, the Congolese government, installed by elected representatives of the people, has allowed this people to be disarmed, divided and looted," Gizenga said, addressing Hammarskjold in his efforts to solve the young nation's month-old crisis.

It points up the rift between the United Nations and the Congolese government's hardening position.

In his speech at the dinner Hammarskjold referred to his talks with the Congolese and said: "We have started discussions which I judge fruitful and encouraging. But we have found difficulties too. I am sure we will accomplish our task."

National Whirligig

Montgomery Advertiser

By Otto Zausmer

Associate Editor, The Boston Globe

[Substituting for Ray Tucker, who is on vacation.—Ed.]

Sat. 7/30/60

BOSTON.

THE Congo drama is by no means played out. But enough has happened to bring home painfully to all of us the deadly danger and the tremendous challenge which lie behind the agony of the world's youngest republic.

Let The U.N. Help Young Republics

The danger is obvious. The Congo could have become the Spain of World War III—a testing ground for the opposing forces of today. But these are not the 1930s; this is the atomic age and an armed clash with the Soviet Union over the Congo would probably have spread rapidly toward a worldwide catastrophe.

The possibility of such a catastrophe existed even though it was not a probability.

But very serious dangers still remain.

With or without communist soldiers there, the Congo could become a base from which communism might spread throughout the enormous, now-awakening continent of Africa, fanned by the unfortunate memories which the white man's colonial ventures have left behind.

★ ★ ★

CONGO: ESSENTIAL TO FREE WORLD—The Congo could turn into an economic, political and, some say, military ally of Russia or Red China, a military base which would bring communist planes, rockets and submarines into a dominant position facing the Americas and with a radius of action sweeping Europe and Africa as well as the Atlantic.

Finally, the Congo means 50% of the world's uranium, 75% of its cobalt and 70% of all the industrial diamonds produced on earth.

It takes little imagination to realize what the loss of this biggest of the recently emerged new republics in Africa—one-third of the size of the United States and with a population of 13,000,000—would mean for the war potential of the free world.

There is good reason to believe that the Congo will not be lost to the free world, that it will not fall under the rule of world communism. But even once this danger should be averted, there will still face us the awesome challenge which the free world never realized so strongly before.

★ ★ ★

INDEPENDENCE—A CONTAGIOUS IDEA—How can underdeveloped, unprepared, unorganized nations become independent, sovereign, and not produce chaos for themselves as well as for the rest of us?

One way to avoid the danger of chaos would be to keep them dependent. But this is out. Colonialism is as dead as the dodo. It has no place in our world. The drama we are watching now really started in New England in the 1770s. The idea of no taxation without representation has traveled around the world ever since and is firing the hopes and aspirations of peoples everywhere. Since World War II almost a billion people have won independence, that's one-third of mankind. Others will gain it sooner or later.

From Lexington to Leopoldville and from Concord to Congo is one line of development. The idea of independence is contagious. It cannot be stopped.

It would not only be wrong but folly for the United States to stand in the way of freedom for colonial or semi-colonial nations.

On the other hand the example of the Congo has made it painfully clear that independence is not only a right, it also involves a duty, the duty not to become a menace to the rest of the world.

★ ★ ★

A DANGEROUS VACUUM — What produces the danger of chaos is that there was not one doctor, legal expert or army officer left when the Belgians pulled out. There were 12 men with adequate civil service experience. By comparison, when the British pulled out of Ghana three years ago there were 1,500 trained senior native civil servants to help the country set up its own government machinery.

In the Congo there was a complete vacuum. No wonder there was a complete collapse of army discipline, public services and government.

Perhaps the way to avoid this in the future would be to have the United Nations take over from the colonial power, organize the needed services and then gradually pull out as the native regime has established itself. This wuold eliminate the dangers of the transition, guarantee safety to the leaving and to the newly emerging parties and make sure that the rules of democracy are observed in the trying period of transition. This would give the United Nations the task of preventing fires rather than of extinguishing them—in communal as well as in political life, a by-far safer and even much less expensive way of operation.

CAUTIOUS MIDDLE COURSE

Montgomery Advertiser

U.S. Promises To Aid, Keep Hands Off Congo

Sat. 7/30/60

WASHINGTON (AP)—The United States promised economic aid for the Congo Friday but adopted a hands-off attitude toward Premier Patrice Lumumba's fight to keep mineral-rich Katanga Province from seceding.

Steering a cautious middle course, the State Department mixed kind words for the visiting Congolese leader with applause for the Belgian government he has denounced as an aggressor against his riot-ridden young nation.

There were backstage signs the top administration officials were irked with Lumumba, as he ended a red-carpet, two-day stay, for trying to portray his reception as a sign the United States sides with him against Belgium.

FAREWELL BLAST

While Undersecretary of State Douglas Dillon stood by at the airport, the blunt-talking Lumumba wound up his visit with a farewell blast at the Belgians.

Dillon appeared embarrassed as Lumumba, boarding a plane for Canada, declared, "Today the whole of Africa is threatened by Belgium."

Within a few hours the State Department issued a statement lauding the Belgian government for announcing plans for immediate evacuation of 1,500 of the 10,000 troops rushed to the Congo to protect white settlers from attacks by rioting Congolese.

"We welcome this further evidence of Belgian cooperation with the United Nations," the department said.

At the same time, the department pledged to provide "a fair share" of economic and technical emergency help Lumumba requested in his talks with Secretary of State Christian A. Herter. A spokesman again stressed that this aid would be channeled through the United Nations. No figure on the aid was given.

State Department press officer Lincoln White, asked whether the United States backs the Congo against Belgium, said emphatically: "We are not backing any party in this tragic situation. We are supporting the efforts of the United Nations."

As he departed, Lumumba said his stay had convinced him the United States will never back the efforts of his Katanga foe, Moise Tshombe who has declared his province independent from the Congo.

White said the Katanga problem never came up in talks with Herter. Then he added: "We are hopeful that the matter of Katanga can be peacefully settled within the Congo itself."

Meanwhile, it was learned that the Soviet Embassy charge d'affaires, Mikhail Smirnovsky, twice called at Blair House where Lumumba was staying but did not get to see the Premier.

FACE-SAVING FORMULA SOUGHT

The Montgomery Advertiser

Katanga Leader Talks With Bunche, Doubts U.N. To Stick By Deadline

Montgomery, Ala. Fri. 8-5-60

ELISABETHVILLE, the Congo (AP)—Katanga's Premier Moise Tshombe raised doubts Thursday night about the arrival of U.N. soldiers in his province but there were firm indications that the United Nations intends to move in on Saturday as scheduled.

Tshombe, who declared Wednesday that U.N. forces would have to fight their way into Katanga, held a 2½-hour meeting with Ralph J. Bunche, troubleshooting U.N. undersecretary.

The Premier later told newsmen U.N. soldiers may not arrive Saturday. Then he hedged and said he would not be surprised if they come after all.

Bunche declined any comment on his talk with Tshombe, saying only: "I will report fully to the secretary-general, Mr. Hammarskjold, on today's discussions. I must state explicitly that I can take no decisions."

Reliable informants in Leopoldville, capital of the Congo central government, said, however, there has been no change in U.N. plans to move soldiers into Katanga. They added that it is unlikely there will be any change.

Three companies of Swedish soldiers in the Leopoldville area packed their gear to head the units set to come into this self-declared independent province. Troops of some African nation, perhaps Morocco or Tunisia, are expected to join the force.

Tshombe held an impromptu news conference after meeting with Bunche and said he wants the whole question of Katanga put before the U.N. Security Council.

Bunche was sent here to work out a face-saving compromise that would allow U.N. forces into Katanga.

Tshombe was somewhat vague on the matter and said he had put it aside from consideration at the moment. He added he would not be shocked if the U.N. forces do arrive, although he plans to oppose the troops and has already begun drafting men to fight them if necessary.

MADE JULY 14

Bunche and Tshombe sent a message to U.N. Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold, now in the Congo capital of Leopoldville, asking him about a Security Council session on Katanga. Talks were suspended until Hammarskjold replies. Tshombe said he expects a reply Friday.

Tshombe said Katanga became independent on July 11, while the Security Council resolution call for Belgian troops to withdraw from the Congo was made only on July 14.

He said this meant Katanga was independent before the Security Council met and that Belgian troops are entitled to remain in Katanga only if his government wants them to.

Katanga To Mobilize Against U. N. Troops

Montgomery Advertiser, Thur. 8/4/60, P.1

Montgomery, Ala.

Battle Talk Fails To Alter Plans To Move In Saturday

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo (AP)—The secessionist government of Katanga Province made a defiant mobilization-for-war move Wednesday as a threat against the scheduled entry of U.N. troops there Saturday. And the Belgian government in Brussels gave the U.N. a tongue-lashing over Katanga.

Shunting aside Katanga's war threat, the U.N. Congo Command announced: "Our troops are going to enter Katanga as planned."

Katanga Premier Moise Tshombe said in Elisabethville, his capital: "They will have to fight their way in."

U.N. Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold declared in a statement in Leopoldville that the entry of U.N. forces into Katanga "in no case constitutes interference nor can it be permitted to develop into interference in the internal affairs of the Republic (of the Congo) or the province."

U.N. DECISION

Hammarskjold said any intervention in Katanga would be the result of the decision of the U.N.

The statement was issued, he said, "in response to requests for clarification of the role of the U.N. in the province of Katanga and in reference to the problems of the interior policy of the Republic of the Congo.

But in Brussels ,Belgium's Premier Gaston Eyskens and Foreign Minister Pierre Wigny accused Hammarskjold of rising anarchy, chaos and misery in Katanga. They told a news conference the United Nations "does not have the right, under the cover of a replacement of Belgian troops, to indulge in a political operation."

GENERAL MOBILIZATION

Tshombe's government backed up his stand with a general mobilization order. The Elisabethville radio broadcast calls for all able-bodied men of Katanga, black and white, to report for military duty.

Perhaps 200,000 men in the 20-45 bracket could be mustered from the province's 1,225,000 people, of whom 15,000 are Belgians.

Such a military mass, based on a hard core of 500 loyal Congolese troops serving under Belgian officers, would far outnumber any detachment sent in from the blue-helmeted U.N. forces, which total less than 12,000 men.

Belgian officials familiar with Congolese affairs, however, did not take Tshombe's threat seriously, and it was obvious the U.N. command was not deeply impressed. Simple organization of Katanga recruits would be a matter of weeks and the province's people are by no means unanimously behind Tshombe's political maneuvers.

"Our troops are going into Katanga as planned on Saturday," the U.N. spokesman said, regardless of the provincial government's stand.

Officials of Premier Patrice Lumumba's government greeted this declaration with grim approval.

Pravda Says Dag Puppet For America

MOSCOW (AP)—In its strongest attack yet on the U. N. secretary-general, the Communist party newspaper Pravda charged Wednesday that Dag Hammarskjold was acting in the Congo as a pro-American agent.

The paper said Hammarskjold was playing a "strange role" in Belgium's former African colony. It said the authority of the United Nations was being "trampled in the dirt" as a result.

NEW REPUBLIC

Pravda called the United States the master mind behind "aggression" in the new African republic.

"What function is Mr. Hammarskjold fulfilling?" asked Pravda. "Whose interests is he defending in the Congo at a time when he is supposedly trying to secure implementation of the Security Council resolution on the removal of Belgian troops and take measures to provide for the integrity of the Congo Republic?"

The article by K. Ivanov appeared to reflect frustration at U. N. action. Early in the crisis the Soviets were angry about the presence of uniformed U. S. technicians in the Congo. Just a few weeks ago Premier Nikita Khrushchev was calling himself the area's protector and uttered the slogan "Hands off the Congo."

DISARMING LOYALISTS

Pravda charged that, despite Hammarskjold's presence, the Belgians continued their activities. American, British and French officers among the U. N. forces are disarming soldiers loyal to the Congo republic, the newspaper said.

The blast was in response to a U. S. State Department declaration of July 30 that Belgium could not be considered an aggressor.

"The U. S. openly states its sympathies are on the side of the slave holders and colonialists in the Congo, South Africa and Kenya," said Pravda.

"The United States is the main insoirer and organizer of the colonial policy of the North Atlantic bloc, including the present imperialistic aggression in the Congo."

Pravda predicted other independent African nations would face similar trials. It said NATO had plotted the "aggression" in the Congo and proof eventually would be found in the secret files of the NATO alliance.

Congo Asks U.N. Force In Katanga

Montgomery Ala.

Advertiser

Appeal Made Despite Warning Of Warfare From Secessionist

Sun 4/24/60

LEOPOLDVILLE, The Congo — (UPI)—The Congolese Cabinet appealed Saturday to United Nations Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold to send U.N. troops to secessionist Katanga Province despite warnings from the Katanga premier that "it will mean war."

The U. N. forces themselves were reported having internal difficulties. Reports in this capital said nationalist elements in the Ghana army detachments here were trying to remove their British officers on grounds that the presence of white officers tended to discredit the Ghanians in the eyes of fellow-black Congolese.

The Congolese cabinet, meeting under deputy premier Antoine Gizenga, who is government chief here while Premier Patrice Lumumba tours America, drew up a memorandum calling for units of the U.N. force to enter Katanga.

JOINT SESSION

The cabinet held a joint session with U.N. officials and reliable sources said the proposal was raised to Hammarskjold.

Katanga Premier Moise Tshombe, who wants his 308,000-square-mile territory to become independent, has Belgian troops in Katanga for protection and has insisted that U. N. troops stay out.

"It will mean war" if they enter, Tshombe has warned.

Hammarskjold has decided against visiting Katanga himself so as to prevent giving any impression that he favors the Katanga claim to independence.

Loss of Katanga would be a disastrous blow to the new Congo Republic, since Katanga accounts for 60 per cent of the Congo's vast mineral resources.

Nationalists in the cabinet, who want a strong central government with Katanga just one part of it, were said to be disappointed at Hammarskjold's hands - off attitude. He told them the U.N. had no intention of running headlong into Katanga.

Hammarskjold was considered unlikely to change his attitude since Katanga is calm while looting and pillaging continues in other provinces.

Lumumba Takes Off On Homebound Trip

OTTAWA, Ont. (AP) — Congo Premier Patrice Lumumba cut short his two-day visit to Canada Saturday and flew back to New York to catch a plane for home.

Canadian officials said the Premier, who originally had not intended to leave here until Sunday morning, had advanced his departure because of "urgent business."

There was speculation here that the change in plans was connected with domestic affairs in the month-old African Republic or the result of a surprise meeting in Lumumba's hotel suite with Soviet Ambassador Amasap Aroutunian.

During the conference in the Chateau Laurier Hotel, a Congolese said the ambassador was trying "to put through a call to Washington."

The Soviet ambassador in Washington, Mikhail Smirnovski, twice attempted to get an interview with Lumumba during his stay in the U. S. capital but failed.

Lumumba and Arountunian met for 30 minutes while the Congo Premier had a breakfast of orange juice and steak. Their talk did not end until 10:20 a.m., almost an hour after the Premier was to meet Marcel Cadieux, No. 3 man in the Canadian External Affairs Department.

Shortly after noon, the Congo leader interrupted his talks with Cadieux and marshalled his eight-man delegation of Chanians, Guineans and Congolese back to the hotel for an unscheduled meeting. Plans for the depature were then announced.

Before leaving, he also had an hour's talk with Canadian Prime Minister John Diefenbaker.

Lumumba showed signs of irritation when asked for comment on his meeting with the Soviet ambassador.

"That is the business of journalists, not mine," he said, when told that the ambassador had declined comment.

"I came here to speak with Canadians, that's all," he added. Lumumba also changed plans to hold a news conference, because he said, "I've given you all my ideas on the matter now."

He told reporters, however, that his talks here were in an atmosphere of "mutual understanding and cordiality" and that he achieved his objectives in [illegible]

The indications were [illegible] had been given a sympathetic [illegible] by Canadian officials to [illegible] for French-speaking tec[illegible] doctors, agricultural exp[illegible] specialists in law and avi[illegible] work in the Congo.

OF SHELBY NEGRO

Montgomery Advertiser

Talladega Millworker Arrested In Flogging

Montgomery, Alabama

Wed. 8/3/60

By DON McKEE
Advertiser State Editor

COLUMBIANA — A Talladega papermill worker was arrested Tuesday on a kidnaping charge in the Saturday night abduction and flogging of a Harpersville Negro man, Shelby County Sheriff C. P. Walker told The Advertiser.

Held in county jail here on a kidnaping warrant signed by the sheriff was Emmett V. Leverette, 42, of Talladega.

Leverette is suspected of taking part in the kidnaping of Henry Lewis Jones, 20, and his brother David, 13. The brothers were abducted from their Harpersville home, some 18 miles northeast of here, by a group of white men, driven more than 20 miles into neighboring Coosa County where Henry Jones was tied to a tree and flogged with belts and knotted ropes.

Sheriff Walker said five or six white men took part in the kidnap-flogging and authorities are continuing efforts to track down the other suspects.

Jones said the men threatened the life of any other Negro employed at the service station where the young father of two was on duty shortly before the incident.

Evidence in the case has been presented to the county grand jury in session here and Walker said the jury is expected to report Wednesday.

Leverette was arrested in Talladega Tuesday afternoon by Talladega County Sheriff Luke Brewer and turned over to Shelby authorities. He is being held pending action of the grand jury.

Walker said it doesn't appear that the kidnap-flogging of Jones is related to several other similar cases in this area during the past two years.

Motive for the flogging remains uncertain, the sheriff said. Both he and Harpersville Police Chief Raymond Rogers discounted the purely racial basis indicated by the statements of the abductors.

The men threatened to tie Mrs. C. B. Miller, wife of Jones employer, "to the same tree and beat her if they hire another Negro," the victim reported.

The Jones brothers were getting out of their car in front of Jones' house about 9 p.m. Saturday when two cars drew up behind them.

White men carrying pistols and clubs shoved the Negroes into a car and forced them to lie on the floorboards. Taking a circuitous route, the men drove to an abandoned farmhouse several miles beyond the Coosa-Shelby County line.

They tied Henry Jones to a tree and flogged him. The younger brother was not harmed, however.

Jones had worked at the Millers' service station in Harpersville for about two years and his employer said the youth had had not trouble with anyone to his knowledge. The small farming community is about 30 mile southeast of Birmingham.

Belgium Orders Troops To Leave Congo Province

Montgomery Advertiser, P.1

Montgomery, Ala., Wed. 8/3/60

U.N. Plans Occupation In Katanga

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

In a decisive capitulation, Belgium agreed to pull its troops out of the secessionist Congo province of Katanga, and Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold said Tuesday night his U.N. troops will begin replacing them Saturday.

The agreement appeared to settle the most difficult problem facing Hammarskjold in his efforts to restore political and economic order to the big new African nation.

Hammarskjold said U.N. trouble shooter Dr. Ralph Bunche will go to Katanga Friday to prepare for the entry of U.N. troops. The withdrawal of Belgian troops is expected to follow immediately.

"About two weeks only after the final decision of the Security Council confiding in me and task of executing its will, the troops of the United Nations will be in control of security in all the territory of the united Congo," Hammarskjold said.

RICH STAKE

Earlier Belgium, with a rich stake in Katanga mines, factories and farm lands, announced it reluctantly yielded to U.N. demands and agreed to pull its troops out of the province and let U.N. forces in.

The settlement, worked out by Hammarskjold through intense negotiations with the Congolese and Belgians, came as new pressures were put on Belgium to withdraw its troops from the whole of the vast central African nation.

Congo Premier Patrice Lumumba threatened to seek action from the U.N. Security Council in the next few days unless Brussels bowed to earlier Security Council resolutions calling for the withdrawal of Belgian troops.

Ghana charged Belgium with aggression in the Congo and said that if it continued, Ghana would ask that the U.N. treat Belgium as an aggressor, a move that could lead to an economic boycott or even military action.

In a communique, Belgium emphasized it planned to repatriate Belgian troops to Brussels as soon as feasable.

"Our rescue missions are at an end every time U.N. troops are in a position to take over," the government message said. "Belgian troops will then be withdrawn toward their bases and repatriated to Belgium."

Belgium had about 10,000 troops in the Congo, which, it said, were needed to protect Belgium lives and property during antiwhite riots that followed the granting of independence to its former colony June 30. Most of them are in Katanga. A unit of 1,500 men began moving out of the province for Brussels Monday.

CONGO REVENUES

The urgency of the Katanga problem centered on the fact that the province's vast uranium and copper mines and lush pastoral lands provide 60 per cent of the Congo's revenues.

Moise Tshombe, Katanga president premier, had sought to take the province out of the republic and make it an independent state. This would have meant the economic collapse of the Congo.

Lumumba finished a nine-day visit to the United States and Canada and headed for home Tuesday. Hammarskjold postponed for the second time his scheduled departure for South Africa.

Belgians Delay Withdrawal From Rich Congo Province

Montgomery Advertiser

Montgomery, Ala.

BRUSSELS (AP)—The Belgian government declared Wednesday night its troops would not be pulled out of Katanga Province immediately. U.N. troops to replace the Belgians are scheduled to enter Katanga Saturday despite Katanga government threats of war against them.

Aug. 8, 1960 P.1

The Belgians also said the United Nations "does not have the right to indulge in a political operation" in Katanga.

Premier Gaston Eyskens and Foreign Minister Pierre Wigny set out that stand at a news conference. Katanga has declared itself independent from the central Congo government.

In reply to a question, Eyskens said: "The arrival of U.N. troops in Katanga does not entail the immediate departure of Belgian troops at present there."

Wigny said Belgian troops will leave "when the Belgian command decides that the security of persons there is assured."

The government leaders said the U.N. is risking anarchy, chaos and misery in Katanga. Wigny called the U.N. decision to send in troops Saturday "untimely and unnecessarily hasty."

"The United Nations cannot interfere in the Congo's internal affairs," Wigny said. "The United Nations is there to ensure security. The United Nations should contact the Katanga government to discuss the guarantees of security that Katanga requests."

Congo Apes Rapacity Of Belgium's Leopold

The Montgomery Advertiser
Montgomery, Ala.

By Ray Jenkins
City Editor, Alabama Journal

"TIME SANCTIFIES everything," writes a noted historian. "Even the most arrant theft, in the hands of the robber's grandchildren, become sacred and inviolable property."

This, in a nutshell, is the story of Africa, more especially, the story of the Congo.

Colonial expansion in Africa during the 18th and 19th Centuries followed an unmistakable pattern. First there was commercial expansion, always to be followed by political domination under the guise of protecting the commercial investments.

JENKINS

Like the other European rulers, King Leopold of Belgium cast covetous eyes upon Africa. But Leopold's ambitions were purely personal, and, with the help of the great explorer, Henry M. Stanley, he took over the steamy Congo jungles as his private piece of real estate. It was probably the largest domain ever held by a single man.

Leopold's purposes were hardly humanitarian; he never even bothered to visit his illimitable tract, contenting himself with the treasure of resources that flowed from the heart of Africa.

To those who are alarmed over the atrocities taking place in the Congo today, perhaps it is well to recall what went on under Leopold's "civilized" rule just 50 years ago. When the native workers failed to satisfy the Belgian agents' voracious appetites for ivory and rubber, a hand or a foot or perhaps both were cut off, a form of punishment the Congolese themselves never used. To prove their diligence and efficiency, the straw bosses brought to their superiors baskets full of human hands, sometimes smoked to preserve them in the humid climate.

Eight Million Lives Lost

AND THOSE who believe that Belgium lifted the Congo out of "savagery" might well remember that in 1900 the population of the Congo was 20 million against 14 million today; all told, Leopold's regime is believed to have cost between five and eight million lives.

Finally international opinion forced Leopold to give up his rich possession. In 1908 the king reluctantly turned over the Congo to the administration of the Belgian government, which accepted it with equal reluctance.

The Belgians proved to be able and enlightened rulers who have made tremendous contributions to the Congo. This is not to say they were not more than adequately paid for their efforts. The Congo opened its rich storehouse of natural resources to Belgium and the world; it is almost paradoxical, for instance, that the Congo, the most primitive land on earth, furnished the uranium to make the world's first atom bomb.

Belgium did well by the Congo, except for one important particular. In 75 years of control, the Belgians left the Congo even less prepared for self-government than it was in its primitive state. They took away the old tribal structures and customs and gave the Africans nothing with which to replace them. Just four years ago the Belgians were going about their parternalistic business seemingly oblivious to the forest fire of nationalism that was burning all around them. And when the freedom movement penetrated the Congo it was too late; ready or not, the Congo was going to have its try at independence.

Congo Hides Others' Success

UNFORTUNATELY, THE moderate success of a good many other African nations with independence is forgotten in the din of the Congo's failure. Liberia, for instance, has managed to cling to a form of republican government for more than a century, comical though its efforts sometimes seem. Ghana, the first African nation to gain independence, has had its ups and downs, but, as one who has been to both countries, I found a healthier respect for democracy in Ghana than the Union of South Africa.

And soon Nigeria, the most populous country in Africa, with its 35 millions, will gain statehood. Those who know Nigeria are confident she can make a go of independence; she has been coached well by the British, and her leaders are among Africa's most able. Nigeria's entry into the family of independent nations is eagerly awaited; she will be a source of strength, comfort and stability to other African nations, like the Congo, who are less prepared for the role of independence.

Democracy Must Be Served: Katanga Should Die Too

The Montgomery Advertiser

Katanga Premier Tshombe's threat to fight U.N. troops, which are scheduled to enter his country Saturday, poses the threat of a far more serious Congolese police action. But whatever the condition and strength of Tshombe's troops, he has a strong practical argument.

Tshombe announced July 11 that Katanga, richest of all the Congo provinces, had seceded from the rest of the new republic and was to be considered an independent country. Brash as the act was, Tshombe made a telling point when he said: "Let us face the truth. Democracy does not exist at the moment. It will be years before the Africans here consider themselves Congolese rather than members of individual tribes."

But Katanga is a going concern. The Union Miniere du Haut-Katanga cartel, owned by Belgian, U.S. and British investors, mines 60% of the free world's cobalt, 10% of its uranium and 8% of its copper. Some 60% of the total pre-independence income of the Congo was supplied by Katanga.

Tshombe himself is a hard-headed businessman, born to the purple, who affects button-down shirts, Homburg hats and drives a black Cadillac. He was vastly impressed with America on his trip to Washington and New York and says: "We need Americans more than anyone else."

His basic conservatism is supported by his political party, the Conakat Party, which depends for much of its strength on the tribal leaders in it. Thus he has made use of tribalism in two ways: he has employed it as an argument for secession from a hopeless anarchy and he has embraced the tribal leaders in a coalition group.

Whether or not Tshombe can successfully resist U.N. military action is highly doubtful. The natives mustered to defend the defiant nation are not trained soldiers and their resistance, while it may be bloody, is not likely to be very effective.

Hopefully, such a showdown can be avoided. Certainly the U.N. troops are committed to their course of action.

Still, the thought persists that Katanga has a strong case for survival as some kind of independent area; the only alternative seems to force it, in the name of the U.N., to suffer the same fate as the rest of the Congo. At the moment that fate would seem utterly without hope, as Tshombe has said.

Katanga And The Right Of Self-Determination

The Montgomery Advertiser
Montgomery, Ala.
Mar 8, 1960

THE decision not to send UN troops now into the rich Congo province of Katanga, because the secessionist government there threatened resistance, must be viewed on two levels.

It is, first, a shattering blow to the UN mission, which was to restore order to all of the Congo. If the prospect of bloodshed is to prevent UN police action, such expeditions will have little meaning. Hereafter, rebellious leaders need only demonstrate, as Katanga's have, that their people are prepared to resist to the "last drop of blood." By all accounts, white and blacks in Katanga support Premier Moise Tshombe in his rebel yells and his proclaimed independence.

Secondly, the defiance of UN troops must be considered from the standpoint of the glowing principle which has guided all proponents of the African independence movement. If the principle of self-determination has any real meaning, it would seem to follow that Katanga has the inalienable right to free itself from the intolerable conditions prevailing in the rest of the new republic and go it alone. The province is a political entity, its government is intact, its economy is not only solvent but booming.

If it sticks, secession of Katanga will make doubly certain what already seemed a foregone conclusion: the Congo can only be sustained by vast outside appropriations and administrative guidance. It does not have the capacity for self-government, as has already been demonstrated to the horror of the civilized world. Katanga does have that capacity; it is now a going concern.

Katanga is overwhelmingly pro-Belgian and to a lesser extent pro-European and pro-American. Naturally this does not sit well with the other new nations of Africa—notably Ghana, which has offered troops to help force Katanga to rejoin the strong central government advocated by Congolese Premier Lumumba.

Neither does it please Russia, which has seen in the Congolese chaos a chance for communist infiltration. Deprived of Katanga, which has provided about 60% of the Congo's exports, two-thirds of its electric power and more than half the revenues of the central government, such infiltration would have limited opportunity for exploitation and seizure of vital resources.

Conga sans Katanga would be a burden for any foreign exploiter for as far as the eye can see. The illiterate masses might be willing to wave Russian flags but the possibility of converting them to a communist force is as remote as it is meaningless at this point in their revolution.

The Belgian troops in Katanga are there by invitation, not aggression, as Russia charges. Tshombe is head of the government, which is fully capable of administering its affairs. To send a UN force against this de facto government would in itself be a kind of aggression, notwithstanding the fact that such action would be pursuant to the UN mission.

It is a serious situation, though certainly not the worst Africa will produce in the years ahead. At bottom the situation is this: without Katanga, the Congo cannot survive on its own. With Katanga, the picture is hardly brighter.

From Katanga's standpoint as an independent nation it will prosper and be a strong ally of Europe and the West. Joined to the rest it will almost collapse in the general chaos to the ultimate benefit perhaps of Russia.

The UN security council has its work cut out.

Lumumba Note and Congolese Message

N. Y. Times

Special to The New York Times.

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y., Aug. 2—Following are the texts of a letter sent yesterday to the President of the Security Council by Patrice Lumumba, Premier of the Congo, and of a cablegram to the Premier from Antoine Gizenga, Deputy Premier:

N. Y. H. T.

Lumumba Letter

I have the honor to inform you of the serious concern which the trend of events in the Congo is causing my Government.

Wed. 8/3/60

In its resolutions of 14 and 22 July, the Security Council expressed itself in favor of the unconditional and speedy withdrawal of Belgian troops from the whole territory of our republic, which the resolutions treated as a single entity.

The Belgian Government promised to withdraw its troops from the Congo as soon as the United Nations troops reached there.

United Nations troops have been arriving in the Congo since 16 July, but not a single Belgian soldier has left Congolese soil.

We are at present confronted by a deliberate refusal on the part of the Belgian Government to comply with decisions of the highest international authority, the Security Council.

The vice chairman of the Council of Ministers of the Republic of the Congo [Mr. Gizenga] informs me in a telegram recently received in New York, a copy of which is attached, that the Congolese soldiers have been disarmed, whereas the Belgian soldiers are remaining in the territory together with all their arms.

I would particularly draw your attention to the fact that no contingent of United Nations troops has so far entered Katanga, because this is opposed by the Belgian Government solely in order to strengthen the seccession movement it has instigated in this province using Premier Moise Tshombe as a screen, in contravention of the relevant resolutions adopted by the Security Council.

There is now no justification whatever for the presence of Belgian military forces in the Congo; United Nations troops, in conjunction with our national army, are fully adequate to insure the maintenance of order and the protection of persons of all nationalities.

Associated Press

Premier Patrice Lumumba at Idlewild airport yesterday.

Pretexts Are Alleged

The arguments put forward by the Belgian Government for the maintenance of its troops in the Congo contrary to the decisions of the Security Council are merely false pretexts. The Belgian Government's intention is to disorganize the country in order to involve our Government and our people in numerous economic and financial difficulties.

To give just one example, the Belgian Government recently removed our gold reserves, which were in the headquarters of our Central Bank in the Congo. Such measures of economic strangulation are taking place in many other sectors.

The Government and the people of the Congo extend a warm welcome to the United Nations troops and to Mr. Hammarskjold, the Secretary General. This enthusiastic welcome provides sufficient proof of the peaceful sentiments of the Congolese nation, which has placed all its confidence in the United Nations.

The peoples of our country are today disappointed by the unwarranted delay in the withdrawal of Belgian troops.

I would also inform you that the people of the Katanga emphatically repudiate the attempts at secession which the Belgian Government is in the process of organizing in that province with the help of a number of collaborators, among whom is Mr. Tshombe.

The present objective of the Belgian Government and of a few groups which support it is to bring about the division of the Congo in order to obtain a hold over our country.

The paramount problem in the Congo is that of the immediate withdrawal of Belgian troops from the whole of Congolese territory.

The Belgian Government would surely have demonstrated a medium of goodwill in the evaluation of the United Nations resolutions if it had proceeded to evacuate the Katanga before all other areas.

My Government assures you of its full cooperation in securing the complete success of the United Nations mission in our republic.

In conclusion, I would very seriously draw your attention and that of the members of the Council to the gravity of present developments and to the need for the urgent evacuation of all Belgian forces in the Republic of the Congo.

I reserve the right, should the situation fail to improve during the next few days, to request a meeting of the Security Council to consider whatever measures may prove necessary.

I request you to circulate this document to all members of the Security Council.

Gizenga Message

Additional information we learn from well-informed sources that at Kolwezi aggressive operation Belgian troops following a bombardment resulted in death fifty Congolese soldiers and two Europeans. This information had not yet been reported to us. I have made demand to Dr. Ralph J. Bunche for United Nations troops to be sent to the Katanga. He seems to find difficulties and does not promise dispatch now. I await arrival Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold but my position remains unchanged. United Nations troops are disarming our soldiers and allowing Belgian forces to keep their arms, which is incomprehensible.

LUMUMBA ASSERTS AFRICA BACKS HIM

N. Y. Times

N. Y. H. T.

Congo Chief, Leaving U. S., Says Continent Demands Belgium Withdrawal

Wed. 8/3/60

Special to The New York Times.

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y., Aug 2—Premier Patrice Lumumba of the Congo said today that "all Africa is mobilized" behind his Government's demand for the immediate, complete and unconditional withdrawal of Belgian troops from the Congo.

Mr. Lumumba, who left by air this morning for Leopoldville, made public a leter he submitted to the Security Council yesterday in which he threatened to request another meeting on the Congo situation "should the situation fail to improve during the next few days."

P. 12

Mr. Lumumba charged that not a single Belgian soldier had left the Congo since the United Nations forces began to arrive July 16.

His protest was supported by Alex Quaison-Sackey, Ghana's delegate to the United Nations. Mr. Quaison-Sackey sent a letter to the Security Council charging that Belgian troops had been sent with the object of detaching Katanga Province, not "primarily" that of saving the lives of Belgian nationals.

Threat to Peace Charged

Belgium's conduct was a "grave threat to peace" and if it continued this "would justify the United Nations holding that Belgium was committing aggression against the Congo and should be dealt with as an aggressor," the Ghanaian said.

These signs of irritation, however, are expected to disappear as a result of Mr. Hammarskjold's announcement in Leopoldville tonight that United Nations forces would start entering Katanga this week-end.

United Nations officials expressed great satisfaction over this development, which is expected to start the withdrawal of Belgian forces from the disputed province, which has declared its secession from the Congo.

In his leter, Mr. Lumumba charged that Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold's failure to send United Nations forces into Katanga resulted from the opposition of the Belgian government.

He asserted that Belgium was using Premier Moise Tshombe of Katanga, "as a screen."

At a farewell news conference at New York International Airport, Idlewild, Queens, Mr. Lumumba expressed his thanks to the United States for the "warm welcome" he received since his arrival June 24, and America's "understanding" of the problems of the Congo.

He also expressed his thanks to the Security Council for its resolutions establishing the United Nations Congo force and requesting that Belgium "speedily" withdrew her troops, and his government had placed its trust in Mr. Hammarskjold.

Mr Lumumba attached to his letter to the Secretary General a cablegram from Deputy Premier Antoine Gizenga, stating that "United Nations troops are disarming our soldiers and allowing Belgian forces to keep their arms which is incomprehensible."

to Mr. Lumumba indicated at the news conference that the Congo would place its principal reliance on individual countries to provide experts for a long-range development program, rather than on the United Nations. He emphasized that foreign investments would be welcome and protected.

Asked whether this applied to Belgian investments, Mr. Lumumba said that the Congo-Belgian treaty of friendship and cooperation showed that his Government was not against Belgian interests.

A question about the possibility of Soviet aid to the Congo brought from Mr. Lumumba the statement that "the Congo is not a Communist country and never will be."

Mr. Lumumba disclosed that, in response to pressing invitations from their heads of government, he would visit the capitals of Morocco, Tunisia, Guinea, Liberia and Ghana on his way to Leopoldville, where he said he would arrive Monday.

United Nations delegates of nine African states were at the airport to see the Congolese Premier off to London, where he was to board a Ghanaian military plane for the remainder of the journey.

Mr. Lumumba repeated the view he advanced at his news conference at the United Nations July 25 that the Security Council resolution called for the withdrawal of Belgian forces at once from all of the Congo, including Katanga and the bases Belgium reserved in the treaty of friendship and cooperation.

The Premier said again that peace would be restored "within five minutes" after Belgian forces were withdrawn. He said that since the United Nations force now totaled 11,155, compared with 10,000 Belgian troops, Belgium should withdraw.

Mr. Lumumba spent an hour conferring with the African delegates before holding his new conference.

L. Edgar Detwiler, American promoter who announced recently that Mr. Lumumba had given him a fifty-year concession for the development of the Congo's mineral and hidraulic resources, paced nervously up and down while the Premier talked with the African delegates. He had time only for a hurried greeting before Mr. Lumumba boarded his plane.

Mr. Detwiler told newsmen, however, that he had conferred at length with Mr. Lumumba during his stay in New York and that he had gone to Idlewild merely to say good-by.

Associated Press Radiophoto

MONARCH GREETS RETURNING TROOPS: King Baudouin responds to the salute of a group of Belgian para-troopers on their arrival yesterday in Brussels. They had been on duty in the Congo, where U. N. force took over.

Hammarskjold Statement

Special to The New York Times

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y., Aug. 3—Following, in unofficial translation from the French, is a statement issued in Leopoldville today by Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold, as made available by the United Nations:

In response to requests for a clarification of the role of the United Nations in the province of Katanga and in relation to internal political problems of the Republic of the Congo, the Secretary General wishes to draw attention to a statement that he made in his first report to the Security Council, on 18 July 1960.

This statement, like the rest of the report, was approved unanimously, in an explicit manner, by the Council. It reads:

"Although the United Nations force under the resolution is dispatched to the Congo at the request of the Government and will be present in the Congo with its consent * * * the force is necessarily under the exclusive command of the United Nations, vested in the Secretary General under the control of the Security Council. This is in accordance with the principles generally applied by the organization. The force is thus not under the orders of the Government nor can it * * * be permitted to become a party to any internal conflict. A departure from this principle would seriously endanger the impartiality of the United Nations and of the operation."

There remains only to add that the entry of United Nations troops into Katanga, like the entire United Nations operation, being based on the principles thus established and approved, in no way constitutes interference, nor can it be permitted to develop into an interference in the internal affairs of the republic or of a province, and this obviously applies to Katanga.

It also follows from the above-mentioned statement that the United Nations, in this case as in any mission of the organization, acts solely under the authority of the main organs of the organization, representing only the organization, and supporting only the principles and purposes of the organization.

Belgium Cautions U.N. to Stay Out Of Congo Politics

By HARRY GILROY

Special to The New York Times.

BRUSSELS, Belgium, Aug. 3—Premier Gaston Eyskens warned tonight that the movement of United Nations troops into Katanga Province should not be "a cloak for political operations" to curb the autonomy of the provincial government. The troops are to start moving into Katanga Saturday to replace Belgian forces.

The Premier's comment reflected a general opinion in Brussels that Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold of the United Nations was obliged under pressure by part of the national Congo Government at Leopoldville to send troops to Katanga.

Premier Eyskens and Foreign Minister Pierre Wigny dissociated Belgium from the United Nations decision to enter Katanga. However, the officials made plain in a news conference that Belgian forces in Katanga would not oppose the move.

Katanga Threat Discounted

Belgian official sources minimized the threat of the Katanga government to mobilize its manpower and oppose the entry of United Nations troops. Katanga's forces were reported to consist of two companies of police and Congo army units that were disarmed following their mutiny.

M. Eyskens and M. Wigny said Belgian forces would withdraw only after there were firm assurances that the United Nations troops could keep order.

At that point Belgian troops will go to Kamina, their principal base in Katanga.

All Belgian troops will be returned to Europe in line with the United Nations Security Council resolution, but the Brussels Government, it is understood, will decide on the timing. This is expected to be when it becomes evident the troops are no longer needed for the protection of Belgians in the Congo.

Belgium is then expected to negotiate with the Congo about maintaining bases in the new state, a subject covered by a treaty signed before the Congo became independent June 30.

U. N. Procedure Criticized

Implied criticism of Mr. Hammarskjold was seen in the comments of the Belgian officials because he decided to send troops into Katanga before communicating with Moise Tshombe, Premier of the province. Under Secretary Ralph J. Bunche is to go to Elisabethville tomorrow to see Mr. Tshombe.

The Belgians indicated that normal procedure would have been for Dr. Bunche to have consulted Mr. Tshombe before the troop movement was announced.

Mr. Eyskens emphasized that Mr. Tshombe was the legally elected head of the only government in the Congo that has kept order and, as such, should receive consideration.

M. Eyskens added that the United Nations should "respect the right of Katanga to settle its legal situation." Mr. Tshombe has proclaimed Katanga independent but has offered to include the province in a federation with other Congo states.

M. Wigny reviewed Congo developments and made the point that the United Nations was now taking on for all the Congo and for Katanga responsibilities that went beyond keeping order.

M. Eyskens said that Katanga was the only section of the Congo where economic and social life continued to flourish and where medical services and courts were still functioning.

U. N. Task Stated

"It will be the United Nations task to preserve this and also to protect the lives of the 23,000 white persons who remain there," he said.

These persons, he added, constitute the technical corps that kept Katanga life going. He said the United Nations had only 400 technicians in the rest of the Congo.

He said the Belgian colonial administration had had 26,000 Congolese troops and 4,000 Belgians to maintain order while the United Nations was undertaking to do the same job with 11,000 troops.

Leaders of the Socialist party, the chief opposition party in Belgium, criticized the government tonight for handling the Congo situation in such a way that the sending of United Nations troops to Katanga was made to appear as a defeat for Belgium.

Troops Arrive in Brussels

BRUSSELS, Aug. 3 (Reuters)—Two hundred Belgian paratroopers from Kamina base in Katanga arrived here by air today, the vanguard of a 1,500-strong contingent being withdrawn from the Congo.

The men were reviewed by King Baudouin at the airport. Then they marched through the streets, where many of the thousands welcoming them were refugees from the Congo.

The evacuation of the 1,500 troops will leave Belgium with 8,500 men still in the Congo.

The Defense Ministry said all Belgian troops now had been pulld out of Congo's Leopoldville, Equator and Eastern provinces.

Belgians Ask U.N. Not to Go Into Katanga

The Atlanta Constitution
Atlanta, Ga.
Thurs. 7-28-60

By ALFRED CHEVAL

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP)—Belgian authorities told Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold Wednesday the U.N. should keep its hands off Katanga and let Brussels and Leopoldville decide the future of Belgian treaty bases in the Congo.

Premier Gaston Eyskens announced these points in a news conference after Hammarskjold wound up a six-hour visit to Brussels and headed south aboard a Dutch airliner for a first-hand look at the troubled young African nation.

INTERNAL MATTER

Eyskens said the problem of Katanga, the rich, secessionist province in which Belgians have heavy investments, is an internal matter to be solved among the Congolese themselves.

"We request the U.N. not to intervene in the Congo's internal affairs," the Premier said.

Similarly, the Belgian government told Hammarskjold the two Belgian military bases in the Congo do not concern the U.N. at present.

"The bases were there before the Congo became independent and the bases are at present necessary," Eyskens said. "Whether they have to remain or not, is not an urgent question. This problem will be negotiated in the future between Belgium and the Congo government."

On Belgian intervention, the premier said it was and is necessary to "save the lives and physical integrity of Europeans."

"It is limited in time," he said.

"We told the U.N. secretary-general, it was not by replacing one garrison by another — i.e. replacement of Belgian troops in Leopoldville by U.N. troops—that security will be maintained, but rather by sending U.N. troops where the security of Europeans remains endangered.

MISSION OF TROOPS

"We told him that the mission of our troops—and, when replaced, the mission of the U.N. troops—is in our understanding to make it possible for men and women of any color of skin to walk peacefully on Congo streets and to go peacefully to their work and live peacefully in their homes."

Hammarskjold talked with Foreign Minister Pierre Wigney, Eyskens and other Cabinet officials, and King Baudouin.

He issued no information publicly on the nature of the talks, turning aside reporters' questions with "no comment."

But all was obviously not sweetness and light.

SHORT STAY

Belgians were irritated at his short stay in Brussels.

Hammarskjold came here after three days of talks in New York with Congo Premier Patrice Lumumba, who is demanding a complete withdrawal of Belgian troops.

"Mr. Hammarskjold seems to want to avoid hearing our problems," a Belgian official said at one point during the rushed round of talks.

18a 1960 CONGO

Belgians Give Up Control of Congo Rebel Hub to U.N.

The Atlanta Constitution P. 1

Atlanta, Ga. Mon. 8-15-60

Katanga Still Split On Troops

By ADRIAN PORTER

ELISABETHVILLE, the Congo (AP) — Belgian troops Sunday handed over guard duty in this rebellious provincial capital to United Nations troops before crowds that had cheers only for the Belgians and Katanga Premier Moise Tshombe.

It was a hectic day, exposing the divided loyalties in Elisabethville. Earlier, a friendly crowd was driven from U.N. Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold's temporary residence by Katanga police using tear gas and clubs. Hammarskjold was inside at the time and the curious crowd was made up mostly of Katangans who have demonstrated for him and against Tshombe.

SEEMING BRUSHOFFS

Having completed arrangements for bringing the first U.N. troops into Katanga, Hammarskjold got what seemed to be a cool brush-off from Tshombe at the airport before he left. Tshombe, who finally agreed without enthusiasm to let U.N. troops into Katanga, kept the U.N. troubleshooter waiting for nearly half an hour before appearing.

Hundreds of Belgians and Africans watched as Gen. Rober A. Gheysen, Belgian military commander in Katanga, transferred his responsibilities in Elisabethville to Gen. Carl von Horn of Sweden, U.N. commander in the Congo.

The crowds shouted, "Vive l'armee" as Gheysen arrived for the formal ceremony at the Place de l'Etoile, the city's main square.

MORE SHOUTS

"There were more shouts of "Vive Tshombe" as the Premier appeared. It seeemd mostly Belgians were shouting for this Negro leader who has proclaimed his province independent of the Congo government at Leopoldville.

Many wept as Belgian soldiers laid a wreath at the cenotaph in honor of Belgium's dead in two world wars—the Belgians' parting gesture to Elisabethville.

There were no cheers for the U.N. commander and the Swedish military units when they took over from Gheysen. The crowd stood silent throughout this part of the ceremony.

It was a far different crowd that assembled in front of Hammarskjold's residence. Most were members of the Cartel party, bitterly opposed to Tshombe's separatist movement.

GAS THROWN

Police told the crowd to move on, then threw four tear gas bombs. One bounced on the lawn of the residence. Police followed up by pushing the people away with their clubs. No one was arrested but Prosper Mwamba, acting leader of the Cartel, said his supporters were beaten and their clothes torn.

Hammarskjold, who Saturday completed his ticklish job of arranging for U.N. troops to enter Katanga, left Elisabethville after what appeared to be a snub by Tshombe.

Tshombe showed up 25 minutes late at the airport and without apologizing told Hammarskjold: "I am glad to be able to see you off. Bon voyage. We hope to see you again."

ON CONDITION

Tshombe once vowed to block by force any attempt by U.N. troops to enter his province. He reluctantly agreed to let them in on the strict condition that no agent of his archfoe, Congo Premier Patrice Lumumba, come in with them.

While allowing U.N. forces to take over from Belgian troops the job of maintaining order in the province, Tshombe left no doubt he is in command of the province affairs. His army security guards detained three Congolese who arrived on a commercial plane from Leopoldville, the Congo capital. The three were held on suspicion they were Lumumba's agents.

Associated Press Wirephot

MISSIONARY PRIESTS SEE WEAPONS OF SWEDISH TROOPS IN KATANGA

Contingent Landed at Elisabethville for Guard Duty in Rebellious Provincial Capital

U.N. TROOPS MOVE INTO KATANGA

The Atlanta Constitution

Atlanta, Ga.

Replace Belgians; Lumumba Demand Stirs New Crisis

Sun. 8-14-60

ELISABETHVILLE, The Congo, Aug. 13 (UPI)—Swedish soldiers of the United Nations forces began relieving the Belgian Army in rebellious Katanga Province Saturday.

Premier Patrice Lumumba of the Congo immediately threatened another crisis by demanding that all white troops leave the Congo at once.

The agreement to relieve Belgian troops was worked out by U.N. Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold and Katanga President Moise Tshombe in two days of talks in this tense city while Katanga police broke up anti-Tshombe demonstratoins.

A series of announcements by Hammarskjold and Tshombe said the Swedes took over guard duties at the airport at 5 p.m. and that other U.N. troops would arrive Monday and Tuesday to complete the takeover ordered by the Security Council.

The new contingents will be Irish and Ethiopian—half white and half Negro.

* * *

DEFIANT STATEMENTS by Tshombe here and by Lumumba, in Leopoldville, showed that the Congolese crisis was far from ended. Tshombe said the actions made it clear that Katanga Province, which "seceded" from the Congo on July 11, would be able to maintain its independence.

Lumumba, speaking in Leopoldville, renewed his threat to send in his own troops to win back the rebellious province and delivered a scathing attack on Hammarskjold for his use of white

Swedish troops. He said some of the Swedes were disguised Belgians.

The official Soviet newspaper Izvestia, in a commentary broadcast by Moscow Radio, followed up this with an attack on Hammarskjold and accused him of conspiring with Tshombe against the "legal government of the Congo." It said Hammarskjold was not carrying out the council resolutions.

* * *

A U.N. COMMUNIQUE said the military representatives who accompanied Hammarskjold had made arrangements for the speedy deployment of United Nations forces. It said a U.N. advance party will arrive Sunday and other troops will fly in Monday and Tuesday.

Belgian troops were to withdraw as fast as the U.N. troops arrive.

A joint U.N.-Belgian communique said responsible military authorities of both sides "give most formal assurances that the disposition of the two commands will be taken with the prime aim of ensuring the complete security of the populations."

About 20,000 European civilians remained in Katanga which has been comparatively quiet except for Saturday's noisy demonstrations and the mild booing the Swedish troops received when they arrived with Hammarskjold Friday.

* * *

A HAMMARSKJOLD-Tshombe communique said the United Nations was observing the principle of nonintervention in internal affairs. Tshombe commented later that this made it clear Katanga would be able to maintain its claims to independence.

Tshombe said Katanga would carry out its own internal policing—a warning to Lumumba that he would get no help from the United Nations in his attempts to overthrow the Tshombe regime. He also noted that the U.N. mission had the right to "block all threats that may threaten life and property of all persons irrespective of race."

Observers said this meant Tshombe had authorized the U.N. forces to put down tribal conflicts threatening security.

U.N. Peacefully Enters Province of Katanga

The Atlanta Constitution
Atlanta, Ga.

By ADRIAN PORTER

ELISABETHVILLE, the Congo (AP)—U.N. Secretary-General Hammarskjold led a U.N. task force peacefully into secessionist Katanga Province Friday and opened negotiations for full withdrawal of Belgian soldiers.

Pat. 8-13-60

A hitch in landing operations and minor demonstrations at the airport, including a cry of "Down with the United Nations," spiced his arrival and his blue-helmeted soldiers—220 fellow Swedes.

But there was a warm welcome for Hammarskjold to this rich territory of copper, cobalt and cattle from Katanga's Premier Moise Tshombe, who only a week ago was threatening war to bar the U. N. soldiers already occupying the rest of the Congo's half-dozen provinces.

Though he had modified his stand in the face of a Security Council mandate for replacement of the Belgian soldiers, Tshombe appeared in high spirits.

He joked and laughed with Hammarskjold, then set out with him in a car bearing both U. N. and Katanga flags for their first formal session at his official residence.

There was a warning to Congo Premier Patrice Lumumba, No. 1 political foe of Tshombe, that the U.N. intends to carry out its mission of maintaining order in the Congo despite interference by Lumumba's reactivated Congolese army.

U.N. Undersecretary Ralph J. Bunche delivered the warning personally to Lumumba in Leopoldville, the central government's capital 950 miles northwest of Elisabethville. It came after days of mounting unrest in which Lumumba's uniformed forces have taken an increasing hand in patr[illegible] police work that is supposed to be handled by the U.N. force.

The secretary-general's white, twin-engine plane sped in at 1:40 p.m. from Leopoldville.

But the landing of his craft, the leader of a five-plane fleet, was delayed by a radioed declaration from the control tower that the soldiers would be refused permission to come in.

A breathless Army spokesman of the Belgian 5th Brigade notified Tshombe the tower's European operator was abiding by last week's order that, under no conditions, should the U.N. force be allowed to land.

"This is a complete misunderstanding," said Tshombe, appalled, and swiftly brought the tower up to date.

Hammarskjold's plane circled the field three times and then came down. The others streamed in at 10-minute intervals.

Maj. Carl C. Stenkula led a 28-man detachment to the control tower. Others deployed along the runway. Belgian soldiers continued to maintain the airport guard they establishe[illegible] a month ago.

Tshombe and his ministers welcomed Hammarskjold at the airport apron. African military police formed an honor guard.

About 300 African civilians were at the airport.

"Vive Tshombe!" some shouted. "Down with the U. N."

On the other hand, five members of the Cartel party—Tshombe's main opposition—hoisted a banner which said: "Down with federalism. Down with independent Katanga. Vive the united Congo."

Three Belgian officers of the African military police seized one of the banner bearers and the crowd cheered.

A small party held aloft a huge new Katanga flag as a military band struck up "Vers l'Avenir"—Toward the future — which has become the anthem of this independence-minded province.

PEARLIE'S PRATTLE

The Afro-American P.16

Foreign dignitaries welcome Congo leader

Baltimore, Md. Sat. 8-13-60

By PEARLIE C. HARRISON

WASHINGTON

Such a rush, you say? Well, Prime Minister Patrice Lumumba of the new Republic of the Congo only had a two - day stay in Washington.

But hurry or no hurry, with the heads of nine African Missions serving as hosts and with the Mayflower Hotel's East Room providing the scene, the reception simply had to be grand..

Ambassador George A. Padmore of Liberia headed the receiving line. And assisting were Moroccan Ambassador Ben Aboud; the Ghanaian Ambassador, W. M. Q. Halm; the Ethiopian Ambassador Imru; Tunisian Ambassador Mongi Slim; the Guinean Ambassador Telli Diallo;

Also, Ambassador Kamel of the United Arab Republic; the Charge d'Affaires of Libya, Omar Muntasser; and the Charge d'Affaires of the Sudan, Ahmed; also the acting minister for Nigerian Affairs.

The buffet tables, beautifully spread, bore a bountiful supper indeed. And the several hundred guests were happy no end, to get a glimpse of the broad - smiling Premier, plus a word from him, that is, if they could catch the ear of an interpreter, or if they were sufficiently fluent in French.

Among the guests were Ambassador George Yeh of China; Nicaragua's Ambassador, Guillermo Sevilla - Sacasa; the Polish Ambassador and Mrs. Spasowski; the Czechoslovakian Ambassador, Miloslav Ruzek; and the Charge d'Affaires of Bulgaria, Kiril Chterev; also the U.S. Ambassador to Ethiopia, Donald Bliss and Mrs. Bliss.

The Portuguese Ambassador, Luis Esteves Fernandez, was on hand, as were State Department officials and other high - ranking Government folks, businessmen and others.

In the fashion ranks, scoring high, as always, were Mrs. Mai Padmore, wife of the Liberian Ambassador, a smart black dress, a bit of white for emphasis, and a so-chic bonnet, and tall, gave her an extra - lovely appearance;

Madame E. Bonhomme, wife of the Haitian Ambassador, already known for her good - to-look - at hats, wore with her rich beige lace dress a cartwheel, if you please, one big rose on the brim dipping it deep over one pretty eye.

* * *

MRS. CLAUDE BARNETT of Chicago, the charming Etta Moten, also wore a wide sailor hat, woven in Ghana, mind you, and proving a perfect accessory for her blue and white print.

And here's praise a - plenty for Mr. Barnett, head, Associate Negro Press. When late reporters missed Etta Moten in the crowd and asked Barnett what kind of a dress his wife had on, he faltered at first, but recovered quickly and blurted out in eager schoolboy-like manner, "a pretty blue and white flowered dress with mutton-leg sleeves." And so she did, with many eyes following her whichever way she moved.

Also choosing a cart - wheel was Mrs. Martin Jenkins, wife of the President of Morgan State College, Baltimore. Her dress featured dots, a lot of them, some large, some small, all on a white background.

The Defense Department's James C. Evans was there as was his sister, Mrs. Ruby Washington, both with thoughts of Florida uppermost in their minds. Mrs. Evans, wife of the well - known James C., and their children, are currently in Europe.

Frontiers endorse sitdowns

The Afro-American Baltimore, Md. Sat. 8/13/60

ATLANTA — At the close of the 24th annual convention of Frontiers of America, Inc., here the group passed resolutions unanimously endorsing sit-ins, condemning South Africa and it racial apartheid policy and commended the Democrats and Republicans for adopting strong civil rights planks.

The four-day convention was held on the Clark College campus. The organization will meet in Akron, Ohio in July of 1961.

Other highlights of the convention included a Founder's Day observance, special luncheon and the election of officers.

* * *

MORRIS ABRAMS, Georgia attorney and Rhodes Scholar, was the principal Founder's Day speaker.

The noted lawyer scored states rights, called for non-discrimination in employment, full integration of schools, and commenting on the African situation, declared that "the day of the white man's mastery of Africa is over."

Dean Whitney M. Young Jr. of Atlanta University School of Social Work addressed the special luncheon session. He spoke on "Implications of the Student Demonstrations."

One significant point made by the dean was that the sit-in demonstrations destroyed "the myth that good race relations is simply the absence of strife," but rather it is "the presence of justice."

CONGO

* * *

RANDALL MORGAN ..of Gary, Inc. was elected as president.

Other officers are James F. King of Newark, Marcaus Neutadter of New Orleans and Dr. Hubert C. Crouch of Nashville, Tenn., vice president; Alonzo McCain, Williamsburg, Md., secretary; William H. Harrison, Miamisburg, Ohio, treasurer;

And also D. Abion Ferre, Washington chaplain; Augustus Knox, Baltimore, sergeant-at - arms; Henry C. Sparks, Philadelphia, eastern regional director; Theodore Hawes, Chicago, mid-western regional director; and P. J. Chessum, Norfolk, Va., southern regional director.

ATLANTA — The commencement speaker at Atlanta University summer graduation exercises last Thursday was Gilbert Okeke, minister of Education for Eastern Nigeria. Some 80 candidates were awarded degrees in the exercises in Sisters Chapel of Spelman College.

18a 1960

CONGO

U.N. Set Back in Congo

N.Y. Times

Question of Domestic Intervention Is Raised by Situation in Katanga

New York, N.Y.

Jun 8 1960

By THOMAS J. HAMILTON

The non-Communist world will deplore the grave setback that the United Nations has encountered in its efforts to restore peace and order in the Congo.

The organization has had to follow uncharted paths in dealing with an unprecedented situation, and it will take time to recover the ground lost as a result of Dag Hammarskjold's announcement, made without consulting Premier Moishe Tshombe of Katanga, that he was sending United Nations contingents into that province.

The new crisis is unexpected, since the Security Council's debate last month was centered on the basic question whether Belgium would agree to withdraw her troops after the arrival of the United Nations force.

The Katanga problem was mentioned, but the importance of the secessionist movement in the province was not realized, and more attention was paid to the question whether Belgium would give up the bases in the Congo that she was to retain under the inoperative Congo-Belgian treaty of friendship and cooperation.

Moderation Sought

The world breathed more easily when the Security Council, with a minimum of delay, authorized the Secretary General to create the United Nations force. The Security Council, however, followed a middle course between a demand for immediate withdrawal of Belgian forces, as demanded by the Soviet Union, and language that would have made a withdrawal contingent upon the restoration of law and order.

The request for immediate withdrawal would have run into a French veto, whereas indecisive language would have produced a Soviet veto, and the request for a rapid withdrawal, as contained in the second Congo resolution, was a good compromise.

Mr. Hammarskjold, acting with even greater skill and dispatch than he did in 1956 when he sent the United Nations Emergency Force to Egypt, once again sent out a non-combat army.

Again the Great Powers were excluded, and this time the Secretary General turned to the African states themselves rather than to the Asian and Scandinavian countries, whose contingents were the mainstay of the Emergency Force in Egypt.

But the main thing was that Mr. Hammarskjold, profiting from his previous experience and with an airlift provided by the United States, moved so quickly that the Russians lost the pretext that they had been looking for to intervene.

Objective Near

A week ago the withdrawal of the Belgian troops seemed to be a matter of days, and the way appeared to be clear for the United Nations to tackle the really important job—that of providing the outside officials and technicians needed to fill the vacuum created by the liquidation of the Belgian colonial administration.

Last Tuesday, Mr. Hammarskjold had a right to tell the Congolese Cabinet that "within the context of circumstances beyond our control, the United Nations has done all that the organization promised to do, and it has done it with all possible speed."

In the same speech, however, Mr. Hammarskjold yielded to the pressure of the Congolese in Leopoldville and announced that he was sending United Nations contingents into Katanga Province.

Pressure in this direction was also being exerted by the Soviet Union, judging from the bitter attacks on the Secretary General in Pravda for his alleged slowness to act.

From the outset, the Soviet Union had been looking for the means of wrecking the United Nations Congo program. Moscow's dissatisfaction was clear even in the early days of the Congo debate, when the Soviet representative took a fling at Dr. Ralph J. Bunche, Mr. Hammarskjold's representative in the Congo. The Katanga problem has given the Soviet Union the desired opportunity to make trouble.

The Secretary General, in view of Dr. Bunche's report that the United Nations forces could not be sent into Katanga without bloodshed, had no alternative but to return to New York and ask the Security Council for instructions.

Not only were the United Nations contingents provided on the understanding that they would not engage in combat, but Mr. Hammarskjold himself had laid down the doctrine that "they cannot be used to enforce any specific political solution of pending problems * * *"

It would have been a different matter if the Katanga provincial authorities, while maintaining their right to secede, had been willing to admit the United Nations contingents. But if they had had to fight their way in, it would have been difficult, not to say impossible, to distinguish this from outright United Nations intervention on the side of the central Government of Premier Lumumba.

The acceptance of such responsibilities by the organization could open up a Pandora's box of attempted interventions in civil wars, or even in such issues as Palestine, Kashmir and Korea.

As far as the ultimate solution of the Katanga problem is concerned, it has to be conceded that the loss of the revenues provided by its mines would be a catastrophe for the central Government.

Katanga's Concern

A federal constitution, under which Katanga Province would have a considerable amount of self-rule, may be the best answer. However, this is a matter for the peoples concerned, not the United Nations.

The Security Council would be well advised to authorize Mr. Hammarskjold to continue his efforts to obtain the consent of the provincial regime to the admission of a United Nations force, and give up the idea of installing it against the provincial regime's wishes.

In the Soviet Union's bellicose mood, it is unlikely to accept such a solution. The Soviet delegation may confront the Security Council tonight with open threats of intervention if the United Nations forces does not go into Katanga Province immediately. The Soviet Union may follow this up with a demand for a special session of the General Assembly.

However, the United Nations, having made a good start under very difficult circumstances, can yet salvage the situation in the Congo if it keeps a cool head.

Vasily Kuznetsov, now chief Soviet delegate to the U. N.

BRITAIN COVETED BELGIAN KATANGA

New York Times

Record Is Said to Show Canadian-Born Officer Had Role in Alignment

N.Y., N.Y.

KINGSTON, Ont. (Canadian Press)—If it had not been for a Canadian-born officer, Katanga, the rich province which has withdrawn from the new Congo Republic, might have been British instead of Belgian.

Evidence of the part played in the destiny of Katanga by Capt. William Grant Stairs, a native of Halifax and graduate of the Royal Military College here in 1882, has been uncovered by Capt. Carmen Darling, Royal Military College, public relations officer.

From 1887 to 1890, on leave of absence from the British Army, Capt. Stairs served on the staff of the British-sponsored expedition led by H. M. Stanley, which had been sent to the relief of Emin Pasha, governor of Equatorial Africa, who was cut off by enemies in the Upper Nile region.

Stanley and Livingstone

Mr. Stanley, who in 1871 had made his famous trip to find Dr. Livingstone, had some dealings with Belgian interests. These were later carried on by Captain Stairs.

At the time, King Leopold II of the Belgians was trying to broaden the influence of his Congo Free State. Spurred by reports that Cecil Rhodes was sending a prospecting mission to mineral-rich Katanga from the south, Leopold sent out four Belgian expeditions from 1889 to 1891.

Captain Stairs, then working for a Belgian corporation in which British funds were invested, was the leader of one of the expeditions.

Katanga was ruled by a native chief, M'Siri, who had little use for the whites but decided to cast his lot with the British and "teach the Belgians a lesson."

A letter was sent to Alfred (later Sir Alfred) Sharpe asking him to go to take possession of Katanga in the name of Britain. The runner carrying the letter was intercepted by Capt. Stairs. He read it and put it in his pocket.

Chief Is Shot Dead

He continued to M'Siri's capital where the chief, faced with rebellion and famine in his country, tried to enlist Captain Stairs' help. Captain Stairs refused.

But M'Siri was shot dead by a Belgian officer after he brandished a gun during a heated interview. There was general relief among the people that M'Siri had been removed, and it was at this time that the Congo Free State flag was raised over the capital.

On the west wall of the entrance to the Royal Military College administration building is a brass memoral tablet which says:

"William Grant Stairs, Captain, Welch Regiment. Born at Halifax, N. S., July, 1863. Lieut. Royal Engineers, 1885; served on the staff of the Emin Pasha relief expedition, 1887, under the leadership of H. M. Stanley and exhibited great courage and devotion to duty. Died of fever June 9, 1892, at Chinde on the Zambesi, whilst in command of the Katanga expedition sent out by the King of the Belgians."

Patrice Lumumba Takes Over Reigns of New Nation

The Pittsburgh Courier, Pittsburgh, Pa. Sat, July 9, 1960,

'Congo in Hands of Its Children'

p. 21

Africa Faces World as a Great Force

By HAROLD L. KEITH
(Courier Managing Editor)

Casting aside the shackles of colonialism with invincible strength of purpose, Black Africa faces the world as a force to be reckoned with.

Despite the yelps and dire predictions of those who want to see her fail, Africa's vast wealth, her great population, and her dedicated leadership guarantee that her voice will soon be heard in the authoritative councils of world politics.

The past historic two weeks, which have seen the emergence of two separate Congo Republics from the corpses of Belgian and French colonialism portend much. Then too, the Malgache Republic was born on the tremendous island of Madagascar off Africa's eastern coast and the Republic of Somalia made her entrance upon the scene.

Sat. 9-9-60

THIS BRINGS to 14 the number of free African nations on the continent.

The listing includes Ghana, Nigeria, Morocco, the United Arab Republic, Tunisia, Libya, Liberia, Guinea, Togo, Ethiopia, the Cameroons and Sudan. On the verge of independence are Kenya, Tangaynka and Nyasaland.

All of this great area encompasses much of the world's uranium supply; most of its gold, outside of South Africa and the Soviet Union; much of its diamonds, oil bauxite, antimony, manganese, iron ore which is generally believed to be the richest in the world; and, other untapped natural resources.

Africa has vast savannahs and grasslands capable of sustaining cattle in great quantity. Her cities are modern and her transportation facilities in a state of constant growth.

PREMIER—Prime Minister of the new Congo is Patrice Lumumba, 34-year-old flamboyant descendant of the warrior Mutetela tribe. He is president of the National Congolese Movement.

■

ALL OF THIS is now in the hands of a dynamic people whose main purpose in life is to make progress.

More than any other area in the world, Africa faces the future with bright possibilities.

By CECIL GREGORY
(Special to The Courier)

LEOPOLDVILLE, Congo—A tremendous force of 14,000,000 free people has emerged in the person of the Republic of Congo to highlight Africa's headlong rush into the middle of contemporary Twentieth Century world affairs.

As the reins of government were placed in black hands for the first time since Belgium imposed her will upon this region 52 years ago, it remained for the new Premier, Patrice Lumumba, to voice the aspirations of his people.

M. Lumumba, installed as Premier after weeks of jockeying and compromise between Congolese leadership, warned that the wounds of colonialism were too keen and too painful to be wiped from memory. He cited the "humilating slavery which had been imposed on us by force."

Recalling Belgian rule, he cited: "The ironies, the blows that we had to submit to morning, noon and night because we were Negroes."

After recalling the past, Africa's newest Premier flung down a challenge to the leadership of other African nations. He declared, that the Congo must become the "rallying point of all Africa," and pledged that his government would end the oppression of free thought and give to all citizens those rights contained in the United Nations Declaration of the Rights of Man.

■

AS FOR BELGIUM, he reminded the hushed listeners that this nation had understood the meaning of history by granting prompt freedom to the Congo. He also cited the gains made under Belgian rule in both the economic and educational fields.

• Concluding his historic address he asserted, "The Republic of Congo has been proclaimed and is in the hands of its own children."

The new nation is vast, encompassing an area which is one-third the size of the United States. Its riches are inestimable.

It is the source of at least 60 per cent of the world's uranium.

It contains vast riches in gold, diamonds and other vital minerals.

Its richness has been responsible for the Belgian nation maintaining one of the highest standards of living in the entire world, including the United States.

As the fourteenth African state to attain freedom since World War II, Congo politics must bear watching for the future.

■

THE NEW government is actually a coalition between M. Lumumba's Congolese National Party and the Abako Party of Joseph Kasa Vubu, the new president.

• M. Kasa Vubu's office is primarily ceremonial, the actual power rests in the hands of M. Lumumba. Other figures in the political picture include Moise Tshombe of the Conakrat Party, reportedly dissatisfied with the way things turned out and Jean Bolikango of the Puna Party who reportedly cried at not being named president.

Although an assistance treaty has been signed between Congo and Belgium, and Belgium has been granted the right to maintain her military bases on Congo soil, this is a free nation and she will make her presence felt in no uncertain manner. With men like M. Lumumba at the helm, this is an assurity.

PRESIDENT — Joseph Kasavubu, powerful leader of the Association for the Lower Congo (Abako), who was elected President of the 13,000,000 people of the new Congo nation.

FREEDOM SCENE — The Palais des Nations in Leopoldville, scene of the official proclamation of the Congo's independence on June 30. The buildings cover an area of 145,310 square feet and will house the two Congolese legislative assemblies constituting the Parliament.

Foreign News Roundup—

New Congo Riots Swell Death Toll

Commercial Appeal
Memphis, Tenn.
Wed. 7-6-60

Two Killed, Three Hurt, 200 Huts Fired In Latest Violence

By United Press International

LEOPOLDVILLE, July 5.—New tribal clashes Tuesday added to the death toll which marked the Congo's blood-sprinkled emergence as an independent nation.

Renewed fighting between rival Lulua and Baluba tribes was reported from the Kasai Province capital of Luluabourg, bringing to 16 the number killed since independence day last Thursday.

Patrice Lumumba

The clash between machete-wielding tribal groups Monday night and Tuesday left at least two Africans killed, three seriously injured and some 200 huts fired in the native district.

Two more were reported to have died in Leopoldville as reslit of clashes between upper-Congolese Bayakas and lower-Congolese Bakongos during the week end.

Prime Minister Patrice Lumumba, who declared that maintenance of order was his government's first duty, met with his cabinet Tuesday as security forces patrolled the native districts of Leopoldville, Luluabourg and Coqhilhatville.

In Leopoldville some 2,000 public transport workers continued their strike to obtain a special independence bonus.

In Coquilhatville, where 10 persons were killed Monday in a clash between demonstrators and security troops, a localized general strike of all African workers continued. The workers were demanding pay increases.

Some clerks who had gone to their offices this morning left their jobs later under pressure from picketing strikers. No violence was reported.

One Bump Begets Riot For Congo

The Atlanta Journal
Atlanta Ga.
Sun. 7-3-60

LEOPOLDVILLE, Republic of Congo, July 2 (AP)—The Bakongo and the Bayaka tribes resumed their ancient feuding in Leopoldville Saturday, second day of the Congo's independence.

A large force of Congolese troops was rushed to the scene and put down the trouble.

More than a dozen Congolese were struck by clubs, rocks or fists and slightly injured, and troops brushed some others with the butts of their rifles. Some store windows were smashed.

Isolated fighting took place over a wide area but no shots were fired and the troops dispersed large crowds without using the tear gas they had ready.

The fighting broke out shortly before President Joseph Kasavubu and Premier Patrice Lumumba, on an independence victory tour of the capital, were scheduled to visit the area—the Ngiri Ngiri Commune.

* * *

SEVERAL THOUSAND Bakongo tribesmen, with women and children, were assembled outside a small African church when the trouble started. The area is inhabited by Bakongo and Bayaka.

A Bakongo and a Bayaka bumped into each other and started fighting. Fights spread all along the street. At one time nearly 100 were fighting.

Bakongos had planned a big welcome for President Kasavubu, who is head of the tribe in Leopoldville province.

As the Congolese troops moved to crush the fighting, members of the church congregation sang hymns.

Several times the troops loaded their rifles but it was not necessary to fire them.

Congo State Enjoys Quiet Independence

The Montgomery Advertiser
Montgomery, Ala.
Sun. 7-3-60

LEOPOLDVILLE, Republic of the Congo (AP)—West Africa's newest nation, Republic of Congo, celebrated its first full day of independence quietly Friday, apparently without the violence some had predicted.

The seeming peace between white man and black in this giant country which shed its subjection to Belgium Thursday contrasted sharply with fears recently expressed by some whites.

Rumors spread through Leopodville that some Congolese had picked out the white houses they intended to occupy on independence day, and had picked out the white women they intended to take as their wives.

President Joseph Kasavubu entertained the visiting delegations from about 60 countries at a luncheon at the palace of the nation, but almost everybody, including the host, left before the dessert to reach the football game at Baudouin Stadium in time.

Some 30,000 Congolese crowded into the stadium saw a strange mixture of tribal dancing of the type common here when Belgian settlers first arrived about 80 years ago, and a game of soccer between two Congolese teams. Belgians introduced the game.

United Press International

A blood-spattered Congolese is shown leaving Leopoldville carrying his possessions in a bundle in the wake of riots between rival native factions following a celebration of the Congo's independence from Belgium.

New Tribal Outbreak In Congo Injures 16

The Washington Post
Washington, D.C.
Mon. 7-4-60

LEOPOLDVILLE, Congo Republic, July 3—Renewed intertribal fighting today injured 16 Africans here in the Capital of the newly-independent Congo Republic. The violence came after a similar outbreak here Saturday saw 34 Africans hospitalized with injuries.

No deaths have been reported yet in the fighting between Bakongo tribesmen, who support President Joseph Kasavubu, and the Bayaka people.

Violence has been marring the country's independence since it first erupted Friday night, a day after the Congo was freed from Belgian rule.

A Belgian officer in charge of Congolese troops said today that hundreds of Africans had been detained by armed police for questioning after mass agitation in African neighborhoods over the week-end.

A dusk-to-dawn curfew was in force in African neighborhoods as armored cars rumbled through the streets here.

Meanwhile, delegates from Western countries, including the United States, were on hand to bid for footholds in the country's future. the United States already was offering 300 scholarships to native students.

KASAVUBU NAMED TO FORM REGIME

The New York Times

Lumumba Declares He Will Not Aid in Forming First Congo Government

New York

By HARRY GILROY

Special to The New York Times.

LEOPOLDVILLE, Belgian Congo, June 17—Joseph Kasavubu, president of the Association of the Lower Congo, was appointed today to form the first Congolese Government.

Walter Ganshof van der Meersch, the Belgian Resident Minister, made the appointment immediately after he had relieved Patrice Lumumba, president of one wing of the Congolese National Movement, of his mission of sounding out the political situation to see if he could assemble a broad national coalition.

M. Lumumba, in a bitter news conference tonight, said that the Minister had taken the chance away from him even though he ad promises of eigty-eight of the 137 votes in the House of Representatives. He said the Minister had done this because he had "orders from Brussels to block me."

Will Oppose Coalition

M. Lumumba declared he would not cooperate with other Congolese leaders—meaning M. Kasavubu—in forming a new government to rule the country after it achieves independence on June 30.

This apparently meant that M. Lumumba would go into opposition against the government. He has said frequently in recent weeks that no government could last two months against his opposition.

The sudden change of events here indicated that a deal that had been discussed between Congolese leaders for several days—to split the positions of Premier and Chief of State between M. Kasavubu and M. Lumumba—had finally fallen through.

In mid-afternoon Jason Sendwe, head of Balubakat, the association of Baluba tribes in Katanga, said that such a deal was definite and that he had been acting as go-between. He said that the only question open then was which position would be filled by each of the two leaders.

New Parliament Meets

Before M. Kasavubu's appointment was announced, the new Congo Parliament met today for the first time. The House of Representatives and the Senate, which has eighty-four members met in the National Palace, a new building that had been designed several years ago as the official residence for the Governor General of the Belgian Congo colony.

Governor General Henri A. Cornelis told each chamber of Parliament in separate speeches "The future is yours if you want it." He cautioned them that the attitude of other countries "will depend on your attitude, your national dignity, your cohesiveness."

M. Cornelis opened the session in the name of the Congolese Executive College and himself. The College consists of six leaders, including M. Lumumba and M. Kasavusu, who have supervised the transition to independence. From now until independence is proclaimed by Belgium on June 30, Parliament will deal mainly with procedural matters.

Associated Press

CONGOLESE LEADER: Joseph Kasavubu, president of the Association of the Lower Congo. He was appointed to form first Government of the Congolese.

Leaders Support Kasavubu

In his assignment to form the first Congolese government, M. Kasavubu appears to be backed by a considerable coalition of leaders who dislike M. Lumumba.

This coalition, calling itself the Cartel of the National Union, came into open last Tuesday after M. Lumumba was given his sounding-out mission by M. Ganshof van der Meersch.

A report from a source close to the Cartel said that yesterday the group met and decided to turn down offers from M. Lummuba and to go ahead with a plan to elect M. Kasavubu as chief of state and to nominate as Premier Jean Bolikango.

Menzies Ends U. S. Visit

Prime Minister Robert Gordon Menzies of Australia ended yesterday a three-week visit to the United States. He refused to comment on Far Eastern development before departing from New York International Airport at Idlewild, Queens.

YOUTHS SEE PERILS IN CONGO LIBERTY

The New York Times

Americans in Trans-Atlantic Forum Cite Schooling and Social Ills as Problems

Most people in the Belgian Congo have difficulty grasping what their coming independence means, a panelist of the New York Times Youth Forum said yesterday.

William Berlinghoff, a student at Holy Cross College, said he believed the vast majority of the Congolese were "still in a tribal state and not too well advanced toward civilization." He add: "The Congo will have a difficult time until it educates a much larger portion of its population."

Three American and three African students participated in a special trans-Atlantic hookup to discuss "Emerging Africa in a Free World."

Program Transcribed

A transcription of the program was broadcast yesterday by Radio Sation WQRX. Because of unfavorable atmospheric conditions, it was difficult to hear the questions and comments of the three English speaking Congolese students who were in a studio in Leopoldville.

Mr. Berlinghoff had prefaced his comments on the coming independence by noting that it had been hurried along at a rapid pace. Only two years ago, he said, the Belgians were talking in terms of independence within thirty more eyars. But since then the process has been speeded drastically, he said, and the Congo will be independent June 30.

Mr. Berlinghoff noted that the Africans had a few fine, well-educated leaders and "a small very active body of well-educated people" but that much education was needed for the vast majority.

Answering a Congolese student's question, George Banks of New York University said the United States should work independently of the former colonial powers in aiding African states.

"The United States' stake in Africa," he said, "is more than just keeping Communists from getting a foothold. It is encouraging the establishment of democratic governments by offering financial cooperation and some technical assistance with no strings attached. This should be done independently of the colonial powers. We should show the people we're not trying to buy them."

The real danger, according to Mr. Banks, is that the new states will breed Communists or Fascists if their many social ills are not cured by the new independent governments.

Sheila Grobe, student at Chatham College in Pittsburgh, answered a question about increased aid for new African states. "I certainly would be for it," she said. "We should back them economically, intellectually, emotionally and financially" so they will be on the Western side, she added.

Camille Liondjo, Bustave Mulena and Emmanuel Hitayezo, students at Lovanium University in Leopoldville, represented the Congo. Because of the transmission difficulties, the two groups were unable to have a back-and-forth discussion of issues.

The Congolese students were interested in technical and economic assistance for their country. They wondered how much itnerest there was in the Congo in the United States. And one of them asked if he would be accepted at all American universities. The negative answer to his question came after radio contact with the Congo group had been broken.

Dorothy Gordon was moderator for the New York end of the program. Prof. Jacques Van Roey of Louvanium, one of the two Congolese universities, was moderator in Leopoldville.

Fear for White Women

The New York Herald Tribune

Europeans Flee Congo As Independence Nears

By The Associated Press

LEOPOLDVILLE, Belgian Congo, June 1.—Air lines put on extra planes today to fly more and more Europeans from the Congo. Tension is rising to near panic among whites with the approach of independence.

Europeans are hastily packing off their wives and children in the wake of stepped up anti-white threats published by African newspapers.

Chief concern is for the white women. African propagandists are boasting they will be "ours" after independence June 30. The newspaper of one native nationalist movement said soon it would no longer be a crime for Africans to rape white women. European women have been receiving letters from Africans seeking mistresses after independence.

Near Stanleyville, Africans have circulated lists of whites "invited" to leave before Independence Day or be mistreated.

In the copper-rich Katanga Province, a weekly recently published three lists of names: Europeans ordered to leave at once, those who had to leave before June 30, and those allowed to stay afterward.

In several centers, Europeans have been visited by Congolese who explained politely that the house would be theirs after June 30—and could they look inside, please?

The Congo has been going through Parliamentary elections during the last few weeks, in some cases with intertribal violence. A Congo government is due to be appointed June 20. Belgian civil servants are scheduled to remain in the Congo at least for some time.

[It is not expected that any of the twenty-odd parties that have been formed will be able to command a clear parliamentary majority in the Congolese Chamber of Representatives. There is sepculation that Baudoin, King of the Belgians, may have to take a hand in formation of a coalition government. The leading political figures emerging are Patrice Lumumba, who heads the extreme wing of the National Congolese Movement; Albert Kalonji, who heads the moderate wing of the N. C. M., and Joseph Kasavuba, who heads the Association of the Lower Congo. Mr. Lumumba is regarded as the most powerful of the three.]

Belgium has been sending reinforcements of European troops to its military bases in the Congo, and relies on a force of about 25,000 well trained and so far faithful Africans to maintain order. They are commanded by Europeans.

Settlers Flee

KAMPALA, Uganda, June 1 (UPI).—Hundreds of white settlers streamed through Uganda from the Belgian Congo today, driven by fear of widespread racial violence when that sprawling African territory gains independence June 30.

White families, some who have lived in the Congo for two generations, passed through Uganda by rail, air, auto or river steamer on their way to new lives in Europe.

Many hal no passports or travel documents and only a minimum of personal possessions. This was all right for Belgian nationals, because their government has guaranteed their care.

"The trouble is, many stateless persons have been living in the Congo, too," a British immigration official said. "When they reach Uganda they are likely to be stuck here permanently, because no other country will have them."

Refugee Camps Set Up

Many Europeans still in the Congo, were laying in stocks of motor fuel for speedy departure if and when it becomes necessary.

The Uganda government also feared a flood of black refugee from the Congo once control and troops are removed to the Congo frontier to seal it off.

In orthern Rhodesia, troops were reported to have moved up to the Congo border.

Uganda-Congo border.

refugee camps along the setting up of Authorities in Portugese Angola were understood to have taken a similar measure recently in case violence develops.

LUMUMBA VICTOR ON CONGO REGIME

The New York Times
New York, N.Y.
Wed. 6/22/60

Named to Form Government After Rival Bloc's Defeat in Parliament Vote

By HARRY GILROY

Special to The New York Times.

LEOPOLDVILLE, Belgian Congo, June 21—Patrice Lumumba won his first test of strength in the Congolese Parliament today. As a result, he replaced Joseph Kasavubu as the man designated to form a Government of the Congo, which will become independent of Belgian June 30. P.5.C

Walter Ganshof van der Meersch, Belgian Resident Minister, said that he had withdrawn the mission to form a Government from M. Kasavubu after having discussed the Parliamentary vote with him. The Belgian authority said that he then had called in M. Lumumba, who had sent the Minister an offer to take over the mission.

M. Lumumba told newsmen that he would hold further talks with other leaders and present a list of cabinet ministers to M. Ganshof van der Meersch tomorrow night or Thursday morning.

Eearlier, the Lumumba bloc scored a significant victory by electing one of its members as President of the House of Representatives. He is Joseph Kasongo, who was originally elected to Parliament on the ticket of M. Lumumba's wing of the Congolese National Movement.

Confident Vote Seem Assured

M. Lumumba mustered 74 votes for M. Kasongo, while the Kasavubu bloc produced 58 for Jean Bolikango, former Assistant Commissioner of Information in the Belgian Colonial Service at Leopoldville. One vote was cast for another candidate and four members of the 137-member House were absent.

The immediate implication was that M. Lumumba could obtain a majority vote in the House that would be required for a vote of confidence if he were given the opportunity of presenting a Cabinet.

M. Lumumba said at a news conference after he had been named to form a Government that he felt that the attitude of the Belgian Government had changed and that he hoped for sincere friendship and economic cooperation with Belgium.

He said that he was sure the Congolese would welcome the attendance of King Baudouin of Belgium at the independence festival June 30.

Promises to Keep Order

M. Lumumba expressed the hope that Europeans would remain in the Congo "and help us." He said that he hoped that women and children who had left the Congo would return. He would "guarantee conditions in which order will prevail," the African leader added.

M. Kasavubu was given the task of forming a Government last Friday by the Belgian Resident Minister. This embittered M. Lumumba, who thought that he would get the assignment.

Negotiations yesterday and this morning between the blocs led by the two African leaders seemed to approach a settlement on the organization of a broadly based Government. However, a dispute prevailed over the question of which of the two leaders would get the post of chief of state.

Troop Movements Raise Fears

Special to The New York Times.

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia June 21—The conference of independent African states promised today to support any United Nations action that might be needed to preserve the "territorial integrity" of the Congo after it becomes independent.

In a formal communication cabled to Dag Hammarskjold, Secretary General of the United Nations, the conference said that African nations were "gravely concerned" about reports of troop movements along frontiers of the Congo's neighbors.

These neighbors were not named, but sources said that troop reports concerned British Southern Rhodesia and the Belgian trust territory of Ruanda-Urundi.

According to information disclosed at conference headquarters here, British colonial troops in Southern Rhodesia had advanced to positions near the Congo border, and in Ruanda-Urundi Belgian paratroops had been moved into the frontier region.

The communication to Mr. Hammarskjold did not state that the representatives of the indepedent states here feared an invasion by foreign troops, but the inference was clear.

Diplomatic sources outside the conference suggested that the reported troop movements might be a protective measure in the event that disturbances connected with the Congo's independence "spill over" into the neighboring regions.

The message to Mr. Hammarskjold was signed by Yilma Deressa, Ethiopian Minister of Foreign Affairs, who is president of the conference here. Mr. Deressa said that the conference had been assured by the Government of Belgium that "it realizes its responsibility for the defense of the Congo until June 30, 1960."

He called Mr. Hammarskjold that the inference was "prepared to support wholeheartedly any measures which you, in consultation with the Security Council of the nUited Nations, may deem necessary to assist the people of the Congo in preserving its territorial integrity after its independence.

Belgium Assures Parley

ADDIS ABABA, June 21 (Reuters)—The Belgian Government assured the conference of independent African states here today that troop movements along the borders of the Belgian Congo consisted of "normal exercises."

The New York Times June 22, 1960

As political leaders vied in the Belgian Congo (1), ther was concern over reports of movements of troops in Northern Rhodesia (2) and Ruanda-Urundi (3).

Lumumba Bloc Wins Test of Strength in the Congo

The New York Times
Wed. 6-22-60
New York, N.Y.
P.5.C

Associated Press

Joseph Kasavubu, left, and Patrice Lumumba greeting each other Monday in Leopoldville

Congo Gets Leaders Six Days Before Its Slated Independence

Wed: 6/29/60

Territory Will Be Free First Time In 50 Years

LEOPOLDVILLE, Belgian Congo (UPI)—Joseph Kasa Vubu, militant leader of the Abako political party which dominates the lower Congo area, was elected president of the Congo Friday.

Kasa Vubu, who called on Congolese tribesmen to wait for independence, with order and dignity, easily defeated his rival candidate, Jean Bolikango of the Puma party, 158-43.

The election of the 43-year-old Abako leader completed the Congolese Republic Legislature just six days before this vast central African territory becomes independent after more than 50 years of Belgian rule.

Earlier in the day, Nationalist Congolese movement leader Patrice Lumumba became the Congo's first premier when the parliamentary investiture proceedings were completed in the Senate.

Lumumba also retained the portfolio of defense minister and will control the 20,000 - strong Force Publique public security force which will be commanded by Europeans.

Only 80 of 137 members were present in the Chamber of Deputies when Lumumba was confirmed as premier. He received 74 votes, which was just enough for election. But it was believed at first that his government would be shaky.

CONGO ACTS TO BAR SECESSION THREAT

The N. Y. Times

Belgians Join Officials of New State in Bid to Halt Movement in Katagna

N. Y. N. Y.

By HARRY GILROY

Special to The New York Times.

LEOPOLDVILLE, Belgian Congo, June 28—Belgian and Congolese ministers combined efforts today, two days before independence for the new state, to check a separatist movement in the rich mining province of Katanga.

Walter Ganshof van der Meersch, the Belgian resident minister; Christophe Gbenye the Congo Minister of Interior, and Evariste Kimba, the Commerce Minister of Katanga Province, flew to Elisabethville, the capital of the province. Jason Sendwe, the president of the Balubakat party, an association of Baluba tribes in Katanga, accompanied them.

The Katanga situation began to appear serious Sunday when it was discovered that political tracts were being distributed urging that Katanga affiliate with Rhodesia. A Belgian reported to have strong connections in Rhodesia was questioned by the police.

Top Officials Confer

Last night top Belgian and Congolese officials met in Leopoldville. On the Belgian side were Foreign Minister Pierre Wigny; Auguste de Schryver, the African Affairs Minister, and M. Ganshof van der Meersch. The Congolese present were Premier Patrice Lumumba and Foreign Minister Justin Bomboko.

Premier Lumumba is reported to have said that firm action should be taken to curb the secessionist movement in Katanga. This attitude pleased the Belgian officials. M. Ganshof van der Meersch and the Congo ministers were sent to cope with the situation.

The mission sought the solution of two problems. One is that the Conakat party, the majority group in the Katanga Government, is talking of withdrawing its support for Premier Lumumba's Cabinet. The Conakat leader, Moise Tshombe, feels he received less than promised in the assignment of Cabinet posts.

Another source of discord is that the Conakat party holds all nine ministerial posts in the Katanga provincial Government.

A possible solution exists in a new Conakat offer to the Balubakat party. To give the Conakat party four of nine ministries. However, Balubakat officials say the offer is not enough and speak of setting up a province of their own.

Trouble Follows Trouble

It was the existence of the dissatisfaction in the Conakat and Balubakat parties that worried the Congolese and Belgian leaders when the pro-Rhodesian leaflets appeared.

Meanwhile, two political demonstrations by disappointed groups in Leopoldville ended in trouble. The Congolese police used tear gas grenades to break up one crowd and employed truncheons and rifle butts to halt the other group when the throwing of stones and beer bottles began.

One crowd of 1,500 seemed to be composed mostly of women when it approached the National Palace to demonstrate in favor of Albert Kalonji, the president of one wing of the Congolese National Movement, who was left out of the Government. The police directed the crowd to march away and seemed to have the mob under control when a new group of 500 demonstrators appeared.

These were followers of Jean Bolikango, a disappointed candidate for Chief of State. M. Bolikango tried to quiet the group, but the crowd began to yell old tribal grievances against other tribes. Then the police intervened.

African Snatches Sword From Belgian's Monarch

Atlanta Daily World

LEOPOLDVILLE, Congo —(UPI) — An exuberant African snatched Belgain King Baudouin's sword from his scabbard Wednesday and brandished it wildly in the aid in what security officers feared at first was an assassination attempt.

The bachelor monarch was riding in triumph from Ndjili airfield into Leopoldville for the Belgian Congo's independence celebrations Thursday when the nationalist darted past the steel - helmeted riot police lining the route and reached Baudouin's car.

He ripped the ceremonial sword from the King's belt, unsheathed it and waved it around with shouts of "Independence! Independence!" The riot police dived on him and fought him for several seconds before they overpowered him and knocked him to the ground.

A UPI corerspondent on the scene said it appeared the man never actually threatened the King. He contented himself with waving the sword gleefully around his head, ignoring the security men converging on him with drawn pistols.

The King paled but remained dignified and upright during the incident. The dense crowd, already half- blinded by the smoke from an artillery battery booming out a salute to the former ruler of the Belgian Congo, was stunned.

The Africans and Europeans in the crowd roared out their cheers for the King who retained his dignity throughout.

Atlanta, Ga.

The King arrived at Ndjili airport for a 24-hour stay to attend the independence celebrations after a flight from Brussels in a Belgian Air Force DC-6. He emerged from the plane tight - lipped and pale as if he had been ill en route and was welcomed by Congolese dignitaries.

Wed. 6/30/60

Baudouin stepped into an open car with President Joseph Kasa Vubu and began the drive into town between rows of African and European sightseers. Most of them cheered the King and the president but there were occasional shouts of "Long live independence!"

'Green' Officials Take Over Belgian Congo Government Today

Fla. Times Union

LEOPOLDVILLE, Belgian Congo, Thursday, June 30 (AP)—This rich old Belgian colony today becomes the independent Republic of Congo under the newest and least experienced Negro government on the African continent.

Its past is filled with the harsh and luxuriant story of 19th Century empire builders—such as the Stanley who found Dr. Livingston and knew just the words, he presumed, to win a niche in posterity. Its future is a hopeful gamble, in the widening surge of African nationalism, among 13 million people who may be only barely beyond cannibalism in some remoter quarters. As for its economic future, it is one of the greatest producers of uranium.

At 11 a.m., Baudouin, King of the Belgians, reads the proclamation of independence in the still incomplete Palace of the Nation. His act cuts the ties that have bound the Congo to Belgium for 80 years.

Thur. 6/30/60

The Belgian government has signed a treaty with the leaders of the new republic, however, to help them guide the nation to stability. A communique said the treaty envisaged mutual collaboration in the military, economic, financial, administrative, judical, cultural, scientific, social and educational spheres.

P. 62

It is believed the cooperation will include the future role of some Belgian civil servants, needed badly to make up for the lack of trained Congolese administrators.

The treaty still must be approved by the Congo parliament.

King Badouin arrived yesterday for the independence ceremonies. He was greeted at the airport by President Joseph Kasavubu and Prime Minister Patrice Lumumba, two leading Congolese politicians who sought to win control of the new government.

Lumumba was successful and formed a broad coalition not completely satisfactory to any of the new political parties. Kasavubu was elected president, keeping his strong Abako party in the coalition.

Jacksonville

Dressed in a gleaming white uniform, Baudouin stepped from his plane and shook hands with the two Congo leaders. He was smiling but serious. He reviewed an honor guard, greeted the members of the new government and the diplomatic corps and set out the hour-long drive to his residence.

Not until the motorcade approached the city did the King find large crowds along the road. Some waved and shouted. Others stood with arms folded. There was no bitterness, but many of those cheering obviously were just hailing the idea of independence no matter how uncertain the future might look.

Several dozen boys on motor scooters played havoc with the dignity of the occasion, weaving noisily in and out of the cars in the long motorcade.

Police with rifles guarded part of the route and the only incident was an attempt to make off with Baudouin's sword. A Congolese described by police as demented grabbed the sword from the back seat of the open car as Baudouin and Kasavubu drove by. The man took the handsome, gold-handled blade from its sheath and was brandishing it over his head when police sezed him and reclaimed the weapon.

Witnesses said there was no attempt to harm the King, who appeared unperturbed by the incident.

Representatives of about 60 nations were on hand for the independence celebrations. The U.S. and Soviet Union delegations arrived last night.

Robert D. Murphy, President Eisenhower's personal representative and head of the five-man American party, said: "We will watch with keen satisfaction as the newly independent Congo takes its important place in the community of nations."

Murphy was met at the airport by Prime Minister Lumumba. The Soviet delegation head, Mirzo Kakhmatov, was welcomed by an official from the Congolese protocol department.

CONGOLESE SIGN BELGIAN TREATY

N.Y. Times

N.Y., N.Y.

Agreement Covers Transfer of Property—Aid Reported Arranged for New Nation

Thur. 6/30/60

Special to The New York Times.

LEOPOLDVILLE, Belgian Congo, June 29—Premier Patrice Lumumba and Foreign Minister Justin Bomboko of the new republic of Congo and Premier Gaston Eyskens and Foreign Minister Pierre Wigny of Belgium signed a treaty of friendship and collaboration between the countries today.

The details of the treaty will be made public tomorrow when it is presented to a joint session of the two chambers of Congo, Parliament.

P. 3

M. Bomboko explained that the treaty legalized all aspects of the transfer of institutions and dealt with the future relationships of the two states.

He commented that the Congolese had obtained what they wanted in the treaty. He expressed the hope that the Belgians felt the same. Mr. Wigny confirmed the statement.

The treaty is understood to include provisions for Belgian aid to the Congo Republic, collaboration between the states in matters affecting personal rights and property, diplomatic representation of the Congo by Belguim while a foreign service is developed in the new state and the maintenance of Belgian military units here on a temporary basis for an unspecified period.

King Baudouin Arrives

King Baudouin of the Belgians received an enthusiastic welcome from the Congolese population when he arrived today for the ceremony marking the end of the Belgian colonial administration and the birth of the independent state.

Joseph Kasavubu, the Chief of State, and Premier Lumumba greeted the monarch at the airport. A crowd of more than 100,000 cheered and applauded as the King rode through the city. Dressed in a cream-colored uniform, he sat beside M. Kasavubu in an open car that moved at tne miles an hour along the broad central boulevard of the city.

The welcome to King Baudouin was slightly marred by a celebrating Congolese who snatched the King's sword and ran away crying with triumph. His joy was short-lived. He was knocked down by Congolese military guards and arrested.

Meanwhile, the Congo faced serious problems in the provinces of Katanga and Kasai. Walter Ganshof van der Meersch, the Belgian President Minister, returned at noon from a flying trip to Elisabethville, in Katanga Province, and Luluabourg, in the Kasai Province.

The Congo Interior Minister Christophe Gbenye, who left here yesterday with M. Ganshof van der Meersch, remained in Elisabethville to observe the effects of the political agreement worked out overnight between the two leading opposing groups—the Conakat and the Baluba kat parties. It was hoped the agreement would end interest in the movement to separate Katanga from the Congo and join it with Rhodesia.

Trouble Still Threatens

The threat of trouble in Kasai, where the Lulua and Baluba tribal groups appear ready to resort to violence because of their political rivalry, is now considered serious by the Congolese Government.

Premier Lumumba is reported by informed source to have sent word through his Interior Minister and through M. Ganshof asking Van der Meersch, the Belgian commander of the Congolese forces, to maintain firm control.

Leopoldville took on a festive air with the display of thousands of the new Congolese flags. They bear a large golden star on a field of dark blue with six small stars for the provinces running from the top to the bottom down the left side of the flag.

Tonight the curfew in native quarters, which for the last two months have been closed down at 9 P. M., was relaxed until midnight. It may be removed altogether tomorrow.

However, a new regulation forbade any meetings of more than five persons. This measure sought to halt growing political demonstrations of disappointed party groups that have led to several street battles in the last few days.

The proclamation ceremony tomorrow begins at 9:20 A. M. (4:20 A. M. Eastern Daylight Time) and ends at 11:45 A. M.

Associated Press Radiophotos

Mirzo R. Rakhmatov, foreground, chief of state of Tadzhik Republic of Soviet Union, and Dr. Ivan G. Kochergin, waving, deputy health minister, arriving yesterday in Leopoldville.

U. S. and Soviet Officials Arrive for Birth of State

N.Y.

N.Y.

Thur. 6/

Robert Murphy, representing President Eisenhower, being greeted Tuesday by Patrice Lumumba, Premier of new Congolese Government, after landing at Leopoldville airport.

Belgian Congo Province Facing Racial Problem

Advertiser Journal
Montgomery Ala
Feb 28 1960
180

BUKAVU, Belgian Congo (UPI) — Things aren't going so well in this provincial capital of the Belgian Congo. Business is slack, bank deposits are down, everyone wants to sell but nobody seems anxious to buy. And then there's the color bar.

This is a familiar story today as the whites in the Belgian Congo realize that whatever happened before 1959 belongs to the good old days. But it has a special point in the high, healthy uplands of the Kivu Province. For the mile-high Kivu is an African freak, a piece of Europe miraculously transposed to the equator.

There are forests here, but they are forests of pine and eucalyptus. There are lakes, as mauve and misty as any Scottish loch. The air is sharp and cool. It is a great climate for settlers — and separation of races.

Some strange law of nature has decreed that wherever African conditions are most European, the color bar is most intense. It is in temperature South Africa, breezy Southern Rhodesia and the green paradise of the Kenya highlands that there is strongest opposition to multi-racialism. The Kivu is no exception.

One need only speak to a Kivu colonist for five minutes to discover that he is the spiritual cousin of the South African nationalist. He has a profound contempt for the African — equalled only by the African's contempt for the Belgian settler.

Bukavu alone of Congo cities still maintain a color bar. Of course they don't call it that.

In a quietly elegant restaurant nearby that would not disgrace any European city, I watched the "each to his place" rule in operation. A tall young African in a dark suit and his girl friend dressed Congolese style in sarong and blouse walked out of the rain and sat down at a table.

The manager hurried up aghast and informed them that he had stopped serving food for the night. The African protested and pointed to the Europeans eating around him. The manager obviously did not want a scene. He pointed to the waterlogged terrace outside and said he would serve the African couple there, under an umbrella.

Today there are 14,000 Europeans in the Kivu Province, about 4,500 of them in Bukavu. No other part of the Congo has a higher proportion of permanent colonists. They own neat coffee, tea, pyrethrum and quinine plantations high in the cloud - capped hills around the lake. In town they run a multitude of small businesses just like the city folk back in Belgium. Many live in brightly

CONGO DELEGATES SPURN KASAVUBU

The New York Times

Africans at Brussels Talks Reject Abako Chief's Bid to Return to Control

Feb 2 5-60

By HARRY GILROY

Special to The New York Times.

BRUSSELS, Belgium, Feb. 4 —Joseph Kasavubu, president of the Association of the Lower Congo, failed today to win back the leadership of a group of delegates participating in the Congolese independence conference here. He lost control of the group after his walk-out Jan. 25.

Daniel Kanza, vice president of the association, declared he would also recommend to the general assembly of Abako, as the association is known, that Mr. Kasavubu be removed as its president.

He charged that M. Kasavubu was leading a campaign in the Lower Congo against the delegates who continued to attend the conference.

M. Kasavubu left the round-table conference after demanding that it constitute itself a convention to write a basic law for the new Congo state. He insisted also that a provisional Congolese Government be established in place of the Belgian colonial administration the moment the parley finished its work.

When M. Kasavubu made these demands he spoke not only as head of the Abako but also as president of the Abako cartel. This group consists of Abako, the Congo General Federation, the Abanzi party and a wing of the Congolese National Movement headed by Albert Kalonji.

The cartel sent eleven of the forty-four Congolese delegates attending the conference. When M. Kasavubu walked out two delegates of the cartel, both members of his own party, went with him, but they later returned. Mr. Kanza did not leave.

The Abako delegates explained that M. Kasavubu had made his statement at the conference and had walked out without consulting them. Five days later the Abako cartel of delegates elected Alphonse

Associated Press

CRITICIZED BY AIDE: Joseph Kasavubu, head of Lower Congo Association.

Nguvulu delegate of the People's party, as their president.

M. Kasavubu, after an absence from Brussels during which he had been reported to have visited Paris and Namur and Liege in Belgium, returned here for a meeting last night with the delegates of the cartel. He pleaded his case before them and met them again this morning.

He asserted that since he had not resigned as president of the group he should be allowed to resume its direction. Various delegates answered that M. Kasavubu's disappearance amounted to a resignation and that M. Nguvulu had been elected president in a proper manner.

The cartel then refused to restore him as its chief.

M. Gasavubu refused to comment on the decision. The conference was doing its work in committees so there was no opportunity for him to return to his place at the round-table.

DOUBTS ARE AIRED BY CONGO CHIEFS

The New York Times

Tribal Heads Fear Power of Rising Party Leaders After Independence

New York

By HARRY GILROY

Special to The New York Times.

BRUSSELS, Belgium, Feb. 5 —Tribal chiefs of the Belgian Congo indicated today that they were dubious about a complete break with Belgium June 30 when the colony is to receive independence.

They also expressed misgivings about some political leaders who are coming to the fore.

A news conference was held by nineteen of the chiefs and their right-hand men attending the Belgian-Congolese round-table conference that is planning for the Congo's independence. The chiefs said that 80 per cent of the Congo people still lived under the rule of tribal chiefs.

They attacked a statement by Patrice Lumumba, president of one wing of the Congolese National Movement, that he was forming a syndicate of parties, including tribal chiefs.

Chiefs Get Support

A representative of the National Progress party, Ignace Kanga, supported the chiefs in warning against placing too much emphasis on new combinations formed by M. Lumumba and other leaders.

The Progress party is a Congo-wide group formed from twenty-seven smaller parties. It won the largest vote in the December elections and is classed in Brussels as a "moderate" party.

The chiefs gave the impression that they were a formidable force. Their general theme was that independence should be approached under necessary conditions. Several expressed fear there would be trouble after independence.

Some chiefs denounced "political adventurers" who claimed to lead large parties. Several said they feared dictatorship might result when Belgium freed the Congo.

Chief Lwaka Bwanga from Kasai province, which is now under martial law beacuse of tribal conflict, said he felt an election would not establish a firm enough control in that region to achieve peace.

Chiefs Srtong in Rural Areas

The chiefs complained that the press tended to emphasize the views of the political parties, which are centered in the cities, but to ignore the views of tribal leaders, who have been conducting rural affairs for many years in concert with Belgian colonial officials.

Chief Luhina Mwenda-Munongo of Katanga province said that of 1,600,000 votes cast in the December elections, 1,300,000 came from rural areas, mostly ruled by the chiefs.

He said the chiefs were not opposed to independence or to economic development or social change. However, they feel they should play a major role in bringing their people up to the level of broad democratic institutions, he said.

He said that Belgium should probably have provided greater aid to the chiefs in their desire to see their people advance, but now he asked for continued cultural, scientific, administrative and economic assistance from Belgium.

He suggested that the person of King Baudouin might provide a basis for a personal union of Belgium and the Congo.

CONGOLESE FOUND FRIENDLY TO U. S.

The New York Times

Envoy to Belgium Optimistic After Tour but Sees Need for Aid to New State

New York

Feb 4-5-60

By HARRY GILROY

Special to The New York Times.

BRUSSELS, Belgium, April 4 —William A. M. Burden, United States Ambassador to Belgium, found a warm feeling toward the United States in the Belgian Congo during a three-week tour of the colony, which is to become independent June 30.

Mr. Burden returned to the United States embassy in Brussels Friday. Today he discussed his impressions of the Congo and indicated thtat he hoped the United States would be able to aid the new country, especially in education, technical training and agriculture.

In the Ambassador's view the important thing for Americans to keep in mind is that the Congolese are eager to establish contacts with other countries. He feels the Western powers should help the new state to become a member of the community of nations without delay.

Helping Hand Needed

He said he found that the Congolese were aware that they needed strong helping hands and he thought this should fit in naturally with the United States policy of aiding the development of new countries.

Mr. Burden visited Leopoldville, Luluabourg, Kamina, Kolwezi, Elisabethville, Bukavu, Goma and Stanleyville in the Congo, and Usumbura in Ruanda-Urundi, towns that are scattered over an area a third as large as the United States. The vastness of the country and its natural resources impressed him, he said.

The New York Times April 5, 1960

ASSISTANCE IS URGED: A United States diplomat favors aid to the Belgian Congo (diagonal shading).

He talked with Belgian officials and business men and with Congolese leaders. He said he had formed a high opinion of work done by the Belgians during their eighty years in the Congo. He reported a relative maturity among the Congolese leaders and he concluded that they could run the country.

Mr. Burden indicated that most Congolese leaders had expressed satisfaction over the program for independence that the Belgians worked out with them at the Brussels round-table conference in February.

Most Congolese showed a wish to have the Belgians stay at posts in the administration after independence day, he said.

Mr. Burden and Fulton Freeman, counselor of the embassy, who visited the Congo in February, both said they believed Congolese unity had been strengthened by recent indications of French and Rhodesian interest in the Congo.

French Cite Old Treaty

Last month the French Foreign Ministry reminded Belgium of the existence of an old treaty that gave France a first option on the Congo territory if it were ever to be sold.

The agreement was made in 1884 by the International Association of the Congo, an agency formed by King Leopold II of Belgium to administer the Congo, which at that time was his personal property. After taking over the Congo from King Leopold in 1908, Belgium assumed the association's obligations under the treaty.

Belgium has denied that France has any claim to the Congo as a result of the present independence agreement. France has said she would not press a claim.

About the same time Sir Roy Welensky, Prime Minister of the Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland, indicated that the door of the federation was open if Katanga Province wanted to join it. The province, in the southeastern Congo, adjoins Northern Rhodesia.

Mr. Burden indicated he thought the economic prospects for the new state were hopeful. In his view any "flight of capital" involves only the holdings of individual business men rather than the capital of big industries.

One recent large Belgian investment that he noticed was a modern electrolytic copper plant at Kolwezi in Katanga Province. It is to begin operations in two or three months and Congolese are being trained for technical jobs in the plant.

Congo Emergency Lifted

Luluabourg, Belgian Congo, April 4 (Reuters)—Authorities lifted today a state of emergency imposed in the central Kasai Province of the Belgian Congo Jan. 17 to deal with intertribal fighting. The clashes between Lulua and Baluba tribesmen caused more than 100 deaths.

Africa Chaos Feared When Congo Is Freed

The Atlanta Constitution

Atlanta, Ga.

By ARTHUR GAUSHON

LONDON (AP) — Fears spread among Westerners Sunday that the imminent independence of the Belgian Congo will spark feuds that could upset all Africa. Belgium is pledged to lower her flag in the Congo June 30.

Mon. 4-13-60

Election by the 13 million Congolese of a National Assembly has involved 110 political parties whose divisions largely follow the rivalries of old tribal societies.

This has led some officials gloomily to predict the 900,000-square-mile country may break up into a jigsaw puzzle of conflicting states.

CAPITAL MOVES OUT

There has been a major flight of capital.

A food crisis is reported building up.

Many of the Congo's 113,000 white persons are leaving.

Among the neighbor states, special security precautions are being hurried just in case trouble spills over the frontiers.

For months Portugal has been quietly building up her power in the colony of Angola, southwest of the Congo. Now 800 picked troops are on the high seas bound for the Angola frontier region.

RHODESIA MOVES TROOPS

Southward in the British-run Central African Federation, Rhodesian troops are being moved to the border, ostensibly for training. In the north, Sudanese and French Equatorial authorities are ready for anything.

Belgium's action six months ago in promising to turn over power to the Congolese June 30 has been criticized in private by her allies with colonial responsibilities.

Their complaint is that the world will be inclined to judge the ability of all Africans to govern themselves by the outcome of the Congo gamble.

In the 51 years of Belgian rule the country was run well enough, but the people never were trained to take over political power. British experts consider the six-month transition period too short.

BRIDGES NEW STATES

Three times as big as Texas, the Congo bridges the rising new states of black Africa in the West with the multiracial politically restive states in the South.

The danger of its Balkanization has deepened in the past few days.

The Abako party, a minority group, suddenly announced the formation of an independent government in the Leopoldville area in the west. This seemed like a bid to block the rise to national leadership of goateed Patrice Lumumba.

The nub of Congo politics takes the form of a struggle between young nationalists who dream of a strong union and tribal nationalists who want to keep their powers within a loose confederation.

There is no doubt in this diplomatic crossroads that the Soviet Union, Red China and their friends will make a big pitch for influence.

Lumumba May Be Congo's Leader

Atlanta Daily World, Atlanta, Ga.

Thur. 4/9/60 p.1

LEOPOLDVILLE, Belgian Congo (ANP)—Patrice Lumumba, 34-year-old former postal clerk and president of the powerful National Congolese Movement, seems destined to be the first African leader of government in the Belgian Congo when it becomes independent on June 30.

Incomplete returns show Lumumba's party has outdistanced its political rival, the Kasavubu-led Abako party, in the race for control of the 137-seat legislative council.

At press time, returns already assured Lumumba of 35 seats, with an additional 15 to 20 seats probably going to his favor on pre-election deals with minor parties.

Coincidentally, Lumumba is far ahead of his rivals, particularly Joseph Kasavubu, president of the Association of the Lower Congo, commonly known as Abako. Kasavubu, affectionately known to his follows as "Roi" (King of the Congo) has secured only 12 seats, the same as the moderate National Progress, and the leftist African Solidarity parties.

Before election, it has been thought that Kasavubu would be the popular candidate for the premiership of a free Congo.

Evan Albert Kaloni, who heads a splinter group of Lumumba's National Congolese Movement, failed to show signs of threatening the lead racked up by Lumumba. Kaloni's party had, at early reports, secured only eight seats.

Atlanta Ga.

Thus it would appear that Lumumba is the choice of Africans in the Congo for their first native premier. To be sure, the Belgians are not pleased with the choice, for they distrust Lumumba. In pre-election campaigning, Lumumba urged "immediate independence" of the Congo, instead of waiting until the agreed upon date of June 30.

Thur. 6/9/60

Like many another African leader who has ascended to a position as premier or president of his country, Lumumba possesses what seems to be a prime requisite, in Africa, for the job. He has served a prison term. As a mater of fact, he has served two terms. One in 1956 for embezzlement of postal funds, and in 1959, for incitement of riots, the later a political issue which seems to be the criteria for eventual leadership of one's people.

Thus, while Kasavubu is hailed as the "King of the Congo," Lumumba is widely looked upon and called "the Messiah of Congolese freedom." Of the two, the Belgians prefer Kasavubu, whom they think will provide a more responsible government.

'King of the Congo'

Joseph Kasabuvu

AMONG the delegates attending the conference on the Belgian Congo in Brussels is a small, rotund man named Joseph Kasavubu. In the Belgian Congo, which is moving toward new statehood, he is regarded as the likeliest candidate for the Presidency once independence is achieved.

Man in the News

On home ground, wherever his cream-and-blue American car stops — in the swirling dust of Leopoldville's African quarters or among the straw-roofed huts of a Lower Congo village—it draws smiling crowds of Bakongo tribesmen and shouts: "Ruau! Ruau!" "ruau" is a mispronounciation of "roi," the French word for king.

Many Belgians consider him an extremist and an agitator. He was once arrested for "exciting Africans to violence" but there is something gentle in his demeanor.

M. Kasavubu supports the principle of non-violence of the late Mohandas K. Gandhi. He is a bad public speaker and he reads French speeches in a halting, squeaky voice in his own Kikongo language. He is soft-spoken and produces a soothing effect on easily aroused African tempers.

Studied for Priesthood

Taking the Christian name of Joseph when he was baptized in 1925, young Kasabuvu got a Roman Catholic upbringing and almost became a priest. Missionaries were his teachers and he later studied at the Seminaries of Mbata-Kiela and Kabwe. But in his final year of training for the priesthood he changed his mind and became a lay teacher. Later he became a Protestant.

Kasavubu worked as a teacher, an agronomist, a bookkeeper and a civil servant in the colonial administration. But he found his most important role when in 1955 he was elected president of Abako, the ethno-cultural Association of the Lower Landu, rapidly became a political machine under M. Kasavubu's direction. It swept the first municipal elections in Leopoldville in 1957 and got seven out of the eight available burgomaster seats. Filling the one in the Dendale district was M. Kasavubu, who in his inaugural speech on Jan. 1, 1958, made no bones about his opinion that Belgian Congo should join the broadening current towards African independence.

His followers call him Ruau (Roi, or king).

His speech got him a strong official reprimand that established him further as the spearhead of Congolese nationalism.

Jan. 4, 1959, was a fateful day for M. Kasabuvu. An Abako meeting to hear a report on a nationalist congress in Ghana was forbidden by the colonial administration. A mob assembled and M. Kasavubu tried to soothe it.

He thought he had calmed them. But the mob assembled again in the afternoon. M. Kasavubu was not there to caution it and violence erupted in Leopoldville. The mob surged towards the white areas of the city. The police and military forces that stopped them killed a reported 252 Africans in three days.

M. Kasavubu was arrested after hiding for three days. He remained in prison for two months.

When released he continued his nationalist efforts. His successful boycott of the recent municipal elections sank the Belgian schedule for gradual independence.

He Is No Separatist

M. Kasavubu is not a separatist, who wants to go it alone with his Bakongo, dreaming of the reconstitution of the seventeenth century Congo Empire. He has convinced his followers that they must join forces with nationalists from the Upper Congo to fight for a federal Congo in which Bakongo autonomy will be guaranteed.

M. Kasaburu seems eminently suited to the one post lost on Jan. 1—that of burgomaster of Dendale. He lost it because his party abstained from voting.

Yet soon his wife and his six children may leave their modest bungalow in Leopoldville's African city to install themselves in Kalina in the splendid solemnity of the administrative palaces. The top jobs may be his for the picking. He will certainly b boss of the Lower Congo.

Then the real test of strength will come to the unassuming man with the twinkling eyes and shy smile. That is to govern his "Union of Central African Republics"—the rich, immensely big territory with modern cities and incredibly backward interior, split by regional and ethnic conflicts, tribal was and other forces hard to contain.

CONGO FREEDOM SET FOR JUNE 30

Africans and Belgians Agree on Independence Date

By HARRY GILROY

Special to The New York Times.

BRUSSELS, Belgium, Jan. 27—Belgian and Congolese leaders agreed today that the Belgian Congo would become independent June 30.

Auguste de Schryver, Belgian Minister of the Congo, proposed this date to a round-table conference of Congolese delegates and members of the Belgium Government and Parliament.

The African conferees had agreed to press for June 1 as independence day. After a recess, however, they accepted the Belgian proposal.

Joseph Kasavubu, president of the Association of the Lower Congo (Abako), did not attend the meeting. A Belgian Government source said he left Brussels last night.

M. Kasavubu walked out of the conference Monday when the other delegates would not accept his view that they had the power to establish the new Congolese state without delay.

The rest of the conferees, both African and Belgian, are proceeding on the basis that the Belgian Parliament will enact laws recommended by the conference for setting up the new nation.

Daniel Kanza, vice-president of the Abako, said today that M. Kasavubu had stated his view and left the conference by his own decision and that the Abako delegates disagreed with him.

The departure of M. Kasavubu led to speculation that he might return to the Congo to stir his follwers to demand immediate independence.

Patrice Lumumba, president of one wing of the Congolese National Movement, extended his thanks at the conference to the Belgian people for his release from prison two days ago and his admission to the conference. He noted that there were "other political prisoners" in the Congo and he called for a general amnesty.

Associated Press

Patrice Lumumba at Congo conference in Brussels.

The New York Times Jan. 28, 1960

M. Lumumba said he was participating in the work of the conference without rancor. He ended by declaring:

"All of us together, in a union of hearts and sentiments, are working to build a powerful and proud Congolese state in the center of black Africa."

M. de Schryver explained to the conference that the June 30 date for independence was based on the following timetable:

Feb. 15—Recommendations by conference on the structure of the new state and its electoral system.

Feb. 17—Government appraisal of the recommendations.

March 8—Introduction of the necessary bills in Parliament.

March 24—Vote on the bills in Parliament.

April 5—Filing of lists of candidates in the Congo for provincial elections and for the national Chamber of Deputies.

April 15—Start of the election campaign.

May 16—Election of the provincial and national Chambers of Deputies.

June 15—Election of the national Senate.

June 20—Constitution of the Government.

June 30—Meeting of Parliament and the proclamation of independence.

Jean Bolikango of the Assoreco party in the Congo asked M. de Schryver to have the Government proclaim that the date of independence would not be altered. M. de Schryver promised that the Government would see that the date was kept.

SEETHING CONTINENT: The Belgian Congo (1) will become independent June 30. Most of the Europeans at conference for Kenya (2) accept the inevitability of African rule. Prime Minister Macmillan reached South Africa (3) on his tour.

BRUSSELS TALKS STIR CONGO HOPES

Africans Seem Convinced That Meeting Will Lead to Ultimate Self-Rule

By HARRY GILROY

Special to The New York Times.

BRUSSELS, Belgium, Jan. 22—A third day of round-table discussions by African leaders of the Belgian Congo and Belgian officials seemingly convinced the Congolese that the outcome of the conference would be laws establishing self-rule in their homeland.

Belgium's Minister of the Congo, August de Schryver, pledged at the end of today's session that the Government would put before Parliament proposals for laws favored by the majority of the conferees. He added that the Cabinet would stand or fall on its ability to put these laws into effect.

The Congolese delegates indicated that they would submit an agenda Monday for subsequent talks. They were reliably reported to have three points in mind: independence, elections and institutions.

Belgian Opposition Ahead

This agenda faces opposition from the Belgians. M. de Schryver has indicated he feels the order of topics should be reversed: institutions, elections and, finally, a Congolese Government. His idea is that the conference should agree on the type of Government before thinking about proclaiming the Congo's independence.

There was satisfaction, however, among the conferees on both sides that the meeting had got through its first stage without causing anyone to walk out.

The delegates from a wing of the National Congolese Movement announced this morning that they would withdraw from the conference until their president, Patrice Lumumba, was released from a Congo jail and brought to the meeting. However, these delegates continued to atend.

Sentenced to 6 Months

M. Lumumba was sentenced yesterday at Stanleyville in the Congo to six months in prison on a charge that he made an inflammatory speech that began a riot in which twenty persons died.

Joseph Mbuyi of M. Lumumba's party made a plea for M. Lumumba's attendance and was supported by Albert Spinoy, Socialist member of the Belgian Parliament .

The proposal that M. Lumumba attend was supported also by Jean Bolikango, a Congolese official in the information service at Leopoldville and a delegate here of the Assoreco party, and by Joseph Kasavubu, president of the Association of the Lower Congo, or Abako.

M. Kasavubu's role at the conference as the leading spokesman for immediate independence made his support of M. Lumumba especially noteworthy. His appeal was seen as additionally significant because some rivalry has existed between the two men.

M. de Schryver suggested that M. Lumumba might file an appeal against the judgment. He added that authorities in the Congo had been asked to find what M. Lumumba's intentions were regarding an appeal.

Penalty Criticized

Another member of M. Lumumba's party, Joseph Kasongo, complained that the legal action taken against his leader exceeded that taken against others guilty of the "same so-called faults."

Alphonse Ilunga of the National Progress party intervened to suggest that the leader of the other wing of the National Congolese Movement, Albert Kalonji, might be considered to merit prison for saying that the Congo administration was deficient.

M. Kalonji, who has aligned his wing of his party with the Abako, sat at the table as his conduct was discussed. He made no comment.

The conference heard a declaration from Chief Luhina MMwenda Munongo that the traditional tribal leaders of the Congo were for independence but that they did not want to see it lead to a dictatorial regime.

CONGO CAUTIONED ON ITS ECONOMY

Delegates Planning Freedom Urged to Take Measures to Insure Stability

By HARRY GILROY

Special to The New York Times.

BRUSSELS, Belgium, Feb. 16—Delegates from the Belgian Congo who are planning the independence of their country are concerned over the need to take measures ton insure the financial stability of the new state.

Auguste de Schryver, Belgium's Minister of the Congo, has emphasized that independence promised for June 30, would not amount to much if it coincided with an economic depression and a drop in the standard of living for the Congolese.

A committee of delegates at the round-table conference here is grappling with the problem. It is studying an analysis by Raymond Scheyven, Minister of Economic and Financial Affairs of the Congo, delivered privately Sunday and made public today.

Indonesian Example Cited

M. Scheyven warned the delegates to avoid the precedent of Indonesia, which expelled nearly all the Dutch technicians and nationalized capital investments after gaining independence.

He said that the output of Indonesia's principal products last year were still below the output for the pre-war period and that the country still was not able to train enough technicians.

M. Scheyvan said that United Nations figures showed the Belgian Congo had developed industrially faster than other African countries but that it was still underdeveloped.

He pointed out that 82 per cent of the Congo's exports were raw materials and agricultural products. He observed that these products yielded a fluctuating income. For instance, copper brought forty cents a pound in 1956 and twenty-five cents in 1958. A broader industrial base is needed for the country's economy, he said.

At the same time, budget expenses are rising facter than receipts. This year the Congo Government's income will be $246,000,000 and its expenses are estimated to $296,000,000. Belgium will meet the deficit.

Balanced Budget Urged

He warned the Congolese that if they wanted credit from international organizations or private investors they would have to balance their regular budget.

He suggested that the new Government go slow about collecting heavy taxes from businesses in their first years of development. He said the Belgian Government had found new investors for the Congo by giving exemption from some taxes for the first five years.

M. Scheyven said the Congo would also need an extraordinary budget for development. He said he was now trying to borrow funds for this budget.

He reported that the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development would agree to lend $40,000,000, of which $10,000,000 would be available this year. He said he had borrowed $20,000,000 on the United States market.

He urged that a five-year plan be established for Congo development and that the Congolese and Belgians cooperate in drawing up the plan.

The main project to be pushed, M. Scheyven said, is that of a power dam on the Congo River at Inga. He announced a plan for a Congolese-Belgian development company under which each country would supply $20,000,000 in the first year without interest. The company could then borrow $40,000,000 more at 5 per cent, he said.

"Iron-Fisted" Rulers Are Getting Out Of Africa--Fast

13,000,000 In Big, Rich Congo Await Day Of Freedom

Special to Journal and Guide

LEOPOLDVILLE, Belgian Congo—Africa's largest and potentially richest territory becomes independent June 30 against a backdrop of flight and fear among thosuands of white residents.

The territory is the 905,000 square mile Belgian Congo, one of America's principal suppliers of uranium. Most westerners — except for the handful of Europeans who settled it — know so little about the Congo they are inclined to associate only exotic jungle drums and grade-B adventure movies with the huge land.

BUT SOME whites, aware of the gathering force of African nationalism and of the uranium, diamonds, zinc, tin and cobalt that pack the Congo subsoil are awaiting June 30th with fear.

With less than three weeks to go before the 13,000,000 Congolese take over their own government, many of the 115,000 white settlers are near panic and in fear of native violence. Some of the whites have "ruled with an iron fist" and have fears that natives might want "revenge."

THE MASS EXODUS of independent white settlers—who have booked solid virtually every means of transportation out of the Congo in the next two months—is an indication of their belief that Europeans will have a very limited future in the mineral-rich Congo.

The main fear, some whites say, is that rivalries among the 60 odd tribes and growing resentment against whites will erupt into massacres.

CONGOLESE riots against police in Leopoldville, Elizabethville and Stanleyville in the past year-and-a-half have been as bloody as any of those in South Africa or in Kenya during days of Mau Mau terrorism.

Last month during the Congo's first legislative election a "state of military occupation" was declared in Leopoldville because of the threat of open warfare between rival tribes. Belgian troops were flown in to help the 20,000 colonial troops "maintain order" during the transfer of power to the new state.

THE CONGO was annexed by Belgium in 1908. It never was a colony in the traditional sense because Belgium did not encourage settlers. At the peak of her "paternal" rule in mid-1958 there were only 120,000 Europeans in the area which is one-third the size of the United States and three times the size of Texas. Among the Europeans were 5,000 independent settlers.

Most of the Belgians have transferred their money to banks in Belgium if, indeed, they are not already packing up in anticipation of post-independence day violence.

18a 1960 CONGO

Assaulted U. S. Airmen Are Flown to Leopoldville

United Press International Radiophoto

A crewman of a United States Globemaster is taken by stretcher from plane on arriving in Leopoldville, the Congo. He and seven other American crew members and two Canadians were beaten by Congolese troops Saturday at Stanleyville after landing at airport.

United Press International Radiophoto

Other members of the crew, wearing bandages, are led away after arriving at Leopoldville airport. The airmen were rescued from the attack in Stanleyville by Ethiopian officers.

LUMUMBA EASES CONGO 'SPY HUNT'

The New York Times

Acts to Moderate Hostility Against Whites in Talk to Stanleyville Crowd

N. Y. Times Tues. 8-30-60

By THOMAS F. BRADY

Special to The New York Times.

STANLEYVILLE, the Congo, Aug. 29—Premier Patrice Lumumba appeared to be changing his dominant theme here today after weeks of violent incitement of the Congolese to hunt "Belgian spies."

P. 3

His move to moderate the anti-white actions of his people followed a sharp reaction to the beating here Saturday of eight United States airmen and two Canadian technicians.

In a speech at the Stanleyville sports stadium late yesterday, Mr. Lumumba said to about 2,000 Congolese:

"You must welcome white men who come to help us and work with us. You must take them into your huts and give them beer and bread. If you do not have European beer, give them banana beer. If you do not have European bread, give them manioc [bread made from the rootstocks of the cassava plant]. But make them welcome."

He made no mention of the brutalities of Saturday, when thousands of Stanleyville Congolese watched their policemen and soldiers beat the Americans and Canadians with rifle butts and heavy belts.

Congo General Apologizes

Gen. Victor Lundula, highest ranking officer of the Congo Army, visited the injured Americans and Canadians in a hospital here before their departure for Leopoldville. He expressed his regret over what had happened.

The Stanleyville incident occurred as the group was waiting for Premier Lumumba to land on a flight from Leopoldville. Less than an hour later Mr. Lumumba was telling the members of the crowd that they should dance the cha cha with Europeans.

The Premier had outlined his speech to a French newsman on the plane coming from Leopoldville and there is reason to believe that he had decided to change the tone of his public utterances before he learned of the Stanleyville beatings.

Premier Lumumba, in his talk at the stadium, pointed to Belgian woman standing near him and told the crowd she was married to a Congolese and had proved her friendship for the Congolese people.

Then he called out of the crowd a Belgian and his wife and told the crowd they were members of the Congolese National Movement, Mr. Lumumba's party, and had aided him in the "struggle for independence."

Lumumba Draws Cheers

The crowd cheered. Mr. Lumumba asked the Belgian if he had ever been molested by Congolese. The Belgian replied, "no, only by Europeans."

Mr. Lumumba said to the crowd, "I invite you to applaud."

The crowd cheered.

Mr. Lumumba cried, "Are you against the whites?"

The crowd roared, "No!"

The Premier asked, "Have you tried to make Europeans leave?"

The crowd again roared, "No!"

"You must never hate Europeans, but only exploitation," Mr. Lumumba said. "Those who come to help you are your friends—Belgians, French, British, Spanish, American, Russian. Work with them hand in hand. The mission of all of us is human civilization."

This was in sharp contrast with recent demands by Mr. Lumumba that all white troops quit the Congo.

Stanleyville is Premier Lumumba's political stronghold and his speech had a noticeable effect on the people. The tension of recent days relaxed as the crowd left the stadium and scattered whites present were repeatedly shaken by the hand by smiling Congolese.

In his speech, Premier Lumumba called for volunteers to invade secessionist Katanga Province.

When he asked, "Who is ready to march to Katanga?" the crowd roared approval and nearly all the men and some of the women raised their hands. Among the volunteers was Omar Oussedik, a representative of the rebel Provisional Government of Algeria. He normally is the representative of the Algerian rebels in Guinea.

Five other volunteers were refugees from Katanga led by Prosper Ilunga Muamba, president of the Balubakat opposition in Katanga.

Mr. Lumumba cried, "Tshombe to the gallows!" and the crowd roared in repetition, "Tshombe to the gallows!" Moise Tshombe is President of Katanga.

Stanleyville is separated from the Katanga border by more than 600 miles of Jungle. An invasion appears to present serious logistic problems for Premier Lumumba's undisciplined army.

Nevertheless, reports from Katanga indicate that the threat is causing some alarm there.

Premier Lumumba also urged the Congolese to work for the "economic liberation" of the Congo. He cited the Soviet Union and the United States as examples of nations that had achieved such liberation from a state of under-development.

Settlers in America, he said, had found "one African was worth five American Indians as a worker." As a consequence he continued, "half a million Congolese were deported as slaves, though half of them died en route across the Atlantic."

"Africans built America and developed America," he continued. "They are the reason America has become a great world power. If Africans could achieve that in the New World they can achieve it in their own continent. That is what we must do here."

Mr. Lumumba announced a decision to suppress the institution of chieftaincy and replace the tribal chiefs by mayors to be chosen by communal elections.

Lumumba Wants UN 'Out', Too!

The Pittsburgh Courier

Congo Not 'Falling Apart'; Invasion of Katanga Near

Pittsburgh Pa.

Sat. 9-3-60

By CECIL GREGORY
(Special to the Courier)

LEOPOLDVILLE, Congo—With the so-called "Mining State" of the recaltricant Albert Kalonji invested via the bloodless advance of Congo troops in Kasai Province the predicted, falling apart of this fledging nation was not in evidence at week's end.

In fact, there was strong evidence that the Congolese Army, still loyal to Primier Patrice Lumumba, would probably clash with the Belgian-led troops of the rebel Moise Tshombe in Kasai Province.

INasmuch as the recent special Security Council session has washed United Nations' hands or internal Congo affairs, observers here feel that the Lumumba government now has a "green light" to move into Katanga.

Before the week is out, the last Belgian troops are expected to leave Katanga. This action will remove the last barrier between Lumumba and Tshombe provided that outside forces do not intervene.

■

BACK IN New York, Antoine Gizenga, deputy Congo Premier had set the record straight by pointing out to the UN the Congo did not need Soviet military aid to regain control of Katanga. He asserted that Africans, alone would do the job.

Mr. Gizenga, who arrived here late last week from New York predicted the Tshombe's rump regime would "collapse" as soon as the last Belgian troops left Katanga. He further asserted that if the Congo needs outside aid it will turn to its sister African states for same.

The ÚN, in the meantime, has set up an advisory committee of representatives from Mali, the United Arab Republic, Tunisia, Sudan, Pakistan, Morocco, Liberia, Ireland, Indonesia, India Ghana, Guinea, Ethiopia, and Canada. Mr. Gizenga has urged that the group hold its meetings here in Leopoldsville.

But, at week's end Premier Lumumba made it known in no uncertain terms that he wanted the UN to get out of the Congo as soon as the Belgain troops leave. Lumumba maintains that the Congo is capable of running its own affairs and maintaining order withoout outside interference.

—FIFTY YEARS OF PROGRESS—

PATRICE LUMUMBA
...for his army a green light?

ALBERT KALONJI
...for Kasai a bloodless defeat

Congo Federation Sought By Leopoldville Province

Courier Journal
Louisville, Ky
Aug. 8, 1960

Lumumba Ends Tour; Dissent Shakes Regime

Leopoldville, The Congo, Aug. 8 (AP)—Premier Patrice Lumumba came home Monday night to find his government shaken by dissent and parading youths shouting "Down with Lumumba."

Returning from a two-week tour of North America and Africa, Lumumba learned the Leopoldville capital province had joined secessionist Katanga in demanding strong autonomy for the Congo's six provinces within a federation to replace his central regime.

"I made an excellent and fruitful trip to the United States as well as to Africa," Lumumba told newsmen at the airport. "All I can tell you is that Africa from east to west and from north to south is on the side of the Congo Government."

Belgians Still There

He said he would first have to talk with other members of his regime before making additional statements.

Lumumba returned to find still unsatisfied his demands of two weeks ago that all Belgian troops leave the country and Baron Jean van den Bosch, head of the Belgian mission, go with them.

Before leaving Accra, the capital of Ghana, Lumumba announced he and Ghana President Kwame Nkrumah had agreed to establish a combined high command to speed the withdrawal of Belgian troops from this former Belgian colony if the United Nations fails.

U. N. Gets Demands

With economic distress spreading, the influential Bakongo tribesmen of western Congo were reported rising in indignation against Lumumba's leadership. Belgian sources said separatist movements were growing in Kasai Province to the east and Equator Province to the northwest.

The main concern of Lumumba has been the defiance of rich Katanga Province, which has declared itself independent of his rule. But now Katanga's cry for a federation of self-ruling provinces was taken up by Leopoldville Province, which controls the lower Congo.

Gaston Dioni, vice-president of the province, announced the provincial government had sent its demand for a federation of Leopoldville, Oriental, Equator, Kasai, Kivu, and Katanga provinces to the United Nations Security Council.

The youth demonstrations against Lumumba were led by Jabako, the youth organization of Congo President Joseph Kasavubu, a political foe of the Premier.

Tshombe Head Of State

In Elisabethville, the Katanga Assembly Monday elected Premier Moise Tshombe head of state.

Tshombe's election as head of state is significant in that it probably clears the way for his right-hand man, Godefroid Munongo, Interior Minister, to become premier of this rich, secessionist province. Tshombe now holds both posts.

It is not yet known what added powers he gets as head of state.

Associated Press Wirephoto Map

SEPARATIST FEELING GROWS . . . Leopoldville and Katanga provinces, shaded, are leading separatist movements for federation in the Congo. Feeling also is growing in Equator and Kasai provinces, underlined.

Katanga Allows Limited Entry

The Atlanta Constitution
Atlanta, Ga.
Wed. 8-10-60

By The Associated Press

Provincial Premier Moise Tshombe has relaxed his threat of war and agreed conditionally to let U.N. forces replace Belgian soldiers in rebellious Katanga province.

The tentative capitulation to the U.N. came Tuesday as Congo Premier Patrice Lumumba threatened to invade Katanga with his own and other African troops.

Tshombe made it clear, however, he wants Katanga to remain an independent state completely free from Lumumba's central government.

His tentative agerement to go along with the U.N. demand that Belgium get its troops out of the province immediately was conditioned by demands that would, in effect, retain the status quo in Katanga except for the switch in police forces.

DELAYS RETURN

At the U.N. in New York, Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold briefly delayed his return to the Congo to confer with the Belgian U.N. delegation on removal of soldiers from Katanga. Hammarskjold's authority to act in Katanga was spelled out in a Security Council resolution adopted after overnight debate.

Belgium bowed to the U.N. order with the stipulation that withdrawal of its troops will come only as the safety of Belgian civilians in the province is assured.

EXTENT OF FEELING

But the extent of Brussel's feeling about developments were measured in a government announcement that Belgium is cutting its NATO commitments as a result of the Congo crisis.

Prime Minister Gaston Eyskens said Belgium resented a lack of support from Western allies in the U.N. Security Council debates. He said the government plans to cut its cost of maintaining Belgian forces in Germany and hand back the mid-African Ruanda Urundi trusteeship to the United Nations. Loss of Kamina military base in Katanga made it impossible to supply Belgian forces in the Ruanda trusteeship, Eyskens said.

Lumumba's threat to invade Katanga came after he declared a state of emergency in the new nation, called the fledgling Congo army back to regular duty and ordered the closing of Belgium's seven consulates.

He said other African nations are ready to help him drive the Belgians out of Katanga and that Ghana and Guinea have offered to send in troops to help him wage war on Katanga if necessary.

Katanga officials have said their 4,000 troops could handle Lumumba's Congo army, whose mutiny shortly after independence June 30 touched off the Congo crisis.

Belgian soldiers delivered a truckload of old single-shot Mauser rifles and ammunition to Elisabethville, capital of Katanga province, and at first said they were to be distributed to tribal chiefs. They were not distributed, however.

U.N. Gains Entry Right To Katanga

The Montgomery Advertiser
Montgomery, Ala.
Wed. 8-10-60

Agreement Hinges On Nine Conditions; Move Bars Lumumba

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo (AP)—Katanga's rebellious government agreed conditionally Tuesday to admit the U.N. soldiers it once barred with a threat of war. But Congo Premier Patrice Lumumba threatened to invade Katanga province with his own and other African soldiers.

The tentative capitulation to the U.N. was announced by provincial Premier Moise Tshombe at his capital, Elisabethville. He listed nine conditions, primarily aimed at seeing that Lumumba's central government is not given a hand in Katanga affairs.

RICH PROVINCE

The break came on a day which saw:

1. A U.N. Security Council order for immediate replacement of Belgian soldiers in the rich, independence-minded province with units from the U.N. forces of Swedish Maj. Gen. Carl von Horn.

2. A Belgian assent to the order, with qualification as to the time of the Belgian withdrawal. A Brussels official said Belgium intends to comply fully, but the withdrawal will come only as the safety of Belgian civilians is assured.

3. A declaration by Lumumba's government of a state of emergency—a modified form of martial law. Though U.N. soldiers are on the job in five of the Congo's six provinces, Lumumba called the fledgling, once-mutinous Congolese army back to regular duty and gave it "all power . . . to restore order." He said, "The army will arrest anybody, black or white, who disturbs order in the Congo."

FLAG LOWERING

4. Final lowering of Belgium's red, yellow and black flag over the Belgian embassy in Leopoldville. This signalled the departure —to Congolese jeers—of Belgian Ambassador Jean Van den Bosch, whom Lumumba's government had denounced as an unwanted meddler in Congolese affairs.

5. Arrival in Elisabethville of a truckload of old single-shot Mauser rifles and boxes of ammunition obtained by Tshombe as gifts for 200 of Katanga's tribal chieftains. Belgian soldiers unloaded the rifles as the chiefs waited. The government decided later, however, not to issue them at present.

Van den Bosch, who had watched the turbulent birth pains of the Congo with a faint aristocratic smile, was accused by the Congolese government of fomenting unrest and of working for the breakup of the new nation, which Belgium freed June 30.

The flag of Belgium slid down the mast of the gleaming white embassy building shortly before Van den Bosch left his post.

Some Belgian women cried.

Van den Bosch left the embassy to screams of derision and insult heaped upon him by the crowd of Congolese. A stone and several pieces of wood were thrown at his car.

He left the country silently aboard a private speedboat that took him across the brown Congo River to Brazzaville, in the former French Congo. He arranged to fly from there to Brussels.

Last week Tshombe issued a call for the mobilization of all Katanga's able bodied men and declared U.N. soldiers, scheduled to enter Saturday, would have to fight to get in. A 20-man advance party was barred from leaving its plane at Elisabethville airport Friday.

TROOP MOVEMENT

Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold thereupon canceled plans for the troop movement and dropped the case back in the Security Council's lap with a warning that the Congo crisis might spark a global war.

Tshombe said, before entering a cabinet meeting at Elisabethville Tuesday, that he is still opposed U.N. intervention. Doubts of the premier were reflected in his conditions. Among them, as outlined at a news conference, were:

"That none of the U.N. troops come from Communist or Communist-influenced countries . . .

"That all rights and internal affairs of Kantanga be recognized and that the United Nations do not intervene in any way . . .

"That Katanga holds the right to prohibit the entry into Katanga of any person or body from the Congo government of Premier Patrice Lumumba . . .

"That all access roads into Katanga be guarded jointly by Katanga and U.N. troops."

The new U.N. security Council resolution pledges that the U.N. force sent into Katanga will not meddle in political matters.

Tshombe said he wants all bases in Katanga, including the Belgians' huge ground and air installations at Kamina, handed over intact to his government.

'Shoot' Order Given Troops

Montgomery Ala. Montgomery Advertiser

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — U. N. forces in Leopoldville received orders to shoot in cases of necessity, the Belgian radio reported Thursday night.

Sept 9/60

U.N. troops at Leopoldville airport also received the order to dig in around the airport, the radio added. U.N. officials in New York pointed out their troops may shoot in self-defense if attacked.

The countermeasures were ordered after the serious incidents at the airport Thursday morning in which a Congolese soldier severely injured a Canadian officer, the radio said.

U.N. Chief Taking Force Into Katanga

The Atlanta Constitution
Atlanta, Ga.
Thurs. 8-11-60

By United Press International

U.N. Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold was winging back to the Congo early Thursday to lead two companies of Swedish troops into Katanga province Friday.

Hammarksjold announced that plan of action late Wednesday night before leaving U.N. headquarters in New York, where the Security Council gave him a new mandate for dealing with secessionist Katanga. He said Premier Moise Tschombe agreed to the move.

Word of Tschombe's permission came only hours before Hammarskjold departed from Idlewild International Airport aboard a jet airliner which had been put at his disposal by the U.S. government.

LUMUMBA INJURED

The latest U.N. move came after Congo Premier Lumumba was injured Wednesday night by a mob of political opponents when he attempted to break up rioting between his followers and rival groups favoring a Congo federation.

The Congolese premier was punched in the face and slapped around by demonstrators when he stepped from his car into a crowd of thousands of persons shouting "down with Lumumba" and "long live the federation."

Lumumba also was struck in the cheek by a stone when rival Abako party followers stoned his car. The car's windows were smashed but the Premier managed to jump-dive back into the automobile and drive off to safety under police escort.

17 WOUNDED

Fighting continued after Lumumba left and police opened fire on the mob, wounding at least 17 Congolese. Ambulances were seen coming out of the embattled Dendale Area—cordoned off by police—with their windows smashed.

The clashes ended by early evening, but groups of Africans still roamed the Dendale District. Seven policemen were reported injured and dozens of Africans were arrested in the fighting.

Authorities said Lumumba suffered only slight injuries in the melee. Rival Abako Party Vice President Moanda also was injured along with two of his party guards.

The rioting came only a few hours after Lumumba announced he intended to take "drastic measures" against anyone trying to break away from his policy of a united Congo with a strong central government.

MORE AUTONOMY

An influential faction of the Abako Party, lead by Congo President Joseph Kasavubu, came out Sunday in favor of giving more autonomy to the young nation's six provinces.

The new rioting broke out amid these other Congo developments:

1. U.N. sources reported that five United Nations soldiers of the Tunisian contingent had been killed in skirmishing with fierce tribesmen in the Luluabourg area of the Congo's Kasai province. The deaths, if confirmed, would be the first suffered by the U.N. forces in action in the Congo. Some 300 tribesmen were reported killed in Kasai fighting between Lulua and Baluba warriors in the past week.

2. Premier Lumumba, in a radical change of position, told a news conference he would consider reestablishing normal diplomatic relations with Belgium as soon as all Belgian troops leave the Congo. Lumumba also indicated he had shelved his threat to move single-handedly against the secessionist Katanga province.

NEW BELGIAN LINK

3. In European capitals, Belgium's threat to cut back sharply its contribution to NATO in reaction to the U.N. directive to pull out of the Congo, was feared Wednesday to spell serious trouble for the crisis-ridden Western alliance.

DUE FRIDAY

The cable Hammarskjold sent to Tshombe said he would arrive in Elisabethville Friday afternoon with his civilian political advisers, two generals and "two companies of a Swedish battalion with all the military in uniform under my exclusive personal authority with only the right to legitimate self-defense in the event—which I rule out as inconceivable—that they are attacked."

A Swedish company consists of 150 men. Thus Hammarskjold will have with him about 300 soldiers of the 623-man Swedish battalion now stationed in Leopoldville.

The generals accompanying him will be Ben Hammou Kattani of Morocco, deputy supreme commander of the U.N. force, and I. J. Rikhye of India, military adviser to Hammarskjold for the Congo operation.

NO COMPULSION

Hammarskjold told Tshombe he wanted to enter Katanga to discuss with him the carrying out of Security Council resolutions but said there was no question of the U.N. having to accept any conditions or agreements.

"Such arrangements would be contrary to the constitutional roles that determine our relations," Hammarskjold's cable said.

But it added that for practical reasons Hammarskjold wanted an exchange of views "by which I may be guided in my instructions to my representatives and by which I may be given assurances covering the rights of U.N. protection."

TO DEVELOP IDEA

Tshombe replied in his cable that by having the talks in Elisabethville, Hammarskjold would be able to develop an idea of the instructions he wanted to give. He assured the secretary-general of a proper reception.

Hammarskjold had been scheduled to leave Tuesday night to carry out a resolution adopted by the Security Council Tuesday. It called for him to arrange the movement of all Belgian troops from the Congo and to station part of his 12,000-man U.N. force in Katanga, which had refused to receive U.N. troops last week

DELAYED TO NEGOTIATE

The secretary-general delayed the return trip for further negotiations. He saw Belgian Foreign Minister Pierre Wigny, the Congolese delegation and Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Vasily Kuznetsov.

The Belgians had told the Council they would remove their 7,500 soldiers from Katanga when there are guarantees the U.N. forces could maintain order.

Meanwhile, Tshombe changed his stand and agreed to the entry of U.N. troops, provided no Communist units or central Congo officials accompanied them. He also insisted the U.N. force should take no sides in his dispute with Congolese Premier Patrice Lumumba.

Clouds Over the Congo

N.Y. Times

In a most remarkable mission to be entrusted to one man, Secretary General Hammarskjold is trying to stamp out the sparks of incipient civil war in the Congo that could set Africa aflame and even precipitate, as he warns, a new world war.

The danger of such a development is raised by Congolese Premier Lumumba, who is mobilizing his fledgling and recently mutinous army and threatens to march at its head into the secessionist province of Katanga to "fight or die" for the "complete liberation," independence and territorial integrity of the country.

His proclaimed purpose is to "chase out" the Belgian troops if the United Nations police force fails to do so. But he also makes it plain that his primary purpose is to overthrow the Government of Katanga—which under the leadership of newly elected President Tshombe has proclaimed its independence as one means of forcing the organization of the Congo as a federal state—to suppress all movements toward federation or provincial autonomy which are spreading to other parts of the country but which he denounces as "fascist," and to impose his rigidly centralized regime on all the diverse ethnic groups and tribes.

In that double purpose he claims the support of all Africa and he has pledges of such support from Ghana and Guinea, with Soviet Russia cheering him on both inside and outside the United Nations and denouncing Mr. Hammarskjold for avoiding bloodshed thus far. Fortunately, the new African leaders are often more fervid in words than in action, and while the situation is tense it is by no means hopeless.

First of all, the Belgian Government declares itself ready to comply with the United Nations resolution to withdraw its troops from the whole Congo "immediately," or as soon as the United Nations police force can guarantee the safety of the remaining Europeans. Secondly, President Tshombe has reversed his previous stand and now declares himself willing to admit United Nations forces on sixteen conditions, the chief of which is that they do not intervene in the internal struggle between federalism and centralism, as pledged in the latest United Nations resolution.

To the outside world these two developments would seem to eliminate any need for fighting. But as they do not eliminate the Katanga Government it remains to be seen whether they will satisfy Premier Lumumba. Having called the United Nations forces to the Congo following the breakdown of his regime, he demands their cooperation with him and rejects any idea of a United Nations "trusteeship" under which the Congolese people could determine the structure and constitution of their state by democratic processes. The next few days should make clear just what he means by these pronouncements.

Congo Refugees Face Future of Uncertainty

The Atlanta Constitution

Atlanta Ga

By BETTY CARROLLTON

An Atlanta mother has left "a wonderful life" in the strife-torn Belgian Congo to face an uncertain future back home.

Thurs 8-11-60

When Mrs. Aron Franco and her children fled from Elisabethville, capital of the controversial Katanga province that had been her home for more than 13 years, she left behind all her household goods, her clothes—and her husband.

P. 16

Mr. Franco, an executive for a wholesale firm in the African city, remained behind to continue, as much as possible, his business affairs.

"More than anything else right now," Mrs. Franco said, "I want to be with my husband. At the moment, I know absolutely nothing about the situation in Elisabethville. He may send for me tomorrow to join him there. Or he may find it necessary to flee Elisabethville at any hour. It's impossible for us to make any kind of plans.

UNCERTAINTY IS TERRIBLE

"It's simply a matter of waiting to see what happens. The uncertainty of the situation is terrible."

Safely established at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Milton Waronker, Mrs. Franco is particularly concerned with erasing the confusion from the life of her young daughter, Anita. The two-year-old blonde charmer speaks only French, a language unknown to her grandparents.

"In Elisabethville," Mrs. Franco said, "Anita was such a happy child! Always laughing and singing. She constantly pranced about doing what she called dancing.

"Now, she's so confused, it's really sad. She'll hardly let me out of her sight. She can enjoy the company of no one, not even her grandparents, because they don't speak her language."

Her oldest daughter, Marilyn, 14, came to Atlanta several months ago in preparation to attend high school here. A pretty, dark-haired youngster, Marilyn speaks French, Flemish, Hebrew and English. She is currently helping her brother, Robert, 11, and sister, Lily, 8, with their English lessons.

Mrs. Franco said she's optimistic about their future happiness and believes the children will adjust easily to life here.

DIFFERENT ROLE

The Atlantan said she'll also have to take a different role in the management of her household affairs.

"In Elisabethville," she explained, "we had a beautiful, five-bedroom home, with living room, dining room and terrace. But I didn't have to worry about housekeeping chores. I was never even in the kitchen except to tell our cook what foods to prepare."

Their 11 servants included a "wash-boy" who was responsible for all the laundering and ironing, a gardner, a cook, a housekeeper and a maid.

"We had a French nurse whom the children loved very much," Mrs. Franco said. "They miss her terribly."

FAVORITE DISHES

Not all their food was American dishes, but such favorites as barbecued meats and Southern fried chicken were served often.

"I taught the cook boy to prepare such foods," the Atlantan explained. "Once he used any recipe, he never again had to refer to it.

"That's more than I can do," she added with a laugh. "If I cook by a recipe, I have to get the book out every time I prepare the dish."

Living expenses, she reports, are higher in Elisabethville. Food, with the exception of meat, is expensive. Fresh fruits and vegetables are limited only by the price tag: 65 cents for a head of lettuce; 85 cents for a single peach.

SMART STYLES

Shops stock smart styles in standard sizes, but perfect-fitting garments for individuals must be made.

"And it's expensive to buy the material," Mrs. Franco said. "I sewed for three months straight getting Marilyn's wardrobe ready for her trip to Georgia. She was too tall and not wide enough for the dresses offered for sale in the stores."

The Georgian described her life in the Congo as "gay and absolutely wonderful" — until the last year.

"Aron was always optimistic," she declared. "He believed things would calm down. We really weren't too concerned until the Saturday night in July when we heard the guns firing near us."

That night — July 9th — the mother and her three children began their escape from the area. They spent two weeks in New York, waiting to hear from Mr. Franco.

As much as possible, Mrs. Franco refrains from reading newspaper accounts of developments in the Congo.

"I prefer to wait until I hear it from my husband," she declared.

In a voice suddenly turned husky, Mrs. Franco read aloud excerpts from the last letter she received from her husband. The letter, written in French, ended on an optimistic note:

"We are living with hope," Mr. Franco wrote.

Ethiopian Colonel Saves Crew From Mob Lynching

Atlanta Daily World

Atlanta, Ga.

By GEORGE SIBERA For UPI

LEOPOLDVILLE, The Congo — (UPI) — Rampaging Congolese soldiers waylaid a U. S. Air Force transport at Stanleyville airport, beat the five-man crew with rifle-butts Saturday and tried to lynch them. Other Congolese attacked the United Nations office and wounded three whites.

June 8-28-60

P. 1

An Ethiopian army colonel attached to the U. N. force in Stanleyville intervened in the screaming mob at the airport and was credited with saving the Americans from death. Two of the airmen were reported kidnaped by the Congolese but later turned up in a hospital.

Extent of the injuries to the Americans was not immediately known, but they were viciously clubbed and mauled.

First word from Stanleyville did not say how the U. N. personnel, two Canadian officers and a swedish civilian, were injured.

There was blood on the tarmac. Congolese Premier Patrice Lumumba, who flew into Stanleyville reviewed an honor guard at the airport, noticed the blood and inquired about the incident. As he addressed a crowd and vowed to lead Congoese troops 'in combat dress" into secessionist Katanga province, he saw a flier walk across the tarmac, his face bloodied and his uniform torn.

The double outburst of violence in hitherto quiet Stanleyville occurred shortly before Lumumba arrived in the eastern city aboard a Russian-built plane with a party of newsmen to demonstrate to them that he was in complete control of the Congo situation. He landed 45 minutes after the Americans were beaten.

U. N. Undersecretary - General Ralph Bunche was expected to lodge a stiff protest with Lumumba over the Congolese attacks. In New York, the Advisory Committee of the U. N. met urgently to consider the situation.

The attack on the Americans occurred as their big four-engine plane taxied to a stop, bringing in signal equipment and food supplies for the U. N. garrison.

The names of the Americans were not immediately disclosed.

As they disembarked from their parked plane, the Congolese suddenly attacked them, smashing at them with their rifle butts while others milled around screaming and manhandling the Americans.

Provincial Premier Jean-Pierre Finant said the Congolese had heard rumors that the globemaster carried Belgian paratroopers who wanted to attack Lumumba.

Ironically, U. S. globemasters have been working an airlift to remove Belgian troops from the country.

Shortly after the airport incident, Congolese soldiers charged into the U. N. headquarters in a Stanleyville hotel.

U. N. troops from Ethiopia are in Stanleyville and shocked U. N. sources in Stanleyville said they had thought the Ethiopians had the situation under control.

The UN Can Do This Job

The Christian Science Monitor
Boston, Mass.
July 8/16/60

A United Nations success in the Congo is still threatened by Premier Lumumba's impatience and jockeying for personal position. This is a pity. The tasks the UN can reasonably undertake far outrun his or his opponents' mutual suspicions or the needs which prompt him to try to dictate to the UN how it shall manage the chaos which he in the first place failed to manage.

Here is a nation coming into being without a prepared citizenry, with hardly a score of people ready for average administrative jobs, let alone those to be undertaken at ministry level. Here is a nation confronting secession and the question of federalism vs. centralism—problems that have split bigger and older nations.

More dramatic than the strange scenes at Elisabethville is the commitment that most of the world has made through the UN to the Congo's future. This is already being spelled out in the matter-of-fact terms of a UN blueprint for training Congolese leaders in a dozen major categories of government.

But even while the UN pushes ahead on this front, it is confronted with a more subtle, possibly more critical challenge. That is the UN's problem of remaining neutral not only in purpose but in actual day-to-day application of its authority. Some expert observers of UN and Congolese affairs have not seen how this would be possible.

How can the UN police and educate the Congo and still keep clear of charges, out of which new disorders might arise, that it is favoring one side or the other?

One of the UN's first moves to this end might well be to invite the major figures in the country to confer with one another and with UN agents. The object should be to bring about a situation in which, for the next two or three years at least, the energies of all these men would be concentrated not on advancing personal political fortunes or ideas but on the more elementary needs of statehood: local government, voting, and so forth.

The UN's influence need not be used to promote federalism or centralism. It could perhaps postpone a decision on this matter until the Congolese are readier to make a considered choice.

The present interim government which resulted from Brussels' round-tables with Congo leaders is a centralized government.

But concern lest Mr. Lumumba build on his present advantage could be reduced if he and other leaders agreed that all training of administrators and citizens should revolve around this proposition that the training is partly a preparation for an intelligent choice between two possible forms of government. Could Congolese leaders be induced to postpone their personal ambitions? This is a question. Already the sharpest rivals, Mr. Lumumba and Mr. Tshombe, both have had to accept UN restraints.

But the plan for UN aid toward mature statehood need not be launched as a system of restraints. It should emerge as a program actually fostered by Congo leaders themselves.

The Congo experience has already led to proposals that other African states heading toward independence should come under UN trusteeship in preparation for it. There is no reason why the Congo should not now obtain similar benefits while maintaining and improving its independent status.

Nkrumah and the Congo

The Christian Science Monitor
Boston, Mass.
July 8/19/60

Behind the presently discouraging aspects of the Congo crisis two or three developments support the hope that the Congo will have a chance to choose its own future without resort to civil war, and that the United Nations will win a success which will permanently strengthen its peace-keeping machinery.

Perhaps the most notable of these is the activity of Prime Minister Nkrumah of Ghana. Mr. Nkrumah has been backing Congo Premier Lumumba's demand that the Congo be kept in one piece and that the UN forces should be chiefly African.

This does not necessarily mean that Mr. Nkrumah would give Mr. Lumumba equal support to impose the idea of a unitary as against a federalist government. It does not mean that the Ghana leader would take action against, or even outside, the UN military operation.

In fact Mr. Nkrumah now has usefully clarified his position in two ways. He has declared his support for the UN, and he has suggested that he might helpfully visit President Tshombe of secessionist Katanga Province. This would indicate an aim on his part to promote compromise between the two men whose opposing aims threaten not only Congo peace but UN prestige and indirectly even the influence of UN Secretary-General Hammarskjold.

Another hopeful aspect in the background of the momentary stalemate between Mr. Lumumba and Mr. Hammarskjold comes from the activities of African members of the UN. These members are reported as pressing for a moderate rather than extreme statement by the Congo delegation in the coming Security Council discussions.

They are trying to head off the sort of clash which would give the Soviet Union an opportunity to increase its attack on the Secretary-General, just as Mr. Nkrumah is trying to head off a development in Africa itself which could give Moscow new leverage for Communist intervention on that continent.

Lumumba's Responsibility

Christian Science Monitor
Boston, Mass.
July 8/16/60

As United Nations Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold warns of the possibility that the UN may withdraw from the Congo, a penetrating light has been thrown into the confusion by two pieces of Congolese behavior—both inexcusable.

One of these was the beating and injury of Canadian members of the UN force by Congolese soldiers at Léopoldville late this week. The other was Congo Premier Lumumba's snubbing of both the UN special representative, Mr. Ralph Bunche, and the American Ambassador.

Now it is reported that UN troops will be given discretion to shoot in self-defense, and the Canadian Government has protested the mistreatment of its nationals. It has asked assurances that this will not recur.

It is time to go further. Premier Lumumba himself should be held strictly accountable for the actions of his own forces. He should be urged to tell them that troops who take unauthorized action against UN forces will be punished and to see that punishment follows any violation of his orders.

Unless he does take such measures Mr. Lumumba cannot avoid suspicion that he may be secretly encouraging sporadic attack on UN personnel as part of a strategy of general attack on the UN itself.

Irate Congo Proclaims Martial Law. Rips U.N.

Montgomery Advertiser — Montgomery, Alabama

Wed. 8/17/60 — P.1

Lumumba Demands Dag Pull Out Swedish Troops

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo (AP)—The Congo government, angrily challenging the United Nations role in this divided republic and arresting U.N. people, Tuesday proclaimed six months of martial law for the whole chaotic country.

It also demanded immediate withdrawel of Swedish U.N. troops.

Premier Patrice Lumumba charged U.N. forces failed to carry out their duties and made martial law necessary to meet what he called a crisis.

If fully enforced as an instrument of Congo sovereignty, martial law could enormously complicate the U.N. task of bringing order to the Congo or could even force the U.N. out of the Congo.

UNDER CONGO ORDERS

In effect, martial law might try to place the U.N. forces under Congo government orders and use them, for instance, against secessionist Katanga province.

In his developing feud with U.N. Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold, Lumumba has asked for withdrawal of all white forces from Katanga province. He has been especially critical of the Swedes, Hammarskjold's own countrymen.

In demanding the withdrawal of Swedish troops, he charged "they have done a very bad job" and accused them of opposing his government's authority and defending Belgian army officers.

The proclamation was announced after Congolese police and troops struck at U.N. staff members and Belgians in raids that underlined Lumumba's declaration of nonconfidence in the trend of U.N. efforts to save the Congo.

DAG IN NEW YORK

At a news conference where he announced the martial law decree, Lumumba repeated that Hammarskjold had failed in his task of obtaining evacuation of Belgian soldiers from the Congo and ending the secession of rich Katanga province..

"Our government does not exist for the secretary-general," the Premier asserted.

Soon after Lumumba spoke, Hammarskjold arrived in New York to lay the Congo problems again before the U.N. Security Council.

P.2

A Congolese delegation is expected to appear when the Council meets later this week. Hammarskjold refused to take the Congolese delegation along when he left here by plane Monday night.

(Hammarskjold told airport reporters he had no comment on the declaration of martial law, then sped off to his New York offices).

Lumumba said the martial law proclamation, signed by him and President Joseph Kasavubu, would take effect immediately.

He said military tribunals would be established to replace Belgian magistrates who fled the country but he did not explain what measures would be taken under martial law, to which he referred as a military regime.

Most Western newsmen had walked away from the news conference after police pointed bayonets at them in front of Lumumba's residence.

MENACING CROWD

Several hours earlier, a menacing crowd of Congolese watched as a Negro patrol halted a car with white U.N. military personnel near the central post office and checked their documents. The onlookers shoook their fists and screamed insults at the car's occupants. Whites were booed in similar scenes throughout the city.

Lumumba's police searches even extended to the main residence housing most of the U.N. staff and offices.

Eleven members of the U.N. staff were arrested briefly and scores were searched as the Congolese defiantly went ahead with plans to take over control of security now vested in the U.N. Command.

Among Belgians nabbed were Pierre Marchal, diplomatic counsellor of the Belgian Embassy which was closed a week ago, and Gaston Dieu, deputy president of the Belgian airline Sabena.

A Congolese army detachment of about 200 men expelled a platoon of 33 Belgian paratroopers who have been based at the U.N.-guarded airport to expedite their homeward flights of other Belgian soldiers. That strike was led by the recently reactivated army's new commander, Gen. Victor Lundula.

NO RESISTANCE

The paratroopers offered no resistance. They marched smartly to a Belgian plane and took off for the Belgian treaty base at Kitona. With them went 13 civilian members of the Belgian military mission who were found by Congolese raiders at the Belgian Embassy.

Lumumba's government has charged that Belgians hostile to the interests of the Congo were hiding under the cover of the blue U.N. armbands.

Privately, U.N. sources admitted some Belgians were using the armbands to avoid molestation by the Congolese and that the U.N. received a warning Sunday that a spot check would be made in two days.

Officially, the U.N. Command announced that all its employes will be given pink cards as proof of their assignments.

Congo Refugees Flee Intertribal Bloodbath

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — Swarms of Congolese men, women and children were reported fleeing Luluabourg, capital of strife-torn Kasai province of the Congo, in a column nearly 20 miles long Tuesday night.

The Belgian radio quoted a report from a special Congo central government investigating committee as saying the arrival of United Nations forces had failed to end a bloodbath of intertribal warfare.

The report said the refugees were exhausted, hungry, thirsty and without any form of protection.

The report said men of the Lulua and the Baluba tribes are killed every day throughout Kasai province.

The Baluba originally came from the neighboring province of Katanga, and the Lulua have never accepted them.

Now Baluba tribespeople are fleeing the predominantly Lulua capital of Luluabourg, the reports said.

Territorial Chaos Hits In Katanga

Montgomery Advertiser — Montgomery, Ala.

Wed. 8-24-60

Belgian Sources Say Tribesmen Fighting Troops From Mali

ELISABETHVILLE, the Congo, (AP)—Heavy fighting is reported to have broken out at Albertville in northern Katanga. There were conflicting reports about who was involved but it appeared some were United Nations soldiers from the West African Mali Federation, whose own home government is in Congo-like chaos.

Belgian army and air force sources said Tuesday the fighting was between Mali soldiers and Balubakat tribesmen who oppose Premier Moise Tshombe of secessionist Katanga province.

The Katanga government, however, blamed the Mali soldiers for the trouble. It said the Mali forces had mutinied and clashed with territorial administrators.

U.N. FORCES

(In Brussels a Belgian Defense Ministry spokesman said Belgian soldiers, still in charge of maintaining order in Albertville, have successfully defended the railway station against attacking Congolese. The Brussels report made no mention of U.N. forces being involved in the fighting.)

Direct reports were sketchy. Albertville is some 400 miles north of this Katanga capital and access is difficult.

The U.N. Command refused to confirm or deny the Katanga government report.

Observers here said there was a possibility that Mali soldiers revolved following the split Sunday of the French Sudan and Senegal, which formed the Mali Federation. They said it was possible that Balubakat tribesmen took advantage of the Mali soldiers' revolt to instigate an outbreak.

MALI SOLDIERS

Messages being relayed from Albertville along the Belgian army lines of communication said the Mali soldiers are in a desperate position and are calling for reinforcements.

The U.N. Command here was understood to be ready to rush reinforcements to the trouble spot.

The Belgians said Mali soldiers also reported "many dead and wounded" but did not say whether the casualties were their own or Balubakat tribesmen. The Belgian army reports said Mali forces opened fire to protect their own lives.

The Katanga government communique said: "Elements of the Mali troops, who appeared to have escaped control of their officers, have transported armed civilians in their trucks and have, in conjunction with them, made arbitrary arrests.

Associated Press Wire Photo

CONGO FORCES ON MOVE IN KATANGA PROVINCE

Units of Lumumba (Black Arrow), Tshombe (White Arrow)

Katangans' Blasts Slow Congo March

Atlanta Constitution
Atlanta, Ga.
Mon. 8-29-60

From Press Dispatches

ELISABETHVILLE (UPI) — The Katanga army blew up all road and rail approaches from Kasai Province Sunday in preparation for imminent civil war with Premier Patrice Lumumba's Congolese troops.

Although no Katanga-Congolese fighting was reported yet, Lulua tribal warriors in Kasai province were reported massacring thousands of docile Baluba tribesmen whose leader, Albert Kalonji, was defeated by Congolese in an effort to set up an independent state in Kasai.

REFUGEES STREAM IN

A quarter of a million Baluba refugees had streamed into Kalonji's "mining state" only to be overrun by their ancient enemies. Other hundreds were reported dying of hunger and disease.

Gen. Roger Gheysen, Belgian military commander in the Congo, appealed to the United Nations to set up a "neutral zone" in the Katanga-Kasai to try to head off savage fighting.

U.N. officials refused to comment on the appeal although an invasion of secessionist Katanga province by Lumumba's troops was expected at any moment.

1,000 FLOWN IN

Lumumba first flew 1,000 troops into Luluabourg in Kasai province to stamp out the rebellion led by Kalonji. They were reported nearing the Katanga border Sunday.

Belgian officials expressed concern over the fate of 120 Europeans, mostly Belgian, in the town of Bakwanga captured Friday night by Lumumba's troops. Bakwanga was the capital of the short-lived "mining state."

No word has come out of Bakwanga since its capture. Its radio has stopped broadcasting and there is no telephone communication. Belgians feared attacks on the whites there by the Congolese army.

AF MEN RETURNED

Meanwhile, eight beaten American airmen were flown into Leopoldville Sunday night and told of being attacked by thousands of shouting, dancing Congolese at Stanleyville.

"I thought I was saying my last amen," said one.

The assault occurred Saturday when a U.S. Air Force Globemaster landed at Stanleyville with a cargo of signal equipment for U.N. forces. One of the Americans said the Congolese "were positive we were Belgians."

The United States has drafted a stiff protest to the Congolese government over the outburst of violence but Ambassador Clare H. Timberlake so far has been unable to contact Congo Foreign Minister Justin Bomboko.

Brought here with the injured Americans were two Canadians who also were injured in the violence at Stanleyville.

A coldly furiuos Gen. Carl von Horn, commander of U.N. forces in the Congo, put on an unprecedented show of United Nations force at Leopoldville airport when the Americans and Canadians arrived.

DEPLOYS TROOPS

With a pistol at his belt, Von Horn deployed about 300 Sudanese and Ghana U.N. troops around the U.N. plane which brought in the injured men.

When a Congolese soldier showed up carrying a rifle he was briskly hustled away from the plane.

Asked about the show of force, Von Horn said: "It is because I was so mad. I promised to fire the first shot myself if there was any interference.

Ralph J. Bunche, special representative of the United Nations here, handed Bomboko a strong U.N. protest Saturday night. Bunche, who charged "flagrant violations" of the Congo's agreement with the United Nations, met with the foreign minister again Sunday.

AIRPORT PACT BREACHED

A U.N. spokesman said the Congolese also violated another agreement concluded only three days ago giving the U.N. responsibility for controlling activities at the Stanleyville airport. Reports from Stanleyville said Ethiopian troops under U.N. command were back in control of the field.

At about the time a U.S. Globemaster was being attacked at the airport, other Congolese soldiers raided U.N. offices in Stanleyville and arrested 11 U.N. officials. The United Nations said the 11 were released by Ethiopian troops after being held an hour. They were two Britons, a Brazilian, a Frenchman and seven Canadians.

Moise Tshombe, president of Katanga Province, announced his border defensive measures in a news conference here. He told newsmen:

"We have blown all the bridges between the Kasai and the Katanga. The rail lines have been torn up for several kilometers in the frontier area and the roads are mined."

Tshombe, a sworn enemy of Lumumba's, appeared confident his Belgian-led army will not crumble without a fight as did the Kalonji forces in Kasai.

"We hope Lumumba's troops will come," Tshombe said. "We are ready and they won't get far."

Both sides were believed about even numerically although half of Tshombe's troops are raw recruits. The Katanga army has Belgian officers, although only 450 Belgian soldiers remain of the 10,000 stationed in the Congo before independence was declared June 30.

CONGOLESE ATTACK U.S. AIRMEN

Atlanta Journal & Constitution
Atlanta, Ga.

Troops Run Wild, Beat 5 Fliers, Raid U.N. Office

Mon. 8-28-60

LEOPOLDVILLE, The Congo, Aug. 27 (AP) — Congolese army in Stanleyville Saturday, raided the United Nations office and attacked the crew of a U.S. Air Force Globemaster, U.N. headquarters announced.

Five U..S crewmen were beaten so badly by the Congolese they were taken to a hospital. Three other crewmen were reported missing for a time but turned up later safe.

William Frye explains why democracy is too tough to sell in the Congo, on Page 4-E.

The Ethiopian brigade commander of U.N. forces in Stanleyville reported a very serious situation and asked for instructions.

* * *

U.S. AMBASSADOR Clare Timberlake discussed the situation with Ralph J. Bunche, U.N. chief in the Congo. Timberlake was awaiting word to see whether a U.S. plane could be sent to Stanleyville.

U.N. officials called the incidents "the most serious in the history of the U.N. Congo operation."

The attacks emphasized Premier Patrice Lumumba's demands that the U.N. forces quit the Congo, turning over the job of maintaining order to his army. Lumumba himself flew to Stanleyville, capital of Oriental Province in the northeast Congo. Stanleyville was his stronghold in his days as a nationalist leader under Belgian rule.

* * *

THE FIVE American members of the Globemaster crew were beaten up at the airport when they landed with communications equipment and Canadian technicians for Canadian forces in Stanleyville. The plane had flown directly to Stanleyville from Toronto.

They were removed to a hospital and are under Ethiopian army protection, the U.N. said.

Those beaten are Capt. Elvert L. Pott, Lt. Kenneth Strickevers, Lt. Armand A. Kellenberger, Lt. William M. Shaw and T.Sgt. Kenneth Bennett

Three other members of the crew, Lt. Gerald T. Henry, Technical Sgt. Fred Kiser, and Sgt. Brice Bossa, were missing temporarily after the fracas at the airport, but have been found. Embassy officials said they had been advised they were safe.

* * *

REPORTS TO the United Nations said the Congolese troops apparently were acting on the suspicion that Belgian paratroops had been landed in the vicinity to capture Lumumba when he landed at Stanleyville.

All Europeans were attacked, one report from Stanleyville said. The attack occurred before Lumumba's plane was scheduled to arrive. There has been no word from the city since his time of arrival.

While his soldiers were moving to assert their authority in Oriental Province, Lumumba's forces also were reported to have knocked out a rebel capital in Kasai Province to the south.

Kasai rebel leader Albert Kalonji said 300 Congo soldiers captured Bakwanga, capital of his independent "Mineral State" proclaimed two weeks ago. He charged that three officers from Communist Czechoslovakia led the invading Congolese force. Kalonji was in Elisabethville, capital of the secessionist province of Katanga, where he had gone to seek military help from Katanga Premier Moise Tshombe.

Almost at the same time, the Congolese army raided the U.N. offices in one of the city's main

U.S. Air Force since it began the big airlift of U.N. men and equipment to the Congo six weeks ago.

involving members of the Congo

* * *

In Stanleyville, as soon as the first violent incidents in this capital of the Congo big plane put down, it was attacked by Congolese soldiers, said IT WAS THE first sketchy reports to U.N. headquarotels, the U.N. reported.

There were few details of the aid. The U.N. said three of its fficials were under arrest and wo of them were wounded. A U.N. spokesman said earlier reports identified the two wounded as Canadians and the third man under arrest as a Swede.

Congo Premier Blasts Belgians

Miami Herald

LEOPOLDVILLE, Republic of Congo — (AP) — Premier Patrice Lumumba accused the Belgians Thursday of inflicting "atrocious sufferings" on the Congolese people in their 80 years of rule over this African land.

Sta. 7/1/60

He delivered this parting shot at his former colonial masters as they turned over the country to its new native leaders.

P. 18-A

"We have known ironies and insults, the blows to which we have had to submit morning, noon and night because we are Negroes," Lumumba said at independence ceremonies attended by his parliamentary colleagues, assembled dignitaries of the church and diplomatic corps and King Baudouin of Belgium.

Lumumba's words provided the only acid in the otherwise friendly speechmaking that inaugurated the new republic.

Patrice Lumumba

... a drop of acid

A few hours later Lumumba, a former postal clerk once jailed by the Belgians on charges of inciting a nationalist riot, almost reversed himself. He expressed his government's thanks to Baudouin and "the noble Belgian people" for their decision to free the Congo.

He paid the tribute during an exchange of toasts with Baudouin outside the still unfinished Palais de la Nation (Parliament) building and asked for "long and durable collaboration" with Belgium.

The indignant and startled reaction among Belgian officials to his morning speech may have had something to do with his milder performance in the afternoon. Said one Belgian official who has spent most of his life in the Congo: "Lumumba might have spared us this indignity. Surely we did not deserve such gross insults . . ."

The original program had not provided for a speech by Lumumba. But the tall, goateed nationalist apparently asked for a place on the program. He busily wrote out his speech while President Joseph Kasavubu addressed the assembly.

Lumumba and Kasavubu are the two leading political figures in the new republic and have been feuding for weeks over the formation of the new government. The rotund president, who also spent time in jail as a nationalist, appealed for unity.

CONGO REPUBLIC FACES TROUBLE

The News and Observer

Tribal Fighting Breaks Out Less Than 48 Hours After Independence

Raleigh, N.C.

LEOPOLDVILLE, Republic of Congo (AP)—Tribal fighting broke out in Leopoldville Saturday less than 48 hours after the proclamation of independence for this new nation.

Sat. 7-3-60

The Force Publique, the Belgian trained army of the new republic, moved in swiftly and brutally and quelled the disturbance.

However the communes of Ngiri Ngiri and Dendale still were seething with unrest as the two top tribes in Leopoldville, the Bakongo and the Bayaka, tangled in ...ores of fights.

The commander of the Force Publique in Ngiri Ngiri commune said 40 persons were taken to hospital and 27 arrested. No one was killed.

The military which lifted the curfew for the independence ceremonies, clamped on a new one Saturday night.

There are about 120,000 Bakongo tribesmen in Leopoldville and 50,000 Bayaka.

A minor incident between a Bakongo and a Bayaka set off the fighting. But underlying the outbreak is the jealousy of the Bayaka at the rise of the Bakongo leader, Joseph Kasavubu, to the presidency of the new republic.

The fighting, mainly with clubs, fists and rocks, threw light on the difficulties faced by the new Congo government headed by Premier Patrice Lumumba.

Large areas of this huge new republic are riddled with tribal jealousies and feuds.

the fighting brought out all the cruelty, childishness and fanatical hatreds of the primitive Africans.

One Bayaka—innocent of any wrongdoing—was dragged from a small automobile. For nearly 100 yards along the avenue he was hit across the face with crude clubs, kicked in the back, punched and pounded.

His face was a bloody mess of cuts and wounds. When troops took him into custody they added to his injuries with more blows from their rifle butts.

Through it all the choir of a small African church on Avenue Asosa in the midst of the fighting sang hymns.

Belgian Rule Assailed As Congo Is Liberated

Washington Post, D.C., Sun. 7/1/60

P. 12-A

LEOPOLDVILLE, Republic of Congo, June 30 (AP)—Premier Patrice Lumumba today accused the Belgians of inicting "atrocious sufferings" on the Congolese people in their 80 years of rule over this African land.

He delivered this parting shot at his former colonial masters as they turned over the country to its new native leaders.

"We have known ironies and insults, the blows to which we have had to submit morning, noon and night because we are Negroes," Lumuba said at independence ceremonies attended by his parliamentary colleagues, assembled dignitaries of the church and diplomatic corps and King Baudouin of Belgium.

Lumumba's words provided the only acid in the otherwise friendly speechmaking that inaugurated the new Republic.

A few hours later Lumuba, a former postal clerk once jailed by the Belgians on charges of inciting a Nationalist riot, almost reversed himself. He expressed his government's thanks to Boudouin and "the noble Belgian people" for their decision to free the Congo. He paid the tribute during an exchange of toasts with Baudouin outside the still unfinished Palais de la Nation (Parliament) building and asked for "long and durable collaboration" with Belgium.

The indignant and startled reaction among Belgian officials to his morning speech may have had something to do with his milder performance in the afternoon.

The original program had not provided for a speech by Lumumba. But the tall, goateed Nationalist apparently asked for a place on the program. He busily wrote out his speech while President Joseph Kasavubu addressed the Assembly.

Kasavubu, who also spent time in jail as a Nationalist, appealed for unity.

The Congolese deputies had also just heard Baudouin promise Belgian friendship and appeal for peace and order among Congolese political factions and tribes.

But then Lumumba, wearing the mauve-red sash of Belgium's top decoration, the Order of Leopold, started speaking. Kasavubu and the King exchanged startled glances as the words came clear.

The Premier described Belgian law as different for blacks and whites — "accommodating for one, Cruel and inhuman for the other."

"Who will forget the fusillades under which so many of our brothers perished?

"Wages paid to black men were not sufficient to satisfy their hunger, to dress them or provide them with decent lodging."

"We have known atrocious sufferings for political opinions or religious beliefs. We have known that in the cities there were magnificent houses for the whites and decrepit huts for the blacks, that a black was not admitted to the cinemas in the restaurants nor in the stores called 'European.'

"But despite all that, we, who have ben chosen by your elected representatives to direct our dear country, we, who have suffered in our bodies and in our hearts from colonial oppression, say to you all that is finished.

"The Republic of Congo has been proclaimed and is in the hands of its own children. Together, my brothers, we must begin a new fight, a sublime fight which is going to lead our country to peace, to prosperity and to grandeur."

The Moderate

Montgomery Advertiser

Premier Patrice Lumumba of the new Congo Republic swears, "I'm neither a communist nor a socialist; I am just a nationalist."

Mont. Ala.

But to his reassurance he added an escape clause in type a foot high, "We would not hesitate to ally ourselves with the devil himself [if it benefited Congo nationalism]."

Sun. 7/28/60

P. 4-A

And while he was saying this the Leopoldville radio station had switched to reading quotations from the Pravda and Tass and telegrams from iron curtain countries blasting the "imperialists."

It's hard to believe that there could be any mass affection for communism among the Congo's 13,000,000 people, most of them illiterate. They would hardly know the difference between dialectical materialism and a B-70.

But then neither do most of Cuba's peasants or China's teeming millions.

Congo Republic Inaugurated

A Parting Shot At Colonialism

The Courier-Journal

Leopoldville, Republic of Congo, June 30 (AP)—Premier Patrice Lumumba Thursday accused the Belgians of inflicting "atrocious sufferings" on the Congolese people in their 80 years of rule over this African land.

Louisville, Ky.

He delivered this parting shot at his former colonial masters as they turned over the country to its new native leaders.

Tue. 7/1/60

"We have known ironies and insults, the blows to which we have had to submit morning, noon, and night because we are Negroes," Lumumba said at independence ceremonies attended by his parliamentary colleagues, assembled dignitaries of the church and diplomatic corps, and King Baudouin of Belgium.

p. 2

Lumumba's words provided the only acid in the otherwise-friendly speechmaking that inaugurated the new republic.

A few hours later Lumumba, a former postal clerk once jailed by the Belgians on charges of inciting a nationalist riot, almost reversed himself. He expressed his Government's thanks to Baudouin and "the noble Belgian people" for their decision to free the Congo.

At morning ceremonies the bespectacled, shy young Belgian King promised Belgian friendship and appealed for peace and order among Congolese political factions and tribes.

Then Lumumba, wearing the mauve-red sash of Belgium's top decoration, the Order of Leopold, started speaking.

The Premier described Belgian law as different for blacks and whites—"accommodating for one, cruel and inhuman for the other."

"Who will forget the fusillades under which so many of our brothers perished?

"Wages paid to black men were not sufficient to satisfy their hunger, to dress them, or provide them with decent lodging."

"We have known atrocious sufferings for political opinions or religious beliefs. We have known that in the cities there were magnificent houses for the whites and decrepit huts for the blacks, that a black was not admitted to the cinemas nor in the restaurants nor in the stores called 'European.'

The King in his speech alluded to Belgium's new treaty with the Congo, signed just after independence was proclaimed. The treaty provides for economic aid and the maintenance of Belgian officials to help the Congolese run their country.

Although it is a third the size of the United States and has more than 13,000,000 people, only about a score of natives held administrative positions under Belgian rule. A drive for universal grade-school education began only a decade ago.

Washington Post D.C. P.B-A Aug. 7/1

Associated Press

Mizro Kakhmatov, at lower right, vice president of the Supreme Soviet Presidium, and Ivan Kotchergin (waving) are shown as they arrived at Leopoldville, Belgian Congo, for a celebration marking the independence of the Congo.

Washington

N.Y. Times

'Mumbo Jumbo, God of the Congo . . .'

N.Y. Times

By JAMES RESTON

WASHINGTON, Aug. 18—The planners at the State Department look a little glassy-eyed this week, as if they'd been reading Vachel Lindsay's "Congo."

"Beware, beware, walk with care. Boomlay boomlay boomlay boom. . . . Walk with care, walk with care, or Mumbo-Jumbo, God of the Congo. . . . Mumbo Jumbo will hoo-doo you."

Tue. 8/19/60

It is not too much to say that the outbreak of racism, tribalism and primitivism in the Congo has sent a shiver through this Government.

p. 22-C

There have been a series of urgent and private meetings here all week leading to a very simple but hard conclusion, namely, that unless the irresponsible Congo "Government" of Premier Patrice Lumumba is contained, the future of the United Nations and of the whole of Central Africa will be seriously affected.

The stakes are high because Lumumba, with the diplomatic support of Moscow, is defying the United Nations precisely at the moment when the U. N. is trying to avoid the direct intervention of Communist or Western troops in the convulsive development of Central Africa.

If Lumumba gets away with his defiance, the feeling here is that other inexperienced and irresponsible leaders in Africa will do the same and that the authority of the U. N. will be seriously weakened just when it is beginning to serve as an important buffer between the hostile big powers in Africa.

Restraining Factors

Though Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold of the U. N., who is not a careless man with words, has talked about the possibility of war over the Congo, the official estimate here is that the Soviets are playing a limited game. If they could subvert the Congo and exploit the chaos of Central Africa, no doubt they would try, but direct intervention with Soviet troops is not considered likely.

In the first place, the logistics of the situation are against them. Direct military intervention by the Russians in the Congo would be more difficult than for the United States and the Western European powers, who are closer.

Second, the other new African and non-Communist Asian states prefer the stabilizing influence of the U. N. to any reckless maneuvers that might bring Communist and Western troops into Central Africa.

Third, the U. N. troops in the Congo are authorized to defend themselves against attack and could probably deal with anything short of massive guerrilla war until help arrived.

And finally, so much is known of Lumumba's personal self-indulgence and political instability that he is becoming an embarrassment to the Russians, especially since his appeals to racist prejudice, which go against Communist ideology.

For all these reasons, it may be possible to find some formula in the U. N. Security Council on Saturday that will preserve the authority of the United Nations and enable that organization to gather and develop the administrative and technical personnel to bring some order to the Congo.

The U. S. and the U. N.

This, at least, is what Washington is trying to arrange. After years of giving lip-deep support to the U. N., the United States is finally beginning to see that it is the best possible instrument for keeping the great powers out of the area below the Sahara and helping the weak new governments through the transition from colonial status to self-government.

In his news conference yesterday President Eisenhower emphasized that he was looking to the U. N. for leadership in this crisis. Also, he even agreed that the U. S. should permit the United Nations to administer at least part of the funds appropriated for assistance to Africa.

More than that will be needed. For the U. N. is now being given responsibilities which it has insufficient funds and personnel to meet, and it is just being realized here that in the present sensitive, race-conscious mood of Africa. a training program for American Negroes to serve in Africa is urgently needed.

Nevertheless, Washington is now realizing that it can no longer look to its friendly allies in Western Europe to maintain stability in Central Africa and that it must find new instruments for this purpose.

This is why there has been such a flurry behind the scenes here this week to preserve the position of the U. N. before the new God of the Congo wrecks the whole experiment.

UN Chief Fears Congo-Set War

Atlanta Constitution

Atlanta, Ga.

By A. I. GOLDBERG

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP)—Dag Hammarskjold warned Monday that failure to resolve the Congo crisis by pulling out Belgian troops and allowing U.N. forces to enter Katanga province could precipitate world war.

The secretary-general made the statement at a dramatic meeting of the 11-nation Security Council, where he won quick support from the United States for a demand for withdrawal of the troops at the earliest possible moment.

And he intervened late in the day to reject a Soviet demand that U. N. troops shoot their way into secessionist Katanga province.

"I do not believe personally we would help the Congolese people by actions in which Africans kill Africans or Congolese kill Congolese," he declared.

"That will be my guiding principle in the future."

Hammarskjold's desires were reflected in a Tunisian-Ceylonese resolution that called on Belgium to withdraw its forces from Katanga. It contained assurances that the U. N. forces had no intention to interfere in the Congo's internal affairs.

The two-nation resolution appeared headed for approval Monday night. There was virtually no chance that the Soviet Resolution would be adopted.

The Soviet resolution gave Hammarskjold only three days to act and report back to the Council.

Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Vasily Kuznetsov introduced the resolution in the Council at the end of a bristling speech in which he accused Belgian and its supporters of trying to strangle the newborn Congo republic.

Kuznetsov said previous Council resolutions gave U.N. forces the right to use armed force in moving against any obstacle to preserve order.

SHOULD BE REPLACED

He said if U.N. soldiers won't shoot their way into Katanga province, they should be replaced by forces that will.

His resolution, however, said only that the secretary-general should take "decisive measures, not stopping from the use of all necessary means of enforcement."

The United States gave immediate support to the secretary-general's call for withdrawal of Belgian forces.

Henry Cabot Lodge, chief U. S. delegate, said the time has come "for Belgian withdrawal at the earliest moment under arrangements to be worked out by the secretary-general for preservation of law and order."

NO GROUNDS TO OBJECT

Lodge said local authorities in Katanga province would have no grounds for objection to entry of U. N. troops, as demanded by Hammarskjold, once the council has given assurance that the U. N. troops are there only to preserve law and order.

Tunisia and Ceylon responded immediately with a resolution to carry out the main points of Hammarskjold's demands.

Diplomatic sources said the Soviet Union and African nations agreed to go along.

Pierre Wigny, Belgium's foreign minister, told the council his country's forces would be ready to quit Katanga as soon as there was assurance that 20,000 Belgian nationals there would have protection and safety.

Hammarskjold sounded a warning in the council against any unilateral action that would bar the U.N. from its goal of establishing order in the newborn African republic. He said such action would extend the East-West conflict to the African continent.

He had just flown back from the Congo to deliver one of his strongest statements since he became secretary-general in 1952.

Before packing public and press galleries, Hammarskjold sounded an alarm of war as he demanded "complete and unconditional" withdrawal of Belgian troops, including those at the big base in Katanga.

"I do not hesitate to say that the speediest possible—I would even say immediate—achievement of such a solution of the Congo problem is a question of peace or war, and when saying peace or war, I do not limit my perspective to the Congo," he said.

"A delay now, hesitation now, efforts to safeguard national or group interests now in a way that would hamper the U. N. effort, would risk values immeasurably greater than any of those which such action may be intended to protect.

"This applies to all parties, first of all the one to which the Security Council has addressed its appeal."

He ticked off his defiance to threats of independent action against Katanga that have come from the Soviet Union, Ghana and Guinea among others.

Dag To Ask U.N. For Instructions In Katanga Case

The Montgomery Advertiser

Montgomery, Ala.

Council Sets Urgent Meet Sunday Night

Sun, 8-7-60

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y. (AP)—Dag Hammarskjold proposed Saturday the U. N. Security Council firmly assure the rulers of dissident Katanga Province that U. N. military forces will keep hands off the Congo's internal affairs.

With that assurance, the U. N. secretary general told the council, the door may be opened to a solution of the explosive situation posed by Katanga Premier Moise Tshomba's decision to fight any U. N. forces that enter his territory.

URGENT SESSION

The secretary general made the proposal as he hurried back from Leopoldville to seek a new set of instructions from the 11-nation council on how to obtain withdrawal of Belgian forces and keep the new African nation from falling apart.

Hammarskjold reached New York at 5:20 p.m. He declined to make any statement to airport newsmen, saying only that he would report to the Security Council.

The council will meet Sunday night in an urgent session called at his request.

In an 11-page report to the council, Hammarskjold made clear that he believes the U. N. force has no authority under council resolutions or the U. N. Charter to shoot its way into Katanga Province.

OTHER METHODS

He told the council that Dr. Ralph J. Bunche, his chief trouble shooter, had reported after conferences with Katanga officials that the U. N. force troops could enter Katanga only by force.

He said that in his view it is impossible under the U. N. Charter to transform the U. N. contingent of about 11,000 men now in the Congo into a fighting army.

The only alternative, he declared, is for the council to seek other methods "which would enable me to carry through the implementation of its resolutions without going beyond my instructions as regards the force."

He said the root of the problem does not lie with Belgium, which he declared has given assurances it will go along with the council's call for a withdrawal of Belgian forces "in accordance with the resolutions as implemented by the United Nations force."

But he noted without additional comment that Belgium has not yet removed its troops.

He said one problem in Katanga is whether U. N. participation and control of security would submit the province against its wishes to rule by Premier Lumumba's central government.

Hammarskjold asserted that this is a political problem to which U. N. forces "obviously cannot be a party. Nor would the entry of U. N. forces in Katanga mean any taking of sides in the conflict to which I have just referred."

"The Security Council may wish to clarify its views on the matter and to lay down such rules for the U. N. operation as would serve to separate effectively questions of a peaceful and democratic development in the constitutional field from any questions relating to the presence of the U. N. force," he suggested.

"Were the council to do so, it might well prove to open the door to a speedy implementation of its previous resolutions, also as regards Katanga."

Council Moves To Back Dag's Congo Demands

Montgomery Advertiser
Montgomery, Ala
Tues. 8/9/60

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP)—The U.N. Security Council moved toward a vote early Tuesday on a Tunisian-Ceylonese resolution to strengthen Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold's demand for quick Belgian evacuation of the entire Congo. Approval appeared certain.

A majority of the council members, spurred by Hammarskjold's warning that world war would erupt unless the Congo crisis is solved, lined up behind the resolution calling for withdrawal of Belgian forces from Katanga province.

The Soviet Union proposed a resolution calling for U.N. forces to enter Katanga within three days "without hesitating to use any means to that end." But some diplomatic sources said the Soviet delegation and Poland, only Communist members of the council, might even go along with the majority on the Tunisia-Ceylon resolution.

REJECTS DEMAND

Hammarskjold intervened late Monday afternoon to reject the Soviet demand that U.N. troops shoot their way into secessionist Katanga province if necessary.

Pierre Wigny, Belgium's foreign minister, told the council his country's forces would be ready to quit Katanga as soon as there was assurance that 20,000 Belgian nationals there would have protection and safety.

Hammarskjold sounded a warning in the council against any unilateral action that would bar the U. N. from its goal of establishing order in the newborn African republic. He said such action would extend the East-West conflict to the African continent.

'PEACE OR WAR'

He spoke at an urgent session of the 11-nation council called at his request. He flew back from the Congo to deliver one of his strongest statements since he became secretary-general in 1952.

Before packing public and press galleries, Hammarskjold sounded an alarm of war as he demanded "complete and unconditional" withdrawal of Belgian troops, including those at the big base in Katanga.

"I do not hesitate to say that the speediest possible—I would even say immediate—achievement of such a solution of the Congo problem is a question of peace or war, and when saying peace or war, I do not limit my perspective to the Congo," he said.

"A delay now, hesitation now, efforts to safeguard national or group interests now in a way that would hamper the U. N. effort, would risk values immeasurably greater than any of those which such action may be intended to protect.

"This applies to all parties, first of all the one to which the Security Council has addressed its appeal."

He ticked off his defiance to threats of independent action against Katanga that have come from the Soviet Union, Ghana and Guinea among others.

Without naming any country, he told the council, "It does not help the U. N. effort if it has to live under a threat of any one—or more — contributing government taking matters in its—or their—own hands, breaking away from the U. N. force and pursuing a unilateral policy."

In reassurances to both the central Congo government and the Katanga secessionists, he said removal of Belgian troops and overall supervision by U. N. forces will permit constitutional development in the Congo by and for the Congo people.

Tshombe Elected Katanga State Head

ELISABETHVILLE, Katanga (AP) — The Katanga Assembly elected Premier Moise Tshombe head of state Monday.

Formal election was by unanimous vote in the absence of 21 members of the opposition Cartel party, which has boycotted the assembly.

Tshombe's election as head of state is significant in that it probably clears the way for his right hand man, Godefroid Munongo, minister of the interior, to become premier of this rich, secessionist province. Tshombe now holds both posts.

CHIEFTAIN CHARGES:

Hammarskjold Bypasses Congo

The Montgomery Advertiser
Montgomery, Ala
Sun. 8/14/60

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo (AP)—Vice Premier Antoine Gizenga charged Saturday that U.N. Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold ignored the Congolese government in dealing with the secession of rich Katanga Province.

Preparing to fly to New York to plead the Congo's case before the special Security Council meeting on Katanga Sunday night, Gizenga again called on Hammarskjold to send U.N. troops to Katanga immediately.

Hammarskjold

Gizenga, who openly criticized the U.N. official last week at a dinner in Hammarskjold's honor, said the troops should be sent to "honor the promises—he made publicly to the Congolese people."

Hammarskjold had left for New York after cancelling orders for U.N. troops to enter Katanga and thus bring it at least symbolically under U.N. control.

Hammarskjold warned that Premier Moise Tshombe of Katanga meant business when he said U.N. troops would have to fight their way into Katanga. He said he had no authorization to commit troops of the 11,000-man, predominantly African U.N. force to battle.

In Elisabethville, his capital Tshombe expressed satisfaction with Hammarskjold's decision.

Gizenga complained that he was told of Hammarskjold's cancellation order only 15 minutes before the secretary-general flew back to New York.

"Mr. Dag Hammarskjold has done everything to ignore the central government of the Congolese republic, a trustee of the confidence of the Congolese people," Gizenga said in a statement.

He charged that Hammarskjold had based his decisions not on the Congolese government's desires but on "strict application of the results of conversations between Bunche and Tshombe."

Ralph J. Bunche, U.N. undersecretary and Hammarskjold's top troubleshooter in the Congo, flew to Katanga last week and failed to persuade Tshombe to yield on the troop issue.

Gizenga, one of four Congolese ministers instructed by the Cabinet to attend the Security Council meeting, publicly told Hammarskjold last week that the United Nations had fallen down on the job by allowing the secession movement to get organized under Tshombe.

His statement Saturday represented a sharp departure from Friday night's conciliatory motion by the Cabinet. Under Gizenga's chairmanship, it unanimously voted its confidence in the United Nations, in Hammarskjold and in their efforts to solve the Congo crisis.

In addition to Gizenga, the ministers flying to New York are Foreign Minister Justin Bomboko, who is known as a moderate; Justice Minister Rene Mwambe, and Thomas Kanza, the Congo's minister-delegate to the United Nations.

END OF AN ERA

The Montgomery Advertiser

Missionaries To Congo Reach Turning Point

Montgomery, Ala.

Sat 7-23-60

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
Associated Press Religion Writer

Christian missionaries, who for 100 years have heard the call of the Congo, today were out or getting out.

Whether they'll ever go back again, on the same basis, seemed doubtful. Their cause would continue, in Congolese hands, but there were signs of the end of an era.

"It's certainly a turning point," said the Rev. Theodore L. Tucker, a veteran African missionary and now head of the Africa Committee of the Division of Foreign Missions of the National Council of Churches.

"Just what will happen eventually remains to be seen. But obviously there will be considerable differences after this tremendous mass exodus."

Most of the 1,200 American missionaries in the Congo have quit the tumult-ridden region, including many who until this week thought they could stick it out.

"We don't know how soon or under what conditions missionaries can return," said Dr. Dana M. Albaugh, overseas director for the American Baptist Foreign Mission Societies. "We anticipate going back, but it probably won't be on the same footing."

With stations outside the Congo's borders overcrowded with refugees, he said, most of the missionaries will probably come home.

American Baptists were the first to send missionaries to the Congo from this country in 1878. They followed a spiritual trail blazed into a wild, trackless region a century ago by the famed medical missionary, Dr. David Lvingstone.

Since then the missionaries have built hospitals and clinics, improved food and water systems, and dotted the land with mission stations and schools, virtually the only educational system in the country.

Behind them the missionaries leave institutions with a total valuation estimated at more than 25 million dollars, many of them now at least partially unmanned. Also remaining is a harvest of about 6 million Christians in a population of 13½ million.

For an indefinite time. it's been up to the Congolese Christians to carry on.

"We feel they can do it for the time being," Dr. Albaugh said. "They're a capable, dedicated group. Ever since World War II we've been preparing them for the time when we might have to face just such a day as this."

Increasingly, missionaries have brought Africans into church leadership, but the job still was only party done.

RESPONSIBILITY SHIFTS

"We've worked consistently toward this goal," the Rev. Mr. Tucker said. "But as events show, we haven't moved nearly fast enough."

Overnight, ready or not, the whole responsibility has shifted.

"There's no way of telling just what will happen," the Rev. Mr. Tucker said. "Some Congolese who worked with the missionaries have been threatened. But certainly they'll try to look after the work as best they can."

No missionary deaths or serious injuries have been reported, but some missionaries were roughed up. Congolese Christians, regretting the forced departure of the missionaries, have helped them and offered to defend them if they stayed.

But they noted: "If you're not here, we won't have to defend you."

Dr. Eugene Smith, head of the Methodist Foreign Missions Board said: "In many cases, our missionaries have left simply to protect the Congolese Christians from having to stand up against the marauders."

What future do missionaries have in the Congo?

"It all depends on how things go," the Rev. Mr. Tucker said.

When order is restored, he said, there may eventually be room for foreign missionaries in advisory or assistant capacities, with Congolese in leadership, which was the ultimate objective anyway.

Already, Methodist Congolese elect their own bishops and have native district superintendents. Other groups have similar arrangements. A native minister, the Rev. Pierre Shaumba, trained AT Paine College in Georgia, heads the Congo Protestant Council, coordinating work of many missions.

U. N. Speeds Takeover In Congo

Washington Post
D.C., Mon. 7/25/60

P. 1

Troops Occupy Strategic Port, Provincial Capital

LEOPOLDVILLE, The Congo, July 24 — United Nations forces sped their takeover in the Congo today, ocupying the strategic port of Boma and Luluabourg, capital of neighboring Kasai Province.

A U. N. spokesman said U. N. troops are advancing in other parts of the Congo and taking over from Belgian troops "on schedule and without difficulties," the Associated Press reported.

About 3000 Conoglese rebel soldiers laid down their arms before a U. N. task force of 1000 Tunisians in Luluabourg, 600 miles southeast of here. The Tunisians were greeted enthusiastically by cheering Congolese soldiers, the spokesman said.

A unit of Moroccan infantrymen took over from Belgian paratroopers at Boma, controlling the mouth of the Congo River.

Additional units of Tunisian and Moroccan infantrymen were pouring out of United States transport planes at Leopoldville, bringing the total now in the Congo to more than 5000.

The first contingent of Guinean troops arrived today in Leopoldville, Reuters reported. They embarked on river steamers for a 3-day trip up the Congo to Banningville, where Belgian troops moved in last week.

In the wake of Saturday's Belgian troop exacuation, tension fell in Leopoldville today. Sidewalk cafes blossomed and mixed groups of Congolese and white customers drank cordials and coffees.

Reports of quiet from all sectors of the capital reflected the new spirit of relaxation.

Katanga Accuses Belgium

In Elizabethville, meanwhile, the aroused government of breakaway Katanga Province accused Bilgium of letting it down by failure to argue at the United Nations for its independence.

This marked the first time since Premier Moise Tshombe proclaimed his wealthy province independent on July 11 that the Gelgian attitude has come under fire in Elisabethville.

Interior Minister Godefroid Munongo expressed "surprise, disappointment and sadness" at Belgium's failure to defend Katanga independence at the United Nations.

P. 2-A

Belgian troops, civilian technicians and businessmen are operating freely in Katanga with the approval of the provincial government.

P. 2-A

Police use tear gas to quell thousands of Africans rioting in Southern Rhodesia. Page A4.

Congolese Premier Lumumba confers in New York with U. N. and African leaders. Page A4.

100 American Planes Flying Aid to Congo

WIESBADEN, Germany, July 24 (UPI)—More than 100 United States Air Force planes, including huge C-124 Globemasters, are flying men and materials into the Congo and bringing out refugees in "Operation Safari," one of the biggest mercy airlifts ever attempted, the Air Force said today.

A spokesman at the U. S. Air Force headquarters here said Air Force planes were operating over 12,000 miles of routes bounded by Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, Leopoldville, the Congo, Dakar, Mali Federation and Frankfurt, Germany.

American planes have been operating on the mercy mission for more than two weeks, flying in food, equipment and detachments of the United Nations emergency force organized to keep order in the Congo.

The planes were making the round trip from Europe to the Congo and back in as little as 33 hours.

Belgians Slay 16 Congolese

The Montgomery Advertiser

ELISABETHVILLE, Katanga (AP) — Air-borne Belgian troops and Congolese mutineers fought a pitched battle near a Katanga mining center Friday.

A Belgian spokesman said about 16 Congolese were killed and many wounded. The Belgian army gave its casualties as two dead and six wounded, but an army doctor said a third soldier died in the hospital.

Also in the hospital, the doctor said, were two Belgian non-commissioned officers who attempted to parley with the rebels and were badly beaten up.

The battle, which lasted about three hours, took place at the Force Publique (Congolese army) barracks outside Kolwezi mining center in Katanga province, which last week broke away from Congo to become a self-proclaimed independent republic.

Platoon and company commanders of the Belgian grenadiers who took part in the battle described it as "tough." Eight platoons were used in attacking the barracks, supported by four rocket-firing planes.

260 MEN

These platoons—about 260 men all told—flew the 100 miles from Elisabethville to attack about 250 mutineers holding out in barracks 20 miles outside Kolwezi.

Belgian soldiers surrounded the barracks Thursday night and the commanding officer tried to talk the Africans into surrendering, but he failed. Other attempts were made, then Congolese opened fire.

Belgians returned it, called for air support and as planes fired rockets, Belgians moved in and captured some of the buildings.

COMMANDER

Gen. Carl von Horn of Sweden, commands United Nations forces in the Congo. He has established headquarters in Leopoldville.—AP Wirephoto

U.N. Does About-Face, Cancels Katanga Move

The Montgomery Advertiser Montgomery, Ala

Dag Yields To Threat Of Violence

Sat. 8-6-60

LEOPOLDVILLE, The Congo (AP) — Faced with a threat of bloodshed, the United Nations Friday suddenly called off plans to send U.N. troops into the secessionist province of Katanga.

U.N. Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold made the hard decision and called an urgent meeting of the Security Council on the turbulent Congo situation. The Council will meet at 8 p.m. Sunday in New York.

Hammarskjold was flying back to New York Friday night aboard a special U.N. plane to attend the Council session.

The cancellation of the plan to move a U.N. force into Katanga Saturday came in a day of swiftly moving developments.

U.N. PARTY BARRED

A 20-man U.N. advance party was barred from leaving its plane in Elisabethville, the Katanga capital. The group had been scheduled to prepare the way for U.N. troops to move in at dawn Saturday.

Instead the U.N. party returned here, accompanied by Undersecretary Ralph J. Bunche, who had rushed to Elisabethville Wednesday to confer with leaders of the province on the withdrawal of Belgian troops and their replacement by a U.N. force.

On his return here, Bunche went immediately into a conference with Hammarskjold. The announcement that U. N. troops would not be dispatched to Katanga came two hours later.

U.N. officials said that during his stay in Elisabethville Bunche had become convinced that any U.N. entry into Katanga could not be accomplished without bloodshed.

These officials said the difficult problem confronting Hammarskjold was that he had not the right to risk the lives of soldiers offered by their countries to the U.N. Congo force for police action only.

The Katanga government also had set up a simple but effective front-line defense against arrivals of U.N. troops: a ready plan to blockade the airfield at Elisabethville with vehicles, oil drums and other gear to prevent plane landings. Gunfire also was threatened against unauthorized plane landings.

TROOPS ALERTED

Swedish troops had been alerted to leave the Leopoldville airport at 2 a.m. Saturday and would have reached Elisabethville about dawn.

Bunche was reported to have told Hammarskjold that "the mood of the Katanga officials was definitely for a showdown."

U.N. sources said Belgian officials in Elisabethville made it clear to Bunche that the scheduled arrival of U.N. transport planes at this time would provoke a major explosion.

These sources added: "nobody in Katanga wanted to listen to Bunche's explanations, everybody was in a highly excited state."

There was no immediate reaction from the central Congo government, but the U.N. action was certain to be a bitter disappointment to Congo Premier Patrice Lumumba and his government. The central government has been insisting that Belgian troops be withdrawn from all the Congo at once and replaced by U.N. forces.

Moise Tshombe, Katanga's premier, declared earlier this week U.N. forces would have to fight their way into his province but his threat had been generally discounted and plans had gone ahead for the U.N. takeover.

But Bunche's on-the-scene investigation of the situation and the unyielding stand taken by Katanga authorities on the arrival of the U.N. advance party brought the change in plans.

PERMISSION REFUSED

The plane carrying the U.N. group circled the Elisabethville airport and asked permission to land. Permission was refused by the airport control tower.

Bunche went to the tower and talked to the pilot by radio. Then he went to the runway, where Godefroid Munongo, Katanga interior minister, already had given orders to block the runway with oil barrels, trucks and bulldozers.

Bunche told Munongo the plane was carrying only technicians and not troops. The minister rescinded his order and told workmen not to block the runway. The plane landed and Bunche and Munongo went aboard. Munongo asserted the men were soldiers and ordered them not to leave the plane. Bunche also told them not to get out and said he was leaving with them. The plane refueled and flew back to Leopoldville.

Elisabethville is 950 miles southeast of Leopoldville.

THREE REMAIN

Remaining in the Katanga capital were three U.N. civilian officials, headed by Sture Linner Swedish chief of the U.N. technical advisory services in the Congo.

Lumumba's Regime Sour With Discord

Montgomery Advertiser Sun. 8/9/60

LEOPOLDVILLE, The Congo (AP)—Premier Patrice Lumumba came home Monday night to find his government shaken by dissent and parading youths shouting "down with Lumumba."

Returning from a two-week tour of North America and Africa, Lumumba learned the Leopoldville capital province had joined secessionist Katanga in demanding strong autonomy for the Congo's six provinces within a federation to replace his central regime.

"I made an excellent and fruitful trip to the United States as well as to Africa," Lumumba told newsmen at the airport. "All I can tell you is that Africa from east to west and from north to south is on the side of the Congo government."

TALK WITH OTHERS

He said he would first have to talk with other members of his regime before making additional statements.

In Lumumba's absence during a critical period of his young nation's life, sentiment against his central government and his methods of running it hardened.

With economic distress spreading, the influential Bakongo tribesmen of western Congo were reported rising in indignation against his leadership. Belgian sources said separatist movements were growing in Kasai province to the east and Oriental province to the north.

Lumumba returned to find still unsatisfied his demands of two weeks ago that all Belgian troops leave the country and that Baron Jean Van den Bosch, head of the Belgian mission, go with them.

MAIN CONCERN

Before leaving Accra, the capital of Ghana, Lumumba announced he and Ghana President Kwame Nkrumah had agreed to establish a combined high command to speed the withdrawal of Belgian soldiers from this former Belgian colony, if the U. N. fails.

The main concern of Lumumba has been the defiance of rich Katange province, which has declared itself independent of his rule. But now Katanga's cry for a federation of self-ruling provinces was taken up by Leopoldville province, which controls the Lower Congo.

Gason Dioni, vice president of the province, announced the provincial government had sent its demand for a federation of Leopoldville, Oriental, Equator, Kasai, Kivu and Katanga provinces to the United Nations Security Council. Furthermore, Dioni told the U. N. the big Mukongo tribe he heads "rejects the unitarian centralized government."

The youth demonstrations against Lumumba were led by Jabako, the youth organization of Congo President Joseph Kasavubu, a political foe of the Premier.

Do Job Right Or Get Out, Soviets Say

Sat. 8-6-60

The Montgomery Advertiser

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet government called Friday for removal of the U.N. Congo command unless all Belgian troops are pulled out of the Congo—including Katanga Province. It termed "very alarming the behavior of the U.N. forces command."

The Soviets also declared that if present U.N. forces in the Congo do not bring about withdrawal of Belgian troops, soldiers should be sent to the Congo from "countries which would be ready to contribute to the implementation of this just act."

'MISLEAD PUBLIC'

The Soviet government declaration, distributed by the official news agency Tass, said the situation in the Congo is "absolutely intolerable." It called Belgian soldiers in the Congo "interventionist troops" and referred again to "aggression" it said had been launched against the Congo.

The "token withdrawal of an insignificant part of the interventionist troops, now under way, is a maneuver calculated to soothe and mislead public opinion," the statement said. It also declared the authority of the U.N. is being undermined.

Declaring the Soviet Union is for strict and effective measures to ensure the early fulfillment of Security Council decisions on the Congo, Tass said the Soviet Union proposed: "to evacuate in the shortest possible time all the Belgian troops from the territory of the Republic of the Congo, not hesitating to use any means to bring this about.

'READY TO CONTRIBUTE'

"If the present command of the troops continues refusing to abide by the Security Council decisions, which make it binding on this command to act only in agreement with the government of the Republic of the Congo and to render it the necessary military support, this command should be removed and a new one appointed.

"To take without delay resolute and effective measures to end the occupation of Katanga Province, this unalienable part of the Republic of the Congo.

"If the troops dispatched to the Congo in accordance with the Security Council's decision will be unable to ensure effectively the evacuation of the interventionist troops, to send there the troops of countries which would be ready to contribute to the implementation of this just act."

The statement asserted that decisions of the Security Council are not being carried out. Belgian troops "continue unlawfully occupying Congolese towns and populated localities, particularly Katanga Province where intrigues to sever Katanga from the Republic of the Congo continue," it said.

The statement added: "Very alarming is the behavior of the U.S. forces command. These troops are used over and against the Belgian aggressors towns and provinces not for what they were intended and are under the control of the They are dispatched by the com-lawful Congolese government."

Katanga Wasn't Asked

Montgomery Advertiser
Montgomery, Ala.
Tues. 8/9/60
A-4

U.N. Secretary-General Hammarskjold is quite certain that the United Nations force in the Congo has no authority to shoot its way into secessionist Katanga.

The belated acknowledgement of this makes the resolute declarations of last week all the more baffling.

Tuesday, it will be recalled, Hammarskjold apparently had worked out the last major obstacles to the peaceful occupation of the Congo by U.N. troops. Belgium had agreed to pull back its troops, and Hammarskjold confidently announced that U.N. forces would occupy Katanga on Saturday.

Within hours, however, Katanga Premier Tshombe ordered general mobilization and announced that U.N. troops would have to shoot their way in.

The questions that arise from this are obvious. When Hammarskjold announced that U.N. forces would occupy Katanga, had he not consulted with the Katanga government? Or did he, despite the knowledge the U.N. had no authority to fight, hope to make a bluff to which Katanga would peacefully yield?

Both Hammarskjold and Ralph Bunche had been in the Congo for days. For some reason not yet clear, they apparently failed to ascertain the sentiment of Katanga, or else chose to disregard it.

In any case, the U.N. is needlessly made to appear impotent. It is checked in its first major Congo test because the test was made inadvisedly.

TASK FORCE LED BY DAG

The Montgomery Advertiser

Troops Land In Katanga

Montgomery, Ala.

Sat. 8-13-60

ELISABETHVILLE, The Congo (AP)—U.N. Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold led a U. N. task force peacefully into secessionist Katanga Province Friday and opened negotiations for full withdrawal of Belgian soldiers.

A hitch in landing operations and minor demonstrations at the airport, including a cry of "Down with the United Nations," spiced his arrival and his blue-helmeted soldiers—220 fellow Swedes.

But there was a warm welcome for Hammarskjold to this rich territory of copper, cobalt and cattle from Katanga's Premier Moise Tshombe, who only a week ago was threatening war to bar the U. N. soldiers already occupying the rest of the Congo's half-dozen provinces.

MODIFIED STAND

Though he had modified his stand in the face of a Security Council mandate for replacement of the Belgian soldiers, Tshombe appeared in high spirits.

He joked and laughed with Hammarskjold, then set out with him in a car bearing both U. N. and Katanga flags for their first formal session at his official residence.

There was a warning to Congo Premier Patrice Lumumba, No. 1 political foe of Tshombe, that the U.N. intends to carry out its mission of maintaining order in the Congo despite interference by Lumumba's reactivated Congolese army.

U.N. Undersecretary Ralph J. Bunche delivered the warning personally to Lumumba in Leopoldville, the central government's capital 950 miles northwest of Elisabethville. It came after days of mounting unrest in which Lumumba's uniformed forces have taken an increasing hand in patrol and police work that is supposed to be handled by the U.N. force.

LANDING DELAYED

The secretary-general's white, twin-engine plane sped in at 1:40 p.m. from Leopoldville.

But the landing of his craft, the leader of a five-plane fleet, was delayed by a radioed declaration from the control tower that the soldiers would be refused permission to come in.

A breathless soldier of the Belgian 5th Brigade notified Tshombe the tower's European operator was abiding by last week's order that, under no conditions, should the U.N. force be allowed to land.

"This is a complete misunderstanding," said Tshombe, appaled, and swiftly brought the tower up to date.

BELGIANS GUARD

Hammarskjold's pane circled the field three times and then came down. The others streamed in at 10-minute intervals.

Maj Carl C. Stenkula led a 28-man detachment to the control tower. Others deployed along the runway. Belgian soldiers continued to maintain the airport guard they established a month ago.

Tshombe and his ministers welcomed Hammarskjold at the airport apron. African military police formed an honor guard.

About 300 African civilians were at the airport.

"Vive Tshombe" some shouted. "Down with the U. N."

On the other hand, five members of the Cartel party—Tshombe's main opposition—hoisted a banner which said: 'Down with federalism. Down with independent Katanga. Vive the united Congo."

Three Belgian officers of the African military police seized one of the banner bearers and the crowd cheered.

A small party held aloft a huge new Katanga flag as a military band struck up "Vers l'Avenir"—Toward the future — which has become the anthem of this independence-minded province.

Hammarskjold stood at attention while the song was played. He glanced at the flag, but did not salute it.

Changeover Bares Rifts In Katanga

Montgomery Advertiser

Mon. August 8/15/60

Crowds Display Divided Loyalties During Hectic Day

ELISABETHVILLE, the Congo (AP) — Belgian troops Sunday handed over guard duty in this rebellious provincial capital to United Nations troops before crowds that had cheers only for the Belgians and Katanga Premier Moise Tshombe.

It was a hectic day, exposing the divided loyalties in Elisabethville. Earlier, a friendly crowd was driven from U.N. Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold's temporary residence by Katanga police using tear gas and clubs. Hammarskjold was inside at the time and the curious crowd was made up mostly of Katangans who have demonstrated for him and against Tshombe.

Having completed arrangements for bringing the first U.N. troops into Katanga, Hammarskjold got what seemed to be a cool brush-off from Tshombe at the airport before he left. Tshombe, who finally agreed without enthusiasm to let U.N. troops into Katanga, kept the U.N. troubleshooter waiting for nearly half an hour before appearing.

HUNDREDS WATCH

Hundreds of Belgians and Africans watched as Gen. Rober A. Gheysen, Belgian military commander in Katanga, transferred his responsibilities in Elisabethville to Gen. Carl von Horn of Sweden, U.N. commander in the Congo.

The crowds shouted, "Vive l'armee" as Gheysen arrived for the formal ceremony at the Palace de l'Etoile, the city's main square.

"There were more shouts of "Vive Tshombe" as the Premier appeared. It seemed mostly Belgians were shouting for this Negro leader who has proclaimed his province independent of the Congo government at Leopoldville.

Many wept as Belgian soldiers laid a wreath at the cenotaph in honor of Belgium's dead in two world wars—the Belgians' parting gesture to Elisabethville.

There were no cheers for the U.N. commander and the Swedish military units when they took over from Gheysen. The crowd stood silent throughout this part of the ceremony.

It was a far different crowd that assembled in front of Hammarskjold's residence. Most were members of the Cartel party, bitterly opposed to Tshombe's separatist movement.

Police told the crowd to move on, then threw four tear gas bombs. One bounced on the lawn of the residence. Police followed up by pushing the people away with their clubs. No one was arrested but Prosper Mwamba, acting leader of the Cartel, said his supporters were beaten and their clothes torn.

Hammarskjold, who Saturday completed his ticklish job of arranging for U.N. troops to enter Katanga, left Elisabethville after what appeared to be a snub by Tshombe.

Tshombe showed up 25 minutes late at the airport and without apologizing told Hammarskjold: "I am glad to be able to see you off. Bon voyage. We hope to see you again."

Tshombe once vowed to block by force any attempt by U.N. troops to enter his province. He reluctantly agreed to let them in on the strict condition that no agent of his archfoe, Congo Premier Patrice Lumumba, come in with them.

While allowing U.N. forces to take over from Belgian troops the job of maintaning order in the province, Tshombe left no doubt he is in command of the province's affairs. His army security guards detained three Congolese who arrived on a commercial plane from Leopoldville, the Congo capital. The three were held on suspicion they were Lumumba's agents.

At the same time, his police were under orders to choke off any attempts at demonstrations against the provincial government.

U.N. Force Takes Over In Katanga

Montgomery, Ala.

Montgomery Advertiser

Sun. 8/14/60

Belgium Withdrawing Troops As Lumumba Shows Impatience

ELISABETHVILLE, the Congo (AP)—U. N. forces began taking over police duties from Belgian troops in rebellious Katanga Province Saturday under a formula worked out by U. N. Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold.

Hammarskjold worked out procedure for the withdrawal of Belgian troops from independence-minded Katanga as fast as U. N. forces can take over. He talked with Moise Tshombe, President-Premier of Katanga, and the Belgians who have supported the fiery secessionist.

As a first big step, Belgian soldiers will begin pulling back to their bases as more U. N. forces are flown in Monday and Tuesday.

LITTLE STEP

As the first little step, a company of Swedish U. N. troops paraded on the apron in front of the terminal building at Ellisabethville Airport. Belgian troops on guard drew up facing the Swedes.

A Swedish officer approached the Belgian commander, informed him of the agreement, and the Belgian saluted. The Belgian ordered his men to withdraw. They marched off, climbed into trucks, and returned to their billets in town.

The airport guard duty was the first U. N. assignment in this provincial capital, but the duties will multiply as more U. N. forces arrive.

Despite the agreement, complete Belgian withdrawal from Katanga and the military bases will take time. And in the Congo capital of Leopoldville Premier Patrice Lumumba showed impatience.

SEPARATIONIST MOVEMENT

For weeks Lumumba has been insisting the Belgians must quit Katanga at once, accusing them of starting the separationist movement in Katanga in an attempt to dismember the young republic.

Lumumba told reporters Saturday both his army and the various provincial governments were putting pressure on him to march into Katanga if the U. N. does not settle the issue soon. But foreign quarters in the capital did not take this threat seriously.

Lumumba also said that Hammarskjold had returned from New York and flown off to Elisabethville to see Tshombe without consulting the Congo government.

DAG SET FOR KATANGA

Montgomery Advertiser

Lumumba Shows Force With Armed Congolese

Montgomery Ala.

LEOPOLDVILLE, The Congo (AP)—Premier Patrice Lumumba began showing his muscle Thursday with rifle-carrying Congolese police and soldiers on the eve of the United Nations entrance into the disputed province of Katanga.

Lumumba's uniformed forces, which spread terror through Leopoldville in the July mutiny, halted cars on the road to the airport and searched them for weapons. Even diplomats were halted.

Faced with growing dissension, Lumumba broadcast an appeal for national unity and went to extraordinary lengths to protect his own life.

Reporters summoned to Lumumba's residence for a news conference found two Congolese soldiers with bayonetted rifles posted inside the entrance and four Ghana policemen, also with rifles, on duty in the reception room. Lumumba did not appear.

WALKED OUT

After waiting more than half an hour, the 30 or more correspondents who had answered his summons walked out.

Lumumba has promised to cooperate with U. N. Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold in the U. N. effort to replace Belgian soldiers in rebellious Katanga, the richest of the Congo's six provinces.

But the new show of force threw a blanket of uncertainty over the situation only a few hours before Hammarskjold was due from New York.

The secretary-general, accompanied by two generals and 300 Swedish soldiers, is scheduled to fly to Elisabethville early Friday.

WARM WELCOME

Moise Tshombe, Katanga's premier, promised Hammarskjold a warm welcome in Elisabethville, the provincial capital 950 miles southeast of Leopoldville. Tshombe warned, however, that the presence of the U. N. force "could cause troubles provided by enemies of the state" and said there is general uneasiness among Katanga's people.

ESCAPES UNINJURED

Congo Chief Riot Target

Montgomery Advertiser

Montgomery Ala.

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo (AP)—Antigovernment rioting broke out in the Negro heart of this capital city Wednesday night and rocks were thrown at the car of Premier Patrice Lumumba.

An aide said Lumumba was not injured—as had been reported in Belgian radio broadcasts.

"The Premier is safe and sound," the aide said.

During the rioting Congolese police fired over the heads of surging mobs. The violence was brought under control by police, showing fixed bayonets, and troops.

PEACE RESTORED

Late in the evening the Lumumba government announced: "No one was killed and peace was restored." A few persons were reported injured.

(The United Nations in New York announced Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold was flying back to Leopoldville in a special jet plane to supervise the replacement of Belgian troops with U.N. forces in rebellious Katanga Province. The U.N. reported he reached a complete harmony of views in conferences with Congolese leaders at the U.N.)

Newsmen were told by Congolese that the people were rising against Lumumba, the fiery chief of an infant nation that has been a world problem since its birth June 30.

FIRED IN AIR

But this report could not be confirmed immediately in the chaotic scene.

A Belgian Sabena Airlines pilot said he heard machine-gun fire in an area between the Negro city and the Leopoldville airport, 15 miles out of town.

Reporters who traveled through parts of the Negro city to reach the riot scene saw no U.N. troops, but there were trucks and jeeps full of Congolese police and soldiers.

The fledgling, once-mutinous Congolese army was called to regular duty and received full police powers Tuesday under a state of emergency proclaimed by the government.

Kashamura said members of President Joseph Kasavubu's Abako party, opponents of the government, had attacked passersby and that police fired in the air to disperse a mob.

One report said Abako party members had fired on police.

"The government has the situation firmly in hand," Kashamura said. "There will be numerous other arrests. We will not hesitate to use arms to restore order in the country.

Some leaders of the Abako party were arrested earlier following party demands for a high degree of autonomy for the lower Congo area.

CORDON OF BAYONETS

Lumumba has said that all attempts at secession from his central Congo government will be smashed and persons demanding provincial independence will be arrested.

The rioting occurred around the Place de la Victoire in the teeming Negro quarter. Congolese police and soldiers of the Force Publique—the Congolese police—threw a cordon of bayonets around the area.

Newsmen were threatened by screaming soldiers as the reporters attempted to reach the riot night.

☆ ☆ ☆

Dag To Lead U.N. Forces Into Katanga

Montgomery Ala

Advertiser

Montgomery Ala

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP)—Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold left for the Congo early Thursday after announcing he will enter secessionist Katanga Province Friday with two Swedish companies of U.N. troops.

Hammarskjold said Moise Tshombe, Tatanga chief of state who earlier had defied the entry of U.N. troops into his province, had agreed to the move.

The secretary general took off in a specal Boeing 707 jet loaned him by the U.S. government. It was to stop for refueling in the Azores and at Accra, Ghana, and was due in Leopoldville, the Congo capital, Thursday night.

The text of cables exchanged Wednesday between Hammarskjold and Tshombe outlined the procedure for talks intended to pave the way for the replacement of Belgian troops in the province by U.N. forces.

ARRIVE FRIDAY

The cable Hammarskjold sent to Tshombe said he would arrive in Elisabethville Friday afternoon with his civilian political advisers, two generals and "two companies of a Swedish battalion with all the military in uniform under my exclusive personal authority with only the right to legitimate self-defense in the event—which I rule out as inconceivable—that they are attacked."

There was no information here of the numerical strength of the two Swedish companies.

HAVE TO ACCEPT

Hammarskjold told Tshombe he wanted to enter Katanga to discuss with him the carrying out of Security Council resolutions but said there was no question of the U.N. having to accept any conditions or agreements.

"Such arrangements would be contrary to the constitutional roles that determine our relations," Hammarskjold's cable said.

But it added that for practical reasons Hammarskjold wanted an exchange of views "by which I may be guided in my instructions to my representatives and by which I may be given assurances covering the rights of U.N. protection."

Tshombe replied in his cable that by having the talks in Elisabethville, Hammarskjold would be able to develop an idea of the instructions he wanted to give. He assured the secretary-general of a proper reception.

U.S. Attache Ordered Out By Russians

Montgomery Ala.

Advertiser

MOSCOW (AP)—The Soviet Union Wednesday accused U.S. air attache Col. Edwin M. Kirton of organizing a spy apparatus and conducting himself in a manner offensive to Soviet Citizens. They ordered him out of the Soviet Union.

"It's a surprise to me," said Kirton, a husky, 6-foot-5 career officer from Palo Alto, Calif. "I tried to conduct myself properly."

His assistant, Capt. Irving T. McDonald, Jr., of Provincetown Mass., drew a warning against similar activities, but was not ordered to leave.

CHARGES REJECTED

The charges against both were rejected by the American charge d'affaires, Edward L. Freers.

McDonald, who was awarded the Legion of Merit in 1956 for outstanding duty, still has a year to go on his Moscow tour of duty.

Kirton's two-year assignment would have ended in October.

Kirton plans to head home via Copenhagen Monday with his wife, Lira, who returned only Wednesday afternoon from a brief shopping trip to Western Europe.

"I never thought this was what I was coming back for," Mrs. Kirton said.

Kirton served two years in the Pentagon before coming here in September 1958. Before that he was in the Strategic Air Command. His mother is Mrs. Frances M. Russell of Palo Alto.

(In Palo Alto, Kirton's mother said a letter received from him a few days ago "gave no hint of any trouble; it was mainly about their social activities."

(Kirton's step-father, the Rev Francis Russell, a retired minister, said of the news, "Oh, no! I don't believe it. He's just not that kind of man. He's a man of high deals.")

COL. EDWIN M. KIRTON

Congo freedom came too suddenly?

Afro-American

By S. K. BRYSON
PHILADELPHIA

Question:

Since June 30 when the Congolese received their independence from Belgium there has been considerable confusion in the land. In your opinion, who is responsible?

Answers:

Baltimore, Md.

Donald Lawson, artist, 1312 Fitzwater St., "I don't think the Congolese were properly prepared to take over the administration of their country. At the same time, there is reason to believe the Belgians knew this, and as a result were insincere when she granted independence.

* * *

Mrs. Delores Simmons, clerk-typist, 4221 Pennsgrove St., "The Congolese were unprepared to take over administration of the government. The confusion today is traceable to the Belgians.

Gerald W. Butler, bartender, 5402 W. Thompson St., "I really don't know if they are prepared or not. But if they are not, it was because the Belgians kept them down."

* * *

Robert Whaley, City employee, "From what I have read, I believe the Congolese should have their independence. After the confusion of the moment has subsided, the Congolese should be able to take over on their own."

READERS BLAME BELGIANS — The Belgians were blamed by AFRO readers for the chaos which greeted independence of the Congo. They are top left to right, Mrs. Delores Simmons and Donald Lawson (below) Robert Whaley and Gerald Butler.

Congo wealth creates alliances that beset nation's independence

The American, Baltimore, Md.

By JEWELL R. MAZIQUE

WASHINGTON

Harry R. Rudin, history professor at Yale University, charged in 1956 that the policy of colonial powers toward their possessions was conditioned by the U.S. independence grant to the Philippines, incorporating entrenched commercial disabilities which provided "...that countries may eventually get political independence but not economic independence."

Rudin noted further in the debates then under way in the United Nations on human rights, "The United States and the major colonial powers have made it clear beyond all possible doubt that they refuse to include in the right of self-determination anything like sovereignty over natural wealth and resources."

Rudin concluded that "...the policy carries a real threat hard to reconcile with the promises of the United Nations."

The policy implied by the "holding" countries was to tolerate nationalist parades and flag-waving and political independence only so long as such demonstrations did not interfere with "the gold in dem dar hills."

* * *

FREEDOM FOR native peoples under such conditions might be likened to an offer of free lodging and liberties to roam at will in the big house as long as one does not try to enter the kitchen for food, which area is to remain roped off and firmly under the domination of former tenants or outsiders.

Except for the privilege of retiring to the bedrooms to bring forth more children to join the hunger procession in begging or bargaining away their newly won rights, there is no other freedom in these conditions but the freedom to starve to death.

If the Secretary General Hammarskjold and his able assistant, Dr. Ralph Bunche, now find themselves between the hammer and the anvil, if not the Hammer and the Sickle in their occupation of the Congo, it may be the contradiction between the 1950 European dominated version of human rights, dictating there is such a condition as political rights without economic guarantees.

The 22 indeendent African nations now maintain they do not understand this kind of independence arrangement.

* * *

THE CONGO produces seventy per cent of the world's cobalt, seventy per cent of its industrial diamonds, fifty per cent of its uranium and is the fourth world producer of copper and tin, and sixth in the production of zinc. The U.S., which must import all its tin, takes forty-three per cent of the world supply.

Dr. William L. Hansberry, Howard University's expert on Africa's significance to the moden world, maintains that the Congo is not only the world's leading producer of industrial diamonds.

It shares with Northern Rhodesia the distinction of having the largest deposits of cobalt and copper ores that have so far been discovered anywhere in the world.

Throughout the Congo (one third the size of the United States) there are large European-owned plantations of rubber, palm oil, coffee, tea, cocoa and cotton.

Two-thirds of the Congo's wealth comes from Katanga Province.

Another significant portion is drawn from the diamond rich Guggenheim dominated Kasai and gold studded Kivu Provinces.

* * *

THOUGH IT appears from press reports that the controversy over the Katanga is between Belgium and a few African puppets on one hand and the uncivilized tribal chiefs and Lumumba on the other, it is likely that investors of other countries have a hand in the pie as well.

Besides the Rockefellers, who, according to the London Observer of July 10, recently swapped their 60,000 shares in the Union Minier edu Haut Katanga for the Congo Finance Company, and the Guggenheim diamond producers, Shell, Socony, Mobil and Texaco oil companies all did nice business under the Belgians in the Congo.

Reporting on his recent trip to study investment opportunities in the Congo, Edward Marcus of Brooklyn College said that companies from Canada, England, France, Germany, Italy, Switzerland and the United States were interested in the development of mining wealth, especially large bauxite reserves and in the refining of metals now mined in Katanga, Kasai and Kivu Provinces.

Moise Tschombe, an African with a European type plantation allowed him by the whites on behalf of foreign investors, has pulled the Katanga out of the Congo government of Lumumba and is inviting the Provinces of Kasai and Kivu to join him.

They would march under the Federation of the Rhodesias with Southern Africa's Oppenheimers, the Rhodesian Trust with Guggenheim backing, under Sir Roy Welensky.

Tschombe should be awarded a prize for quisling betrayal, "the Doctor Thomas degree," traditionally deserved by Uncle Tom in the United States.

The significant fight in this area of Africa is not between the tribal chiefs, but between potential white settlers from crowded Europe seeking a home—a frontier.

That is why Sir Welensky threatens to wipe out Africans with impunity as was done to Indians in the United States.

And the foreign investors there would make of the entire area an economic redoubt controlled by big private interests of Germany, England, United States, France and Belgium.

* * *

THE ROCKEFELLERS, the Guggenheims and other traditional advocates of civil rights for colored people in this country, while ignoring the numerous methods of economic exploitation such as garnishment, fraudulent education, housing rackets, naturally cannot understand why the Congolese will not compromise as we colored people in America have.

Instead, in their ignorance and even illiteracy, the Bantu of the Congo know that freedom with economic denial is a farce.

They cannot understand the culturally defrocked colored people of America who are satisfied to be like Tschombe, an Uncle Tom subsisting on the crumbs dropped from the tables of natural wealth.

UN again on spot in Congo situation

The American, Baltimore, Md.

By CHARLES HOWARD SR.
United Nations Correspondent

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y.—Not only the future of the month-old Congo Republic, but the prestige and effectiveness of the United Nations hinge on the outcome of the emergency session of the Security Council convened Sunday night.

8/13/60

The session was called by UN Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold after the Premier of the Congo's mineral rich Katanga Province, Moise Tshombe, defied the UN to send its troops into his territory.

Troops were due to have gone to Katanga on Saturday, but were withheld when Tshombe who has the backing of the Belgium Government, told Dr. Ralph Bunche there would be bloodshed if UN forces attempted to enter the province.

* * *

DR. BUNCHE, troubleshooting UN under secretary, had gone to Katanga to seek to arrange for entry of UN troops.

Not only would Tshombe not agree to the admission of UN soldiers, but on Friday denied admission to a planeload of UN technicians.

Failure of the United Nations to carry out the Katanga mission brought an immediate and angry reaction from Congolese Premier Patrice Lumumba.

The prime minister, who was in Rabat, Morrocco, at the time, enroute home from a nine-day visit to the United States and Canada, wired Hammarskjold that failure of UN troops to take over Katanga damages the prestige of the organization and endangers peace in Africa.

LUMUMBA BLUNTLY charged that the UN withdrawal had been dictated by Tshombe and his Belgian military advisers.

At the same time Lumumba voiced approval of his government's breaking off diplomatic relations with Belgium and ousting its ambassador.

The ambassador, Baron Jean van den Basche, was ordered to leave the Congo by Monday, Aug. 8.

The tenor of Lumumba's protest was the same as that made by the Soviet Government.

THE SOVIETS statement was to the effect that all UN forces should be withdrawn from the Congo unless all Belgian troops are withdrawn.

The Soviets added that if the UN troops did not cause the withdrawal of Belgian forces, the United Nations should call in "other troops" which would implement the UN resolution calling for Belgian troops to leave the Congo.

Most UN delegates here apparently were surprised when the emergency session was called.

* * *

THE TWO principal questions asked were:

1. Would the Secretary General merely pass the bush to the Security Council, or would he request permission for the UN forces to fight their way into Katanga?

2. Would the Soviet Union demand the use of force and insist upon the addition of combat troops from Soviet block countries and to the UN Congo forces?

Africa Seen As New Stage For East-West 'Cold War'

Afro American
Baltimore, Md.
Sat. 8/13/60

U. S. role in "Battle of Congo' may determine what Africans think of democracy.

Belgian Government seen supporting rebel Premier of Katanga to insure continued rule of mineral rich province.

United Nations Security Council voted for integrity of Congolese Central government.

By CHARLES P. HOWARD SR.
UN and foreign correspondent

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. — Africa rapidly is becoming the focal point of the cold war between the East and West.

The center of the stage, due to the latest developments in the Congo Republic, currently is the mineral rich province of Katanga.

The stakes in the Republic of Congo are high, both politically and economically. The future independence of other African areas will be affested thereby. The ideological implications also are many.

Policically, the East West struggle is rapidly moving of Africa as an important base of operation.

Economically, the Congo is one of the richest areas of Africa and the Province of Katanga has many of the raw materials necessary in the development of atomic weapons, as well as many other valuable minerals. Its hydroelectric potential is among the greatest in the world. As an overall matter, Katanga possesses 60 per cent of the wealth potential of the Congo.

Troubles in the Congo are being held up as an illustration of the fact that people of Africa are not ready for independence and self government. The result will be to make more difficult the problem of the gaining of independence by the people of Kenya, South Africa, Angola, Mozambique and other areas.

THE QUESTION immediately arises what is to be the role of the United Nations forces in Katanga.

Since it is to replace the Belgian troops, will the force be expected to serve the same function as the Belgian troops — that is to further the cause of Tshombe and guarantee the dismemberment of the Congo?

Or is it there to carry out the expressed wishes of the Security Council of the United Nations their creator?

Can it, say, be neutral and and if so whom does the neutrality help? It was probably these apparent inconsistencies that caused the Secretary - General to issue his supposed clarifying statement of Aug. 3.

The dilemma created by this situation makes the of the Secretary-General a very difficult one. As an agency of the United Nations he has made it clear that he will not become embroiled in the internal affairs of the Congo. This is in keeping with United Nations policy.

But the United Nations Security Council, the agency that he is serving at this moment, has gone on record as supporing the "territorial integrity" of the Congo which properly interpreted means opposes the secession of Katanga.

This it did by a unanimous vote. Therefore the Congo Government as represented by Mr. Lumumba, urges upon him the expulsion of Belgian troops and therefore the halting of the secession of Katanga.

The role of the United States is going to be very crucial from here on. If the United States stands on both the letter and the spirit of he Security Council resolutions, Belgium will not dare put itself openly in the position of supporting Tshombe. Anyway, Belgium alone cannot sustain Tshombe.

It would be regretable if the United States would let the African people get the impression that the Russians "were carrying the ball, alone, of supporting the Security Council Resolution."

Look Who's Crying 'Rape'

The Afro-American
Baltimore, Md.
Sat. 8-13-60

The Belgian Government in a futile bid for world sympathy, issued a Congo white paper claiming that 213 European women were raped by mutinous soldiers during a five-day revolt.

The rapes were cited as justification for the continued presence of 10,000 Belgian soldiers in the Congo in direct violation of a United Nations agreement to withdraw them with all possible speed.

The cries of outrage come with ill grace from the Belgians of all people. What are 213 rape cases when matched against the wholesale mutilation and murder of eight million Congolese perpetrated by the greedy minions of King Leopold II?

MOREOVER, we are not convinced the Belgians are really that concerned about the virtue of 200 white women, who of their own free will chose to make their home and fortunes deep in the heart of Equatorial Africa.

The tears actually are being shed over the impending loss of billions and billions of dollars represented in Congo cobalt, uranium, gold, diamonds, copper, tin and silver which for almost 100 years has lined Belgian pockets and fattened Belgian stomachs.

Despite all you read and all you hear, the truth is Belgian soldiers were not sent to the Congo to protect the virtue of a handful of white women, but to stand watch over the continued rape of the Congo's natural resources.

* * *

THAT OUR STATE Department disappointingly would swallow this Belgian propaganda so completely can be attributed to two things:

1. Naivete about Africa and the well known soft spot in State Department hearts for colonial masters;

2. Huge American investments in Belgian concerns which have been looting the Congo.

But with or without the blessings of our State Department the days surely are numbered for both Belgian soldiers and businessmen in the Congo and that includes the disputed Kantanga province.

America would better serve the cause of world peace if she were to persuade her Belgian friends to withdraw now while they can do it gracefully, rather than foolishly wait for a bloody departure amidst insensate Congo fury.

Now, what are you crying about?'

Congo Electing First Government To Rule It Under Independence

The New York Times

Lumumba, Nationalist Chief, Urges Belgians to Abdicate Now, Not June 30

New York Mon. 5-16-60 p. 4

By HOMER BIGART

Special to The New York Times.

STANLEYVILLE, Belgian Congo, May 15—Patrice Lumumba, currently the most powerful political leader in the Belgian Congo, was hailed by thousands as the messiah of Congolese freedom on an election-day tour of the African quarter today.

He demanded the immediate abdication of Belgian authority instead of awaiting the June 30 date for independence, but he urged the throng to "treat the white man as a brother."

M. Lumumba's National Congolese Movement was expected to sweep Stanleyville in today's voting for a national Government and Provincial Assembly. But elsewhere in Orientale Province the issue was doubtful. M. Lumumba complains that in rural areas Belgian administrators have hand-picked the local voting commissions.

Belgians distrust the 34-year-old former postal clerk, who was once convicted of embezzlement. They accuse him of fomenting racial hatred. Stanleyville is unusual in the Congo as a city of marked racial tensions. Europeans have been insulted, spat upon and stoned by Congolese.

Calm Urged on Africans

But today M. Lumumba, sitting in a cream-colored convertible and looking like a dark, bespectacled Davy Crockett under his chieftain's headdress—a feathered sheepskin cap—seemed benign.

"Don't throw stones at European cars," he told the crowds. "If you are drinking a glass of palm wine and a European passes, ask him to join you. He is our brother, and we must work together."

But he sounded a threatening note to British and American newsmen who interviewed him on the deck of a ferryboat as he crossed the Congo on his tour of the densely populated, volatile left bank, where the anti-European mobs of last month originated.

He warned that unless the Provincial Government were established immediately, disorders would spread. He said he had stayed in Stanleyville instead of flying to Brussels for the end of economic round-table talks there because only he could maintain order.

European

Patrice Lumumba

Most Europeans are sincere, he said, but he knows of fifty-seven Europeans who are plotting against Congolese freedom. He said he had presented their names to the Provincial Governor and demanded that they be deported.

"There would have been grave trouble today if I had not stayed behind," M. Lumumba said. "Yesterday I told women and children to stay away from markets to avoid crowds. Our people are angry. My picture has been torn from ballot boxes at some polling booths. [Because of widespread illiteracy the boxes show the pictures of the candidates.] There are not enough ballots or polling stations."

He denounced the moderate National Progressive party as a creature of the Belgian Administration and said it was "rejected utterly" by the Congolese masses.

Throngs Cheer Lumumba

There was no denying M. Lumumba's solid popularity in the left-bank commune of Lubunga. His slow passage through the teeming, rust-colored roads was followed by shrieking mobs waving green boughs and shouting "Uhuru" (freedom). Arriving back at the ferry landing, M. Lumumba was engulfed by 3,000 nattives, who nearly swamped the boat. Climbing to the roof of the boat deck, M. Lumumba cried, "The Congo is already the people's Congo."

"Ndio" (Amen), the throng chorused.

"Remain calm," said M. Lumumba. "I am staying here to supervise the voting."

Finally, after much tootling, the ferryboat edged away. In their enthusiasm several adherents of M. Lumumba leaped fully clothed into the Congo and swam after it.

Back in the center of Stanleyville, the streets in the white settlement were empty. Europeans, fearing trouble, were staying indoors.

'Messiah' in the Congo

The New York Times

Patrice Emergy Lumumba

New York

PATRICE EMERGY LUMUMBA, Congolese nationalist who is emerging as virtual dictator of two of the Belgian Congo's six provinces, has been hailed as the messiah of Congolese freedom.

Man in the News

As president of the National Congolese Movement, which is expected to sweep Stanleyville in the voting for a national government and provincial assembly, he has maintained strong pressure on the Belgians.

He has demanded the immediate abdication of Belgian authority instead of awaiting the June 30 date for independence. He has charged that in rural areas Belgian administrators have hand-picked the local voting commissions.

He has warned that unless the Provisional Government were established immediately, disorders would spread. He has complained that Europeans were plotting against Congolese freedom, but he has cautioned against violence. He recently told a crowd:

"Don't throw stones at European cars. If you are drinking a glass of palm wine and a European passes, ask him to join you. He is our brother, and we must work together."

Recently Freed From Jail

Less than four months ago, upon his release from Jadotville Prison in the Congo, M. Lumumba joined a round-table conference in Brussels at the invitation of the Belgian Congo Minister, August de Schryver. He had been sentenced to six months' imprisonment on the charge that he made an inflammatory speech in Stanleyville that started a riot in which twenty persons died.

His defense was that his remarks were in favor of freedom but not of violence.

At the Brussels conference of Congolese leaders and Belgian officials pressure built up from both African and Belgian sources to bring M. Lumuba to the meeting and the Belgian Minister complied.

M. Lumumba thanked the Belgian people for his release, requested a general amnesty of "other political prisoners" and ended by saying:

Feared and distrusted by Belgians in the Congo.

"All of us together, in a union of hearts and sentiments, are working to build a powerful and proud Congolese state in the center of black Africa."

He has long espoused a unified Congo state. At Brussels he urged that a central government be established with a President elected on a nation-wide basis.

This is the only way to prevent tribal warfare and inefficient administration, he asserted. He opposed a federation of Congo states as too weak to deal with the problems that would face a new Government.

He thus took a stand contrary to that of Joseph Kasavubu, president of the Association of the Lower Congo. M. Kasavubu advocated a federation of states, which presumably would give his party predominance in the region of the present colonial province of Leopoldville.

Belgians in the Congo fear and distrust M. Lumuba, a former postal clerk who was once convicted of embezzlement. They accuse him of fomenting racial hatred in the Stanleyville region, where Europeans have been insulted, spat upon and stoned by Congolese.

The Belgians call him an opportunist who has accepted money from Belgian Communists and they fear he either will control a coalition in the new Parliament or will become a terrorist leader. He has asserted that only he can maintain order.

M. Lumumba was born 34 years ago in Kasai Province in the southern part of the Congo Basi.

LUMUMBA RISING AS A CONGO RULER

The New York Times

New York

Defies Belgians as He Builds Power in Interior Region

Thurs. 5-18-60 p. 1

By HOMER BIGART

Special to The New York Times.

STANLEYVILLE, Belgian Congo, May 17—With Belgian authority collapsing, Patrice Emergy Lumumba, Congolese nationalist leader, is taking over as virtual dictator of this city and much of the Stanleyville and Eastern Provinces.

Not even the arrival of Belgian troop reinforcements is likely to halt the rapid erosion of the colonial administration's authority. Forty-five days before Congolese independence the Belgian Administration already seems subservient to the nationalists.

Ban on Mettings Defied

M. Lumumba saw reports of troops arrivals at the Kamina military base in Katanga Province as an "attempt to intimidate the voters and influence the election in favor of Belgian elected candidates." He said he had sent a telegram to King Baudouin of the Belgians demanding the recall of the troops. He did not seem unduly worried, however.

Yesterday, in a moment of painful humiliation for the Belgian settlers, M. Lumumba defied a ban on public meetings. He did it in the heart of the city that jailed him last October for inciting riots.

The incident marked the beginning of a triumphal tour by M. Lumumba of the region north of Stanleyville. There, in villages deep in the equatorial forest, he demanded and received assurances from Belgian officials that watchers from his party, the National Congolese Movement, would be allowed at polling places during the current election. The election will select political leaders to guide the Congo to independence June 30.

Emerging from a confectionery where he had provisioned for an eighty-mile drive to Banalia on the Aruwimi River, M. Lumumba was cheered by a few hundred Congolese. As he spoke, from a cream-colored American convertible, Congolese troops arrived.

Troops Called Provocation

"This is a provocation," M. Lumumba cried through a loudspeaker as a young Belgian officer dismounted and approached.

"These people came here only to see me," he said. "They are not attacking Europeans. They are perfectly peaceful."

The crowd shouted, "Uhuru," the Swahili word for freedom.

"I must disperse them," the officer countered. Stanleyville has been under a state of military occupation since rioting occurred May 6. All gatherings of five or more persons are prohibited.

The officer turned and ordered him men to dismount. As they climbed from the truck M. Lumumba, carrying his megaphone, advanced to meet them. Ignoring the officer, he told the Congolese soldiers:

"Aren't you satisfied with the trouble you provoked last October? [M. Lumumba's arrest sparked rioting in which several were killed.] Wasn't that enough for you? You get back in your truck and don't provoke anything."

The soldiers grinned and obeyed. Then M. Lumumba said quietly to the officer:

"I am an official member of the Executive College [six Congolese political leaders who share power with the Belgian Governor General until independence]. I told the Governor I don't want to be escorted by security forces."

Soldiers Wave to Truck

En route to Banalia M. Lumumba passed the same troops on the outskirts of the city. "Uhuru," bellowed his loudspeaker truck. The soldiers grinned and waved.

At Bangamisa M. Lumumba paused at the headquarters of the Belgian territorial administration. Congolese gendarmes stood at attention and a bugler played. But M. Lumumba's followers, now swollen to more than a thousand, swept them aside.

"How many political prisoners are here?" he demanded of a Belgian official who served him beer.

"None", replied the Belgian. "But we have some prisoners who attacked a European and burned his truck because he had run over a drunk". M. Lumumba was assured that the European had not done it deliberately. He then said:

"We have decided that prison conditions must be improved. No longer may European prisoners be favored over the Congolese. They must receive equal treatment; otherwise independence is meaningless. You must improve prison conditions for the Congolese at once."

Belgian Speaks Up

"Right," said the Belgian. "But where is the money coming from. People are not paying taxes. We had to close three roads because there was no money for repairs."

It took spunk on the part of the Belgian to say this. A howling mob of Congolese surrounded the house. The Belgian's wife, his small son and a police dog kept glancing nervously out of window.

"I am not blaming you personally," M. Lumumba said. "I know its not your fault."

They walked together from the porch into the heart of the crowd. A youth aimed a kick at the Belgian but M. Lumumba grabbed him and twisted his ear.

"The time has come for you to behave yourselves," M. Lumumba told the mob. "Independence does not mean you can attack Europeans. There are some bad Europeans who will have to leave but good ones can stay."

For three days Bangamisa voters had boycotted the polls because the voting officials had been appointed by Belgian administration. The fact that all of them favored M. Lumumba in a town where his party was unopposed made no difference. M. Lumumba told the crowd that the Belgians had agreed to permit party officials to witness the balloting and that voting would resume at once.

M. Lumumba then drove on toward Banalia, passing through villages where the population lined the road to cheer him and to pile his car with gifts.

A crowd in front of a Protestant mission carried the only Belgian flag seen all day. M. Lumumba told the children," Study hard and I will send you to Britain and America for higher training. Then you can come back and save the Congo."

At Banalia, a steaming settlement on the crocodile-infested river, M. Lumumba proceeded to the district administration headquarters for a talk with the Belgians.

A dozen gendarmes in front of the building were powerless against the thousands of Congolese who came streaming after their leader. M. Lumumba obtained a two-hour stay of the curfew so he could address a night rally.

In the darkness he told the crowd that the Belgians were permitting "great abuses" in the election and he promised that those responsible would be punished.

4 Dead in Congo Voting

The Washington Post
Washington, D.C.

Reuters

LEOPOLDVILLE, Belgian Congo, May 23—Four African voters were hacked to death Sunday during the first major round of the Belgian Congo's pre-independence general election, it was reported today.

Fourteen other voters were injured during a clash between tribesmen belonging to rival political parties at Kamina, near Jadotville. Authorities immediately clamped a military occupation regime over the area.

Kamina, one of the biggest Belgian military bases in the Congo, controls the mineral-rich province of the Katanga.

Minor incidents also were reported in Elisabethville, Jadotville and Leopoldville, capital of the Belgian Congo.

Results in these three cities —described as "test areas" by election organizers—will be known Tuesday. But the overall results for the entire country will take another two weeks.

All Congolese men over 21 have the right to vote. So have the women, according to the Congo's draft constitution, but in this first election they will not vote as the necessary formalities have not been completed. No whites are allowed to vote.

The Congo becomes independent June 30.

Lumumba Claims Enough Votes To Form Government in Congo

The New York Times
New York
Wed. 6-15-60

Handed Task by Belgians, He Seeks Agreement With Other Leaders

Patrice Lumumba

By HARRY GILROY

Special to The New York Times.

LEOPOLDVILLE, Belgian Congo, June 14 — Patrice Lumumba, entrusted by the Belgian Government with finding a combination of Congolese leaders able to lead the Congo when it becomes independent June 30, said today that he had a promise of enough votes to head the government himself.

This statement was made in the face of a declaration by a group of other leaders that they had a majority in the new House of Representatives. M. Lumumba began a series of meetings tonight with other leaders seeking a compromise.

Walter Ganshof van der Meersch, Belgian Resident Minister, charged M. Lumumba last night with a mission of information on the possibility of forming a government. He is to report to the Minister Thursday morning.

M. Lumumba, 34-year-old leader of one wing of the Congolese National Movement, who twice was jailed by the colonial authorities — once for alleged mishandling of postal funds and once for a supposedly inflammatory speech — was smiling and confident when he told a news conference that he had enough votes to gain the Premiership.

He added the hope that Europeans would remain in the Congo and said it was "shocking" that white women were leaving.

He declared that he was not a Communist, a dictator or anything but a nationalist. He professed eagerness to compromise with other leaders on all issues, including that of centralism versus federalism.

This last issue has stirred deep feelings. M. Lumumba is for a strong central government, while others want autonomy for the provincial governments.

If M. Lumumba finds a compromise with his opponents, M. Ganshof van der Meersch will report this to Brussels and M. Lumumba will probably be designated by King Baudouin to form the first Cabinet with himself as Premier.

M. Lumumba was called to the residence of M. Ganshof van der Meersch last night and the proposal was made to him that he undertake the mission of information. Only a fortnight ago he had a previous discussion with the Belgian Resident Minister that developed into a heated debate.

Whites Flee Congo Before African Rule

WHITE CONTROL DISAPPEARING FAST IN AFRICA

Chicago Daily Tribune
Chicago, Ill.

Surrender of Power Is Greatest in History

Trib. 5/13/60 p. 15

[Reprint'd from Thursday's late editions]

(Arthur Veysey, chief of The Tribune's London bureau, has been touring Africa for several weeks. This is another of a series of articles on the continent where nationalism is bursting the bonds of colonialism.)

BY ARTHUR VEYSEY
[Chicago Tribune Press Service]

LEOPOLDVILLE, Belgian Congo, May 11—Only 10 short years ago, 4 million Europeans, aided variously by their home governments, ruled unchallenged 180 million Negro Africans south of the Sahara.

Today, white rule has disappeared from great chunks of a continent far bigger than North America and is fast vanishing from even vaster areas in the most tremendous voluntary surrender of power the world has ever seen.

In South Africa, British Central Africa, Portuguese East and West Africa, and a small part of British East Africa, Europeans are fighting a rear guard action. Elsewhere Europeans are resigned to living under African rule or getting out.

Ready for War

Only in South Africa are battle lines being drawn, with European commandos ready and willing to start open war, if forced too far by African demands for social, political, and economic rights.

So far, the surrender of power has cost few lives. But the tricky actions are yet to come, and sudden developments could bring United Nations troops into Africa to keep the peace between Africans and Europeans.

The handover in power has, so far, affected relatively few Europeans. Omitting South Africa, the tobacco farms of southern Rhodesia, the mines along the Rhodesian-Congo border and the pleasant Kenya highland farms, almost all Europeans were visitors to Africa, colonial officers, business men, or missionaries on short term contracts. Their careers are ending abruptly but most can expect transfer with little personal loss.

Plan to Continue

Still omitting the areas mentioned above, most of European investment in Africa has been made by large companies or governments. The companies, including the mines, already have taken out more than they put in and anticipate carrying on operations.

In areas where personal European stakes are large, the British government has just told the Kenya farmers they must come to terms with African politicians and cannot expect British soldiers to fight again, as they did for 5 years against Mau Mau.

In the Rhodesias and Nyasaland, the British government is seeking time, hoping something will turn up and that "partnership" may develop between Rhodesian and African, a rapidly diminishing hope.

European Ties Weak

In all of Negro Africa, Europeans are truly established only in South Africa. Here families go back three centuries. Ties with Europe are weak. Generations of pioneers worked hard and died early building a country. South Africa is home. Few South Africans intend to leave. Everything they have is here.

Altho Europeans have been in Africa for 300 years, the big investment has come this century, and particularly since the last war. The total sum spent over the centuries is probably much less than the 80 billion dollar American budget for one year, and most of this has been financed from earlier African earnings.

Direct investment from Europe over the centuries is probably less than the United States has been giving away abroad each year.

Africans Are Losing

The Africans, on their part, also are losing from the handover in power. Europeans, tho complete masters in the past, provided, by and large, good government, built every worthwhile structure on the continent, cured diseases, taught decent habits, and improved diets with the result that the African population is doubling each generation. Without European ingenuity, money, and direction, African living standards are certain to slip, until a basically African economy develops.

One by one, European ideas on how to run Africa have failed.

The British planned "to lead the Africans to independence when they are ready" and thought two or three generations the earliest time for a change. Now the British rush to hand over power.

French Give Up

The French and Portuguese tried to "absorb the emerging African" into the European ruling class and expected the absorbed African would help control the ignorant rabble. But the "emerged African" is leading the clamor for freedom. So the French have given up, but the Portuguese still favor a strong hand.

The Belgians thought Africans would be satisfied with good colonial rule. Rudely awakened by riots in the best run colony the world has ever seen, the Belgians are walking out next month.

The Rhodesians talk of "racial partnership," but the Africans are making it plain they want no partnership.

Want Land Division

South Africa proposes, in effect, splitting up the country, taking the best for themselves and letting the Africans "do as they please" in the scrap land. But Africans want the choice bits.

In the absence of new ideas and the growing vacuum of authority, Africa is wide open to communist agents and stooges. Already some African politicians are trying to play east against west, offering to throw their new country's lot to the highest bidder.

Belgian Congo Independence Stirs White Settlers' Fears

The Montgomery Advertiser
Montgomery, Ala.
Jun. 6-12-60

LEOPOLDVILLE, Belgian Congo (UPI) — Africas largest and potentially richest territory becomes independent June 30 against a backdrop of flight and fear among thousands of white residents.

The territory is the 905,000 square mile Belgian Congo, one of America's principal suppliers of uranium. Most westerners — except for the handful of Europeans who settled it — know so little about the Congo they are inclined to associate only exotic jungle drums and grade-B adventure movies with the huge land.

But people aware of the gathering force of African nationalism and of the uranium, diamonds, zinc, tin and cobalt that pack the Congo subsoil are awaiting June 30 with fear.

With less than three weeks to go before the 13,000,000 Congolese take over their own government, many of the 115,000 white settlers are near panic and in fear of native violence.

MASS EXODUS

The mass exodus of independent white settlers — who have booked solid virtually every means of transportation out of the Congo in the next two months — is an indication of their belief that Europeans will have a very limited future in the mineral-rich Congo.

The man fear is that rivalries among the 60 odd tribes and growing resentment against whites will erupt into massacres.

Violence already had occurred between rival tribes and between Congolese and European police with terrifying frequency since the first rumblings of independence were heard early last year.

Last January after 111 Congolese were killed in a tribal war, Belgian troops were flown into the diamond-rich province of Kasai to prevent a "war of extermination" between the rival Lulua and Labuba tribes.

OPEN WARFARE

Congolese riots against police in Leopoldville, Elizabethville and Stanleyville in the past year-and-a-half have been as bloody as any of those which swept Kenya during days of Mau Mau terrorism.

Last month during the Congo's first legislative election a "state of military occupation" was declared in Leopoldville because of the threat of open warfare between rival tribes. Belgian troops were flown in to help the 20,000 colonial troops maintain order during the transfer of power to the new state.

The troops were instructed to keep an especially keen eye on Congolese city slickers who were trying to hoodwink their less worldly cousins into "buying" from them white women for use as wives after independence day.

It is no wonder that the white man with financial interests in the Congo is worried.

The Congo was annexed by Belgium in 1908. It never was a colony in the traditional sense because Belgium did not encourage settlers.

THE CONGO: PROBLEMS OF INDEPENDENCE

The New York Times

By HARRY GILROY

Special to The New York Times.

LEOPOLDVILLE, Belgian Congo, June 18—On June 30 the Congolese people will become their own masters. This week in the capitals of the six provinces that will make up the new country one third the size of the United States provincial assemblies met. In Leopoldville the National Assembly held its organization meeting and political leaders mulled over the choice of the first cabinet. The new struggle for mastery of Congo was on.

On Friday night the Belgian Government felt it necessary to intervene in the struggle by picking Joseph Kasavubu over Patrice Lumumba as the man to form the first national Government. Immediately the loser began to talk about withdrawing his party from Parliament and the plot against him by the Belgian Government. This outcome was characteristic of what is happening all over the new state.

In five of the six provinces a minority party either withdrew from the assembly or threatened to do so later. Each of these parties announced it would set up a new province in the region where its votes came from. It was tribal warfare transmuted into political institutions.

On the national level this characteristic turned into a struggle between two blocs trying to win top places in the new government. One group spoke for a strong central government, the other for retaining important powers in the provincial administrations. The first was an alliance that hoped to extend its power into all the provinces, the second was a combination of tribal parties fearing that process.

Personal Equation

But to analyze the struggle in terms such as centralism vs. federalism is to miss point that this is struggle of men, not principles.

M. Lumumba is the central figure. When a crowd of European newsmen surround M. Lumumba some one of them will begin the questioning with "Monsieur President." The title is his only as leader of a political group but M. Lumumba always responds with a pleased smile.

Congolese politicians are becoming personages and they like it. Here is the key to understanding much of the complex political struggle, even the secession movements of tribal parties. Wanting to become personages in the new order the tribal leaders favor secession wherever they find themselves in the minority and are kept by democratic rules from having first place.

M. Lumumba better than any other Congolese politician sees the opportunity in party organization on a national basis. His wing of the Congolese National Movement goes on organizing in centers of population all over the Congo. Most other political leaders have distrusted him for coming into what they considered to be their territories and also because some of his party organizers have used rough tactics.

Allies Claimed

So the contest for top places began in Leopoldville this week with the anti-Lumumba bloc ranged against his party and its allies. M. Lumumba claimed to have sufficient votes to win a vote of confidence if he had a chance to present a Cabinet before the new House of Representatives.

M. Lumumba said his own party had forty-three votes out of 137 in the House. He claimed as allies the African Solidarity party, which is strong in the eastern part of Leopoldville Province, the Center of African Regroupment, which is focused in Kivu Province, and the Balubakat, which is an alliance of Baluba tribesmen in the northeast region of Katanga province. These three parties have respectively thirteen, ten and eight votes in the House—so M. Lumumba counted on seventy-four votes in the showdown over his ability to form a Cabinet.

Strong in Leopoldville

M. Kasavubu was the leading personality opposed to M. Lumumba at the start of the contest. M. Kasavubu's power rests not on the extent of his grip on the national scene because his Abako party has only twelve votes in the House of Representatives, but on the tight hold that his Lower Congo Association has on its region and a majority of the people of the city of Leopoldville. M. Lumumba is fond of saying that no one can govern the Congo without him, but it seems equally true that no one can govern in Leopoldville if M. Kasavubu does not want him to.

M. Kasavubu's party announced at the beginning of the week its alliance with other regional parties claiming a total of seventy-eight votes in the House of Representatives. It purported to have considerable strength in every region outside M. Lumumba's own stronghold of Orientale Province. The political battle lines were drawn.

The Belgian Government had played no part in influencing developments since the February round-table conference in Brussels, at which a plan for elections and the establishment of an independent state was shaped by Belgian and Congolese delegates. However, M. Lumumba thought the Belgians were working against him.

Distrust of Belgians

His belief was based on the fact that an opponent, Jean Bolikango, is a former official in the Belgian colonial administration and leader of Assoreco (The Association of Upper Congo Peoples) which is centered in Equator province. Whenever M. Bolikango talks about M. Lumumba the word "dictatorship" creeps into the conversation.

M. Lumumba mistrusted the Belgian Resident Minister, Walter Ganshof van der Meersch, appointed last month to keep a tight rein on the administration during the transition period. Evidently the Congolese leader thought M. Ganshof Van Der Meersch, a Belgian jurist famed for prosecuting Nazi sympathizers, might be in the Congo to use police methods if events did not go the way the Belgians wanted.

But at the appropriate moment last Monday the Belgian Minister called in M. Lumumba and commissioned him to see what the political situation was. This gave M. Lumumba a chance to try to put together a broad coalition. He wrote to important party leaders, including M. Kasavubu, trying to get them to talk with him individually; but the anti-Lumumba coalition, calling itself the Cartel of the National Union, insisted its delegates would only meet with M. Lumumba in a group.

M. van der Meersch found leaders of the anti-Lumumba bloc were adamant against merging with M. Lumumba's following. Furthermore, a detailed check convinced the Minister that Lumumba did not have the promises of support he had claimed to have so the Minister told M. Lumumba his mission was ended. He then called on M. Kasavubu to form a Government. It was reported that M. Kasavubu himself will ask Parliament to elect him chief of state and that he will propose as Premier M. Lumumba's particular hate, Jean Bolikango.

Talk of Secession

The choice made by the Belgian Government seemed to insure that the two anchor provinces of Leopoldville in the west and Katanga in the southeast would work out their political struggles within the framework of the new state. In both provinces there have been murmurings of outright secession with the Lower Congo people linking their fellow tribesmen in the Republic of Congo just north of the river and the inhabitants of the Katanga mining region joining their fate with kindred tribes who live in Northern Rhodesia.

The new coalition will have a scattering of support all over the rest of the country. But the contest for the prestige and profits of office will go on and intensify. Local politicians of the Kasavubu bloc will have to become national politicians to keep from losing to M. Lumumba, who carries the standard of pan-African unity.

In an outburst of anger after losing his chance, M. Lumumba blamed Belgium. If he remains angry he may attack any government that is formed as a stooge of Belgian Imperialism and the Congo can become another battleground of the East-West conflict.

SEPARATISM IN THE CONGO

Congo politics are based mostly on tribal loyalties. Main figure whose support crosses tribal lines is Patrice Lumumba, who controls Oriental Province (1). His bid to lead strong central government is opposed by tribal leaders, headed by Joseph Kasavubu, who leads lower-Congo tribes in Leopoldville area (2). They have been fighting other tribes and speaking of leaving Congo to join tribal relatives in neighboring territories. Tribal parties in Katanga (3) mining area also resist central rule and talk of secession. In central Congo (4), Baluba and Lulua tribes have been fighting each other intermittently for six months.

THE CONGO: FROM COLONY TO INDEPENDENCE

Belgium's Preserve in Africa Gets Promise of Early Sovereignty

By HARRY GILROY

Special to The New York Times.

BRUSSELS, Feb. 20 — The Belgian Congo, the land at the heart of darkest Africa from whose tragic people 15,000,000 slaves were extracted in the past for labor in the Western world, has gained freedom at a chatty round-table conference that ended here today.

Independence is to be proclaimed on June 30. But the coming of age of the Congolese people, as it was described by one of their delegates, occurred here during the last four weeks. The Belgian father called the Congo son in for a talk, counselled him on adult behavior, agreed with him on a date of departure from the home, arranged to turn over property held in trust for the son and wished him well. Witnesses saw the complete history of one country being started on the road of independence.

Illingworth in The London Daily Mail

The Area

The land that was the subject of this round-table meeting covers more than 900,000 square miles. That is larger than the United States east of the Mississippi, or all the states and their territories at the time of American independence. It is a square block in the center of Africa. A narrow funnel of land along the Congo River gives it access to the Atlantic Ocean.

The 400,000 square miles of the central basin of the Congo are covered with jungles in which the trees rise 130 feet and the underlying twilight is alive with bright birds, apes, snakes, alligators and hippopatumuses. The Congo is also a land of grassy plateaus encircling the Congo basin, savannas in which roam elephants, lions and leopards, and of hills rising eastward to great blue lakes and snow covered peaks. It is a land of great mineral wealth and vast water power.

The delegates were here to represent the people of this land, 14,000,000 of them, mostly Bantu-speaking, black-skinned people who drifted into the region from the northeast in the last thousand years, possibly driven by the Arabs or maybe pushed along by the spreading Sahara Desert. These people, who knew how to use metal, displaced Stone Age men and set up a farming and hunting life centered around clan and tribal settlements ruled by chiefs, and occasionally amalgamated into kingdoms.

Leopold's Role

The Congolese people came into contact with the Belgians solely because King Leopold II grasped the commercial importance of the Congo River after Sir Henry Morton Stanley first traced its course. The Independent State of the Congo established by Leopold in 1885 lasted until 1908 when the Belgian Parliament took it over.

But civilization at first proved to be a mixed offering to the Congolese. On the good side were the first railroads and riverboats, schools and medical posts; on the bad side were brutal collections of taxes in kind left in the hands of agents of farm companies. King Leopold instituted reforms and then offered the state to the Belgian Parliament which established the colonial administration that has run the Congo for the last fifty-two years.

The Colonial Government set up six provinces which, beginning at the mouth of the Congo and going clockwise, are Leopoldville, Equator, East, Kivu, Katanga and Kasai.

The Belgian technique for running the country was to work through the native chiefs. They were made into officials like local mayors. Today three-fourths of the Congolese live under the authority of the chiefs. Their tribunals, which can give sentences of a month in prison, gave judgment last year on 400,000 cases.

In all the great region of farms and jungles ruled by the chiefs, the Belgians have respected local customs, including the one that all land belongs to the clan or tribe. But through the chiefs the Belgians have introduced schooling which now has a million Congolese in classrooms, health measures that have stamped out the worst tropical plagues and technical practices such as the methods of modern farming that are now following 150,000 Congolese.

Mineral Wealth

For the exploration and development of mineral wealth the Belgians have granted charters to several enormous companies. The Colonial Government has a share in their ownership and receives a good slice of their profits. The mines are largely in the East and South of the country, especially in Katanga with copper, uranium and diamonds among the most valuable products. As a result of growing industrialization four million Congolese are now clustered around towns and half of all the population is in a wage economy.

The independence movement began among Congolese working for the colonial administration and the commercial companies. At first, after World War II, they talked of "equal pay for equal work" and the admission of Congolese to all business, social and academic circles. But then came talk of political rights.

Prof. M. A. A. J. van Bilsen, a young Belgian, precipitated the talk of political independence for the Congo by publishing in February 1956 in a Flemish periodical a thirty-year plan for political emancipation of the colony. After five months, in July, there was published in the Congo a statement entitled "The Manifest of African Consciousness" which followed the line of the van Bilsen article.

This manifest of one group of Congolese promptly drew from another group, the Lower Congo Association which was headed by Joseph Kasavubu, a denunciation of the idea that independence should be delayed thirty years. In December, 1957 the Belgian Colonial Administration gave the Congolese the first measure of self-rule by holding elections in Leopoldville, Elisabethville and Jadotville. Mr. Kasavubu's party won overwhelmingly in Leopoldville and seated eight of the ten local mayors in the native districts.

Mr. Kasavubu, taking office as Mayor of Dendale in April 1958 called for general elections and internal autonomy. When the Belgian Government sent a study group to the Congo to consider what policy to adopt in view of the growing political feeling, Mr. Kasavubu would only tell the group: "I demand immediate independence and departure of all the Belgians." That was in November, 1958.

There seems little doubt that this intransigent attitude reflected an event outside the Belgian Congo. On Aug. 24, 1958—three months before—General de Gaulle told the people of Brazzaville, just across the Congo from Leopoldville, that they could have independence from France if they wanted it or they could remain within the French community. Another important exterior development took place in Accra, Ghana, on Dec. 5, 1858 when the Pan African Congress was held with three Congolese in attendance. Patrice Lumumba, president of the Congolese National Movement, returned from Accra to tell 7,000 excited residents of Leopoldville that the conference called for immediate independence of all Africa and that his party agreed with this.

Mr. Lumumba's speech was given on Sunday, Dec. 28, 1958. Mr. Kasavubu's party called for another public assemblage on the following Sunday, permission for a meeting was refused and two days of wild rioting began in which at least forty-seven persons were killed—the official figure—and millions of dollars of property damage was done.

On Jan. 13 the Belgian Government announced a plan for independence of the Congo by stages. There was to be a gradual bringing of Congolese into advisory positions and a series of elections. But the plan did not work because the whole Congo got into a state of disquiet and some of the political parties, especially those led by Mr. Lumumba and Mr. Kasavubu, refused to take part in the elections, the first of which was held last December.

Goodwill Won

This was the background for the round table organized by Auguste de Schrijver, Minister of the Belgian Congo. He talked Congolese political leaders of all factions into attending the meeting. Since Jan. 20 Mr. de Schrijver and other Belgian officials have listened to what the Congolese wanted, told them how to do it legally, counseled them on the economic and political facts of life and won their goodwill in the process.

There are Belgians who say the Government should have repressed the independence movement until, by a process of training and mass education, the Congo was "ready." There are others who say independence had to be granted but fear for the persons and goods of Belgians in the Congo after the new state is established.

The Belgian policy is based on the idea that repression cannot breed democracy but does plant hatred while assistance on the road to independence may bring respect and friendliness in the future. The easy relations existing between the Belgians and Congolese at the round table since Mr. de Schrijver on Jan. 27 set the day for independence are a good augury.

BELGIUM OPENING PARLEY ON CONGO

Talks in Brussels Today Aim at Giving Colony a Sound Economy as Free State

By HARRY GILROY

Special to The New York Times.

BRUSSELS, Belgium, April 25 — A Belgian-Congolese conference aimed at starting the new Congo state on a sound economic basis will begin here tomorrow.

The meeting is a sequel to the gathering two months ago at which Belgium promised the Congo independence on June 30. The Belgian Parliament has since passed several measures to implement the establishment of the new democratic state in Africa.

Congolese delegates at the February meeting agreed an economic conference was needed. Since then tribal warfare in the Congo and the resultant anxiety among European colonists have emphasized the importance of the new meeting.

Most Congolese leaders have publicly stated that the Europeans now in the Congo would be needed for their skills and for their capital investments.

More capital from the outside world also must be attracted.

There are reported to be 110,000 Europeans in the Congo, of whom 80,000 are Belgians. There are 13,000,00 Congolese.

Fund Transfers Limited

Small investors recently have transferred funds abroad from the Congo. Reserves of the Congo National Bank have fallen in a year from $106,000,000 to $50,000,000. To check this, the Belgian Colonial Administration last month limited transfers from the Congo National Bank to $200 a month for each family.

Belgian officials hope the Congolese will see that guarantees on European lives and property will be needed to assure the retention of investments in the Congo.

Meanwhile steps have been taken to strengthen the economic position of the new state.

Belgium has used her credit to borrow $60,000,000 for the Congo treasury. She has also budgeted $55,000,000 as a subsidy to the Congo treasury.

Advance Payments Made

Financial groups interested in the Congo have agreed to pay $50,000,000 as advances on taxes, customs and dividends. Several large companies have, at Belgium's request, raised their operating surpluses in the Congo.

There have been expressions of distrust by the Congolese. For example, Joseph Kasavubu, president of the Association of the Lower Congo, has asserted that Belgium has transferred gold from the Congo National bank to the Belgian National Bank. He has indicated there should be no talk of guarantees "until the gold deposit is returned."

However, M. Kasavubu and other Congolese politicians are sending delegates to the conference.

RISE IN NET NOTED BY RHODESIAN TRUST

Recent racial disturbances in the Belgian Congo and South Africa have not as yet affected copper production in Rhodesia, Sir Ronald L. Prain, chairman of Rhodesian Selection Trust, Ltd., and Roan Antelope Copper Mines, Ltd., said yesterday.

Sir Ronald addressed an informal stockholders meeting at the Downtown Athletic Club. He said that profits from his companies' properties generally were running ahead of last year's levels.

Profits attributable to Rhodesian Selection Trust from the Mufulira property for the six months ended in December, 1959, were $6,921,600, he said, or about 20 per cent above those of last year.

He said these improved results had been caused chiefly by a higher copper price, which in turn resulted largely from last year's copper strike in the United States.

CONGO TRIBES WAR IN LEOPOLDVILLE

5 Slain in Street Fights With Spears and Machetes

By HOMER BIGART

Special to The New York Times.

LEOPOLDVILLE, Belgian Congo, May 13—This city's African quarter was put under a state of military occupation today following communal fighting. Five tribesmen were slain by machetes and spears.

Lulua and Baluba warriors, brandishing three-foot bush knives and primitive spears, gave the city four hours of chilling terror in the morning as they hunted each other out in streets and backyards of the African quarter. At 11 A. M. a conference of civil and military leaders decided to call on the army to assist the police in restoring order.

Anarchy Is Feared

Today's clash signaled the extension to Léopoldville of the bitter Lulua-Baluba tribal war that broke out in Kasai Province six months ago. It came only a day after Governor General Henri Cornelis warned that continued tribal fighting would produce a dictatorship after the Congo achieves independence June 30.

What frightens the 20,000 whites remaining in Léopoldville is not so much the specter of dictatorship but of anarchy. They believe that this is already threatened by another tribal war, between the Bakongo and Bayaka tribes. The latter are the dominant ethnic groups in Léopoldville Province.

Most whites and many Congolese would prefer even martial law to the present state of uneasiness. Earlier this week provincial Governor Jan-Baptist Bomans was relieved of his post after having resisted pressure for military rule.

The tiny Congolese Army of 25,000 Africans led by 1,000 Belgian officers could not maintain effective martial law throughout this vast colony, which is eighty times bigger than Belgium. It could only hope to maintain order in the key cities of Léopoldville, Elisabethville, Stanleyville, Coquilhatville, Bukavu and Luluabourg.

The Association of the Lower Congo, the Abako party of the Bakongo tribe, has been agitating for removal of the Belgian general commanding the army and his replacement by a general to be selected by the United Nations.

Today's fighting was the sharpest in Léopoldville since the riots of January, 1959, when the police fired on Abako mobs killing more than 100.

The state of military occupation proclaimed today is a degree less severe than a state of siege. It means that the army is alerted, with troops standing by police stations to assist in smashing riots.

A night curfew was put on the outlying commune of Matete, where trouble started at 5 A. M. A Lulua worker was set upon by Baluba and killed with machetes.

Later a truck driven by a Baluba was halted by a revengeful Lulua mob in Kinshasa, two miles from the center of the city. The driver was slain by a spear.

Then Baluba warriors went on a rampage, driving Lulua from Kinshasa streets and setting fire to two Lulua houses.

Councilman's House Sacked

Their main target was the house of Sylvan Kabongo, a Lulua member of the Municipal Council. Finding him away—a notice on the door said in four languages "I receive nobody at midday"—the Baluba stormed into the house through broken windows, slashing legs off tables and arms off chairs and setting fire to bedding.

Waving their knives they approached two frightened overseas newsmen warning them against taking pictures.

A Baluba youth brandishing a knife, his face contorted with wrath, said his brother had been slain by Lulua and cried out that M. Kabongo was "the man who gave the orders to kill."

Some neutral Bakongo standing by were eager to blame the Belgians. "They wanted this to happen," they said. "They want trouble. The police sit in their cars and do nothing."

Police jeep patrols were observed, but the situation was out of hand. In near-by Bandalungwa a Lulua was stabbed to death. Toward noon a carload of Baluba was halted in Kinshasa by Lulua, who killed the driver and a passenger and wounded two others.

Late today the police set up road blocks searching all traffic and arresting passengers with machetes. They wore teargas goggles on their steel helmets and carried metal shields against spears and arrows.

White Elements Accused

Albert Kalonji, Congolese nationalist leader, said here yesterday that tribal fighting was fomented by white elements in the Congo and could be controlled easily after independence.

He said that Belgium was acting in good faith but that some of the officials and some of the settlers in the Congo "have prepared this far in advance."

M. Kalonji, who is a Baluba, said the Lulua tribes had been encouraged because they had not been punished for past violence. He said they had also been told that if they did not drive out the Balubas before independence it would be too late.

"Some Belgians are trying to create panic by all means," he said. "They are predicting the worst catastrophes."

Despite that, M. Kalonji said, few Belgians are preparing to leave the country and a large part of the civil servants are expected to stay on after independence.

M. Kalonji has been here on the invitation of the State Department since Saturday. He will leave for Brussels today.

BELGIUM NAMES CONGO MINISTER

Supreme Court Official Gets Cabinet Post to Maintain Order and Authority

Special to The New York Times.

BRUSSELS, Belgium, May 16—The Belgian Government named a new Cabinet Minister today to deal with maintenance or order in the Belgian Congo and with the problems of transferring power to the new state. He is Walter Ganshof van der Meersch, Attorney General of the Belgian Supreme Court.

Brussels has received numerous reports in recent weeks of civil disorder and of the weakening of authority in the Congo. M. van der Meersch will go to the Congo to supervise the administration.

A detachment of forty-five regular army soldiers flew from Brussels to the Congo base of Kamina today as the first contingent of reinforcements for units stationed there. Thirty-five more will go tomorrow and fifty-nine the next day.

Conference Offers Program

At the same time that these steps were taken 100 Congolese and Belgian representatives sketched an economic and social program for the new Congo state in a set of resolutions adopted by a roundtable conference.

Speakers at the final session of a three-week conference expressed hope that the proposals would guide Congo policy, but said the decision must lie with the first government, which is to be formed next month.

Vice Premier Albert Lillar called the conference "the prefiguration of future negotiations between the governments of our free countries." The basic law creating a free state in the Congo June 30 has been passed by the lower house of the Belgian Parliament and is now before the Senate.

M. Lillar warned that all efforts of the conference to assure economic expansion and social progress in the Congo would be in vain "if anarchy is installed.

The Congolese selected a committee of fifteen of their delegates to continue dealing with Belgian authorities between now and the time of formation of the new government. This committee will concentrate on budget problems.

The New York Times

IN BELGIAN CABINET: Walter Ganshof van der Meersch. He will deal with problems arising in Congo.

Congo Capital Captured by Paratroopers

Atlanta Constitution
Atlanta Ga., Thurs. 7/14/60
P. 1

By GEORGE SIBERA

LEOPOLDVILLE (UPI) — Belgian shock troops smashed into Congo army strongholds Wednesday in a major offensive to safeguard whites in the chaotic Congo. The Belgians wrested Leopoldville airport from African troops and then seized the capital city itself.

The Congolese government announced it had appealed urgently to its sister African republic of Ghana for troops to restore order "because of the long delay before U.N. troops could become available."

BELGIUM TO TAKE OVER?

While the commands fought Congolese troops in the streets of Leopoldville, the Belgian ambassador told newsmen that Belgium would reassume command of its former colony if there were no other way to restore law and order to the nation.

First reports said several civilians, including three women and several children, were injured seriously in the airport battle.

Heavily - armed Belgian paratroopers spearheaded the lightning action as Information Minister Anicet Kashamura told the Congolese parliament that Belgium and this newly-independent nation were virtually in a "state of war."

DEFY CONGO

The Belgian troops went into action Wednesday in defiance of a Congo government ultimatum that they return to their bases immediately.

Red-bereted paratroop commandos cleared rebel Congolese troops from the Leopoldville's Ndili airport where they had interrupted the refugee airlift flying out frightened Belgian and other white residents caught by the upsurge of violence.

TAKE CAPITOL

The Belgian troops swung from the airport into Leopoldville. Congolese troops mostly ran from their path. Some African soldiers fired wildly as they raced away. A few pockets of African soldiers, however, dug in for life-or-death battles with the Belgian commandos.

Caught in the middle of the battling were thousands of whites —men, women and children—who screamed and hid or cheered as the Belgian soldiers grabbed control of Leopoldville in the lightning thrust.

(In Washington, the State Department said a colony of American missionaries which had been reported besieged in the Luluaborg area of the Congo had been evacuated by light American planes.

P. 14

U. S. officials said another group of some 100 U.S. Protestant missionaries in the Lake Charles area of the northeast Congo had spurned a government evacuation offer and planned to stick it out.

U. N. Troops Land in Congo

Atlanta Journal + Constitution
Atlanta, Ga.
Sat. 7/17/60
P. 1

Mutineers Shout 'Attack Belgians'; Are Stared Down by Tunisians

LEOPOLDVILLE, The Congo, July 16 (UPI)—Swedish Maj. Gen. Carl Von Horn arrived Saturday to take command of hundreds of United Nations troops pouring into the violence-wracked Congo to try to restore order.

Tunisian troops fanned out into Camp Leopold, where the Congolese army first mutinied, and mutineers, thinking they had come to fight for the Congo urged them to "attack the Belgians." The Tunisians remained impassive and stared at the excited, shouting Congolese.

Belgian paratroopers disregarded an order from Congolese Premier Patrice Lumumba to leave the country by 6 a.m. (1 a.m. EDT) and continued to patrol the European sector of Leopoldville as Congolese youths cursed and jeered them.

Lines of Belgian troops carried supplies and equipment into the Belgian embassy in apparent expectation of a mob attack. Lumumba ordered Belgian Ambassador Jean Van der Bosche and his staff out of the country Friday night but the embassy remained open.

There were reports that the 34-year-old Lumumba, buoyed by pledges of "assistance" from the Soviet Union, planned to transfer his capital from turbulent Leopoldville to Stanleyville in the interior which is a stronghold of his National Congolese Movement Party.

* * *

GEN. VAN HORN, a professional soldier who had been a U.N. commander in Palestine, began a round of conferences on ways to take over from Belgian forces, according to a mandate of the U.N. Security Council.

Some 600 Tunisian troops and another 100 soldiers from the African nation of Ghana preceded him into Leopoldville to join Ghanian troops which had arrived Friday.

Congolese showed no animosity toward the U.N. forces but they threw stones at the cars of white civilians Saturday and some demonstrators for one tense moment threatened to stone trucks bringing in emergency American food supplies. But the trucks were unmolested.

* * *

LEOPOLDVILLE remained tense as more reports of rape and looting came in from the back country.

One report said American missionaries at Thysville, 75 miles from Leopoldville, where rape and looting occurred last week, had been forced to strip and were herded on a truck to be pelted with mud and garbage by rampaging blacks.

A report, unconfirmed, reaching Brazzaville, (French) Congo republic said women in a hospital at Thysville had been assaulted shortly after giving birth.

Members of a group of 73 American missionaries and their families who reached safety in Accra, Ghana, said the missionaries were forced to lie on the ground and were trampled and beaten by Congolese soldiers who said, "Americans—so what. You're still white."

A few Europeans who ventured on Leopoldville streets were met with open hostility.

Congo Admits Its Inability To Halt Riots

The Montgomery Advertiser
Montgomery Ala.
Sun. 7/17/60
P. 1

LEOPOLDVILLE, The Congo (AP) — The government of this young nation has appealed to the United Nations for help in the bloody struggle against its mutinous army, which is pressing a campaign of terror against whites.

In effect, government of the newly independent Congo conceded it was powerless to check the campaign of rape and pillage that in five days has taken at least 11 white lives and driven more than 13,000 whites from the Congo.

The dramatic appeal to the United Nations to step in and restore order was dispatched to the U.N. Sunday after President Joseph Kasavubu and Premier Patrice Lumumba met with U.S. Ambassador Claire Timberlake and U.N. Undersecretary Ralph Bunche in Leopoldville.

CALL FOR HELP

The appeal was disclosed Monday by Belgian Minister Ganshof van der Meersch, one of two Cabinet ministers sent here by Brussels to try to bring some order in the chaotic Congo.

(In Brussels, Belgian Premier Gaston Eyeskens told Parliament he had asked Belgium's allies and international institutions for help to meet the crisis in the Congo but gave no details.)

Only 11 days in power after the Congo gained independence from Belgium, Kasavubu and Lumumba are critical of Brussels for sending in Belgian troops to quell the rebellious Negro soldiers.

Only Sunday night Lumumba had said the dispatch of Belgian troops violated a treaty of friendship signed two weeks ago. In a radio address he said the Congolese would know how to defend themselves.

BACK TO BELGIUM

A U.N. force made up of soldiers from outside nations, such as intervened in the Suez war of 1956, thus could send the Belgian soldiers back to Belgium or to the military bases they occupy by treaty in the Congo. A revolt by the 25,000-man Negro army against its Belgian officers touched off the violence last week.

(In Washington, officials said the United States is ready to furnish troops to help restore order in the Congo if requested.

(In Heidelberg, Germany, the U.S. Army said two companies of the 24th Infantry Division were alerted and ready to rush to the Congo. Part of the 24th was flown to the Middle East in the crisis in Lebanon two years ago.)

Associated Press radiophoto

CONGOLESE CONGRATULATIONS — Supporters playfully tug at Patrice Lumumba's goatee as a friendly gesture at Leopoldville yesterday after he was officially confirmed the African nation's first Premier.

A Freed Congo Elects Kasavubu as President

In Premier Lumumba's Program: Link to Belgium and Neutralism

By The Associated Press

LEOPOLDVILLE, Belgian Congo, June 24.—Joseph Kasavubu, who styles himself as a Gandhi-like foe of African colonialism, was elected president of the new Congo republic today.

He will share power with his chief political rival, Patrice Lumumba, the newly confirmed Premier.

As the departing Belgian colonial rulers had hoped, the compromise making Mr. Kasavubu chief of state and Mr. Lumumba chief of government brough together the two major political factions whose separate ambitions carried a potential of violence.

The main problem now is whether they will work together. Belgium is quitting the congo next Thursday and turning authority over the 13,000,000 people to Premier Lumumba and President Kasavubu.

Lumumba Called

Mr. Lumumba was approved as Premier in a cheering, tumultous post-midnight session of the Congo Parliament. His supporters applauded and banged their desks. Others rushing forward to congratulate him, playfully tugged at his goatee. Young Congolese packing the public galleries cheered.

In a half-hour statement before the vote, Mr. Lumumba outlined his program. He said an independent Congo would retain close links with Belgium but would not take sides in the East-West power struggle.

"Our primary concern will be social justice and progress," he said. "There will be no dictatorship. We want to maintain friendly relations with all nations and we will join neither of the two blocs now dividing the world. In international relations we will always fight for freedom."

He insisted that the crisis which threatened the nation was over, although other politicians indicated it was not.

"We have been united in our struggle against the past Colonial regime," Mr. Lumumba said. "We have been united at the round table conference. In today's triumph we stand again united. We have a strong, honest and popular government."

Mr. Lumumba paid tribue to the achievements of Belgians in the Congo.

Now European residents and Congolese will build together," he said. "More than ever we will need Belgian help."

"Religious missions will receive a guarantee permitting them to continue their task.

"Members of the colonial administration will remain in Congo to help us with their experience and advice.

Mr. Kasavubu's election had been expected, since he and Mr. Lumumba had been trying to work out some sort of deal in hopes of avoiding political clashes that might spill over into violence.

Although the Presidency is largely a ceremonial position, it involves considerable prestige and the power to summon Parliament, and this could be a strong check on Mr. Kasavubu's old chief rival if strategically timed.

Both Houses of Parliament met in joint session and elected the President by a vote of 159 for Mr. Kasavubu to 43 for Jean Bolikango, his only opponent.

Mr. Kasavubu, using the nonviolent civil disobedience tactics of the late Mohandas K. Gandhi in the war against colonialism, has been jailed by the Belgians in the past as an agitator. He once studied for the Roman Catholic priesthood, later became a Protestant, and has worked as a teacher, civil servant, agronomist and bookkeeper.

Mr. Lumumba, too, was arrested after riots in Stanleyville in 1959 and spent nearly three months in jail.

But it was the hour of victory for the debonair Mr. Lumumba, the tall, bearded nationalist who had worker day and night to patch together a multi-party Cabinet that could win Parliamentary support.

Mr. Kasavubu had tried to form a Cabinet and failed, but three members of his Abakoan party got Cabinet posts.

The balloting went off without trouble except for one elderly African chief wearing a bright beaded hat. Since he spoke only Swahili and did not understand French, the Congo Parliament's official language, he was baffled by the procedure. With the help of an interpreter, the Senate president set him straight. The chief then returned to his seat and cast his vote smilingly.

Cabinet Confirmed

The lower house confirmed Mr. Lumumba's twenty-three-member cabinet with seventy-four affirmative votes. One member voted no, five abstained and fifty-seven were absent. The Senate vote was sixty-twelve, with eight obstaining and four absent.

Many of the fifty-seven absent deputies were Mr. Kasavubu's political allies. His strength is centered around Leopoldville, while Mr. Lumumba comes from Stanleyville, in the Congo River back country.

Their differences appear to be mainly regional and involve no basic clash. Both have long been forces in the local independence movement.

A sign of possible trouble came in Leopoldville, where a strike of Mr. Kasavubu's followers at the provincial headquarters entered its second day. They want the Belgians to create a separate province for the Bakongo tribesmen who live in and around Lepoldville and form the core of Mr. Kasavubu's political machine. The Belgian administrator told them to take it up with the new government.

Services Disrupted

Only 100 of the 800 strikers went back to work today, and most public services were seriously disrupted.

Mr. Kasavubu, forty-three, has favored a looser union of provinces. This would allow him to keep his power as president of the Association of the Lower Congo.

Mr. Lumumba, thirty-four, is president of the National Congolese Movement. Belgians fear and distrust him, saying he is an opportunist who foments racial hatred and that he has taken money from Belgian Communists.

He contends that only he can maintain order in the tense political and tribal atmosphere of the Congo and that he must have a strong central government to prevent tribal warfare and inefficient administration.

The Atlanta Constitution Jun. 7-19-60

Associated Press Wirephoto

GEORGIA MISSIONARY RETURNS HOME FROM STRIFE-TORN CONGO

Mrs. John K. Miller (Arrow) Holds Daughter Harriett, 11 Months, Hand of Son John, 3, at N.Y.

WANTED TO STAY

The Atlanta Constitution Atlanta, Ga. Jun. 7-19-60

5 in Family Flee Congo, Fly Here

By JACK KAPLAN

A Decatur missionary and her four children arrived in Atlanta late Monday night by plane after a confused escape from the terror-ridden Congo.

Mrs. John K. Miller was evacuated by plane from the American Presbyterian Congo Mission in Lubondai, Kasai Province, where she and her husband, a medical missionary, had served for 10 years. Dr. Miller is still in Africa.

Mrs. Miller said her husband had not had a furlough in five years and she hoped he would join her here when he could get out.

"He wanted to stay," she said. "He has a lot of work to do there. But I hear that all Americans have been ordered to leave.

"It was two weeks ago Sunday," Mrs. Miller said in a telephone interview upon her arrival in New York, "when the consul ordered all women and children from the Congo.

"It was difficult to understand. Every thing had been so peaceful and quiet. We knew the rebel troops were around, but we didn't feel that we were in danger. None of us wanted to leave home."

Mrs. Miller, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James M. Montgomery of 216 Michigan Ave., said usually there were about 100 white persons with the mission, but because of summer vacations, only eight families were there when the trouble began.

"We wanted to stay," she said, "and the Congolese there said they would protect us. But we knew they couldn't and we didn't want any of them harmed because of us."

The four children, Holly, 12; James M. (Jim), 8; John Neal, 4, and Harriet Merle, 11 months, came from the Congo with their mother, but not all at the same time.

An American industrialist ferried out the families in his small plane. Jim was left behind for the next trip, but by the time the small plane returned from Luluabourg, an Air Force DC3 had taken the boy.

"We were split up for a couple of days," Mrs. Miller said, "but we got back together at Camina Air Base. He was with friends and I wasn't too worried about him."

Mrs. Miller, an Agnes Scott graduate, said she hoped order would soon be restored so she could return.

"Most of the violence seemed aimed at the Belgians," she said. "It is hard to understand why. The Congolese seem to be hitting the hand that fed them. The Belgians had done so much for them, but they seemed to be saying, 'You haven't done enough'."

Mrs. Miller said part of the problem was in the low education average.

"They get a fifth-grade education," she said. "Enough so that they will refuse to work in the fields, which is women's work anyway, but not enough to get a good job.

"There are a lot of good, Christian people among the Congolese, but they are confused and panicked. I hope they will not be injured, but I'm afraid they will.

"It seems that the innocent are always the ones who suffer most."

Youth Congress Sends Welcome To Congolese

Bishop Ward Bishop Ala. Sat. 7-16-60

WASHINGTON, D. C. Delegates at the International Youth Congress of the Church of God in Christ movement concluded seven days of convention here with the passage of a resolution welcoming the new Republic of the Congo into the orbit of free nations.

The Board of Directors headed by Bishop O. T. Jones, Sr., of Philadelphia and President of the Youth Congress said to the people of the new Republic in a special message to Premier Patrice Lumumba, that it was a great joy to witness another African state achieve independence that he hoped members of the Church of God in Christ could work hand in hand with Congolese religious leaders.

More than 3000 delegates attended the Silver Anniversary session of the International Youth Congress here. Young people and adult leaders participated in seminars, workshops and discussions on the theme: "Not By Might, But By God's Spirit."

Miss Pearline Ford of Los Angeles, California directed a 200-voice mass choir made up of outstanding musical groups from 12 states. The group included the Kendricks Specials from Southern California, Kitty Parker, Philadelphia, Jean Anderson, Detroit, Goldie Haynes, East St. Louis, Geraldine Clemmons, Baltimore and Sherman Howard of Washington, D. C.

Serving as first assistant to Bishop Jones was Mrs. J. V. Herne of Oklahama City who is International Chairlady for the quarter century old youth body.

The Congress also passed a resolution endorsing the young student leaders of the South, who, with their fellow citizens have been conducting sit-in demonstrations a lunchcounters and other racially segregated establishments. This resolution came during a panel discussion on the subject: "What is the Christian Attitude Toward the Recent Passive Resistance Movement in the South?"

Belgian Troops Refuse to Leave Congo

Christian Science Monitor

By the Associated Press

Léopoldville, Congo

Belgian troops have ignored Premier Patrice Lumumba's ultimatum to clear out of this former Belgian territory by 6 a.m. July 16. Boston Mass

As the deadline passed, not one Belgian soldier had left the Congo. Troops of the United Nation emergency force, recruited from African nations to help restore order, were arriving by plane. Sat. 7/16/60

[The Belgian radio reported two Europeans were killed July 15 in clashes with Africans, but it gave no details on the extent of the clashes.] P 3

Embassy Still Open

The Belgian Embassy was still functioning in Léopoldville, despite Mr. Lumumba's repeated declarations that his government has broken diplomatic relations with Brussels.

The Belgian Government apparently is waiting out the situation. Officials feel that once things simmer down in the Congo and their troops are replaced by UN forces, relations will improve slowly.

The Belgians insisted privately they would keep their troops in the Congo under their "friendship" treaty with the new state until the safety of the 75,000 remaining Europeans is guaranteed.

Mr. Lumumba made an angry speech to the Chamber of Deputies late July 15 and swept its members up in a current of nationalism. As the goateed Premier spoke, there were shouts from members: "Declare war."

He demanded that the Belgian Government accept his severance of diplomatic relations and pull out all its troops. In rapid-fire French, he termed the Belgians "snakes" and said they were trying to steal back the independence granted his country only two weeks ago.

Makeshift Truce Set

The first UN contingent arrived from Tunisia July 15. After a peaceful beginning, one of their senior officers found himself in the middle of an impending riot and managed to restore order by using Congolese police.

Maj. Gen. Henry T. Alexander, British commander of Ghana's Army, worked out a makeshift truce between the Belgian and Congolese forces, dividing the city between them. No specific areas were disclosed, but it was understood that the Belgians would continue to control the city's exits so the exodus of European refugees could continue. An estimated 25,000 Europeans already have left the Congo since it became independent two weeks ago.

Despite efforts by Congolese provincial ministers to restore confidence, the economic life of the Congo's Oriental province is collapsing because of a mass exodus of the white population.

Columns of cars leave Stanleyville, the provincial capital, every day, loaded with belongings of Europeans in their flight toward the nearest frontier.

Autos Abandoned

Many houses are empty, cars are abandoned near the airport. Their owners have gone with no plan of return.

[The Belgian radio said paratroops were dropped at the Congo's Coquilhatville airfield July 15 as Congolese rebels tried to halt the departure of European refugees.

[Quoting cabled reports from the Congo, the radio said paratroops also intervened at Boende airport where European refugees were attacked by Africans.]

Associated Press Wirephoto

Tshombe of Katanga

Independence stand reiterated

The slaying of a Congolese boy touched off the near riot. His body was found in a dusty Léopoldville street, and the crowd charged that his Belgian employer had shot him when he came to collect his wages. The crowd hacked at the locked door of the Belgian's store. Belgian troops moved in as the crowd grew to about 800, angry and shouting.

Then Ralph J. Bunche, UN undersecretary, here to advise the new government, drove through the crowd and tried to calm it. He failed.

General Alexander arrived with only 10 men to back him up. He posted Congolese police on the street.

Congolese Senate Meets

In Brussels, the Belgian radio reported that Mr. Lumumba and President Kasavubu planned to fly to Stanleyville, where economic chaos has set in following the flight of Europeans who managed most of the businesses.

The Congolese Senate planned to meet behind closed doors, the radio added. The Senate urged Mr. Lumumba's government to announce its program and threatened a vote of censure if a program is not announced in five days.

The Congolese Chamber of Deputies July 15 decreed a state of emergency in Katanga, the rich southeastern province that has decided to secede from the Congo. The Belgian broadcast also said the House decided to appoint a state commissoner for Katanga, but his role was not clearly defined.

Real Culprit In The Congo

Afro American Baltimore Md. Sat. 7/23/60

If there ever were any doubt about it, the real source of the troubles experienced by the recently established Congo Republic now is clear for the world to see.

Addressing the United Nations' Security Council last week, Tunisian Ambassador Mongi Slim put his finger on the sore spot.

He pointed to the recent role of Belgian soldiers in the Congo.

"They (the Belgian Government) sent troops and from that time, dead and wounded occurred.

* * *

WHILE THIS reference was to activities of the past two weeks, it applies equally as well to Belgian history in the Congo the past year, past decade or the past century.

The ambassador noted that prior to the arrival of Belgian soldiers, there were neither dead nor wounded.

The real culprit, it appears, is the Belgian Government, its soldiers and the brutal policy they have and are seeking to enforce.

Now all but pushed out of the Congo by the Africans' sheer determination to run their own affairs, the government in Brussels is seeking to hang on to the last shreds of empire — even if it means substituting brute force for fawning paternalism.

But to do this, they need a pretext — a smoke-screen.

This need explains the screaming headlines of rioting, looting, rape and murder which for the past weeks have been front-paged in the Western World by a press that's either gullible or prostituted.

* * *

THIS RUSE is doomed to failure. The horrible brutal and arrogant history of Belgium rule in the Congo for the past 97 years is too well known.

No matter how many governments would like to look the other way as they did in the past, majority world opinion is on the side of the victims.

The horrors of Leopoldism will not be tolerated.

The decision of the United Nations to aid the young Congo Republic is just and appropo.

It is too much to expect a new and inexperienced government, no matter how determined, to straighten out overnight the accumulated mess of a hundred years' misrule.

Belgian and Congolese Troops Clash,

New York Times
New York, New York
Thurs. 7/14/60 P.1

Security Council Studies Congo's Plea for Troops

Hammarskjold Calls an Urgent Session After Strife-Torn Land Requests Aid to Halt Belgian 'Aggression'

By THOMAS J. HAMILTON

Special to The New York Times.

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y., July 13—The Security Council held an urgent meeting tonight to hear Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold's proposal to send a United Nations force to the Congo.

The Secretary General requested the meeting this morning in response to a second cablegram from the Congo Government confirming its request yesterday for United Nations assistance.

Congolese cables and Soviet statement are on Page 4.

The cablegram, sent in response to Mr. Hammarskjold's request for clarification of the first request, said that United Nations help was needed "not to restore internal situation in Congo but rather to protect the national territory against act of aggression posed by Belgian metropolitan forces."

The cablegram today warned that if help was not provided without delay, the Congo "will be obliged to appeal to the Bandung Treaty powers."

This was interpreted by some Western delegates as possibly foreshadowing a request for intervention by Communist China. It increased the sense of urgency felt here as a result of the capture of the airport at Leopoldville today by Belgian troops.

Some sources, however, said that this may have referred to an appeal for help to other African states. Ghana issued a statement today denouncing Belgium's actions and offering to send troops immediately on the request of either the Congo or the United Nations.

There is no Bandung treaty and the cablegram was interpreted as a reference to the Asian and African powers, including Communist China, that attended a conference at Bandung, Indonesia, in 1955.

Both cablegrams to Mr. Hammerskjold were signed by Joseph Kasavubu, Chief of State of the Congo, and Patrice Lumumba, Premier. The text were made public today.

The first cablegram, received yesterday, requested the urgent dispatch by the United Nations of military assistance and accused Belgium of having committed "an act of aggression."

The first cablegram accused Belgium of having "carefully prepared the secession" of the Katanga Province, and said that the Congo refused to accept "a fait accompli resulting from a conspiracy between Belgian imperialists and a small group of Katanga leaders."

It declared that United Nations military aid was needed "to protect the national territory of the Congo against the present external aggression which is a threat to international peace."

Since the cablegram was sent by a commercial company and not through Dr. Ralph J. Bunche, a United Nations Under Secretary who is in the Congo, Mr. Hammarskjold requested clarification.

Neutral Forces Asked

The second cablegram emphasized that the Congo was requesting a United Nations force "consisting of neutral countries and not of United States as reported by certain radio stations."

This was interpreted by informed quarters as a denial that a cablegram requesting United States forces, which was sent to the United States yesterday by Antoin Eizenva, the vice premier, had been authorized.

In a letter to Dr. José A. Correa of Ecuador, the President of the Security Council, Mr. Hammarskjold said that he wanted to bring to its attention "a matter which, in my opinion, may threaten the maintenance of international peace and security."

The Secretary General therefore requested a meeting tonight to hear his report "on a demand for United Nations action in relation to the Republic of the Congo."

The Secretary General thus repeated the action he took in September, 1959, when he requested a meeting of the Security Council on the Laotian question after having obtained a clarification of the Laotian Government's request for a United Nations force to resist Communist aggression.

Yesterday, before events in the Congo took a more serious turn, Mr. Hammarskjold outlined a program of technical assistance for the Congo at a meeting of delegates from nine African states. This is to include the loan of officers from African states, excluding South Africa, to restore discipline in the Congolese Army and the assignment of United Nations experts to help set up and operate the governmental machinery in the Congo.

Action Is Deferred

Action was deferred, however, in compliance with the African position that any such program must be drawn up "in consultation with the Security Council." Accordingly, Mr. Hammarskjold arranged for a luncheon meeting of the Security Council today at which he would outline the program.

A new three-point program, drawn up in response to the deterioration in the situation since yesterday, was outlined by the Secretary General at his luncheon with Security Council members. It called for the following:

1. The immediate dispatch to the Congo of about ten army officers, mostly drawn from the United Nations truce supervision organization in Palestine to help establish discipline in the Congolese Army. These officers will wear United Nations uniforms, not the uniforms of their respective countries, and will display the United Nations flag. The United States is expected to help provide air transportation if needed.
2. Emergency shipments of food to prevent the threatened shortage of food from becoming acute. United States cooperation in providing the food and air transportation has been promised.
3. A United Nations force to be supplied exclusively by contingents from neutral states, preferably from the African states. It would be modeled on the United Nations Emergency Force, which Mr. Hammarskjold organized and sent to Egypt in 1956 in connection with the widthdrawal of the British, French and Israeli expeditions.

Orders Undisclosed

The Emergency Force, which totaled 6,000 at its maximum strength, was ordered not to shoot except in self-defense. Mr. Hammarskjold has not disclosed what orders would be given the force to be sent to the Congo.

In any event, it is hoped that it will promptly restore order and will thus convince Belgium that it is unnecessary to maintain troops in the Congo. Walter Loridan, the Belgian delegate, discussed the outlook today with Mr. Hammarskjold.

The Emergency Force in Egypt was supplied mainly by neutrals and the Scandinavian countries, who were all sympathetic with Egypt. This time Mr. Hammarskjold is looking mainly to the French-speaking countries of Africa. especially Tunisia and Morocco, and to the Scandinavian countries.

The Western countries made unsuccessful efforts during the day to find out what position would be taken at the meeting tonight by the Soviet Union. Earlier in the day the Kremlin denounced United States actions regarding the Congo.

The United States and other Western powers were prepared to convoke a special emergency session of the General Assembly tomorrow if the Soviet Union vetoed a resolution endorsing Mr. Hammarskjold's program.

Arkady A. Sobolev, the Soviet delegate, threw no light on his stand during the Security Council luncheon. He asked a number of questions about the probable cost of the United Nations force for the Congo, but otherwise kept silent. The Soviet Union has refused to pay its assessments for the Emergency Force in Egypt on the ground that Britain, France and Israel should meet the entire cost.

Statements on the Congo Situation

Following are the texts of messages sent yesterday to the United Nations by the Congo, as made public at the United Nations, and of excerpts from a Soviet statement handed to five Western governments, as made public in Moscow and transmitted by Reuters:

Congolese Messages

FIRST MESSAGE

The Government of the Republic of the Congo requests urgent dispatch by the United Nations of military assistance. This request is justified by the dispatch to the Congo of metropolitan Belgian troops in violation of the treaty of friendship signed between Belgium and the Republic of the Congo on 29 June 1960. Under the terms of that treaty, Belgian troops may only intervene on the express request of the Congolese Government. No such request was ever made by the Government of the Republic of the Congo and we therefore regard the unsolicited Belgian action as an act of aggression against our country.

The real cause of most of the disturbances can be found in colonialist machinations. We accuse the Belgian Government of having carefully prepared the secession of the Katanga with a view to maintaining a hold on our country. The Government, supported by the Congolese people, refuses to accept a fait accompli resulting from a conspiracy between Belgian imperialists and a small group of Katanga leaders.

The overwhelming majority of the Katanga population is opposed to secession, which means the disguised perpetuation of the colonialist regime. The essential purpose of the requested military aid is to protect the national territory of the Congo against the present external aggression, which is a threat to international peace. We strongly stress the extremely urgent need for the dispatch of United Nations troops to the Congo.

SECOND MESSAGE

In connection with military assistance requested of United Nations by the Republic of the Congo, the Chief of State and the Prime Minister of the Congo make the following clarification.

1. The purpose of the aid requested is not to restore internal situation in Congo but rather to protect the national territory against act of aggression posed by Belgian metropolitan troops.

2. The request for assistance relates only to a United Nations force consisting of military personnel of neeutral countries and not of United States as reported by certain radio stations.

3. If requested assistance is not received without delay, the Republic of the Congo will be obliged to appeal to the Bandung Treaty powers.

4. The aid has been requested by the Republic of the Congo in the exercise of its sovereign rights and not in agreement with Belgium as reported.

Soviet Statement

As a result of a long and courageous struggle of the Congolese people against foreign colonial oppressors, the independence of the Congo Republic was proclaimed on June 30, 1960.

The family of independent African states was joined by one of the largest African countries with a population of over 13,000,000 people and disposing of immense natural and economic resources.

The Soviet Union, like the majority of the countries in the world, has recognized the Congo Republic as an independent and sovereign state.

The Security Council on July 5 unanimously adopted a resolution to recommend to the General Assembly of the United Nations the acceptance of the Congo Republic as a member of the United Nations.

However, immediately after the proclamation of the Congo's independence, the officials of the former Belgian colonial administration who remained in the country, with the support of diplomatic representatives of the Western powers, the United States, Britain and France, undertook, in violation of international law and the United Nations Charter, actions directed at the undermining of the sovereignty and the liquidation of the independence of the young state.

Asks Aggression to Stop

The Soviet Government warns of the grave responsibility borne by the leading circles of the Western powers for unleashing armed aggression in the Congo, and demands that it should immediately be stopped.

The Government of the Soviet Union considers that in view of the serious situation created in the Congo, which threatens peace and general security, the United Nations must immediately take measures to defend the sovereign rights of the independent Congo Republic.

By using its armed forces for military operations on the territory of the Congo and by sending, despite the protests of its Government, new forces within the frontiers of the Congo, Belgium is committing a crude violation both of the territorial inviolability and the politcal independence of the Congo; that is, Belgium is committing actions which international law has for a long time now qualified as acts of aggression.

Furthermore, the fact that the Belgian Government is sending troops to the Congo, which come from the NATO command and are stationed in the German Federal Republic, once again shows what role is being played by the aggressive NATO bloc, acting the part of an international gendarme, in the colonial subjugation of the peoples of Africa.

Role Played by Bonn

An indirect part in the aggression against the Congo Republic is being played by Adenauer's Government, which places its air bases at the disposal of foreign troops being dispatched to the Congo.

It is thus acting in the same way as during the Anglo-American aggression against Lebanon and Jordan in July, 1958.

A direct part in the intervention against the Congo Republic is being played by the leading circles of Britain, who use for this purpose the government of their dependent territories.

The Potuguese Government, known all over the world for its bestialities in its African colonies of Angola and Mozambique, has concentrated troops along the frontiers of Angola and the Congo.

One cannot but draw attention to the fact that the United States Ambassador in the Congo, Timberlake, is at present in Leopoldville, where he is intervening in the internal affairs of the Congo Republic and taking advantage of the presence there of the Deputy Secretary General of the United Nations, the American Bunche, in order to work out plans for building up Western intervention into the Congo under the flag of the United Nations.

Violation of Principles

No subterfuges of the colonizers can hide the fact of their armed aggression in the Congo, which is a crude violation of the basic principles of the United Nations and the Bandung conference.

The efforts of the colonizers are now directed toward separating from the Congo the richest province in order to dismember and strangle the young republic.

The colonialists' intervention in the Congo provides new proof of how certain powers, in the first place the United States, continue to march along the road of aggression and provocation.

The Soviet Union, as well as other peace-loving states, decisively condemns the perfidious aggression against the Congo Republic. It fully supports the just demands of the Conferences of Independent African States and Peoples at Accra and Addis Ababa regarding the immediate granting of independence to all the countries and peoples of Africa still remaining under the ignominious colonial system.

MISSIONARY FROM SELMA HAILED AS HERO IN CONGO RESCUE WORK

SALISBURY, Southern Rhodesia (AP) — Two flying American missionaries — one from Selma, Ala.—were hailed Thursday as heroes by refugee American missionaries they rescued from the troubled Congo.

The Alabama man—John W. Davis—is a combat veteran of Korea, where he flew 70 missions as an Air Force major. He teamed up with Dr. Mark Poole in rescuing more than 200 missionaries from the Congo.

Davis became a missionary after his Air Force service. He sold his central Alabama farm and came to The Congo three years ago with his wife and six children. He served with the American Presbyterian Mission.

Davis brought along his own single-engine plane and soon after his arrival he made all of the mission's 10 stations build airstrips.

Pygmies of the Congo jungles have long known Dr. Poole as the Flying Missionary.

When the Army mutiny broke out last weekend Davis and Poole began making round-the-clock flights to rescue more than 200 men, women and children from the 10 mission stations in the area. The tiny planes could take only three passengers a trip.

They flew the refugees to the Belgian base at Kamina in central Katanga Province, where an Air Force Globemaster carried them to Salisbury.

Davis, dressed in faded jean, scarlet shirt and a battered straw hat, arrived in Salisbury later in his small plane. He brought his 6-year-old daughter.

Other missionaries praised his exploits but Davis brushed the remarks aside with this comment:

"It was God's providence."

THE CONGO CRISIS AS THE BELGIANS SEE IT

They Are Bitter About Violence That Followed Independence and About Criticism Abroad

The N.Y. Times

By HARRY GILROY

Special to The New York Times.

BRUSSELS, Belgium, July 16 — The Belgian people, bitter with the conviction that they have been betrayed in the republic of Congo, more than half convinced that a Communist plot has effected the turn of events, now feel that the future of their former colony has become an international problem and ask that the United Nations prove its capacity to find a solution.

New York

For the Belgians, the grant of independence to the Congolese was a case of enlightened self-interest. It was a source of great national pride that it was being done with a fine gesture—quickly and with style. At the same time it was realized that, if all worked well, Belgians would benefit commercially.

Aug. 7-17-60

Hopes Swept Away

In the last week, the Belgians have seen their hopes swept away, their countrymen mistreated and humiliated, much of the Congo's white population put to ignominious flight, a large part of the Belgian investment abandoned quite possibly beyond recovery, and Belgian soldiers sent into action against the supposedly friendly Congolese Army. At the end of this sequence, the Congo Government established by Belgium has broken relations with the parent country and Premier Patrice Lumumba has declared that a state of war exists between his country and Belgium.

To cap it all, Belgium is being criticized in other countries, both West and East.

In the West, critics are saying that Belgium did not train enough Congolese to take over the leadership of the state and its social structure, that the Belgians left too soon and that they encouraged separatist movements such as the one in Katanga Province, where an independent state has been proclaimed. From the East has come an indictment from Premier Khrushchev, who accuses the Belgians of enslaving the Congolese, sending criminals to cause unrest and getting white officers of the Congolese Army to attempt to kill Mr. Lumumba.

In regard to the first two criticisms, Belgians are doing some soul-searching. Did they Africanize the executive ranks of public and private enterprise enough? Did they leave too soon? These questions will be pressed vigorously once the emergency connected with saving the refugees has passed, and there may well be serious political effects.

When it comes to the criticism that Belgium encouraged separatist movements, the Belgians laugh ironically. Their whole policy was and still is pinned to the design of a unified Congo. For many months their ministers fought to keep Mr. Kasavubu from dragging his Lower Congo tribesmen off to form a separate state. This was a danger up to a few days before the Republic of Congo received its independence.

Even this charge fades in the anger engendered here by the Moscow accusations against Belgium

Belgian officials are doing their hardest thinking about possible ways to straighten out the situation. Their first concern is with the United Nations action. They feel that, since the United Nations has intervened, that organization and Secretary General Hammarskjold have taken responsibility for whatever will happen next.

The matter of public order comes first. Belgium has no intention of moving her troops back to their bases, let alone ordering them out of the Congo, until the United Nations force shows it can keep order.

However, if the United Nations puts in enough troops of a disciplined sort, the Begians think this first task can be accomplished and then they will withdraw Belgian troops to their bases with great relief. When it comes to moving those troops home the Belgian Government will want some solid guarantees, especially that Belgians who remain in the Congo can leave whenever they desire and that, while they are there, their lives and goods will be safe.

Katanga a Problem

Katanga Province has created a special problem for Belgium by its claim of independence and its statement of its regard for Belgium. As this is the center of the greatest Belgian investment in the Congo and the place where Belgian troops have their strongest base there are major arguments for recognizing a new Katanga state and defending it.

If Mr. Tshombe proves to have a firm hold on his province with his loyalty to Belgium and if Mr. Lumumba proves to have a similar grip on the rest of the Congo with his anti-Belgium attitude, the Belgian people will be all for going to the aid of the newly proclaimed state. But One Belgian observer reports this is not the Brussels Government's policy.

The Belgian Government would still like to get along with the republic of Congo. It is thought that possibly this might come through the intercession of the United Nations. Belgians outside the Government ask repeatedly if another solution is possible—whether the unrest in the Congo will lead to a change in leadership and then to a return to the treaty of friendship and mutual assistance that was supposed to chart the relations between the Congo and Belgium.

U. S. Assails Red Move On Congo

The Washington Post

Washington, D.C.

United Press International

The State Department accused the Soviet Union yesterday of conducting a "desperate and almost frantic" Soviet propaganda campaign against United Nations efforts to end the Congo crisis.

State Department spokesman Lincoln White made the statement on learning that Russia has protested that there is a 20-man U. S. military mission in Leopoldville, capital of the Congo.

Wash. 7-20-60

White said the protest has not been received here, but it is obvious that there are at least 20 American military men in the Congo in connection with the U. S. airlift of U. N. troops and emergency relief supplies to the strife-torn African nation.

The Soviet attempt to make an issue of the presence of these Americans, White said, is "a further effort to befog the issue and to put the worst possible light that the Soviet Union can dream up upon a highly effective, cooperative effort on the part of many countries with the United Nations."

The Soviet action, White said, "seems to me further evidence of a desperate and almost frantic effort of the Soviet Union to obstruct the constructive work being done by the United Nations in the Congo.

U. N. Chief To Inspect Congo Area

The Washington Post

Washington, D.C.

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y., July 19 (AP)—Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold will go to the troubled Congo this weekend to make an on-the-spot survey of U. N. efforts to implementation of its resolution of early last Thursday.

The meeting was called for Wednesday night.

Informed quarters said the U. N. force was building up toward 10,000 can, Asian, L[illegible] tin-America[illegible] troops were protection of drawal from the whole country in its next meeting on the Congo situation, probably Wednesday.

Wash. 7-20-60

The Security Council will meet to hear Hammarskjold's report residual order, 7-20-60

how long he would stay.

The U. N. announced today A U. N. announcement here charged with protest Belgian nationals.

he will leave for Leopoldville, said Belgian troops were withdrawing from Leopoldville to Despite this, the Council was expected to get the Congolese capital, Saturday. This action Soviet and Congolese demands day, as he hopes, condition their Congo bases. "It did not say will be completed by Saturday." immediate withdrawal of their

Congo Rescues Related By Missionary Here

The Washington Post
Washington, D.C.

By Milton Viorst
Staff Reporter

An American missionary said here yesterday that short wave radio, light civilian aircraft and American millitary planes teamed up to save hundreds of lives in the Congo in recent weeks.

Dr. Mark Poole of Bay City, Tex., left the strife-torn African state a week ago after personally flying 26 missions into the "bush" to bring out white settlers, who were sometimes besieged and often stranded without means of getting food and supplies.

Dr. Poole said he and companions listened to distress messages from the short wave radios that are part of the standard equipment of virtually every farm in the former Belgian colony.

He and John W. Davis, an industrial missionary, flew 80 adults and 85 children from 10 scattered bush-country outposts in Kasai Province to the airport at Luluabourg.

There they were picked up by two United States C-47s that had been sent in by the American Consul General in neighboring Southern Rhodesia, Joseph Palmer.

The State Department confirmed after an inquiry yesterday that unarmed United States military planes had been going into the Congo on mercy missions for several weeks.

A spokesman said two C-47s assigned to the naval and air attaches in Pretoria, Union of South Africa, had been rushed to the danger area at Palmer's request.

Both of these planes evacuated Americans, and nationals of other countries if there was room, from the small strip at Luluabourg to the large airfield at Kamina in Katanga province.

There they were transferred to an Air Force Globemaster which had been sent for them from Salisbury in Southern Rhodesia.

The State Department said also that two other C-47s were rushed into the northeast Congo from Addis Ababa, where they had been at the service of American attaches.

Evacuations are now virtually completed, the State Department said, but figures are not available on the number of evacuees taken out. About half the 200 Americans believed to be in the Congo have now left, according to State Department estimates.

The State Department said further that both the Belgian and Congolese governments had given clearance for the American effort.

Dr. Poole, a doctor in the Congo for 24 years, said the revolt was in no sense a spontaneous uprising against the whites. He said it was a well planned, highly coordinated effort by the Force Public, the native militia.

He said 90 per cent of the natives remain loyal friends of the whites. But it will be, at best, a hard job to reestablish communications, stabilize the political situation and restore confidence, he said.

Dr. Poole, 51, a Presbyterian, said he did not plan to return to the Congo at once. He will go back, he said, when he can once more resume useful work.

The Congo, he said, cannot exist for at least 20 years without guidance of white experts.

Belgian Withdrawal Stops Plea to Soviet

The Washington Post
Washington, D.C.

By Nigel Ryan
Reuters

LEOPOLDVILLE, The Congo, July 19—A Congolese threat to call for Soviet help reportedly ended tonight after Belgium agreed to pull its troops out of the Leopoldville area in favor of United Nations forces.

Sources close to Congolese Premier Patrice Lumumba, author of the day-old ultimatum, said: "The question of the ultimatum no longer arises. The withdrawal of Belgian forces has been agreed to."

Lumumba had given the U.N. until midnight tonight to make Belgian troops withdraw from the entire country threatening to call on Russia for help if they did not leave.

Most diplomats here had considered the midnight deadline more of a bluff than a serious intention.

Belgium and the U.N. agreed on a 4-day withdrawal from Leopoldville starting Wednesday as U.N.-sponsored contingents from five nations moved toward this infant republic to help restore order.

American missionary describes rescue of hundreds in Congo. Page A4.

The Leopoldville pullout agreement was worked out here by American Ralph Bunche, U. N. Assistant Secretary-General, and Belgium's Congo Ambassador, Baron Jean van den Bosch.

Bunche said Belgian soldiers will retire to the Congo bases which Belgium holds under a treaty with its former colony, independent only since June 30.

The Belgian envoy reported withdrawal from the rest of the Congo was not discussed at the meeting.

But he disclosed that under an agreement made yesterday no Belgian military operations would take place without prior consultation with the U. N.

Bunche declared enough U. N. troops would arrive in the Congo this week to protect the entire population.

Appeals Continue

The Belgian Ambassador said his country still was getting continual appeals for help from various parts of the Congo where Europeans were in danger. About 20,000 to 25,000 of the Congo's 80,000 Belgians have left the country this far, the Baron added.

Lumumba had made his "call on the Soviets" threat to Bunche. Bunche reportedly rejected the threat with the remark the world organization was "not in the habit of acceptin gultimatums."

Under today's agreement, the U. N. troops also will take charge of Leopoldville's international airport.

African and Swedish troops will land there Wednesday to bolster the 3500-strong U. N. forces in its task of restoring order after the Congolese army mutiny and subsequent African terrorism against the whites.

Bunche also announced today U. N. soldiers scheduled to be sent here "soon" include units from Canada, Italy, Burma and South America.

Guinea said two battalions, totaling 1200 men, will be flown from Conakry to Leopoldville before the weekend.

In Dublin, the Irish Government confirmed reports it was sending soldiers to join the U. N. Emergency Force here.

Bunche said in a statement after the agreement was reached:

"The United Nations is now in a position to assure that there will be arriving this week sufficiently strong elements of the U. N. force from European as well as African c[illegible]s to insure order and protect the entire population European as well as African."

Sources said the Belgians had been willing to pull out from the entire Congo if the U. N. could guarantee the safety of Belgian citizens. The U. N. had to admit it didn't now have enough troops for the job, the sources said.

Meanwhile, a concerted Belgian push was reportel to combat biter tribal fighting said to be raging in neighboring Ruand-Urundi, a U. N. trusteship territory under Belgian Administration.

Swedish Maj. Gen. Carl von Horn, commander of the U. N. Emergency Force here, said one Belgian company in the Congo had been withdrawn to Ruanda-Urundi. In Brussels, the Government announced two companies were flying to the territory.

Tension in the Congo's political atmosphere heightened today when Premier Lumumba and President Joseph Kasavubu arrived here by air from Stanleyville, stronghold of Lumumba's suporters.

A few Europeans at the airport booed when the Congolese leaders left their plane and drove directly into the capital.

The Congolese Senate had demanded that the two men return to Leopoldville to deal with the urgent problems of the teetering central government.

Premier Moise Tshombe of breakaway Katanga Province has demanded a decision by U. N. headquraters by Wednesday on the proclamation of independence of the mineral-rich area.

Tshombe said today in his capital of Elisabethville that U. N. Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold has agreed to meet him there. Hammarskold will leave New York Saturday for Leopoldville, but U. N. sorces said he had no intention of going to Elisabethville.

U. N. Troops Deployed

Meanwhile, the U.N. Troops rushed to the Congo during the past few days have been deployed "with all possible speed" to trouble spots throughout the country.

Moroccan troops took over Monday at Thysville, the cradle of the Congolese army mutiny which erupted six days after the Congo became independent June 30.

A witness to the takeover said there were a few tense moments but there appeared to be no foundation to reports of clashes between the Moroccans and Congolese.

He said the Congolese were suspicious of the U. N. soldiers at first, but later obeyed a Moroccan colonel's order to unload their rifles and remove the magazines.

Sources in Leopoldville said there have been several "races" between Belgian and U. N. troops to get to the trouble spots first.

The U. N. won in Stanleyville, 1,000 miles northeast of here, but the Belgians took over in the western centers of Coquilhatville and Banningville.

Who was the forgotten woman in Teddy Roosevelt's strenuous life? Read the Best from American Heritage feature—Sunday in The Washington Post's Outlook Section.

Associated Press

PATRICE LUMUMBA
. . . at news conference

America Warns Russia To Keep Out Of Congo

The Montgomery Advertiser Montgomery, Ala.

Intervention To Be Blocked At Any Cost, U.N. Assured

Thurs. 7-21-60

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP) — The United States served notice early Thursday it will take any action necessary to keep Soviet military forces out of the Congo.

U.S. Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge told the 11-nation Security Council he wanted to make the position of the United States unequivocally clear on possible Soviet military intervention in the strife-torn Congo.

"With other United Nations members," he said, "we will do whatever may be necessary to prevent the intrusion of any military forces not requested by the United Nations.

JEOPARDIZE EFFORTS

"Such forces, if they were introduced, would not only be in defiance of the United Nations but would seriously jeopardize any effort to bring stability and order to the Congo."

Lodge spoke after Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Vasily V. Kuznetsov had called on the council to set a three-day deadline for withdrawal of Belgian forces.

Kuznetsov made the proposal in a resolution introduced at an extraordinary council session on the Congo crisis.

The resolution also called on U.N. member states "to respect the territorial integrity of the republic of the Congo and not to undertake any actions that could violate this integrity."

He said if "aggression" continues in the Congo, it will be necessary to take "more effective measures both along U.N. lines and along the lines of the peace-loving states sympathizing with the Congo."

MILITARY AID

This appeared to be a reference to previous Soviet statements that Communist countries would give military aid to the Congo if asked.

Kuznetsov, who came here from Moscow for the debate, accused Belgium of trying to "strangle and dismember" the young Congo republic.

He charged that planes with rocket weapons were being dispatched from Brussels and that Belgian troops are building fortifications to prepare for a prolonged war.

Before Kuznetsov spoke, both Belgium and the Congo put their separate cases before the council.

QUICK ACTION

The Congolese delegate demanded quick action by the council to effect withdrawal of all Belgian forces as soon as possible.

The Belgian representative said troops would be withdrawn "as soon as the United Nations tells us that peace and tranquility are restored."

Thomas Kanza, 27, minister-delegate to the United Nations, reminded the Council that his premier, Patrice Lumumba, had declared that unless Belgian troops withdraw immediately military aid would be sought from the Soviet Union.

But the minister added that the Congo still trusted the United Nations.

"It is for you to insure that this country will know peace and will not be a battlefield," he declared.

U.N. RIGHTS

Kanza spoke after Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold declared U.N. forces have the right to o agnywhere in the Congo including seceded Katanga Province.

Hammarskjold said he had so formed Moise Tshombe, the Katanga premier who has warned U.N. troops to stay out of the rich province he has declared independent.

Kanza said that Lumumba had changed plans to come to New York after he learned that Hammarskjold would be in Leopoldville next Monday. Lumumba will make the trip later.

The statements were made as the Council opened an extraordinary night session amid pressure from the 29-nation Asian-African group to call for immediate withdrawal of Belgian forces.

LIST OF CRIMES

Pierre Wigny, Belgian's foreign minister, also newly arrived here for the debate, laid before the Council a long list of crimes, including rape and attacks on children, that he attributed to mutinous Congo soldiers.

In one instance, he said, soldiers threatened to harm the 3-month-old child of a woman if she did not submit to them, and she was violated "about 20 times."

He said Belgian officials had been told that if troops were withdrawn in two hours they could be sure that calm would be restored.

"I appeal to the security general," he declared. "Would he now be able to give us a guarantee in all the cities, in Stanleyville. . .in the lower part of the Congo?"

PORTUGUESE BACK REIN OVER AFRICA

N.Y. Times Sun. 7-17-60

See Congo Crisis Justifying Strong Rule for Angola and Mozambique

By LEONARD INGALLS

Special to The New York Times.

LOURENCO MARQUES, Mozambique, July 18—The events in the Congo, the Portuguese in Mozambique say, have convinced them of two things.

One is that their policy of stern paternalism is the correct one for the 11,000,000 Africans under their control in Mozambique and Angola.

The other is that the Soviet Union is responsible for much of the trouble that has occurred in Africa in the last two years.

The main concern of the Portuguese is that the violence that has disturbed many neighboring areas, such as South Africa, Nyasaland, Northern Rhodesia and now the Congo, shall not happen in the Portuguese-controlled territories.

Additional troops from Portugal have been stationed in both Mozambique and Angola—just in case.

However, the Portuguese are basing their hopes principally on continuing to be a strict parent to what many of them describe as their African "children." They say that their aim is to bring about a gradual improvement in the lives of all the Africans and not to concentrate on creating an African élite.

Some Portuguese believe the Belgians were guilty of incredible folly in granting independence to the Congo without first preparing the Africans there for the responsibility. Others speculate on whether the Belgians acted cynically, knowing that trouble would follow and expecting that they would have to resume control of the Congo.

Independence Not Planned

There is no question of preparing the Africans for eventual independence in Mozambique and Angola, since both territories are regarded as provinces of metropolitan Portugal and the Portuguese intend that this status shall continue.

Meanwhile, the Portuguese say that they are doing what they can with the limited means of their relatively poor country to provide Africans with education, health services, better housing and opportunities to advance.

They admit that most Africans benefit little from these efforts and say that Portugal could use financial assistance in her African area from such wealthy countries as the United States.

The Portuguese say there has been no evidence of Communist activity in their areas, but because both Mozambique in the east and Angola in the west have long coastlines they fear that Communist agents could be landed to make trouble in each place.

Although they are unable to support their beliefs with any detailed evidence, the Portuguese strongly suspect that Soviet agents have been active in the Congo, South Africa and Nyasaland.

Portuguese Defend Policies

One officail said: "Africa is vulnerable, and giving unprepared primitive Africans independence is giving the Russians a chance to step in. We hope the United States will recognize that what we are trying to do here is not unwise."

At the same time, the Portuguese are quietly critical of neighboring South Africa. There is no official color bar in Mozambique or Angola as there is in South Africa. Nor do the Portuguese sympathize with the South African policy of separate racial development. They feel that it can only lead to trouble.

"We are a multiracial country and we look forward to the day when all our Africans will be full Portuguese citizens," one Portuguese official said in explaining the aims of his Government.

U.S. Doubts Soviet Move Into Africa

The Montgomery Advertiser Montgomery, Ala.

By JOHN SCALI

WASHINGTON (AP) — Top administration officials Wednesday said the Soviet Union would create a grave international crisis if it sent troops into the Congo in answer to any appeal from Prime Minister Patrice Lumumba.

Thurs. 7-21-60

These authorities said, however, they strongly doubt that the Kremlin would defy the United Nations by any such move. They feel Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev undoubtedly realizes that entry of Soviet troops would anger African nations cooperating with the U.N. to help restore order in the Congo.

FIRST-CLASS CRISIS

But if Khrushchev did the unexpected and dispatched troops, these authorities said it would blow up a first-class international crisis.

The State Department meanwhile insisted the Congo Cabinet has made no decision yet to appeal for Soviet troops — even though Lumumba announced earlier that it had approved such a step.

A department spokesman implied that either Lumumba had misrepresented his Cabinet's decision or that the Congo leader was confused about what his ministers had decided.

Press officer Lincoln White told a news conference that the U.S. Embassy in the Congo knew nothing about any Cabinet decision to appeal for Soviet troops.

Ambassador Clare Timberlake assured top department officials of this in a telephone conversation, White said.

Timberlake reported, White said, that Lumumba "had not put out the statements attributed to him." White did not explain how Timberlake was so certain of this.

Some diplomatic authorities felt Lumumba's Soviet troops threat was a move to put pressure on the United Nations to obtain a Belgium promise of swift withdrawal of Belgian force.

Russia and the Congo

N.Y. Times

One thing is certain about the situation in the Republic of the Congo. This is that it would be better if it had not been for Mr. Khrushchev. Nobody but Mr. Khrushchev could have kept a straight face while proclaiming a policy under which Russia supported U. N. intervention in the Congo and at the same time threatened Russian intervention in the same area.

This was precisely what Mr. Khrushchev did. His U. N. spokesman, Arkady A. Sobolev, last Wednesday night accused practically the whole Western world of conspiring to re-enslave the Congolese, demanded that the "U. N. organization take immediate measures * * * to restore the sovereign rights of the independent Republic of the Congo," and voted with the United States and six other Governments to authorize U. N. Secretary General Hammarskjold to respond to the Congo's request for "military assistance."

Since then conditions in the Congo have grown more confusing, partly because communications are difficult, partly because the Congolese leaders do not seem to know precisely what they want and partly because nobody except the Russians is certain what the Russians are up to. The Congolese Government is said to have ordered all Belgian troops to get out of the country within three days, threatening to call in Russian troops if this is not done. Mr. Khrushchev, for his part, says "the U. S. S. R. will not shrink from resolute measures to curb the aggression." What aggression? Does he mean the Belgians? Does he mean American and other Western units that are not in the Congo and are not going there?

When the Security Council meets three facts will be evident:

First, the Belgian troops should leave as soon as they can. They are, as Mr. Hammarskjold said last Wednesday, "a source of internal and potentially also of international tension";

Second, the Belgians should not leave until all Europeans, including women and children, are safe;

Third, the U. N. forces must continue to move in with all possible speed, to replace the Belgian soldiers, and to maintain order, as they alone can do without needless violence.

It was good news to learn yesterday that U. N. troops from Ghana, Ethiopia, Tunisia and Morocco were continuing, as the Secretary General said, to "pour in." Mr. Hammarskjold seems determined to win this peaceful fight for the United Nations. Yesterday Sweden, Ireland, Yugoslavia, Burma and Haiti were mentioned as possible sources of U. N. reinforcements and some observers thought that between six thousand and ten thousand men might be in the Congo under U. N.'s blue flag within the next two weeks.

The United Nations can restore order and goodwill in the Republic of the Congo if the Congolese Government will assist and if the Russian Government does not use its reckless power to gain a new foothold in Africa. This is a race between the forces that might wreck the world and those influences that might make for prosperity and peace not only in the Congo but throughout the old and new states of Africa.

SOVIET TROOPS INVITED

Montgomery, Ala.
Montgomery Advertiser
Mar. 7/21/60

Ike Keeps Very Close Watch On Congo Action

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — Vacationing President Eisenhower kept a close watch Wednesday on the tense Congo situation.

The President had no immediate comment on moves by the former Belgian colony toward inviting in Soviet troops.

The summer White House said Eisenhower had conferred by telephone Wednesday afternoon with Secretary of State Christian A. Herter in Washington on the whole Congo situation and that they wer watching it "very carefully."

This was a follow-up to talks the President and Herter had here Tuesday on the Congo and other world trouble spots.

Eisenhower was driving golf balls from the practice tee at the Newport Country Club when James C. Hagerty, his press secretary, advised him of news reports that the cabinet in Leopoldville had voted to ask for Soviet troops.

The two men talked earnestly, some distance aside from other players and the caddies, and then Hagerty went into the clubhouse and telephoned the State Department in Washington.

Eisenhower waited for Hagerty to report back to him and then set out on an 18-hole round accompanied, as is standard procedure; by a golf cart equipped with a walkietalkie radio to keep him informed of developments.

Hagerty later told newsmen the State Department at that time had no news of the Congolese Cabinet development except for the press reports.

Te President spent the early part of the morning working on the speech he will deliver next Tuesday evening to the Republican National Convention in Chicago.

Eisenhower also prvoided some political ammunition for the GOP by announcing a $1,100,000,000 budget surplus for the fiscal year that ended June 30. This was mo than five times the 200-million-dollar surplus he had predicted last January.

Hagerty told newsmen the President and his wife had completed plans to visit Denver for two or three days after the convention speech.

Denver is the home of Mrs. Eisenhower's mother, Mrs. John S. Doud, who has been seriously ill for months.

The Eisenhowers, after the Denver visit, will return to the summer White House at this seaside resort until a day or two before the Senate reconvenes Aug. 8.

Kasavubu Victory A Costly One For U.S. in U.N.

The Atlanta Journal + Constitution

Atlanta, Ga.

By WILLIAM R. FRYE
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y., Nov. 26—The United States got into a rough and tumble fight with considerable part of Africa and Asia this past the U.N., and won.

But it was a very costly victory. How many more victories of this kind Washington can afford to win is a very real question.

Atlanta 11-27-60

The issue was that troublemaker extraordinary, Patrice Lumumba, ousted premier of the Congo. The Afro-Asians set out to restore him to power, using UN endorsement as the fulcrum. They thus started the fight.

P. 4-B

The United States took up the challenge, hurled Lumumba back in their teeth, and in his stead, rammed through the 99-nation UN General Assembly an endorsement of his principal rival, President Joseph Kasavubu.

It was possible to take satisfaction in the victory, and some Americans did so.

Ghana, Marxist Guinea and India, Lumumba's principal non-Soviet supporters, had been "taught a lesson." They had had to "come down off their high horse." "They started it," the United States said — in diplomatic language, of course; "we finished it. Don't try to push us around again."

Other Americans, however, considered this view dangerously shortsighted.

* * *

IF WASHINGTON had succeeded, once and for all, in keeping Lumumba out of power, it might have been worth while winning a victory, at the cost of considerable bitterness, over some of the very people the United States most wants to befriend. It would have been acting in their real interest; it would have been barring Communist influence from Africa.

But the seating of Kasavubu was just one skirmish in a continuing battle. It by no means settled the Congo's future. It simply reduced the restoration of Lumumba from a virtual certainty to perhaps a 50-50 chance, buying time in which to fight again.

For that negative result, the price that was paid was very high, in the view of most independent observers here.

* * *

SOME ELEMENTS of the price were these:

- Undercutting months, indeed years, of work building up a basis for friendship and cooperation between the United States and the newly emerging nations.
- Antagonizing key votes without which other important American objectives in the UN probably cannot be achieved.
- Setting Africans against Africans. The victory was won by lining up former French Africa against Lumumba. This in turn won for the anti-Lumumba Africans the sobriquets "stooge" and "lackey." Replying, they charged the pro-Lumumba Africans with being cats' paws of the Russians.

It was not good clean fun. It was a fight which left deep wounds among people who much prefer to consider themselves brothers. One who provokes fraternal strife is, in the long run, likely to end up hated by both sides; and this was what the United States did.

- Giving the Russians, of all people, a chance to pose as the champions of legality, order and anti-colonialism in Africa.

* * *

THE ALTERNATIVE would have been risky; it would have been to let the Afro-Asians try to effect a reconciliation between Lumumba, Kasavubu, Mobutu, and the others on terms which probably would have meant a Lumumba comeback but could have involved safeguards against communism.

But as things are, the whole Congo operation is coming apart at the seams. United States policy is extremely unpopular with UN officials running the show—and vice versa.

Washington, the financial mainstay of the operation, has more than once had to consider in recent weeks whether to pull out and let the whole thing become a direct power-politics battle, regardless of the consequences. Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold has warned that the consequences could be world war.

* * *

UN PEOPLE, diagnosing the trouble in private conversation, say Col. Joseph Mobutu, the Western-oriented military boss of the Congo, is a straw man propped up by the United States and Belgium, unable to control even his own army, let alone the country. If there is to be a military dictatorship, they say, let it at least be an efficient one.

A much better course, in the UN's view, would be to revive parliamentary democracy, however inexperienced the Congolese may

Given a government of unquestioned legality with which the UN could properly deal, they argue, the UN could take over and do a job; as it is, the UN's hands are tied by the necessity to appear impartial as between rival ghost governments.

A Triumphant Return

The News + Courier

Charleston, S.C.

Congolese Cheer Wildly As Kasavubu Comes Home

N.O. Nov. 11-28-60

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo (AP)—President Joseph Kasavubu returned in triumph to his capital Sunday, wildly cheered by more than 100,000 Congolese.

Roar after roar rose from the crowd lining the two-lane highway from Ndjili Airport into the city as the president drove by in his open car, accompanied by Foreign Minister Justin Bomboko.

Pride and joy at the seating of the Kasavubu delegation by the U. N. General Assembly in New York triggered the greatest demonstration of popular enthusiasm in the capital since the independence celebrations last June.

It was a startling contrast to Kasavubu's departure for New York earlier this month, when only Western diplomats and a handful of Congolese came to see him off at the Congo River ferry.

Army leader Col. Joseph Mobutu, who had expressed some irritation at the president's decision to fly to New York, welcomed him back in style. Mobutu brought his commando battalion and the army band to the airport and placed himself in the front rank of scores of dignitaries who greeted the president as he stepped from the Belgian jet plane that brought him from Paris.

Kasavubu was resplendent in his white general's uniform as commander in chief of the Congolese army. Mobutu saluted smartly and shook hands with the president, then led him down the line of foreign diplomats and United Nations officials.

These included India's Rajeshwar Dayal, head of the U. N. mission, and Indian Brig. Indarjit Rikhye, chief U. N. military adviser, both noticeably absent from the group that saw Kasavubu off Nov. 6.

Mobutu and Rikhye, whose soldiers fought a violent battle around the Ghana Embassy residence last Monday, came face to face for an instant but avoided each other's eyes.

Kasavubu and Bomboko drove into the city escorted by two armored cars, gendarmerie jeeps with sirens screaming, and hundreds of private cars decorated with flowers and branches.

The president stood and waved as his car passed through the jubilant crowds.

It was apparent that Kasavubu was deeply moved by his joyous reception, but he made no statement.

Diplomats said the presence of Dayal and Rikhye at the airport could be a turning point in the long-strained relationship between the United Nations and Mobutu's pro-Western regime.

Although Mobutu and Kasavubu do not see eye to eye on all matters, the president has given Mobutu his full support in suspending Parliament and installing a provisional government of college graduate commissioners. Dayal and Rikhye have been pressing for recall of Parliament, which has a strong majority in favor of deposed, Communist-leaning, Premier Patrice Lumumba.

Lumumba Flees From Mobutu, Who Now Seeks Arrest

Atlanta Daily World

Atlanta, Ga.

LEOPOLDVILLE, The Congo — (UPI) — A surprise flight by ousted premier Patrice Lumumba to his bush country stronghold Monday brought strongman Col. Joseph Mobuto racing back to Leopoldville, and there were reports he had ordered his troops to arrest Lumumba on sight.

Tues. 11-29-60

The left - wing Lumumba, under U. N. troop guard in his official residence for the last six weeks, abruptly departed unescorted in a chauffeur - driven car for Stanleyville He left a note saying he would attend the funeral of his infant daughter and then would return to the capital to resume his demand for control of the government.

Lumumba's written statement stressed he was "not going to Stanleyville as a refugee."

His departure immediately recalled reports last week that Lumumba might try to form an indeepndent nation of the eastern Congo district with the Stanleyville as its capital. His brother, Louis, is political leader in the city where mob rule has replaced law and order.

Lumumba's month - old daughter died Nov. 18 during treatment in a Swiss hospital. The body was brought back for burial.

Mobutu and President Joseph Kasavubu, Lumumba's arch -enemy were visiting in Brazzaville, capital of the neighboring Congo Republic former French Congo when they learned of Lumumbas flight. Both seemed surprised.

The Lumumba residence had been ringed by Mobutu's men, as well as by U. N troops. The Congolese soldiers had orders not to let the pro-Soviet national leader leave the building.

Circumstances surrounding Lumumba's departure were a mystery. UN troops from Morocco made no move to stop Lumumba from leaving the building late Sunday night.

Lumumba's Flight Surprises Mobutu

The Atlanta Constitution

Atlanta, Ga.

By WILLIAM ANDERSON

LEOPOLDVILLE, The Congo (UPI)—A surprise flight by ousted Premier Patrice Lumumba to his bush country stronghold Monday brought strongman Col. Joseph Mobutu racing back to Leopoldville, and there were reports he had ordered his troops to arrest Lumumba on sight.

Tues. 11-29-60

The left-wing Lumumba, under U.N. troop guard in his official residence for the last six weeks, abruptly departed unescorted in a chauffuer-driven car for Stanleyville. He left a note saying he would attend the funeral of his infant daughter and then would return to the capital to resume his demand for control of the government.

P. 24

NOT AS A REFUGEE

Lumumba's written statement stressed he was "not going to Stanleyville as a refugee."

His departure immediately recalled reports last week that Lumumba might try to form an independent nation of the eastern Congo district with Stanleyville as its capital. His brother, Louis, is political leader in the city where mob rule has replaced law and order.

Lumumba's month-old daughter died Nov. 18 during treatment in a Swiss hospital. The body was brought back for burial.

IN BRAZZAVILLE

Mobutu and President Joseph Kasavubu, Lumumba's arch-enemy, were visiting in Brazzaville, capital of the neighboring Congo Republic (former French Congo) when they learned of Lumumba's flight. Both seemed surprised.

The Lumumba residence had been ringed by Mobutu's men, as well as by U.N. troops. The Congolese soldiers had orders not to let the pro-Soviet national leader leave the building.

A MYSTERY

Circumstances surrounding Lumumba's departure were a mystery. UN troops from Morocco made no move to stop Lumumba from leaving the building late Sunday night.

Rajeshwar Dayal, chief U.N. representative, said the Congolese authorities did not lift a finger to stop him.

"My trip is strictly for family reasons," Lumumba said in the note he left behind. "I have the intention of returning to Leopoldville to receive the U.N. reconciliation commission."

The commission was organized by the United Nations to try to arrange a political settlement. Lumumba's statement indicated he still considers himself the only lawful government chief, although President Kasavubu fired him Sept. 5 and named moderate Joseph Ileo premier.

In Stanleyville, Lumumba holds the main political strength of his Congolese national movement party. His tribal ties are in the province of which Stanleyville is capital.

Conditions in Stanleyville are chaotic. Bands of soldiers and police, often drunk, roam the streets pillaging and indiscriminately arresting Europeans.

Mobutu Tells Congo Army 'Stop Fleeing Lumumba'

The Montgomery Advertiser

Montgomery, Ala.

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo (AP)—The Congolese army Monday was ordered to pursue and capture fugitive ex-Premier Patrice Lumumba before he can reach his political strongholds of threat of civil war in this troubled nation.

Tues. 11-29-60

Lumumba drove past sleepy Congolese soldiers watching his villa Sunday night, leaving behind a statement saying he was going to Stanleyville for the funeral of his infant daughter.

POLITICAL FOES

But his political foes, President Joseph Kasavubu and Col. Joseph Mobutu, the army chief, seemed far from reassured by his promise to return within a few days for Kasavubu's unity conferences. Kasavubu has promised to call a conference of all factions shortly.

Kasavubu and Mobutu were astounded when the news of Lumumba's flight reached them at Brazzaville, capital of the Congo Republic across the river from Leopoldville.

Kasavubu and Mobutu had gone to Brazzaville for that republic's independence celebrations. But they took advantage of the occasion to discuss Congo unity with two dissident leaders, President Moise Tshombe of Katanga Province and President Joseph Kalonji of the so-called Mining State in Kasai Province.

Kasavubu remained in Brazzaville, but Mobutu hurried back to Leopoldville after ordering his army to try to head off Lumumba.

ANTI-WEST REGIME

Disquieting to the two pro-Western Congolese leaders was the knowledge that Lumumba's top lieutenants already are in Stanleyville, capital of Oriental Province. They are said to be organizing an anti-Western regime designed to restore Lumumba to power.

Stanleyville has been cut off from the outside world in recent days and there were no communications with the city Monday.

Awaiting Lumumba in Stanleyville are his brother, Louis, Antoine Gizenga, deputy premier in the regime ousted by Mobutu in September, and Gen. Victor Lundula, who commanded the Congo army when Lumumba was in power.

ESCAPED DETENTION

Lundula escaped army detention in Leopoldville two weeks ago and reached Stanleyville after an eight-day trip on a river boat. He is said to be organizing an army to challenge Mobutu's forces.

While reports said Lumumba is traveling by automobile, Mobutu apparently believes he may be going up the Congo River.

Mobutu's orders to try to arrest Lumumba were issued not only to the Congolese army in Leopoldville Province but to soldiers in Equator Province to the north. Lumumba would have to pass through Equator Province, where he also has strong support, if he is using the river for his journey to Stanleyville.

GUARD WITHDRAWN

After Lumumba's flight became known, the guard of U.N. Moroccan soldiers was withdrawn from around the villa.

This made it that much more unlikely that Lumumba would return peacefully to this capital of the Congo, now that his U.N. guard has been removed.

Mobutu has made several attempts to arrest Lumumba, accusing him of trying to plunge the nation into chaos and civil war. But U.N. troops have intervened.

Lumumba has been a marked man for the Congolese army since Mobutu's coup unseated him and ousted Soviet-bloc diplomats the colonel said were scheming to take over the Congo.

After lynch attempts—

Panicky Lumumba cowers in hiding

The Birmingham News P. 1
Am. 9-16-60 Birmingham News

BY LYNN HEINZERLING

LEOPOLDVILLE, The Congo, Sept. 16—(AP)—Patrice Lumumba, rescued from screaming Congolese troops bent on lynching him, faced an uphill fight today in his attempt to upset the rule of army chief Col. Joseph Mobutu.

The disputed premier was holed up at his home after cowering for seven harrowing hours while UN troops and Mobutu's police saved him from two lynch attempts at sprawling Camp Leopold. He faced the bitter fact that he had lost control over many Congo supporters in his struggle against President Joseph Kasavubu and Col. Mobutu.

The situation was too confused to say whether Lumumba's experience at Camp Leopold meant an end to his feverish maneuvers for power. But it appeared that Mobutu was in command, for the moment at least, of the giant camp and its 3000 ill-disciplined soldiers.

IN BRUSSELS, the Belgian radio reported today that the Congolese army banned access to parliament to Congolese deputies and senators.

The broadcast said heavily armed troops were guarding the building and refusing to let anyone enter.

Mobutu said he was going to close parliament until order was restored in the chaotic state.

In announcing his takeover Wednesday, the 29-year-old army chief of staff said he intended to neutralize the political leaders until some semblance of order was restored in the strife-torn young republic.

Mobutu also said Soviet and Communist bloc diplomats were being given 48 hours to get out of the country, but so far there was no sign of their moving. No Congo military guard was seen around the embassies.

The Birmingham News

LUMUMBA GOT a vivid demonstration of the Congo army's shifting loyalties yesterday when he went to Camp Leopold to try to rouse the army against Mobutu.

Instead he was mobbed by soldiers aroused over reports of 1000 casualties among their relatives in the civil war in Kasai Province where Lumumba's forces have been fighting a secessionist movement. Many of the soldiers at Camp Leopold are Baluba tribesmen.

Am. 9-16-60

As a sample of the mixed up state of affairs in the Congo, Baluba tribesmen are fighting on Lumumba's side in some parts of secessionist Katanga.

Panic-stricken by the cries for his blood, Lumumba and his own chief of staff, Gen. Victor Lundula, ducked into the officers' mess of the Ghana brigade of the UN command, a command that he previously has demanded be withdrawn from the country.

For seven hours Lumumba and Lundula cowered in the mess hall while Ghana troops held off the angered Congolese. The Congo troops kept three machine guns pointed at the mess hall but let Ghana officers move in and out freely.

FINALLY MOBUTU sent his police to the rescue and Lumumba was escorted to an army truck while Congolese soldiers screamed "Koboma, Koboma!" ("Kill, kill!").

Screaming soldiers broke through the police cordon and lunged at Lumumba as he was pushed toward the truck.

Lumumba's white sport shirt was ripped by the mob before he managed to reach the vehicle and roar off towards his home on the Congo River.

Lundula decided not to go in the truck, but left by the mess hall's back door. There was no attempt to pursue him.

"These people do not seem quite ready for their independence," said one Soviet source.

Outside the camp other Congolese who once hailed Lumumba with cries of "Emeri!" (savior) now shouted for his blood.

"DOWN WITH Lumumba, the Communist," echoed through Leopoldville streets.

Brussels radio said President Kasavubu had fired off a cable to UN Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold protesting that a warrant had been issued for Lumumba's arrest but UN troops were preventing his imprisonment.

Serge Michel, Lumumba's press spokesman who announced yesterday that Lumumba again was top man in the Congo and that Mobutu was under arrest a bare 12 hours after the Mobutu coup, declared last night that he is quitting.

He said "continuing confusion" prevented his carrying out his work as a technician in the Congo and that he was going back to work for the Algerian rebel movement. He is a leftwing French expatriate and was reported under the protection of the Tunisian Embassy.

IN ANOTHER DEVELOPMENT, a bridge has been blown up in the path of Congo troops advancing upon Kongolo in secessionist Katanga Province, a UN spokesman said today.

This action presumably was taken by the Katanga army which is getting ready to repel the 300 invaders, he added.

A UN patrol of Mali troops is now watching in the vicinity of the bridge, the spokesman said.

The Congo force has advanced 36 miles into Katanga.

Russians Would Like Congo Submarine Base

Montgomery Advertiser

By ELTON C. FAY
AP Military Affairs Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—One of the major objectives in the Soviet Union's effort to gain a foothold in the Congo may be establishment of a vitally strategic submarine base which would lay the whole South Atlantic ocean area open to Soviet military threat.

For this reason, some Western strategists and diplomats see an extra factor of urgency in securing the Congo under United Nations control. Soviet technicians already are in the Congo, flown there on the first Soviet transport planes which carried token aid shipments.

They arrived, following Communist pattern, ostensibly to give guidance in stabilizing the new nation's economy. But they could lay the groundwork for later military works.

Aside from the obvious need for keeping Communist economic and political influence out of Africa, the military menace could be grave in the view of experts here.

They sum it up something like this: The Red navy now has no bases from which submarines can operate directly into tropical and semitropical areas. Southernmost is a port in Communist Albania—which opens only into the easily sealed-off Mediterranean.

Use of an operating base in the Congo would place Red submarines in a position to interdict the shipping lanes of the South Atlantic through which traffic passes to South America, South Africa and the Indian Ocean. Missile-firing submarines could have immediate access to routes from which they could launch attack on Western Hemisphere cities.

The immediate objective is to get the port complex at the mouth of the Congo River, below the capital city of Leopoldville, back into operation. For this reason, the United Nations was reported to be sending engineering experts.

A series of rapids intervenes between Leopoldville and the port area. Pipelines, railroads and highways connect the port region, Leopoldville and the major airport.

The best port, thoroughly modern, is Banana—built by the Belgians and located on the protected inland side of a spit of land between the harbor and the Atlantic. But several other useful although smaller ports are located upstream although still in navigable water below the rapids.

As far as is known here, the fighting so far has caused no major damage to port facilities.

However, two other factors have virtually immobilized the whole port complex—1. the absence of technicians to replace the Belgians; 2. navigation problems.

The untrained Congolese are unable to operate pipelines, communications and other facilities. Training of these people is one of the purposes of a U.N. mission, whose technicians first would take up the job of operating the facilities.

The lower, tidal reaches of the huge Congo River are dumping masses of silt into channels. The Belgians have left the dredges and other equipment normally used in keeping channels open, but since the ousting of Belgian personnel there has been no one to work the equipmet.

Congo Halts Overtures To Russians

The Montgomery Advertiser

Montgomery, Ala.
Sat. 7-23-60

Premier Lumumba Searches For Aid From U.S., Canada

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo (AP)—Premier Patrice Lumumba turned from his flirtation with the Soviet Union and took off Friday for the United States and Canada in search of capital for the Congo's crippled economy. He said he wants to be friends with everybody.

Lumumba abandoned his threat to call in Soviet soldiers to force out Belgian soldiers. He told a news conference in this United Nations-guarded capital there is no longer any need for Soviet military intervention.

BUILD CONGO

The lanky Congolese leader, who only a few days ago was calling Western nations imperialist and issuing ultimatums to the United Nations, signed one agreement with an American financier for development of mineral and power resources of the former colony Belgium freed June 30.

Lumumba also held out a hand to the Belgians. He gave the Belgians credit for helping to build the Congo and said he considers them "our friends."

He insisted only that Belgian soldiers evacuate the Congo, including the treaty bases of Kamina and Kitona, and that Belgian Ambassador Baron Jean van Denbosche leave the country immediately.

EXPLOIT COUNTRY

Lumumba said the ambassador, because of the reports he sent home, and Gen. Emile Janssens, former commander of the Congolese army, were the two Belgians who damaged the Congo most.

"We have political independence and now we need economic independence. We need bread and happiness for our people," Lumumba said.

"We want the assistance of all the world, but we do not want charity. We offer, to all those who want to help us exploit the country, equitable remuneration on their investment and all necessary guarantees."

The shift in Lumumba's diplomatic stance was abrupt.

He expressed profound thanks to the United Nations for its quick action in the Congo, although the Security Council set no deadline in renewing its call for the withdrawal of Belgian soldiers. He had been threatening to call in the Soviet Union and soldiers of the African-Asian bloc nations if the Belgian units did not leave immediately.

Lumumba set out for New York aboard a jet airliner in a hunt for international capital, technical and medical help to put this backward young African nation on its feet. The British-built plane was supplied by President Kwame Nkrumah of Ghana.

SUPPLY CAPITAL

L. Edgar Detwiler, American president of the Congo International Management Corp. (CIMCO), founded just two months ago, signed a 50-year development pact with the Premier. The agreement is subject to ratification by the Congo's Parliament, now in recess.

Detwiler, who accompanied Lumumba on the plane, said his corporation will supply capital and management and training for Congolese who are expected to take over key positions.

He reported in an airport interview that the Congo government has received attractive offers from the Soviet Union.

CRUDE RESERVES

"We had to fill the vacuum before the Russians did," he said. "We think we are doing the Belgian interests this way. Suppose the reserves of the Congo fell into other hands—if they were lost to the free world?"

He said crude mineral reserves of the Congo are estimated by his experts to be worth two billion dollars.

Detwiler, 62, has headquarters in New York. He said he is convinced Lumumba is neither anti-white nor pro-Communist, but interested "in doing the best for his people."

Congo Poises Soviet Call

Atlanta Constitution
Atlanta, Ga.
Mon. 7/18/60

STANLEYVILLE, Congo (AP)—The Congo government threatened Sunday night to invite Soviet troops into this newly independent nation unless Belgian military forces are withdrawn within three days.

The virtual ultimatum was issued to the United Nations and the Belgian government.

Jacques Lumbala, one of nine secretaries of state in the Congolese government, disclosed these developments. He said the U.N. had failed in its mission to restore order in the Congo.

DARED LUMUMBA

Lumbala, a short Congolese who has visited Moscow three times, had a public row with Premier Patrice Lumumba because he disclosed the government's intentions.

"I will take the severest measures against you," Lumumba muttered grimly to his secretary of state as he turned and walked away from him.

The scene occurred on the steps of the provincial governor's residence in Stanleyville after Lumumba had been informed of his deputy's remarks to a few newsmen.

The newsmen flew to Stanleyville Sunday with Gen. Henry T. Alexander, senior officer of the U.N. forces in the Congo. He is the commander in chief of the Ghana army.

Alexander conferred for two hours with Lumumba and President Joseph Kasavubu. When he finished he said the situation in the Congo had "worsened all over."

Before his flight back to Leopoldville he sent an urgent message ahead asking that Dr. Ralph J. Bunche, U.N. undersecretary, U.S. Ambassador Clare Timberlake and the top Belgian commander meet him at the airport for urgent consultation.

FLAG DOWN

Alexander had led a small U.N. force of 20 Ghanaian troops to Stanleyville to show the U.N. flag.

The flag was not flying when he left six hours later and his troops were still sitting on their packs in the airport hangar.

The airport is held by Congolese army troops.

Stanleyville residents said there has been panic among Belgians here but there has been no fighting.

The city, Lumumba's home

Associated Press Wirephoto

HEADS U.N. FORCE

Gen. Henry T. Alexander

[illegible] the Congo army. The a[illegible] putting on pretty much the [illegible] isplay it made in Leopoldville [illegible] days age cruising the streets with rifles and machineguns mounted on vehicles.

BELGIANS READY

Alexander decided on the flying trip to Stanleyville after Belgians told him the situation was deteriorating and they planned to land paratroops.

The Congolese leaders were furious about the continued presence and widening activities of the Belgian troops in the country.

They were especially angry that Belgian paratroops were dropped into Kindu Sunday morning to disarm Congolese army units there.

Lumbala, who speaks for the extreme left wing of the Congo government, said the U.N. was incompetent and "must get out. We are going to call on another force which does not have imperialistic designs."

This other force would be the Soviet Union, he said in a statement recorded on tape.

Earlier a report in Brussels said a freighter from Communist Poland carrying 300 tons of arms was reported to be heading for the mouth of the Congo River, gateway to the troubled Congo.

If confirmed, it was presumed the arms were intended for Congo Premier Lummumba, who has cut diplomatic relations with Belgium.

The Belgian radio said Brussels was thinking of having the Belgian navy seize the ship, but it quoted U.N. sources as saying this would be an act of war. The Belgian navy controls the river area, operating from a base at Kitona near the river's mouth.

Neither Belgian officials nor the Belgian radio professed to know the name of the Polish ship, or its precise whereabouts.

IN ESTUARY

"I believe she is somewhere in the estuary of the Congo River," one Belgian official said.

Belgian radio said officials were told by foreign intelligence sources that the ship was loaded with 300 tons of arms in a Polish port.

The rupture of diplomatic relations is not yet considered a fact by Belgium because the Congolese Parliament never ratified it.

As Belgians start pull-back—

Russia hurls new warning on Congo

The B'ham News
B'ham, Ala.
Tues. 7-19-60

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Belgium began pulling back its troops in the Congo today as the United Nations force spread out in an atempt to restore order to the troubled baby republic.

The crisis continued to sizzle from New York to Moscow, with these developments at the top of the heap:

1. Congo Premier Patrice Lumumba said tonight his ultimatum not say whether he planned to send to Moscow tomorrow a prepared telegram asking for Soviet troops.

"I don't want to answer that," he said.

But later, he added: "Nobody could reproach us for calling on the Soviet Union because all the Western countries are on the side of the Belgians."

to the United Nations to get Belgian troops out of the Congo expires at midnight. He indicated he still is considering an appeal to the Soviet Union for help.

2. The Soviet Union demanded that the United States withdraw a detachment of 20 armed men which it said had landed at Leopoldville, the Congo capital.

3. The UN announced that Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold will leave Saturday for the Congo.

THE ANNOUNCEMENT did not say he was going. But it said that after "the necessary stay in Leopoldville" he would go on to Pretoria, South Africa, for talks with officials on that country's racial policies.

The Russian warning was issued by Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko to U. S. Charge d'Affaires Edward I. Freers in Moscow. Gromyko delivered the warning verbally.

He said press dispatches reported a 20-man detachment was in Leopoldville. Gromyko told Freers they should be withdrawn at once or "the Soviet Union will draw its own conclusions."

In Washington, the State Department denounced Russia's demand as a "desperate and almost frantic effort" to obstruct United Nations efforts to restore order in the Congo.

Press Officer Lincoln White acknowledged the Americans are in the Congo capital. But, he stressed they are there to help the United Nations land troops from other countries, as well as supplies for UN units.

PREMIER LUMUMBA would

UN Undersecretary Ralph J. Bunche told newsmen the withdrawal of Belgian soldiers from the capital is scheduled to be completed by 7 p.m. Saturday.

The UN command in the Congo had shown little worry over Lumumba's earlier threat. The UN Security Council will take up the Congo situation in New York tomorrow.

The Belgian troops, called in to protect white residents from bands of mutinous Congolese soldiers, are pulling back to their Congo bases. It is not expected that they will return to Belgium. Congo bases were guaranteed to them by treaty with the Congo government.

Lumumba insists, however the treaty became a dead letter when Belgian troops were flown into the Congo after the outbreak of the Congo army mutiny earlier this month.

Leopoldville is one of 20 urban centers taken over by Belgian forces after the Congo won independence June 30.

Even the Leopoldville Airport, an escape hatch for many of the 25,000 whites who have fled the Congo, will be taken over by the UN from its Belgian guards.

A COMMUNIQUE on these arrangements was issued by Bunche after he had a long meeting with Maj. Gen. Carl Von Horn, commander of UN troops in the Congo, and the Belgian ambassador and Belgian army chief of staff.

Bunche's announcement, broadcast to the Congolese people, promised the UN forces will protect all the people, "European as well as African."

"Full protection of all elements of the population is the deepest immediate concern of the United Nations operation here," he said.

THE SOVIET UNION, charging that the Congo is the target of imperialist aggression, has threatened counter measures if the Belgian units were not withdrawn.

Von Horn obviously placed little stock in Lumumba's ultimatum—challenged in the Congolese Parliament—that he would ask for Soviet intervention unless all Belgian troops were withdrawn by tonight.

Russia Mustn't Enter The Congo

The B'ham News
B'ham, Ala.
Tues. 7-19-60

We have no ideas at this time whether Congolese government is entirely serious about a reported threat to call on the Soviet Union for troop assistance if the Belgians do not withdraw their forces from the new "republic" in three days.

At present UN forces from a variety of nations are being assembled in the Congo. Obviously there is considerable confusion as an attempt is being made to establish some order. This takes time for leaders and troops unfamiliar with details of the situation.

The Belgians acted properly in shooting troops into the land they recently released from colonialism. Lives, property, were clearly in danger. There had been killings, rape, lootings. The natives had run wild, civilians and Negro troops as well.

If the Congo leaders, or so-called leaders, are so foolish as to ask Russia for aid, then we trust the Russians will be smart enough not to honor the request.

Soviet soldiers in the Congo would not be, nor could they be, part of the UN force. The United Nations is sole arbiter of which nations shall staff the UN peace force.

If Russia sent in troops, some sharp conflict with UN forces would seem almost inevitable. Certainly if they went into the Congo, they would be doing so on the basis of a request to force the Belgians out.

We agree that, since the UN has taken decisive, swift action, soon the Belgians probably should be asked to leave and should do so. This we say but at the same time must add that what has happened shows that the Belgians never should have quit the country. The Congolese people weren't prepared for independence.

Now, though, things have moved ahead and only international supervision of affairs by the UN is in order until it can be seen what is to be the Congo's future.

The whole thing continues muddied and messy. One thing, though, is far from confused. It is that any request of the Congo for Red aid, or any compliance by Moscow with such request, would be certain to pile up the tinder

United Press International

FORCE FOR PEACE: A lance corporal of Ghana Army is the object of close scrutiny by residents of Leopoldville, the Congo, as he stands guard with United Nations troops.

SOVIET PUTS CONGO BEFORE U. N. AGAIN

Security Council Will Meet Tomorrow—Cuba-U. S. Debate Opens Today

By JAMES FERON

Special to The New York Times.

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y., July 17—The Security Council will meet Tuesday afternoon, at the request of the Soviet Union, to discuss the situation in the Congo.

A Western source said Arkady A. Sobolev, Soviet delegate, might discuss at the meeting the possibility of sending Soviet troops to the Congo.

[A dispatch by the Soviet press agency Tass said Sunday that Vasily V. Kuznetsov, a First Deputy Foreign Minister, had left Moscow by air to take part in Security Council sessions.]

U. N. Forces 'Pouring In'

Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold said, meanwhile, that he was looking to non-African nations to bolster the United Nations force in the Congo. He is understood to have requested units from Ireland, Yugoslavia, Sweden, Burma and Haiti.

Mr. Hammarskjold said troops from Tunisia, Ghana, Morocco and Ethiopia continued to "pour in" to the Congo.

[United Nations officials in the Congo recommended to Mr. Hammarskjold that the United Nations force be brought to 10,000 men as soon as possible, according to Reuters.]

United Nations forces are in the Congo under a Security Council resolution adopted last Thursday to maintain order in the new republic. The resolution also called for the withdrawal of Belgian troops.

The Soviet request for a Security Council meeting tomorrow or Tuesday was sent today to José A. Correa of Ecuador, President of the Council for July. Señor Correa set the date "tentatively" pending agreement with other Council members.

The Council had previously scheduled a debate over Cuba's charge of United States "economic aggression" for 3 P. M. tomorrow. Señor Correa said he hoped the Cuban discussion would end Tuesday morning.

Señor Correa said Mr. Sobolev had asked that the eleven-nation body be convened to hear a report from Secretary General Hammarskjold. The United Nations chief, who has been spending long hours in his office, was expected to complete his report tonight.

Plane Complaint Slated

The harried Security Council, which was also expected to hear this week a Soviet complaint against the United States RB-47 reconnaissance plane, had already planned, informally, to hear the progress report. However, the developments in the Congo were thought to have prompted the Soviet request for a hearing.

Belgium has asked Mr. Hammarskjold to form a commission of inquiry to investigate "atrocities" they say have been committed against Belgians in the Congo. Mr. Hammarskjold may pass that request on to the Council when it meets Tuesday.

Debate over the Cuban complaint tomorrow will be facilitated by a formula suggested by Ecuador and Argentina and tacitly accepted by Cuba and the United States. It would have the Security Council adjourn consideration of the question pending a report by the Organization of American States.

The Cuban session will probably run into the night to assure ending of the debate Tuesday morning. At the first meeting the Cubans will make their charge, the United States will reply and the Latin-American resolution will be introduced. The second session, it is hoped, will deal with statements from other Council members and the vote on the resolution.

Polish Arms Ship Reported

BRUSSELS, Belgium, July 17 (Reuters) — Belgium has appealed to the United Nations over a Polish vessel reported steaming to the Congo with 300 tons of arms and ammunition for the Congolese Government.

A Foreign Ministry spokesman said the Belgian Government had approached the United Nations with a request that "something should be done" about the shipment.

The Belgian state radio said earlier the Government would consider it an act of war if the Polish freighter unloaded her cargo. The radio said the Government was studying whether the freighter could be stopped by Belgian naval units.

Usually reliable sources said the Polish ship was headed for Matadi, the Congo's seaport.

Poland Denies Report

WARSAW, July 17 (Reuters) —Polish sources denied that a Polish freighter was carrying munitions to the Congo. They described the Belgian report as an unfounded rumor.

CONGO THREATENS TO CALL IN SOVIET AGAINST BELGIANS

Issues Ultimatum Giving U.N. 72 Hours to Oust Troops of Former Rulers

AIR ATTACKS ARE CITED

International Force Moves to Trouble Spots—Two Belgian Planes Lost

By HENRY TANNER

Special to The New York Times.

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo, July 17—The Congolese Government issued an ultimatum to the United Nations tonight to clear all Belgian troops from the Congo within seventy-two hours.

The ultimatum said the Congolese Government would call "Soviet Russian troops" into the Congo to deal with the situation if this request was not carried out by the United Nations.

The ultimatum was delivered in Stanleyville this afternoon by Premier Patrice Lumumba to Maj. Gen. Henry T. Alexander, temporary commander of the United Nations forces here.

General Notifies Bunche

After leaving Stanleyville to return to Leopoldville, General Alexander sent a radio message from his plane to Dr. Ralph J. Bunche, United Nations Under Secretary, asking him and Gen. Roger A. Gheysen, commander of the Belgian forces in the Congo, to meet him at the Leopoldville airport.

When he landed at Leopoldville, General Alexander handed Dr. Bunche a copy of the ultimatum and a telegram the Congo Government proposes to send to the Soviet Union if the ultimatum is not met.

In Stanleyville Premier Lumumba had given General Alexander copies of four telegrams he had received during the day reporting Belgian air strikes against Congolese troops in various parts of the country.

U. N. Units Take Positions

United Nations forces, meanwhile, moved to positions in the Congo to carry out their mission of keeping the peace.

A small advance unit flew to Stanleyville in the northeastern part of the country and will be followed by a larger force by tomorrow.

A second force is due to start moving by train into Bakongo, a vital region south of Leopoldville.

The two groups will be made up of Ethiopian and Moroccan forces that arrived here today, each roughly in battalion strength.

From 3,000 to 4,000 Congolese soldiers armed with modern equipment, including armored cars, are stationed in the Bakongo region. They control two key cities, Thysville and Matadi, a seaport and supply center.

Fighting took place there between Belgian and Congolese forces ten days ago. The Belgian troops later withdrew and most Belgian civilians were evacuated. There have been numerous reports of attacks by Congolese forces against the Belgians and other whites who stayed behind.

Two Planes Reported Lost

Two Belgian planes, a helicopter and a rocket-carrying fighter-trainer, were reported missing after missions over Bakongo this afternoon.

It was reported yesterday on high authority that Belgian forces were preparing a major drive, including air sorties, to regain control of the region.

General Alexander, a British officer on loan to Ghana, intervened against the planned attack in a meeting late last night with General Gheysen.

This morning General Alexander was confident, according to responsible sources, that he had persuaded the Belgian commander to cancel the operation. Nevertheless, the sitaution remained unclear.

Belgian pilots of jet planes returning to Ndjili Airport here said they flew missions over the Bakongo area this morning. The Belgian command declined to make any comment.

General Alexander went to for Stanleyville with a detachment of Ghanaians today after receiving reports of serious unrest there. Ethiopian troops were flown from Addis Ababa to Stanleyville.

Premier Lumumba of the Congo flew to Stanleyville yesterday in a United States Air Force plane. He was due back here tonight, but apparently decided to stay longer. The plane returned with a load of Belgian refugees. More refugees were expected today.

There were unconfirmed reports that Premier Lumumba ordered the release yesterday of a group of Belgians held as hostages by rebellious Congolese army units.

Stanleyville is Mr. Lumumba's home region and his anti-white campaign is believed to have had its deepest effect there.

Tunisians Take Posts

Steel-helmeted Tunisian troops took up positions last night in the African quarter of Leopoldville and in the downtown business district along the city's wide main boulevard.

A force of about 200 Belgian paratroopers was pulled out of the business district this morning after the Tunisians and Congolese city policemen had cleared the streets to prevent hostile demonstrations by the Congolese population.

The United Nations force in the Congo was to reach a strength of about 2,000 by tonight, officials said. Ethiopia, Ghana, Morocco and Tunisia have sent troops so far.

United Nations forces plan to occupy the economic centers and arteries of the country and prevent a breakdown of such services as communications, food distribution, water and power supplies, hospitals and DDT spraying.

The exodus of Belgian, technicians, civil servants and business men has almost paralyzed the Congo's economic and administrative machinery. Of about 85,000 Belgians in the Congo before it became independent June 30, only 25,000 to 30,000 are still in the country, according to best estimates.

Four out of five Belgian civil servants who were under contract with the Congolese Government have left the country, Belgian sources say. Those who remained are working under precarious security conditions.

Officials Said to Resign

LEOPOLDVILLE, July 17 (Reuters)—Four key members of the Congo's central Government were reported to have resigned tonight.

The Economics Minister, M. J. Yava, was said to have sent a letter of resignation to Chief of State Joseph Kasavubu saying that the complete lack of confidence in the regime that has spread to the economic sphere appeared "disastrous."

Foreign Minister Justin Bomboko, Thomas Kanza, United Nations representaive, and Albert Delvaux, the Congo's Resident Minister in Belgium, also resigned, it was reported.

[The Belga news agency said Mr. Bomboko had denied in a broadcast that he had resigned.]

Mr. Yava, a member of the ruling Conakat party in Katanga, later flew to Katanga.

Meanwhile, Belgian troops were holding about twenty key points in the Congo, including the Leopoldville airport, the main road to Leopoldville, the European sector of Leopoldville, Coquilhatville and most of the center of Katanga.

United Nation troops began to take positions at trouble spots as their commander, Maj. Gen. Carl Carlsson von Horn, flew from Jerusalem to take over.

Katanga Seizes Congo General

ELISABETHVILLE, July 17 (AP)—The African commander of the Congo Army was detained today by the secessionist government of Katanga Province, which ordered him expelled.

Gen. Victor Lundula, a former sergeant major in the Belgian-trained army was placed in command by the Lumumba Government in Leopoldville last week.

Godefroid Munongo, provincial Interior Minister, who produced General Lundula at a news conference, said the commander had been picked up in Jadotville, 100 miles from Elisabethville. Mr. Munongo said General Lundula had sent a telegram from Jadotville to Premier Lumumba in Leopoldville saying: "In view of the Congo situation, please send U. N. police urgently."

NEWSMAN
MR. HENRY N, TAYLOR
SCRIPPS-HOWARD REPORTER

BODY OF NEWSMAN TO RETURN TO U. S.

The N. Y. Times

H. N. Taylor, Son of Envoy, Was Killed by Gunfire in Reporting Congo Battle

New York
Tues. 9-6-60

LEOPOLDVILLE, the Congo, Sept. 5 (UPI)—The body of Henry N. Taylor, a Scripps-Howard reporter and son of the United States Ambassador to Switzerland, will be flown to the United States for funeral services in Washington Friday, it was announced today.

Mr. Taylor, 31 years old, was killed by a burst of machine-gun fire yesterday while covering a battle between Congolese troops of Premier Patrice Lumumba and Baluba tribesmen. The fighting occurred near the village of Tshilenge, seventeen miles southeast of Bakwanga, capital of the so-called independent Mining State of Albert Kalonji in Kasai Province.

The United States Embassy here sent a plane to pick up Mr. Taylor's body. A spokesman for the United States Embassy in Bern, Switzerland, said the body was being returned to the United States at the request of Ambassador and Mrs. Henry J. Taylor, the newsman's parents.

The spokesman said the funeral services would be held Friday at St. John's Church in Washington.

Mr. Taylor recently covered the spy trial of Francis Gary Powers in Moscow and had stopped over in Rome for several days to report the Olympic Games before coming here. He also spent several days in Bern with his parents last week.

He arrived in Leopoldville in time to report the closing session of the pan-African conference.

Mr. Taylor went to Bakwanga Saturday. A United Nations spokesman said the Tunisian commander of the 120-man United Nations force in Bakwanga had warned Mr. Taylor not to leave the town. But the newsman journeyed into the countryside for a first-hand report of the fighting.

Officials said he was killed about noon yesterday on a road between Bakwanga and Tshilenge. Other correspondents were reported with him at the time, including Henry Tanner of The New York Times and two Frenchmen.

Associated Press

KILLED IN THE CONGO: Henry N. Taylor, reporter for Scripps-Howard, who was killed by machine-gun fire while observing the fighting in Kasai Province.

Herter Praises Newsman

WASHINGTON, Sept. 5 (AP) — Secretary of State Christian A. Herter expressed sympathy today over the death

Body Of Newsman Killed In Congo, Readied For Rites

Atlanta Daily World
Atlanta Ga.
9-6-60

LEOPOLDVILLE, The Congo — (UPI) — The body of Henry N. Taylor, 31, a Scripps - Howard reporter and son of the U. S. ambassador to Switzerland, will be flown to the United States for funeral services in Washington, D. C., on Friday, it was announced Monday.

Taylor was killed instantly by a burst of machine gun fire Sunday while covering a battle between Congolese troops of Premier Patrice Lumumba and Baluba tribesmen near the village of Tchelange, 17 miles southeast of Bakwanga, capital of the so-called independent "Mining State" of Albert Kalonji in Kasai province.

The U. S. embassy here dispatched an airplane to pick up Taylor's body and return it to Leopoldville for embalming before it is sent on to the United States.

A spokesman for the U. S. Embassy in Bern, Switzerland, said the body was being returned to the United States at the request of Ambassador and Mrs. Henry J. Taylor, the dead newsman's parents.

The spokesman said the funeral services would be held at St. John's Church in Washington on Friday.

TEXT OF U.N. CONGO NOTES
TEXT OF U.N. CHIEF'S NOTE TO SOVIET

18a 1960 CONGO

Text of U. N. Chief's Note to Soviet

The N. Y. Times

Special to The New York Times.

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y., Sept. 11—Following is the text, made public here today, of a note sent last Monday by Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold to the Soviet Union on the use of Soviet planes in the Congo:

The Secretary General of the United Nations presents his compliments to the delegation of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics to the United Nations and wishes to draw its attention to the following observations and questions.

In a letter from the permanent representative of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics of 19 July 1960 the representative, on the instruction of his Government, expressed a protest against the sending of United States troop units to the Republic of the Congo on any pretext and insisted on their immediate withdrawal from the Republic of the Congo.

Soviet Note Cited

Later, in a note verbale of 23 July, the Government of the U. S. S. R. informed the Secretary General that it had given its consent to the temporary utilization of the five Soviet aircraft, "IL-18," assigned to the Government of Ghana for the transport of Ghanian troops, also for the transport to Leopoldville, the caiptal of the Republic of the Congo, and other points in the Congo of motor transport, communications equipment, food supplies and other freight being sent by the Government of Ghana for the purpose of rendering the necessary assistance to the Government of the Congo.

In reply to this last-mentioned note verbale, the Secretary General sent to the permanent representative a note verbale in which he stated that in accordance with principles approved by the Security Council and maintained by the Secretary General, no transports of troops and material are undertaken by units from permanent members of the Security Council from one point within the territory of the Congo to the other, directly for the United Nations force or indirectly for the force in the service of a government participating in the force with its own national contingent. The Secretary General added that he understood that no such transports were envisaged by the U. S. S. R. offer as reported in the note verbale of 23 July. To this reply from the Secretary General he has received no reaction from the delegation of the U. S. S. R.

Report on Planes Noted

According to information available to the Secretary General, a certain number of planes, type "IL-14," has been put directly at the disposal of the Government of the Republic of the Congo by the Government of the U. S. S. R., presumably with crews, technicians, ground personnel, etc. It is reported today from Luluabourg that ten of these planes coming from Stanleyville arrived at Luluabourg carrying Congolese troops to reinforce the Congolese force, in the Bakwanga area. According to the report, the troops carried amounted to 200, the planes returning to Stanleyville supposedly in order to transport further reinforcements. The crews of the planes are reported as being in civilian clothes.

In the light of the views expressed earlier by the Soviet Union and the principles maintained by the United Nations for its own operation, the Secretary General would appreciate being informed about the nationality and status of the crews of the troop transporting planes, which presumably are now under the control of the Congo Government. The significance of this information will be appreciated in view of the precedent that may be created.

Answer Is Requested

Addressing himself to the representative of the U.S.S.R., the Secretary General would wish to recall the note verbale received by him, the 22 July 1960, from the Government of the U.S.S.R. regarding the provision of trucks for the armed forces directed to the Congo in accordance with the decision of the Security Council. According to the note, 100 Soviet trucks, CAZ-63, sets of spare parts for them and one automobile repair shop have been provided by the Soviet Government in accordance with the decision of the Security Council.

The Secretary General, not being informed about the delivery of these trucks to the appropriate United Nations authorities in the Congo, would appreciate information regarding the status of the undertaking thus entered into by the Soviet Government under the Security Council resolution.

Text of U.N. Congo Notes

The N. Y. Times

Special to The New York Times.

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y., Sept. 13—Following are the texts of a message made public here today from the Soviet Union to the Security Council, and of messages received by Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold from Rajeshwar Dayal, his personal representative in the Congo, and Patrice Lumumba whose position as Premier is being disputed:

Message by Soviet Union

The delegation of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics to the United Nations has the honor to make the following statement:

The situation in the Republic of the Congo, despite the Security Council's repeated resolutions aimed at normalizing that situation, not only continues to be extremely tense, but is becoming more and more menacing. There is now more than enough justification for asserting that what we are faced with is an out and out conspiracy of the colonialists against the independence and integrity of the Republic of the Congo.

It has become obvious, moreover, that the people and the lawful Government of that country are now confronted by a coalition whose direct participants are, along with the Belgian colonialists, their NATO allies — in particular the United States of America and the command of the forces sent to the Congo under the Security Council resolution. This coalition, under cover of the United Nations flag, is openly attempting to replace one set of colonialists by another.

Sabotage is Charged

As a result, the whole world is witnessing the sabotage of the Security Council's resolutions of 14 and 22 July and 9 August on the situation in the Congo, resolutions whose main purpose was to bring about the expulsion of Belgian troops from the territory of the Congo and to insure that country's territorial integrity and political independence.

In actual fact there still remain eBlgian troops on Congolese territory, and their withdrawal is being put off with the obvious design of giving the colonialists more time to engage in subversion against the young African state.

The Belgian Government is actively encouraging the work of criminal elements in the Republic of the Congo, is trying to fan the flames of civil war on the Republic's territory and is organizing plots of every possible kind against its Government. The most important province of the country, Katanga, has been transformed by Belgium, with the direct support of its NATO allies and the comman dof the United Nations force, into a camp of forces hostile towards the lawful Government of the Republic.

The Command of the United Nations force, and the Secretary General personally, are openly violating the Security Council's resolution of 14 July, under which military measures in the territory of the Congo were to be regarded as assistance by the United Nations to the Government of the Republic of the Congo, to be provided only in consultation with that Government and planned only "until, through the efforts of the Congolese Government with the technical assistance of the United Nations, the national security forces may be able, in the opinion of the Government, to meet fully their tasks".

Secretary General Accused

The command of the United Nations force, and the Secretary General personally, have also plainly violated that clause of the Security Council's resolution of 9 August which provides that "the United Nations force in the Congo will not be a party to or in any way intervene in or be used to influence the outcome of any internal conflict, constitutional or otherwise."

As we know, the command of the United Nations force, despite the Congolese Government's determined protests, issued an order denying access to the central radio station of Leopoldville to representatives of that Government and forbidding them to use the republic's airports, and has carried out a number of actions jeopardizing the safety of its Premier [Patrice Lumumba].

The occupation of the most important province of the Congo, Katanga, by Belgian troops has now given way to what is in effect occupation by the United Nations force, under whose protection the Belgian authorities continue to engage in subversive activities aimed at detaching this province from the republic. The command of the United Nations force has also been taking illegal measures to disarm units of the Congo Army.

These actions by the NATO countries, which are exploiting the command of the United Nations force for their own ends, constitute flagrant interference in the internal affairs of the republic and amount to open mockery of the resolutions adopted by the Security Council to protect the independence and integrity of the oCngo.

Immediate Action Urged

The situation in the Congo is deteriorating from hour to hour and requires the Security Council's immediate intervention, since it is creating a real threat to the political independence and territorial integrity of the Republic of the Congo, and at the same time a threat to international peace and security.

Accordingly, the delegation of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, in conformity with rule two of the Security Council's provisional rules of procedure, requests the calling of a meeting of the Security Council for urgent consideration of the question of the implementation of the Council's resolutions of 14 and 22 July and 9 August on the situation in the Republic of the Congo.

The delegation of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics considers that such a meeting should be held on 13 September at 3 P. M.

The delegation of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics expresses the hope that its proposal that a meeting of the Security Council should be called on the above question will be supported by the representatives of the members of the Security Council which cherish the cause of the national independence and security of the peoples and do not wish the name of the United Nations to be sullied by complicity with the colonialists.

I should be grateful if you would circulate this communication as a Security Council document.

I have the honor to be, etc.,

VALERIAN A. ZORIN,
Chief Soviet Representative to the United Nations.

Message by Rajeshwar Dayal

Radio Leopoldville was on the air yesterday and is functioning normally today, 13 September. Leaders are free to make their respective statements which our representatives hope will take heed of the appeal they made yesterday for calm and restraint, and also of a written assurance received by them from the Vice President of the Senate and the President of the House of Deputies which reads as follows in unofficial translation from the French: "Parliament will undertake supervision of the broadcasts and will act in such a way that the station is not used for ends contrary to peace and public order."

Our representatives have accordingly withdrawn reinforcements from the radio station, maintaining only the section which was on guard prior to closure, with instructions to allow free entry, to refrain from getting involved in any clash, and to afford protection to United Nations personnel and technicians there.

Already before today use of the airfields has been permitted to Air Congo for transport of civilian supplies. As from today, all airfields are open for all civilian, humanitarian and peaceful purposes.

RAJESHWAR DAYAL,
Special Representative to the Congo.

U.N. Ouster Of Troops Demanded

The Atlanta Constitution Atlanta Ga.

By THOMAS J. HAMILTON

(Copyright 1960, the New York Times Co.)

UNITED NATIONS—The Congo appealed to the Security Council Wednesday night to recommend the withdrawal of Belgian forces "to show that this country will know peace and not become a battlefield."

Thurs. 7-21-60

Thomas Kanza, the Congolese representative, confirmed in a statement to the Security Council that the Congo had served an "ultimatum" on the United Nations.

p. 1

In it, he said, the Congo government declared that "We will be obliged to request assistance from the Soviet Union" if the United Nations found it impossible to obtain the withdrawal of Belgian forces.

LETTER SENT

The "ultimatum," he said, was contained in a letter to Dr. Ralph Bunche, Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold's personal representative in the Congo, on July 19. Kanza emphasized, however, that the letter contained the statement that "We hope that this possibility would be averted."

Kanza made the announcement as the Security Council met in a tension-laden night session seeking means to ease the Belgians out and prevent Russia from sending troops into the violence-ridden African republic.

Tunisia and Ceylon planned to present a resolution calling for the withdrawal of Belgian forces at the session. Tunisia, Russia and the United States were slated to speak Wednesday night, with the likelihood of a vote being delayed until a morning session Thursday.

FOUR-POINT PROGRAM

Kanza, who appealed repeatedly to the Security Council to take action Wednesday night, presented a four-point program for peace in his strife-torn country:

1. An end to "aggresssive acts" by Belgian troops in the Congo.

2. Complete evacuation of Belgian troops. Kanza did not say in so many words that this must be immediate, but the context made it evident that he was making this demand.

p. 14

3. Nonrecognition by the United Nations of the copper-rich Katanga Province, which has announced its secession from the Congo.

4. General technical assistance from experts of all nations, but particularly those from Belgium because of Belgium's large investments in the Congo. He said that the Belgian forces would be protected by U.N. forces if they were not satisfied with protection by Congolese troops.

BELGIAN DENOUNCES RAPES

Pierre Wigny, Belgian foreign minister, replied with an impassioned denunciation of the assault and rapes on Belgian women since the Congo achieved independence from Belgium June 30. Both Kanza and Wigny arrived in New York to appear before the Security Council.

Hammarskjold, who took the floor when the Security Council opened the meeting at 8:15 p.m. (Atlanta time), told the council that he would like a "mandate" on the withdrawal of Belgian forces. The council's resolution last Thursday, which authorized the secretary general to send a U.N. force to the Congo, recommended the withdrawal of Belgian forces from the Congo but did not fix a date.

PROMISING START

In addition, Hammarskjold disclosed that he had informed the provincial government of Katanga that he would have dealings solely with the Republic of the Congo. He explained that the council, when it endorsed the admission of the Congo to the United Nations a few days ago, acted on the basis of a united country.

The secretary general said, "We have got off to a most promising start, but we have in no way passed the corner." He added that the present strength of the United Nations force, which has pledges that will bring its strength to more than 6,000, forms "a satisfactory basis" for the moment, although he would not exclude "a major expansion" later.

Hammarskjold said that he and his staff were now concentrating on "equipment, signals, supplies, health and administration," as well as food and fuel.

He reported that "considerable quantities" of material had been placed at the disposal of the United Nations by various governments and were being airlifted to the Leopoldville area.

Lieut. Gen. Raymond A. Wheeler, who was in charge of the clearance of the Suez Canal after the British, French and Israeli attacks in 1956, would arrive in Leopoldville Wednesday night or Thursday to organize the necessary work to prevent the silting of the Congo River, Hammarskjold said.

The U.N.'s Growing Stature

Montgomery Advertiser Mobile Ala. 7-28-60

IN ITS 15 years of existence, the United Nations has known its measure of despair. The clash of sovereignties and ideologies, the ready veto of the Russians and the always delicate temperament of the overshadowed small nations have often risen, singly or together, to paralyze the peacemaking machinery of the U.N.

But taking one thing with the next, the U.N. has more than vindicated the view (as expressed by President Eisenhower) that it represents "man's best organized hope to substitute the conference table for the battlefield."

Three times within the past few days, the U.N.—through its Security Council—has revalidated its worth as an international forum.

¶ With the Congo aflame and its reckless young minister threatening to invite Russian intervention, the council dispatched a U.N. force to the Congo and is in the process of pacifying the turbulent young republic.

¶ An abusive clash between the U.S. and Cuba was swiftly referred to the Organization of American States, out of reach of the Soviet propaganda mills.

¶ Russia's charges that an American RB-47 violated Soviet air space (and for which reason was shot down) were overwhelmingly rejected.

★

IN ONE case, a possible war was averted. In the second, a brawl, with Russia as a gleeful participant, was avoided. But it was the RB-47 incident, involving a brutality that is almost routine in the Cold War, that produced the most compelling demonstration of U.N. effectiveness.

Taking Russia's own charges, Ambassador Lodge thoroughly discredited the lie that the plane was on a provocative flight over Russia when gunned down.

Quietly and effectively, he documented a series of Russian spy incidents along America's coasts. One Russian plane, Lodge said, flew within five miles of U.S. territory. Though annoyingly close, the plane was not molested. Yet, said the Ambassador, when a U.S. plane traveled within 30 miles of Russia, it was shot down—over international waters.

The plane would have been farther from Russian territory, said Lodge, except that Red fighters forced it landward, hoping to shoot it down on land and thus reap another propaganda coup.

This astonishing and criminal fact is established beyond doubt [said Lodge] by the evidence of our scientific devices, which followed the RB-47 through all the events I have described.

★

IMPRESSIVE as was his presentation, however, it was only the U.S. version against the Soviet version. Had Lodge called for the usual condemnation, the effect would doubtless have been a vote of East vs. West with the neutrals abstaining.

Instead, Lodge invited the Russians to submit the dispute to an impartial commission or to the International Court of Justice, with a full investigation of Russia's charges and America's denial.

The Russians should be eager to do so, said Lodge. If they were right, the results would be "good for them."

But the Russians were having none of it. The Soviet delegate promptly rejected the proposal — and in the eyes of the world tacitly admitted Russia's guilt. Shortly thereafter, even the neutral members of the Security Council, who ordinarily abstain in Cold War disputes, voted to reject the Russian charges.

As a final, masterly act, Lodge supported an Italian resolution that the Red Cross contact the two RB-47 survivors being held as spies. Russia invoked its 89th veto (against none for the U.S.) to kill what the majority of the council considered to be a "compassionate resolution."

★

WITH the collapse of high-level East-West diplomacy, the U.N. will play an increasing role in the weeks ahead. Its next task, if President Eisenhower's suggestion is carried out, will be establishment of a disarmament commission to succeed the Geneva talks that were scuttled by Russia.

For the U.S., there will be more opportunities to demonstrate Russia's aggression and obstructive tactics. Sensitive to world opinion, the Soviet bloc can't boycott the U.N.; it can only remain to block orderly settlements by use of the damaging veto.

Either way, the U.S. profits.

Dag Girds For Policy Fight Over Congo In U.N. Council

Wed. 8/18/60 p. 17

Montgomery Advertiser

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP) —Dag Hammarskjold conferred with foes of his Congo neutrality policy Wednesday and girded for a battle in the U.N. Security Council to defend his course.

The Soviet Union has joined Congo Premier Patrice Lumumba in attacking the secretary-general's policy, and Hammarskjold discussed with Vasily V. Kuznetsov, Soviet deputy foreign minister, the U.N. chief's demand that the Security Council back him up.

Some diplomats foresaw a Soviet veto of any majority resolution in the Council that favors Hammarskjold over Lumumba, and said that would presage a special session of the U.N. General Assembly in advance of the 15th regular session beginning Sept. 20.

NO DATE SET

No Council meeting date has been set. U.N. policy is to have all parties to a complaint present at Security Council debates. Up to a late hour Wednesday the U.N. had no direct word that a promised Congolese delegation headed by Deputy Premier Antoine Gizenga had left Leopoldville.

The latest word from the Congo capital said the delegation was preparing to leave Wednesday night.

Lumumba told a Leopoldville news conference that Hammarskjold would be welcomed back in the Congo if he came with the team of African-Asian observers that Lumumba demanded as a condition for the U.N. force remaining in his country.

New nation, Belgium lock horns—

The Birmingham News

Word war rages; UN force in Congo

Birmingham, Ala.

Sun. 7-17-60

LEOPOLDVILLE, The Congo, July 16—(AP)—A vast airlift of UN forces was in full swing Saturday to the chaotic Congo, locked in a war of words between its new rulers and its former Belgian masters.

Violence between Negro crowds and Belgian soldiers threatened the capital as the UN vanguard of Negro soldiers from Ghana and Tunisia took up positions around the capital. More soldiers were on the way from Morocco and Ethiopia to swell the UN force that ultimately may reach 6000 men.

Congolese police, assigned by the UN to share police duties with Belgian soldiers in the capital, dispersed a crowd of several thousand Negroes in downtown Leopoldville. The crowd had been shouting insults at Belgian troops on patrol duty.

The crowd was angry because Belgium ignored an ultimatum from Congo Premier Patrice Lumumba to pull its troops out of the Congo by 6 a.m.

Instead, the Belgians announced they were sending in three more companies of troops to protect nationals who want to leave—as 25,000 of the Congo's 100,000 white population have done since the Congo army went on a rampage 10 days ago.

AS UN TROOPS arrived in Leopoldville, Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold concentrated on lining up trasportation, technicians and other help needed in the strife-torn Congo.

For one thing, he is seeking doctors and medical supplies.

Hammarskjold was reported to have asked Yugoslavia if it could supply some light planes, pilots and technicians.

MEANWHILE, Belgium's permanent UN representative, Walter Loridan, sent a letter to the secretary general asking for a UN inquiry into atrocities he said were committed against Belgians by mutinous Congolese troops.

Lumumba angrily accused Belgium of trying to provoke trouble throughout the Congo. He said Belgian paratroopers had landed at Coquilhativille, on the equator, taken over provincial offices and had killed a Congolese soldier.

Lumumba talked with reporters before leaving with President Joseph Kasavubu for Stanleyville, in the Eastern Congo, where he once was jailed by the Belgians for starting a riot.

LUMUMBA DECLARED there can be no resumption of diplomatic relations with Belgium until all Belgian soldiers leave the Congo, including the bases at Kamina and Kitona occupied by treaty after the Congo got its independence June 30. Lumumba charged that the Belgians had violated the treaty.

The premier also accused the Belgians of being behind the decision of rich Katanga Province in the Southeast Congo to declare its independence.

Belgian Radio said Maj. Gen. Carl Carlsson von Horn had arrived to take over command of UN forces and conferred with UN Undersecretary Ralph J. Bunche, who had been placed in temporary charge of UN forces. But later it said he had been delayed and would reach Leopoldville tomorrow. Von Horn has been chief of the UN commission in Jerusalem, keeping the peace between Israelis and Arabs, the broadcast said.)

THE UNITED STATES was in charge of the big airlift flying in troops and supplies from Tunisia and Morocco, and was unloading planeloads of flour and other food for the hungry nation.

The supply situation was so bad that the 40-man American ground crew supervising unloading operations was told planes would have to fly to Brazzaville for fuel for return trips.

Brazzaville, across the Congo River from Leopoldville, is in the Congo Republic, the former French colony. The city has been a main escape hatch for thousands of whites fleeing the Congo terror.

THE AMERICANS also had only the food and water they brought with them. The Tunisian soldiers flown in on U. S. planes had to sleep on the concrete floor of an airport hangar. A tent city on a golf course was being hurriedly prepared for them.

The troops from Gahana will be housed in the main military camp in Leopoldville, presumably moving in as the Belgians move out. But when the Belgians would leave was problematical.

Belgian officials emphasized they would protect their nationals until UN forces can assure order and the danger is past. Then the Belgian soldiers will return to Belgium or to bases they occupy by treaty with the Congo.

The Belgian force wrested Leopoldville airport from African troops and then seized the capital city itself.

Thurs. 7-14-60

Beligum was planning to reassume command of its former colony if there is no other way to restore law and order to the nation, the Belgian ambassador told newsmen.

In Moscow, Russia accused the United States of planning Western intervention in the Congo and demanded immediate withdrawal of Belgian troops.

The Soviet Union also urged the United Nations to halt the so-called "armed aggression" by the Atlantic powers against the African republic.

Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold laid before the Security Council a plan for military aid to the Congo. The U.N. force would exclude big powers and white soldiers.

Ghana, a neighboring African republic, was the first to volunteer soldiers. The government in Accra said it would send troops as soon as the Congo or the United Nations asked for them.

The Belgian troops went into action in defiance of a Congo government ultimatum that they return to their bases immediately.

Red-bereted paratroop commandos cleared rebel Congolese troops from the Leopoldville airport where they had interrupted the refugee airlift flying out frightened Belgian and other white residents caught by the upsurge of violence.

The Belgian troops swung from the airport into Leopoldville. Congolese troops mostly ran from their path. Some African soldiers fired wildly as they raced away. A few pockets of African soldiers, however, dug in for life-or-death battles with the Belgian commandos.

Caught in the middle of the battling were thousands of whites — men, women and children — who screamed and hid or cheered as the Belgian soldiers grabbed control of Leopoldville in the lightning thrust.

(In Washington, the State Department said a colony of American missionaries which had been reported besieged in the Luluaborg area of the Congo had been evacuated by light American planes.

U.S. officials said another group of some 100 U.S. Protestant missionaries in the Lake Charles area of the northeast Congo had spurned a government evacuation offer and planned to stick it out).

U.N. Calls Emergency Session

The Miami Herald

Miami, Fla.

By Herald Wire Services

Belgian shock troops smashed into Congo army strongholds Wednesday as the U.N. Securtiy Council met in an emergency session to hear a proposal for bringing peace to the chaotic new African republic.

U.N. To Ask Africans To Aid In The Congo

The Courier Journal

Louisville, Ky.

Hammarskjold Calls 9-Nation Session After Bid For Help To Stop Pillage

Thur. 7-15-60

From Wire Dispatches

United Nations, N. Y., July 11.—Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold will ask nine African members of the United Nations Tuesday to assign officers from their armed forces to help restore discipline in the Congolese Army.

Chief delegates of Ethiopia, Liberia, Ghana, Sudan, Libya, Guinea, Morocco, Tunisia, and the United Arab Republic have been requested to meet Hammarskjold Tuesday morning to consider a cabled request for assistance from Patrice Lumumba, Premier of the Congo.

Hammarskjold Returns

In effect, the Government of the newly independent republic conceded it was powerless to check the campaign of rape and pillage that in five days has taken at least 12 white lives and driven more than 13,000 from the Congo.

Pictures on Page 2

Hammarskjold, who was in Geneva to submit his African-aid program to the Economic and Social Council, left for New York Monday on learning of developments in the Congo.

Including the Union South Africa, there are 10 African members of the United Nations. However, the other nine African states refuse to consider South Africa a member of their group, and South Africa was not invited to meet with the Secretary-General.

Bunche Consulted

The request from Lumumba, it was learned, was sent after consultations with Dr. Ralph J. Bunche, a U. N. undersecretary, who stayed in the Congo after representing Hammarskjold at an independence celebration June 30, and Clare Timberlake, United States ambassador.

Lumumba, it was understood, requested the United Nations to provide military experts to reorganize the Congolese Army with a view to maintaining internal order. The Secretary-General has interpreted it as coming within the context of an existing U. N. program to supply governmental experts to underdeveloped countries.

This program, which is known as "Opex" (for "operational and executive personnel") originated with Hammarskjold and was started on a modest scale in 1959.

Nonwhite Aid Sought

The Secretary-General's decision to go through to other African countries, in the first instance, is thought to have resulted from the fact that Congolese soldiers had forced the Government to discharge their Belgian officers.

It is believed that the soldiers would be more likely to accept the orders of other Africans than of white officers.

If the response from the African countries is insufficient it is believed that Hammarskjold will ask other non-white countries to supply officers. He is expected to exclude the great powers from participating for fear of introducing Cold War rivalries into Africa.

24th Division Ready

In Washington, officials said the United States is ready to furnish troops to help restore order in the Congo if requested.

In Heidelberg, Germany, the U.S. Army said two companies of the 24th Infantry Division were alerted and ready to rush to the Congo. Part of the 24th was flown to the Middle East in a crisis in Lebanon two years ago.

Already a force of civilian and military planes of many nations is flying out whites from the Congo or from such refugee centers as Brazzaville, in the Congo Republic across the river from Leopoldville. Joining in the airlift are Belgian, British, Italian, and U.S planes.

Outbreaks Spur Exodus

The exodus was spurred by new Negro-soldier outbreaks in Stanleyville, in the eastern Congo, and at Luluabourg in the south-central Congo.

Belgian Minister Ganshof van der Meersch, one of two Cabinet ministers sent to The Congo, said in Leopoldville that Belgian paratroops forced Negro troops to quit Luluabourg, once destined to become this young nation's capital. But Negro troops still held an airfield at Stanleyville, he reported.

The situation still appeared to be critical at Congo River ports of Matadi and Boma where Negro troops cut off the flow of supplies to Leopoldville to the northeast.

Elisabethville Quiet

Van der Meersch said he had asked Congolese officials to permit Belgian troops to enter the two ports and restore rail and shipping communications.

Van der Meersch said the situation was quiet at Elisabethville, capital of Katanga Province in the southeast, where seven Europeans were killed by Negro soldiers Sunday.

UN Council To Discuss Congo Crisis

Sat. 8-20-60

Dag Demands Lumumba Halt Attacks On Troops

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y., Aug. 19 (AP)—The Security Council will meet in extraordinary session Sunday to deal with the worsening Congo crisis. Increasing differences between Dag Hammarskjold and Congo Premier Patrice Lumumba gave a grave air to the situation.

The secretary general today sent a bristling note to Lumumba threatening to ask the Council to call off its UN operations altogether unless attacks on UN troops stop at once.

Lumumba denounced the note as blackmail and demanded removal of white UN troops whom he blamed for incidents in which Canadians have been beaten and robbed and UN security officers arrested. Lumumba reiterated a request that the Council send a 14-nation Asian-African observer team to the Congo in place of the Hammarskjold setup.

The big question was whether the Soviet Union would support Lumumba's demands and turn its back on Hammarskjold.

The secretary general has made plain to all the big four powers that an East-West clash over the Congo runs the risk of plunging the newborn African republic into deeper chaos.

Ignores Lamumba

Hammarskjold pointedly ignored Lumumba in addressing his note formally to the government of the Republic of the Congo. Lumumba heads the government under the chief of state, President Joseph Kasavubu, who is less assertive than Lumumba.

The secretary general referred to what he called highly reprehensible incidents in which the Canadians were manhandled and UN security guards detained under threat of being shot.

He declared that a continuance "would lead to conditions which would render the work of the United Nations in assistance of the Congo practically impossible."

The UN released also a statement by Undersecretary Ralph J. Bunche, American Negro who is Hammarskjold's trouble-shooter on the scene, congratulating UN personnel for their conduct "in the face of needless and senseless provocation."

Bunche Sends Note

Bunche sent a note to Lumumba saying the UN forces came to the Congo as friends and as Lumumba's guests. "We are therefore entitled to expect that your government will protect us, while we are negotiating with it, from outrages such as those committed last night in the very grounds of your residence," Bunche wrote.

He referred to the detention of two UN guards sent by Bunche to deliver a letter to Lumumba.

Armand Berard, the French ambassador who is council president for Augus, called the Sunday meeting after conferring with Hammarskjold.

Hammarskjold is drafting a statement he will make at the opening of the meeting, set for 12:30 p.m. EDT.

Cold War Swirls Around Infant Nation

Journal & Guide Norfolk, Va.

UN's Dr. Ralph Bunche Trying To Save Freedom Of The Congo

Sat. 7-23-60 p. 1

Special Correspondence

LEOPOLDVILLE, The Congo — The Congolese Senate rebelled this week against Premier Patrice Lumumba and said it "energetically rejected" any Soviet interference in the internal affairs of Lumumba's 14 - hour ultimatum to the Belgians to get out or face Soviet mitary action.

THE SENATE resolution was sent by telegram to Dr. Ralph Bunche, the UN representative in Leopoldville, and to Lumumba and President Joseph Kasa Vubu who were visiting in Stanleyville.

Dr. Bunche has been on scene for about ten days, working night and day to help restore peace in the Congo. The UN under secretary was given the additional responsibility of commanding all UN troops until Swedish Maj. Gen. Carl C. Von Horn could get to the troubled scene.

In Brussels, the Belgian Cabinet met in emergency session and decided to ignore Lumumba's ultimatum. At the same time it dispatched two more companies of Belgian troops to the Congo "to help restore order."

MANY OBSERVERS have blamed the Belgians for the widespread disorders that followed the July 1 independence of the Congo. Some say that the Belgians planned it that way so that they would have an excuse to rush troops into the country and take over again.

American missionaries, flown into Salisbury, Southern Rhodesia, from the Congo, are blaming the rioting on subversive activity of the communists. Mark Poole, of the U. S. Presbyterian Mission, said that the outbreaks of violence had been too well coordinated for them to have occurred by chance.

AMONG THOSE arriving in Salisbury by plane from the Congo was Miss Bette Jean Mitchell, a colored missionary who left Georgia not long ago to work with a Presbyterian mission in Kasai Province.

"I'm not a refugee," she said. "I didn't want to leave and the Congolese didn't want me to leave. They don't want any of the missionaries to leave. Some of the Congolese were in tears when we left and couldn't understand why we were not remaining."

She said that Americans had been evacuated as a precaution and that she intended to return soon as possible.

MEANWHILE a small but growing army of U. N. troops spread through the Congo this week to try to prevent this new African nation from strangling itself with violence or getting caught in the middle of the East - West cold war.

U. N. officers ordered the first few hundred African troops to arrive to take up posts in the most strategic and troublesome locations.

MOROCCAN troops were dispatched to Matandi, at the mouth of the Congo, a vital port which rebel Congolese soldiers seized 10 days after a clash with Belgian troops.

Ethiopian soldiers were ordered to Stanleyville in the east where five isolated white out posts in the area reported Sunday night they were being attacked by mutinous Congolese.

FORCES FROM Tunisia and Ghana took up positions in Leopoldville between Belgian paratroopers and Congolese soldiers. They received a promise from the local Congolese commander that his troops would not carry arms outside their base areas.

Belgian troops took over the islands of Bula and Bemba at the mouth of the Congo river on hearing that a Polish freighter with 300 tons of arms for the Congolese army had arrived off the Congo estuary.

THERE WAS no indication whether Belgium would try to stop the freighter but a Foreign office spokesman in Brussels said Belgium had told the United Nations that "something must be done" to prevent the arms from going to the Congolese troops.

U.N. CHIEF REPORTS BELGIANS IN CONGO WILL OBEY ORDERS

The N.Y. Times

Troops to Limit Intervention to Protection of Citizens in Imminent Danger

New York

COUNCIL SESSION CALLED

Wed. 7-19-60

Hammarskjold Statement to Be Debated Tomorrow—10,000 Force Held Goal

p. 1

Text of Hammarskold report on Congo is on Page 4.

By KATHLEEN TELTSCH

Special to The New York Times.

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y., July 18—Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold reported today that Belgian authorities in the strife-torn Congo had agreed to abide by the orders of the United Nations Command there and would limit military intervention to protection of Belgian nationals.

Whatever security measures are taken by Belgian forces in cases of grave and imminent danger will be referred at once to the United Nations Command, the Secretary General said in a written report to the Security Council.

The Secretary General's assurances were given in his first report on the Congo situation. At his request, the Security Council will take up the report. The meeting will take place Wednesday. Two representatives from the Congo are expected to arrive by then to take part.

U. N. Moving Rapidly

The Secretary General's remarks were received here as the first positive indication that the United Nations was moving rapidly to assume responsibility for maintaining order and preventing further violence.

The arrival of United Nations forces in Leopoldville already has had a "saluatary effect," Mr. Hammarskjold said.

He declared that a force of 3,500 recruited from African states was on the spot and that a Swedish battalion of 635 was being airlifted from the Gaza Strip, where it is serving with the United Nations Emergency Force in the Middle East.

Force of 10.000 Sought

United Nations sources expect that a force of up to 10,000 will be sought for the Congo—roughly twice the strength of the force in the Middle East.

By asking that his report be taken up, the Secretary General put the Council in the position of meeting at his request, and not that of the Soviet Union. Moscow called yesterday for another Council meeting on the Congo. However, the Soviet Union will still be free to renew its demand that Belgian forces be ordered to leave the Congo immediately.

The Council resolution of last Wednesday authorizing the United Nations Command for the Congo recommended the withdrawal of Belgian troops, but did not fix a date. On Sunday, the Congo's Premier, Patrice Lumumba, threatened to ask for Soviet military help unless the troops were withdrawn immediately.

Vasily V. Kuznetsov, a Soviet First Deputy Foreign Minister, on his way to a private meeting with Mr. Hmmarskjold, said it was "reasonable" to expect that the Soviet Union would continue to press for the Belgians' withdrawal."

p. 5

'Another Korea' Feared

Mr. Kuznetsov also conferred with Mongi Slim, the Tunisian delegate and sponsor of Wednesday's resolution, amid reports of growing concern among African members over the possibility of Communist intervention in Congo creating "another Korea."

The United Nations force in the Congo consists of 460 troops from Ethiopia, 770 from Ghana, 1,250 from Morocco and 1,020 from Tunisia, according to Mr. Hammarskjold's report.

Offers have also been accepted from Guinea and the Federation of Mali. Requests for additional help are understood to have been made to Ireland, Yugoslavia, Burma and Haiti, and Sweden. Canadian troops speaking French and English are expetced to be sought to provide signals corps contingents.

The Secretary General's report, on which work was completed only at mid-day, was the first detailed accounting of the aid so far given, including foodstuffs. Mr. Hamarskjold said that when the breakdown of Congolese transportation and public services created the threat of a food shortage, he asked and received generous pledges of food from Canada, Denmark, France, India, the Soviet Union, Britain and the United States. American, Soviet, British, Swiss and Canadian planes have airlifted the supplies.

In all, twenty-seven countries have been consulted on providing either troops or relief materials, the Secretary General said.

Twice in his report Mr. Hammarskjold underscored the point that military units were not being sought from any of the major powers. He also denied that the United Nations action was being used as a pretext to allow nations outside the region to step in.

The Soviet Union has repeatedly charged that the United States and other Western "aggressors" were using the Congo situation as an excuse for intervention and the United Nations as a cover for such designs.

Mr. Hammarskjold reaffirmed that the United Nations intervention was prompted by the breakdown of the instruments of government for the maintenance of order and by the Congolese Government's explicit request for help.

He made it clear also that the force operated under the exclusive command of the United Nations and could not become party to any internal conflict. He said it was basic that the "host" government, meaning

Bunche Gets Command Of U. N. Troops

The News and Courier Charleston, S.C.

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y. (AP) Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold Friday night put Undersecretary Ralph J. Bunche in temporary command of the new U. N. Force of African troops in the Congo—600 strong and growing fast.

Wed. 7-16-60

He did so after dispatches from Leopoldville told how British Maj. Gen. Henry T. Alexander, commanding Ghanaian troops flown there for the force, had acted on his own to forestall a street riot in that Congo capital.

Hammarskjold, a Swede, cabled Bunche, an American Negro civilian, that he was to be commander of the forces until the arrival of Swedish Maj. Gen. Carl Carlsson von Horn, appointed Thursday to the command post. Von Horn is expected in Leopoldville Sunday night. He was to have flown there Friday from Jerusalem, where he has headed the U. N.'s Palestine truce supervision organization, but his flight arrangements broke down.

The U.N. said India, in response to a plea from Hammarskjold for food for the Congo, had agreed to send 1,000 tons of wheat there.

Congo's Cabinet Votes

The Atlanta Constitution Atlanta, Ga.

To Call In Red Troops

Thurs, 7-21-60 p. 1

Unless Belgians Leave

Lumumba Calls U.N. Ineffective

By RICHARD KASISCHKE

LEOPOLDVILLE (AP)—Premier Patrice Lumumba, expressing doubt that the United Nations can restore peace quickly, announced Wednesday his Cabinet has voted to appeal for Soviet troops unless Belgium withdraws its armed forces from the whole country immediately.

The lanky, Congolese government chief angrily denounced the Belgians as promoters of intrigue and disorder.

Southern Rhodesia police scatter 20,000 angry Africans. Page 2.

"This is a day of national mourning for the Congo," he said several times during a news conference.

The Negro leader's statement on troops, somewhat vague as he expressed it, tended to add confusion to the problems of restoring peace here at a time U.N. officials considered they were moving slowly to bring about a solution.

Lumumba, 34, spoke amid new reports of an assassination plot against him.

The Chamber of Deputies was told by the young wing of Lumumba's Congo National Movement that Senate President Joseph Ileo and others were plotting to get rid of Lumumba and President Joseph Kasavubu and take over the government. White officers of the old Congo army were said to be in the plot.

The chamber referred the charge to a commission for investigation. Ileo did not attend Wednesday's Senate session.

Both Lumumba and Kasavubu have said previously their lives are in danger while Belgian troops remain in the country.

1, 14

At his news conference Lumumba suggested that troops from "any other country of the African-Asian bloc's come along with the Russians."

Red China was the biggest of the Asian and African nations at the founding of their bloc at Bandung, Indonesia, in 1955.

REDS FASTER

The Premier said he has assurance from Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev that Soviet and African-Asian bloc help would be faster and more effective than that of the U.N., though the U.N. has more than 3,000 blue-helmeted troops on duty and is building up toward a goal of 10,000 by the weekend.

Tuesday, Lumumba said, "We are willing to accept anybody ready to help, the United States, Russia or anybody." He made no reference to the United States Wednesday.

Aides of Dr. Ralph J. Bunche, top U.N. official on the scene here, said U.N. leaders hoped the Soviet Union would ignore Lumumba's bid and would agree to support the U.N. action on the same basis as the United States, with food and medical help but no infantry.

NO DATE TO THREAT

Lumumba conducted his news conference in rapid French.

Excited in his declarations, he did not say definitely when the threat to call in Soviet troops would be carried out.

Correspondents disagreed about the precise terms of his reply to a question whether he would await the outcome of Wednesday night's U.N. Security Council meeting in New York. Several understood him to say he would:

Others were under the impression that he was awaiting an answer to his ultimatum Sunday, a threat to call in the Russians if the Belgian troops were not out in three days. That ultimatum expired last midnight.

Belgian soldiers are pulling out of Leopoldville in a general withdrawal scheduled to be completed by sundown Saturday. But they are only returning to Congo treaty bases, and others remain on duty in a score of Congo cities and towns.

(The Belgian radio reported two Belgian commandos were killed in a clash with Congolese soldiers in Bunia in Oriental Province. The broadcast said another Belgian was wounded. It did not mention casualties on the Congolese side.

KATANGA'S POSITION

(In Elisabethville, Premier Moise Tshome of Katanga told a news conference, "If the United Nations troops try to land in Katanga it will show they want war, but I do not think Mr. Hammarskjold will try anything like that." He added, "Member countries of the United Nations must understand any help given against Katanga to the Congo government will mean war between Katanga and the Congo." He again said Belgian troops will be asked to stay in the seceded province until his government decides they can leave.)

The transfer of Belgian duties to the U.N. force was arranged last week. A U.S. airlift sped 620 Swedish soldiers, volunteers from the U.N. Emergency Force in the Gaza Strip, to the Congo.

Across town at another news conference, a U.N. technical staff related steady progress in the tremendous task of feeding this country, preventing disease and trying to get its stalled economy moving again.

READS CONGO NEWS

Sen. Cooper at GOP Session

Rush Army To Congo, U.N. Urged

Atlanta Constitution, Atlanta Ga. Thur. 7/14/60

By THOMAS J. HAMILTON

(Copyright 1960, the New York Times Co.)

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y.—Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold urged the Security Council Wednesday night to give him authority "with the utmost speed" to send a U.N. military force to the Congo.

The secretary general declared that appeals to him for assistance from the Congo government led him to conclude that the presence of Belgian troops "is a source of internal and potentially also of international tension," and that they could not be used to restore order.

He added that he would not "exclude" contingents from the African states, and in fact it was understood that he would give them preference. Hammarskjold specified also that the U.N. force would not take any action which would make it "a party to internal conflicts" in the Congo.

Hammarskjold proposed that the Great Powers be barred from furnishing contingents for the U.N. force, and said that it would not be authorized to take action "beyond self-defense."

"It would be understood," Hammarskjold said, that if a U.N. force were sent to the Congo, "the Belgian government would see its way to a withdrawal."

The United States, which decided Tuesday not to send troops to the Congo except with the authorization of the United Nations, gave its complete support to Hammarskjold's proposal. The functions of the proposed force would be almost identical with that of the U.N. emergency force, which Hammarskjold organized in 1956 and sent to Egypt in connection with the withdrawal of the British, French and Israeli expeditionaries.

The emergency session of the Security Council Wednesday night was called at the request of Hammarskjold. In his statement he emphasized repeatedly the desirability of giving him the authorization Wednesday night.

Ike Leaves Congo Troop Plea Up to U. N. Decision on Crisis

Washington Post, D.C., Thur. 7/14/60, p. A10

By Stewart Hensley

NEWPORT, R. I., July 13 (UPI) — The Summer White House refused to disclose today whether President Eisenhower would honor any United Nations appeal for American forces to help restore order in the strife-torn Congo.

News Secretary James C. Hagerty said he would not reveal what the United States might do while the United Nations still has under consideration an appeal from the new republic of the Congo for assistance in restoring order.

Hagerty said yesterday that Mr. Eisenhower was of the "opinion" that "it would be better for the Congo" if troops were not sent there from the United States or "any of the large Western nations."

But he did not rule out the possibility that the President would agree if the United Nations made a direct request for some American forces.

Asked specifically today whether the United States would not participate in any U. N. force sent to the Congo, Hagerty said the "matter is in the United Nations" and he would have no comment "at this time."

The United States yesterday referred to the world organization a separate appeal it received from the Congo cabinet for 3000 United States troops. This appeal did not come from the government as such.

While the White House refused to disclose why Mr. Eisenhower believed it would be unwise to send troops from the United States or other big Western powers to the Congo, the probable reason for his feeling appeared obvious to diplomatic observers.

The President's opposition undoubtedly stems from a desire to avoid involving the troubled Congo in the psychological crossfire of the "cold war."

The dispatch of any considerable United States force to the Congo, no matter how fervent the appeal of the government there, would spark trouble from two sources:

1. The Soviet Union undoubtedly would seize on the action to charge American "aggression" and "intervention" and further inflame the situation in restless Africa.

2. Many Asians and Africans, still suspicious of "Western colonialism," might view the entry of American forces as an attempt to reimpose foreign rule. The Soviet Union undoubtedly would take advantage of this feeling.

The President got in more golf this afternoon after the sun burned away much of the heavy fog which shrouded this resort area. He spent the morning in his office at naval base headquarters going over White House matters with aides.

Playing with him were Newport Country Club President Howard G. Cushing, club pro James Farrell and Hagerty.

U. N. Will Send Troops to Congo Trouble Regions

News & Observer, Raleigh, N.C. 8a Thu. 7/15/60

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP) —Volunteered African troops were being lined up quickly Thursday under the blue and white U.N. banner to try to stop the Congo's lunge toward anarchy. A force of 2,500 to 3,000 is expected.

Within hours after the Security Council gave him the go-ahead, Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold received offers of contingents from Ghana and Tunisia. Both were reported ready to move immediately and become the vanguard of a unique peace task force.

Hammarskjold was reported to have asked the United States, Britain, the Soviet Union, Italy and India to supply food and transport.

He was understood also to have asked the British to permit the use of the airfield at Kano, Nigeria, as the main staging area for the U.N. force. This request, it was said, is under consideration in London and Lagos, the Nigerian capital.

Hammarskjold also named a commander for the new Congo U.N. emergency force and ordered him to take up his duties Sunday. He is Maj. Gen. Carl von Horn of Sweden, now commander of the U.N. truce supervision organization in Palestine.

Von Horn, 57, two years ago succeeded Maj. Gen. E. L. M. Burns, when the la[illegible] as truce supervisor to give full time to command of U.N. troops in the Gaza Strip.

Hammarskjold approached five African governments on possible troop contributions—Ghana, Tunisia, Guinea, Mali and Morocco. Informed quarters said the last three had not replied late Thursday.

The secretary general also was engaged in consultations on the problem of rushing food to help avert a serious crisis in Leopoldville, the capital. A diplomat hinted that the first shipments may be already on the way.

Sudan sent Hammarskjold a copy of a cable telling the Congo it plans to send an aid survey mission there.

Troops For Congo Lined Up By U.N.

News + Courier, Charleston S.C.

P. 1 Thu 7/15/60

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP) —Volunteered African troops were being lined up quickly Thursday under the blue and white U.N. banner to try to stop the Congo's lunge toward anarchy. A force of 2,500 to 3,000 is expected.

Within hours after the Security Council gave him the go-ahead, Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold received offers of contingents from Ghana and Tunisia. Both were reported ready to move immediately and become the vanguard of a unique peace task force.

Lumumba Slapped
. . . See Page 7-B.

Hammarskjold was reported to have asked the United States, Britain, the Soviet Union, Italy and India to supply food and transport.

He was understood also to have asked the British to permit the use of the airfield at Kano, Nigeria, as the main staging area for the U.N. force. This request, it was said, is under consideration in London and Lagos, the Nigerian capital.

Hammarskjold also named a commander for the new Congo U.N. emergency force and ordered him to take up his duties Sunday. He is Maj. Gen. Carl von Horn of Sweden, now commander of the U.N. truce supervision organization in Palestine.

Von Horn, 57, two years ago succeeded Maj. Gen. E. L. M. Burns, when the latter resigned as truce supervisor to give full time to command of U.N. troops in the Gaza Strip.

Hammarskjold approached five African governments on possible troop contributions—Ghana, Tunisia, Guinea, Mali and Morocco. Informed quarters said the last three had not replied late Thursday.

The secretary general also was engaged in consultations on the problem of rushing food to help avert a serious crisis in Leopoldville, the capital. A diplomat hinted that the first shipments may be already on the way.

Sudan sent Hammarskjold a copy of a cable telling the Congo it plans to send an aid survey mission there.

18a 1960 CONGO UNITED NATIONS

Won't Jail Lumumba Now, U.N. Reassured by Mobutu

The Atlanta Constitution

Atlanta, Ga.

Fri. 11-25-60

LEOPOLDVILLE — The military regime declared Thursday it had no intention "for the time being" of arresting Patrice Lumumba, the deposed premier.

The regime of Col. Joseph Mobutu also stressed it didn't want to "make war on the United Nations."

These assurances were given by Jose Nussbaumer, acting interior minister in the army - appointed governing commission of young intellectuals as military activity here caused widespread uneasiness.

Congolese and U. N. soldiers Thursday continued "ging in on the western suburb of Kalina, scene of the fighting around the residence of Ghana's envoy last Monday night.

BY PAUL HOFMANN

(Copyright 1960, the New York Times Co.)

Lumumba's residence also is in Kalina as are those of Rajeshwar Dayal of India, special representative of U.N. Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold and of Indian Brigadier Indarjit Rikhye, military adviser at the U. N. headquarters here.

Under a downpour Thursday Malayan and Tunisian soldiers armed with bazookas and machineguns and supported by armored cars consolidated positions around the residences of the U.N. leaders that they had manned during an alert Wednesday night.

Congolese soldiers were less in evidence in the zone Thursday than Wednesday. Late Wednesday night rumors circulated in Leopoldville that the Congolese army was preparing either to attack U.N. buildings or make another attempt to arrest Lumumba.

A U.N. spokesman said Thursday the military measures taken in the Kalina area were "precautionary" in view of the presence of strong Congolese army detachments.

U.N. officials acknowledged that Mobutu, head of the military regime, was urging the army for moderation. It was disclosed that a march of some 200 Congolese civilians on the U.N. headquarters here Wednesday for a demonstration was stopped at Mobutu's orders.

Nussbaumer said Thursday night that casualties during Monday night's fighting amounted at the latest count to six Congolese and two Tunisians killed. He said, however, "Our friendly relations with Tunisia are unchanged."

FROM DIRECTION

Nussbaumer asserted that an inquiry opened by Congolese authorities had established that the shots that had killed Col. Joseph Nikokolo, commander of Leopoldville garrison, had been fired from the direction where six Ghanaian policemen guarding the Ghana envoy's residence had been standing.

Nussbaumer said the Congo didn't intend to press for the withdrawal of Ghanaian U.N. contingent. He said "If we requested their departure, the U.N. would say "no." Ghanaian troops are at present stationed in Kasai province where they were transferred from the Leopoldville area earlier this month. Three hundred seventy Ghanaian policemen who are still in the capital are scheduled to return home soon and will be replaced by Nigerians.

Nussbaumer stated, "We never have broken with the United Nations."

OTHER THINGS TO DO

Asked about Lumumba's status and the regime's rumored plans to have him arrested, Nussbaumer remarked "We have for the moment other things to do—things that are more useful for the country. If he (Lumumba) is well off, behind U.N. guards, let him stay so."

Nussbaumer said the military regime was working to prepare the Congo for a "really national government" representing all groups and provinces including secessionist Katanga. He said that the caretaker government would remain in charge of the administration also after Dec. 31, a deadline mentioned by Mobutu after his military coup last December.

18a 1960 CONGO CANNIBALISTIC RITES

Cannibal Witchcraft Makes Comeback

ANCIENT CONGO RITUAL OF EATING YOUR ENEMY REVIVED

The Montgomery Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. Dec 11-27-60

LEOPOLDVILLE, The Congo (AP)—The ancient ritual of eating your enemy is making a secret comeback in the Congo backwoods.

Unrest sweeping the country and the fact Belgian punitive measures no longer are to be feared contribute to the revival of cannibal witchcraft.

The Belgian administration and Christian missionaries never quite stamped out the belief among the isolated and primitive tribes that eating your enemy will strengthen you.

Among some Baluba clans in Kasai and north Kataiga, in the remote border regions of Oriental Province and in the swamps of the middle Congo, human flesh is again eaten in secret tribal ritual—not as a delicacy or for nourishment, but for the magic properties of a dead enemy's limbs and organs.

The heart brings courage, the brain intelligence, and the legs speed, according to the witch doctors. They hold that the more dreaded and hated the enemy, the more powerful the magic.

But never is a man sacrificed in cold blood simply to be eaten, as in the cartoonists' "missionary stew." The magic of the warrior tribesmen requires a body slain in combat or in vengeance.

U.N. officials are convinced that one of the eight Irish soldiers killed in a recent Baluba ambush in northern Katanga was eaten in a cannibal ritual.

NEVER RECOVERED

His body disappeared from where he had died under a hail of arrows. It never has been recovered. Exerts in tribal customs believe he was selected from the eight victims as most suited for their rites.

Two Tunisians killed earlier in tribal fighting in southern Kasai are know to have been partly consumed in similar ceremonies.

The pilot of a single-seater Belgian observation plane shot down by Congolese mutineers near Inkisi in July never was found. A Congolese blandly told searchers: "The people were so enraged they ate him."

Near Kundu an escaping prisoner killed a policeman during the post-independence turmoil. Since there was no authority to pursue the murderer, the policeman's clan formed a posse, tracked the man through the jungle, killed him and ate him.

CROCODILE MEN

The dreaded Kitawala sect, the crocodile men of the middle Congo, dress in crocodile skins and rip up a victim's body with claws strapped on their arms.

The Kitawalas in the final years of Belgian rule brought the greatest upsurge of cannibalism in the Congo for nearly a century.

They were ruthlessly suppressed by the Belgian administration, but some of their followers are reported regrouping in remote areas seldom visited by white men.

BECOME SILENT

All those familiar with the more primitive Congo tribes report a conspiracy of silence concerning the cannibal rites. Even in the cities Africans become silent and hard of hearing when the matter is raised.

Now and again a civilized city African can be heard to utter cannibalistic threats more in jest than in anger.

Occasionally such threats contain more than a hint of savagery. A Congolese army lieutenant stepped up to the plane of departing Ghana charge d'affaires Nathaniel Welbeck last week and shouted at him: "If you don't take your Ghana soldiers out of the Congo, we will eat them all."

Welbeck, a highly cultured African himself, grinned and quickly withdrew from the door of the plane.

And in the U.N. headquarters, a tall U.N.-employed Congolese slapped a stout Western official on the back and said with a glint in his eye: "You are so fat you must have eaten one of us."

Cannibalistic Rites

The News + Courier Charleston, S.C. Dec 11-27-60

Congolese Eat U.N. Troops

LEOPOLDVILLE, The Congo (AP)—The ancient ritual of eating your enemy is making a secret comeback in the Congo backwoods.

Unrest sweeping the country and the fact Belgian punitive measures no longer are to be feared contribute to the revival of cannibal witchcraft.

The Belgian administration and Christian missionaries never quite stamped out the belief among the isolated and primitive tribes that eating your enemy will strengthen you.

Among some Baluba clans in Kasai and north Katanga, in the remote border regions of Oriental Province and in the swamps of the middle Congo, human flesh is again eaten in secret tribal ritual—not as a delicacy or for nourishment, but for the magic properties of a dead enemy's limbs and organs.

The heart brings courage, the brain intelligence, and the legs speed, according to the witch doctors. They hold that the more dreaded and hated the enemy, the more powerful the magic.

But never is a man sacrificed in cold blood simply to be eaten, as in the cartoonists' "missionary stew." The magic of the warrior tribesmen requires a body slain in combat or in vengeance.

U.N. officials are convinced that one of the eight Irish soldiers killed in a recent Baluba ambush in northern Katanga was eaten in a cannibal ritual

His body disappeared from where he had died under a hail of arrows. It never has been recovered. Experts in tribal customs believe he was selected from the eight victims as most suited for their rites.

Two Tunisians killed earlier in tribal fighting in southern Kasai are known to have been partly consumed in similar ceremonies.

The pilot of a single-seater Belgian observation plane shot down by Congolese mutineers near Inkisi in July never was found. A Congolese blandly told searchers: "The people were so enraged they ate him."

Near Kundu an escaping prisoner killed a policeman during the post independence turmoil. Since there was no authority to pursue the murderer, the policeman's clan formed a posse, tracked the man through the jungle killed him and ate him.

The dreaded Kitawala sect, the crocodile men of the middle Congo, dress in crocodile skins and rip up a victim's body with claws strapped on their arms.

The Kitawalas in the final years of Belgian rule brought the greatest upsurge of cannibalism in the Congo for nearly a century.

They were ruthlessly suppressed by the Belgian administration, but some of their followers are reported regrouping in remote areas seldom visited by white men.

All those familiar with the more primitive Congo tribes report a conspiracy of silence concerning the cannibal rites. Even in the cities Africans become silent and hard of hearing when the matter is raised.

Now and again a civilized city African can be heard to utter cannibalistic threats more in jest than in anger.

Occasionally such threats contain more than a hint of savagery. A Congolese army lieutenant stepped up to the plane of departing Ghana charge d'affaires Nathaniel Welbeck last week and shouted at him: "If you don't take your Ghana soldiers out of the Congo, we will eat them all."

Welbeck, a highly cultured African himself, grinned and quickly withdrew from the door of the plane.

And in the U.N. headquarters, a tall U.N.-employed Congolese slapped a stout Western official on the back and said with a glint in his eye: "You are so fat you must have eaten one of us."

CONGO POLICE HOPE FOR TROOP AID—Local police arrive at an airport at Leopoldville, the Congo, following reports that a military plane loaded with troop reinforcements, had landed. However, the plane did not carry troops. The Congo government asked that U. S. troops be sent to the country to help restore order. The United States passed the request on to the UN. (UPI Telephoto).

Congo Plea For U. S. Troops Denied Unless In UN Force

B'ham Post Herald B'ham, Ala.

Wed. 7-13-60

BY LYNN HEINZERLING

LEOPOLDVILLE, Congo, July 12 (AP) — The lusty, hopeful nation that emerged to replace Belgium's mid-African colonial empire 12 days ago, asked today for American and Belgian troops to keep the country together and end bloodshed.

The United States quickly rejected the Congo plea for troops unless they are part of a United Nations force. UN officials voiced doubts, noting that American or other big power troops in the Congo would be likely to complicate the situation.

The drastic plea for aid was made while President Joseph Kasavubu and Premier Patrice Lumumba were out of the capital on a fruitless mission to restore order in Luluabourg and Elisabethville in two southeastern provinces.

A new incident, the killing of three Congolese soldiers by a Belgian aircraft, revived an explosive situation in Leopoldville.

Luluabourg in Kasai Province was in complete disorder, with all its white residents trying to get out. At least two Europeans were killed while besieged in an office building by Congolese marksmen perched in trees.

Belgian troops, at Tshombe's request, already have been in action in Katanga in an effort to restore order.

Everywhere in the Congo white residents were fleeing to the nearest border.

Americans Waiting

More than 200 Americans, mostly missionaries and their families, were reported waiting at Luluabourg and Aketi to be rescued from the threat of marauding Congolese soldiers. None of the Americans was reported molested, however.

U. S. Ambassador Clare Timberlake said most American missionaries did not want to leave but would get help if they do want to get out.

Belgian Minister Walter Ganshof Van Der Meersch, sent here from Brussels to help the new government in its crisis, disclosed the request for U. S. Troops.

He said the government wanted American troops to join contingents to Belgians and Congolese under a joint command in restoring order.

U. S. forces would be moved into Leopoldville Province, which is largely inhabited by Bakongo tribesmen loyal to President Kasavubu.

Apparently the arrival of American forces would be popular with many Congolese who are alarmed at the deterioration.

Units of the U. S. 24th Infantry based in west Germany have been on a standby basis for several days.

Sending American troops to the Congo, one of the richest and most strategic countries of Africa, would touch off tremendous political repercussions. Presumably the Congolese and Belgians felt the emergency justifies the risk.

In Moscow Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev said the rebellious troops were "quite right" in refusing to obey their "colonialist officers." He said the Belgians were "shameful" in sending in troops.

Aggression Charged

Communist China accused Belgium of aggression and pictured the sending of Belgian troops to rescue besieged Europeans as a move to restore colonial rule.

Decision of the Congo government to call for U. S. troops came after the Congo asked the UN Sunday to intervene to help end the violence.

A new explosive situation, threatening new violence in this capital, arose as the government's request to Washington was announced.

Three Congolese soldiers were killed by rockets from a Belgian military aircraft last night. The pilot said he was attacked by an armored truck.

Deaths of their comrades angered Congolest troops at Camp Hardy in Thysville, 75 miles southeast of Leopoldville.

Troops held hostage 18 white women and children and 30 men but later released them.

More U. N. Troops Airlifted to Congo

News & Observer Raleigh, N.C.

By LYNN HEINZERLING

LEOPOLDVILLE, The Congo (AP)—A vast airlift of U. N. forces was in full swing Saturday night to the chaotic Congo, locked in a war of words between its new rulers and its former Belgian masters.

Violence between Negro crowds and Belgian soldiers threatened the capital as the U. N. vanguard of Negro soldiers from Ghana and Tunisia took up positions around the capital. More soldiers were on the way from Morocco and Ethipia to swell the U. N. force that ultimately may reach 6,000 men.

Disperse Crowd.

Congolese police, assigned by the U. N. to share police duties with Belgian soldiers in the capital, dispersed a crowd of several thousand Negroes in downtown Leopoldville. The crowd has been shouting insults at Belgian troops on patrol duty.

The crowd was angry because Belgium ignored an ultimatum Congro Premier Patrice Lumumba to pull its troops out of the Congo by 6 a. m.

Instead, the Belgians announced they were sending in three more companies of troops to protect nationals who want to leave—as 25,000 of the Congo's 100,000 white population have done since the Congo army went on a rampage 10 days ago.

Belgium also announced it was ignoring the break in diplomatic relations proclaimed by Lumumba and would carry a complaint of Congolese atrocities against Belgians in the Congo to the U. N.

In this tense atmosphere, Belgian radio said Maj. Gen. Carl Carlsson von Horn flew in from Jerusalem to take over command of the U. N. forces. He has been chief of the U. N. Supervision Commission keeping the peace between Israel and its Arab neighbors since 1958.

Van Horn conferred immediately with U. N. Undersecretary Ralph Bunche, the American Negro diplomat who had been placed in temporary charge of the U.N forces, the broadcast said.

The United States was in charge of the big airlift flying in troops and supplies from Tunisia and Morocco, and was unloading plane loads of flour and other food for the hungry nation.

Congo Asks UN Aid In Ending Revolt

Birm Post-Herald, Birm, Ala.
Tues. 7/12/60 P 17

Belgium Also Issues Appeal To Allies; U. S. Standing By

BY LYNN HEINZERLING

LEOPOLDVILLE, The Congo, July 11 (AP)—The government of this young nation has appealed to the United Nations for help in the bloody struggle against its mutinous army, which is pressing a campaign of terror against whites.

In effect, government of the newly independent Congo conceded it was powerless to check the campaign of rape and pillage that in five days has taken at least 12 white lives and driven more than 13,000 whites from the Congo.

The dramatic appeal to the United Nations to step in and restore order was dispatched to the UN yesterday after President Joseph Kasavubu and Premier Patrice Lumumba met with U. S. Ambessador Clare Timberlake and UN Undersecretary Ralph Bunche in Leopoldville.

The appeal was disclosed today by Belgian Minister Ganshof Van Der Meersch, one of two cabinet ministers sent here by Brussels to try to bring some order in the chaotic Congo.

(In Brussels, Belgian Premier Gaston Eyskens told Parliament he had asked Belgium's allies and international institutions for help to meet the crisis in the Congo but gave no details.)

Only 11 days in power after the Congo gained independence from Belgium, Kasavubu and Lumumba are critical of Brussels for sending in Belgian troops to quell the rebellious Negro soldiers.

UN Forces

A UN force made up of soldiers from outside nations, such as intervened in the Suez War of 1956, thus could send the Belgian soldiers back to Belgium or to the military bases they occupy by treaty in the Congo. A revolt by the 25,000-man Negro army against its Belgian officers touched off the violence last week.

(In Washington, officials said the United States is ready to furnish troops to help restore order in the Congo if requested.

(In Heidelberg, Germany, the U. S. Army said two companies of the 24th Infantry Division were alerted and ready to rush to the Congo. Part of the 24th was flown to the Middle East in the crisis in Lebanon two years ago.)

REPLACE BELGIAN TROOPS

The Montgomery Advertiser

Hammarskjold Urges U.N. Rush Congo Force

Montgomery, Ala.
Thur. 7-14-60

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP) — Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold Wednesday night urged the Security Council in extraordinary session to speed a military force to the Congo. It would replace Belgian troops whose ouster is demanded by Congo leaders.

RELATED STORY, PAGE 3E

Western leaders showed readiness to support the Hammarskjold plan. The Russians, armed with the veto, did not immediately disclose their plans.

Hammarskjold did not spell out details of his troop proposal, except to say that big power troops should be excluded and that care should be taken that the nationalities used should not raise new complications. This apparently was intended to avoid sending white troops into the area in view of the racial tensions.

"The presence of the Belgian troops cannot be accepted as a satisfactory stop-gap arrangement," the secretary-general said, "pending the re-establishment of order through the national security force."

He proposed that the U.N., during a transition period, assist the Congo government in setting up its own security organization.

After hearing the secretary general's proposal, the Council took a recess for consultation.

Tunisian Delegate Mongi Slim submitted a two-point resolution:

1. An appeal to Belgium to withdraw its troops from the Congo.

2. An authorization for Hammarskjold, in consultation with the requested military force.

Ghana, a neighboring African republic upcoast from Congo, was the first to volunteer soldiers. The government in Accra said it would send troops as soon as Congo or the U.N. asked for them.

CALL FOR HELP

The U.N. also disclosed Congo had accused Belgium of aggression and called for a neutral U.N. force to help protect Congo territory. The appeal was signed by President Joseph Kasavubu and Premier Patrice Lumumba.

The two Congelese leaders stressed they did not want United States troops. They also emphasized that the requested forces were intended to repel outside aggression and not to restore internal order.

United States Pledges Aid To Congo Through U. N.

The Courier-Journal Louisville, Ky
Thur 7-28-60

Lumumba Talks With Herter Nearly 2 Hours

Washington, July 27 (AP)—The United States Wednesday pledged aid, through the United Nations, to Congolese Premier Patrice Lumumba to help his strife-ridden country survive as an independent African nation.

Lumumba, who was accorded full military honors, hailed the American offer as proof of sincere friendship and support.

But at the same time he said his 28-day-old republic would accept aid from Russia, or any other country, provided no political strings were attached.

He reaffirmed the Congo's policy of "positive neutralism" and said his people were not interested in East-West rivalry.

Has Long Talk With Herter

Lumumba outlined his views after meeting for an hour and 45 minutes with Herter at the State Department to discuss the future of his nearly bankrupt Government.

Herter in greeting him at the airport pledged the United States to do "all in our power" to rush technical and economic help to the Congo through the United Nations.

At a news conference afterward Lumumba, obviously pleased at the talks, described the offer as a promise of "all necessary wholehearted aid."

Wants Belgian Troops Out

We disclosed that he appealed to Herter to use all his influence with the Belgian Government to pull out the thousands of troops sent to protect Belgian and other European settlers. Lumumba stressed that he wants Belgian forces to evacuate even the military bases that had been promised them when the Congo was granted independence June 30.

He also urged the American press "to protest to the Belgian Government, which jeopardizes our newly agreed freedom."

Keep U. N. Hands Off, Belgium Tells Official

Brussels, July 27 (AP)—Belgian authorities told Dag Hammarskjold Wednesday the U. N. should keep its hands off Katanga and let Brussels and Leopoldville decide the future of Belgian treaty bases in the Congo.

Premier Gaston Eyskens announced these points in a news conference after the U. N. secretary-general had wound up a 6-hour visit to Brussels and headed south aboard a Dutch airliner for a firsthand look at the troubled young African nation.

Eyskens said the problem of Katanga, the rich, secessionist province in which Belgians have heavy investments, was an internal matter to be solved among the Congolese themselves.

"We request the U. N. not to intervene in the Congo's internal affairs," the Premier said.

Similarly, the Belgian Government told Hammarskjold the two Belgian military bases in the Congo do not concern the U. N. at present.

Congo Threatens To Ask Russia To Send In Troops If Belgian Forces Remain

The Courier-Journal Louisville, Ky.
Mon. 7-18-60 p. 1

Associated Press Wirephoto

COMMANDER CONSULTS IN CONGO . . . General Henry T. Alexander, center, British chief of Ghana defense force, leaves the United States Embassy in Leopoldville with John Elliott, left, Ghana's ambassador to Russia, and Col. Stephen J. A. Otu of Ghana's Army. Alexander consulted Thursday with the pair on command of an advanced U. N. force.

Says U. N. Has Failed In Mission

By The Associated Press

The Congo Government theatened last night to invite Russian troops into that newly independent nation unless Belgian military forces are withdrawn within three days.

The virtual ultimatum was issued to the United Nations and the Belgian Government.

Jacques Lumbala, one of nine secretaries of state in the Congolese Government, disclosed these developments at Stanleyville. He said the U. N. had failed in its mission to restore order in the Congo.

Lumbala, a short Congolese who has visited Moscow three times, had a public row with Premier Patrice Lumumba because he disclosed the Government's intentions.

Mutters Grimly

"I will take the severest measures against you," Lumumba muttered grimly to his Secretary of State as he utrned and walked away from him.

The scene occurred on the steps of the provincial governor's residence in Stanleyville after Lumumba had been informed of his deputy's remarks to a few newsmen.

The newsmen flew yesterday to Stanleyville from Leopoldville, capitol of the Congo, with General Henry T. Alexander, senior officer of the U. N. forces in the Congo. He is the commander in chief of the Ghana Army.

Alexander conferred 2 hours with Lumumba and President Joseph Kasavubu. When he finished he said the situation in the Congo had "worsened all over."

Asks Urgent Parley

Before his flight back to Leopoldville last night he sent an urgent message ahead asking that Dr. Ralph J. Bunche, U. N. undersecretary, United States ambassador Clare Timberlake, and the top Belgian commander meet him at the airport for urgent consultation.

Alexander had led a small U. N. force of 20 Ghanaian troops to Stanleyville to show the U. N. flag.

The city, Lumumba's home town, is still in the hands of the Congo Army. The army is putting on pretty much the same display it made in Leopoldville 10 days ago, cruising the streets with rifles and machine guns mounted on vehicles.

Alexander decided on the flying trip to Stanleyville after Belgians told him the situation was deteriorating and they planned to land paratroops.

Leaders Are Furious

The Congolese leaders were furious about the continued presence and widening activities of the Belgian troops in the country.

They were especially angry that Belgian paratroops were dropped into Kindu yesterday morning to disarm Congolese Army units there.

Lumbala, who speaks for the extreme left wing of the Congo Government, said the U. N. was incompetent and "must get out. We are going to call on another force which does not have imperialistic designs."

This other force would be the Soviet Union, he said.

"How long has it been since we appealed for aid?" he asked. "The Belgians are still there."

Lumbala Strides Out

The scene that followed took place on the steps of Governor-Gen. Jean Finan's residence.

Finan, a Congolese, was asked by newsmen if Lumbala's views were those of the Government.

Obviously shocked, he said he would ask the Premier.

He came out immediately and said: "No decision has been taken on this subject."

Soon Lumumba himself came striding out. He obviously was furious.

"Did you say that?" he demanded of Lumbala.

Lumbala, taken aback, tried to hedge.

"I didn't say it was an official declaration," he replied.

"Did you say it?" Lumumba demanded. "These journalists are not fools."

Telegram Prepared

Lumumba suddenly whipped around and said to Lumbala in front of the correspondents: "I will take the severest measures against you."

It seemed clear, however, that Lumumba was more embarrassed by the disclosure of the strategy than by the content of Lumbala's remarks.

It was learned reliably that the Congolese Government had a telegram all prepared for sending to Moscow.

Lumumba boasted that Russian troops could be in the Congo by tomorrow.

The Soviet Union already has condemned what it called "imperialist intervention" in the Congo and has warned it "will not shrink from resolute measures to curb the aggression."

In a reply to a message from Congolese leaders last week, Soviet Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev said:

"The demand of the Soviet Union is simple — hands off the Congo. The Government of the Congo can be assured that the Soviet Government will give the Congo republic the necessary help which may be required for the victory of your just cause."

U. N. Council To Meet

There were these other developments yesterday in the Congo situation:

1. At United Nations, N. Y., the president of the U. N. Security Council — at the request of Russia — called a meeting of the Council for tomorrow to discuss the Congo situation.

The Council has scheduled a meeting today on the Cuban situation, but it is hoped discussion of that matter will have ended by tomorrow morning, clearing the way for the session on the Congo.

Early last Thursday, the Council authorized Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold to send an international force to the Congo to maintain safety and order until Congolese troops are able to do so.

Calls For Troop Pull-Out

In the same action the Council called for the "withdrawal" of Belgian troops from Congolese territory. The Soviet Union failed in an effort to change this to "immediate withdrawal."

Soviet Delegate Arkady A. Sobolev told a reporter last night that he had asked that the Council meet tomorrow because "we want to listen to the report of the secretary-general on the fulfillment of the resolution." He said one reason he did so was tat the Belgian troops are still in the Congo.

Seizure Is Pondered

2. A freighter from Communist Poland carrying 300 tons of arms was reported by Belgian officials to be heading for the mouth of the Congo River, gateway to the troubled Congo.

"I believe she is somewhere in the estuary of the Congo River," one Belgian official said in Brussels.

If confirmed, it was presumed the arms were intended for Congo Premier Lumumba, who has cut diplomatic relations with Belgium—former ruler of the Congo—and demanded that Belgian troops get out.

over

The Belgian radio said Brus

Associated Press Wirephoto

CONFERRING ON THE CONGO situation are, from left, Dr. Ralph Bunche, United Nations undersecretary for special political affairs; Justin Bomboko, Congo Foreign Minister, and Lt. Col. Frank Merritt of the United States Air Force, who is supervising the unloading of food and supplies in the Congo.

sels was thinking of having the Belgian Navy seize the ship, but it quoted United Nations sources as saying this would be an act of war. The Belgian Navy controls the river area, operating from a base at Kitona near the river's mouth.

Problem For U. N.

The broadcast said the U. N. sources had told Belgian authorities the matter must be left in the hands of U. N. authorities in the Congo, now mobilizing military forces to restore order in the former colony.

Up to now, Lumumba has been unsuccessful in quelling mutiny in his army, which set off a reign of terror against whites. But he insists diplomatic relations with Brussels cannot be restored until all Belgian troops quit the Congo.

The Belgian Government has made clear its troops will remain until it is established that U. N. military forces now assembling from various African nations can guarantee the safety of Belgians and other whites.

18a 1960 CONGO UNITED NATIONS

U.N. MEETS TODAY ON SOVIET'S PLEA TO FREE LUMUMBA

N.Y. Times

New York, N.Y.

Council Called Into Session —Moscow Charges U.S. Finances Congo Unrest

Wed. 12-7-60

By SAM POPE BREWER

Special to The New York Times.

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y., Dec. 6 — The Soviet Union sought full-scale United Nations backing today for Patrice Lumumba, the imprisoned former Premier of the Congo.

Moscow demanded Security Council action on its charges that the United States and the North Atlantic Treaty powers were fomenting trouble in the Congo.

[In Leopoldville, Col. Joseph D. Mobutu, head of the army regime, denied Tuesday that Mr. Lumumba was being held under inhumane conditions. But he conceded that Mr. Lumumba had been mistreated after his arrest.]

The Soviet moves at the United Nations indicated a more aggressive stand on the Congo than at any time since Mobuto's regime expelled Soviet representatives from the Congo in September. The Russians specifically accused the United States of financing unrest in the Congo.

Mr. Hammarskjold met today with his eighteen-nation advisory committee on the Congo on the question of sending a conciliation commission to Leopoldville.

U. S. Makes Protest

The meeting was closed, but it was learned that the decision was to send at least some members of the commission to the Congo within the next few days.

A Soviet call for a meeting of the Security Council tonight on these charges was dropped after vigorous protests by the United States and other members.

Most members of the Council said they had not received the usual time for consultation with their governments and each other before the meeting.

The session was scheduled for 10:30 A. M. tomorrow.

Mr. Lumumba is being held in the Congo garrison town of Thysville. The deposed Premier is accused of crimes against his Congolese political opponents.

The Soviet move at the United Nations was foreshadowed by a press statement issued in Moscow yesterday and distributed here today. It included charges in unusually violent terms against the United States and the NATO powers.

The statement concluded with a promise that "the Soviet Union will render every possible friendly assistance and support to the people of the Republic of the Congo in the struggle against the imperialists."

This statement caused concern here. One of the chief worries all through the Congo crisis has been that the Soviet Union might ship arms directly to the Congo to bolster its interests.

The United States did not object to a Security Council meeting on the Congo situation. It did object to violation of normal procedure by Valerian A. Zorin, chief Soviet representative, who is President of the Security Council this month.

Mr. Zorin set a meeting for tonight without following the normal procedure of consulting all eleven members of the Council before setting the time. If Mr. Zorin had not been President, he could only have asked the President to consult the other members on a proposed meeting.

Other members agreed with the United States objection. According to a diplomatic source, Tunisia saved face for Mr. Zorin by informing him that the delegation needed time to ask instructions of its Government. The season was then scheduled for tomorrow morning.

The statement by the Soviet Government on the Congo distributed to the press here today declared:

"The developments in the Congo for the last few days show that the NATO colonial powers with the United States at the head have openly embarked on the road of abolishing the Parliament of the Republic of the Congo and the legitimate Government headed by Mr. Patrice Lumumba."

It charged that President Joseph Kasavubu, recently recognized by the General Assembly as the Congo's head of state, "has betrayed the Congolese people" in fighting Mr. Lumumba.

U.N. Chief Assailed

The statement also renewed Soviet attacks on Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold. It called him an accomplice of the colonialists. The statement also said:

"Attempts are being made in fact to restore in the country the rule of the colonial administration of the old (Belgian) and new (American) colonialists, who act in concert with each other as well as with the Portuguese, British and French colonial authorities in Africa."

It asserted also that "thousands of Belgian colonial officials, 'advisers,' officers, judges, industrialists and plantation owners driven out by the Congolese people have already returned to the Congo and boss the things there, screened by the United Nations command and Mr. Hammarskjold's official representatives."

"It is common knowledge," the statement continued, "that the criminal actions against the Parliament and the Government of the Congo have been openly directed by the United States Embassy in Leopoldville, which works together with the Belgians as a guiding center from which money is flowing to finance gangster actions in the Congo in the interests of the colonialists."

The Soviet statement concluded with the following demands:

¶Freedom for Mr. Lumumba and his associates, with restoration of the legitimate Government and Parliament."

¶Disarming by the United Nations of Congolese forces under Col. Joseph D. Mobutu.

¶Inevstigation by a special Asian-African committee of "the sources of financing and supplying arms to the Mobutu gang."

¶Expulsion of all Belgians from the Congo.

¶Immediate Security Council study of these proposals.

Deposed Premier of the Congo as He Was Brought Back a Prisoner

These film clips from CBS News show Patrice Lumumba as he was returned to Leopoldville last Friday by troops of Congo's military regime. Here, a soldier pulls back his head as he is lifted into a truck at Leopoldville ariport.

CBS News

Another soldier attempts to force Mr. Lumumba to eat a piece of paper found in the former Premier's pocket. The paper was a speech, in which Mr. Lumumba asserted his claim as the legal Premier of the new African republic.

U. S. Acts on Congo

By DANA ADAMS SCHMIDT

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6— The United States has urged Congolese leaders to give deposed Premier Patrice Lumumba "humane treatment" and a "fair trial."

The State Department said today that the United States ambassador to the Congo, Clare H. Timberlake, had made the appeal personally to President Joseph Kasavubu and to Col. Joseph D. Mobutu.

Mr. Lumumba was arrested by Colonel Mobutu's forces in Kasai Province Friday after he had fled from Leopoldville, apparently in an effort to reach his personal stronghold at Stanleyville.

United States officials expressed concern today that by treating Mr. Lumumba brutally and arbitrarily the Congolese leaders might throw away an opportunity to stabilize their regime.

Ill Treatment Feared

The United States believes that President Kasavubu returned from New York, where the United Nations seated his delegation, with enough prestige to begin to conciliate dissident provincial leaders.

Washington is said to fear that mistreatment of Mr. Lumumba might fan resentments into a civil war.

United States officials were shocked by recent photographs indicating that Mr. Lumumba had been treated roughly.

However, American officials noted that rough treatment of political rivals was not unusual in the Congo. They said that Alphonse Songolo, a Lumumba opponent, had been seized and beaten when he landed in Stanleyville six weks ago. He lost the sight of one eye, suffered a serious leg injury, and has been kept under arrest.

Other Congolese political prisoners and some Europeans are believed held by Mr. Lumumba's supporters in Stanleyville as hostages for Mr. Lumumba.

The State Department press officer, Lincoln White, said the United States had asked that Mr. Lumumba receive "regular visits by a physician from the Red Cross."

Soviet policy in bringing Mr. Lumumba's case before the Security Council is plainly to heighten feeling among the Congolese and to make conciliation impossible, United States officials said.

U.N. AIDE IN CONGO SAYS THAT ARMY ABUSED LUMUMBA

The New York Times
Mon, 12-6-60

Hammarskjold Presses Plea for Red Cross Inquiry Into Ex-Premier's Injuries

P. 1

By THOMAS J. HAMILTON
Special to The New York Times.

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y., Dec. 5—The United Nations' special representative in the Congo said today that Patrice Lumumba was being kept "in a cell under conditions reported to be inhumane in respect of health and hygiene."

Mr. Dayal reported that Mr. Lumumba, who was captured by Congolese soldiers and taken to Camp Hardy, near Thysville, "is said to be suffering from serious injuries received before his arrival" and that "his head has been shaven and his hands tied."

Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold made public with Mr. Dayal's report the texts of appeals he sent Saturday and today to Joseph Kasavubu, President of the Congo, for the application of "due process of law" for Mr. Lumumba.

Inspection Sought

In his message today Mr. Hammarskjold reinforced Mr. Dayal's request that representatives of the International Red Cross be permitted to check immediately on the conditions under which Mr. Lumumba and other members of the Congolese Parliament are being held.

In addition, Mr. Hammarskjold requested that the International Red Cross representatives obtain "the necessary assurances" for the safety of Mr. Lumumba and other detained members of Parliament.

Mr. Hammarskjold has not received a reply to his message Saturday, which was delivered to Mr. Kasavubu by a United Nations representative Sunday at Tshela, near Matadi. The Secretary General sent a second message after receiving angry protests against the arrest of Mr. Lumumba from members of his Advisory Committee on the Congo.

Supporters of Mr. Lumumba protested the deposed Premier's arrest at the meeting today of the Advisory Committee.

Cabo Sary, the Guinean representative, submitted two cablegrams from Sékou Touré, president of Guinea, demanding that the United Nations take immediate steps to bring about the release of Mr. Lumumba.

In addition, Guinea demanded that Mr. Lumumba be placed under the protection of the United Nations Congo force, that the Congolese forces under Col. Joseph D. Mobutu be disarmed and neutralized and that the safety of all members of the Congolese Parliament be guaranteed by the United Nations.

Other supporters of Mr. Lumumba, including Ghana, Mali, the United Arab Republic and India, also demanded that the United Nations take action.

No decision was taken at the meeting, which was called at Mr. Hammarskjold's request. The committee, which consists of the eighteen countries that have contributed contingents or military advisers to the United Nations Congo force, scheduled another meeting for tomorrow.

The Secretary General, it was understood, told the committee that he had called the meeting to obtain the views of its members in connection with a report that he will prepare on Mr. Lumumba's arrest.

P. 17

Mr. Hammarskjold, according to reliable sources, did not go into details. He suggested that a committee consisting of Nigeria, Malaya and Ethiopia go to Leopoldville to look into the arrest. In addition he called the attention of members to the financial crisis caused by United Nations operations in the Congo and said that $100,000,000 was needed to keep it there.

Both suggestions, according to reliable sources, brought sharp criticisms from supporters of Mr. Lumumba. They complained that President Joseph Kasavubu had not kept his promise to notify Mr. Hammarskjold by last Saturday whether he would receive a United Nations conciliation commission composed of 15 African and Asian members of the Advisory Committee.

The Secretary General did not make clear whether the $100,000,000 needed for the United Nations force would be in addition to the approximately $60,000,000 needed to keep it operating until the end of December. Mr. Hammarskjold recently estimated that it would cost $10,000,000 a month to maintain a force in the Congo next year.

A number of delegates believe that in any case the seating of President Kasavubu and his delegation by the General Assembly has given them implied United Nations backing and that it would now be useless for the conciliation commission to go to Leopoldville.

Meanwhile, there was no word from the Soviet delegation on whether it would ask for a meeting of the Security Council or the General Assembly on the arrest of Mr. Lumumba. A statement issued in Moscow today contained demands similar to those put forward by Guinea and other supporters of Mr. Lumumba.

Demands Made by Moscow

By SEYMOUR TOPPING
Special to The New York Times.

MOSCOW, Dec. 5—The Soviet Union called upon the United Nations tonight to disarm the forces of Col. Joseph D. Mobutu, Congolese army chief of staff.

It also demanded the immediate release of his prisoner, Patrice Lumumba, the deposed Premier.

The Government statement charged that the upheaval in the Congo had resulted in the first instance from "the flagrant interference in the internal affairs of the Congo by the United States Government."

The statement broadcast, by the Moscow radio, was the first definitive declaration of policy by the Kremlin since the termination here last week of the summit conference on strategy of international communism.

Putting forward a five-point program for restoring what it described as normal order in the young African republic, the Soviet Union proposed the following:

1. Immediate release of Mr. Lumumba and his deputies, who are held by Colonel Mobutu's troops, and all measures necessary for restoring the authority of the Lumumba Government.
2. Action by the United Nations command in the Congo to disarm Colonel Mobutu's forces.
3. Formation of a special commission of African countries to investigate Colonel Mobutu's sources of armaments and financial backing.
4. Evacuation of Belgian military and civilian personnel.
5. Discussion of the Congo situation in the Security Council and in the General Assembly at the current session.

New Move for Lumumba

The statement appeared to lay the basis for Moscow's most determined effort to obtain Mr. Lumumba's reinstatement.

The Government's hopes of restoring its influence in the Congo have rested on Mr. Lumumba since the republic was founded.

Immediately after Mr. Lumumba's ouster, Colonel Mobutu ordered the Soviet and Czechoslovak diplomatic and economic missions out of the country.

The Soviet Union pledged that its people would give any necessary assistance to rid the Congo of "colonialists" and expressed the conviction that Africa eventually would be free of all colonial influence.

Resuming Moscow's attack on Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold of the United Nations, the statement accused him of failing in his duties by not acting to free Mr. Lumumba The statement called Mr. Hammarskjold and Colonel Mobutu servants of imperialism.

It charged that the United States was seeking to facilitate a return to the Congo by its former Belgian rulers and called the United States Embassy in Leopoldville the center for directing the affairs of President Joseph Kasavubu's government.

UN Surveys Hard Lesson Of Action in Congo

The Christian Science Monitor Boston, Mass

By William R. Frye

United Nations Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

Thur. D. 9-60 United Nations, N.Y.

United Nations diplomats are taking a hard new look at the Congo to see why the UN rescue operation there is facing possible disintegration.

Key elements in the crisis are listed as follows:

- The obvious determination of the Communist powers to seize as much of Africa as they can and to convert that continent into a freedomless, voiceless, supine copy of the Eastern European satellites. In other words, Communist intention to enthrall those lands which have just been granted their political freedom by the West.
- An unceasing drumfire of Soviet attacks on Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold, his policies, his principal aides, and indeed on the UN itself as an institution.
- Deep-seated and sometimes irrational distrust of "Europeans" by Africans of virtually all shades of political opinion—distrust born out of the frustrations of white colonial rule.

Ambitions in Conflict

- Personal ambition, tribal hostility, provincial separatism, and primitive standards of education in the Congo.
- The ambitions of African leaders in some other countries for personal and/or national hegemony over tropical Africa. Foremost among these is President Kwame Nkrumah of Ghana.
- The extraordinary wealth of Katanga Province, making it a prime prize of power politics.
- Determination by Belgium, France, and the United States that they, rather than the Soviet Union, shall develop the wealth and control the politics of the Congo — that is, that Western influence shall not be ended in central Africa.

Many Factors Involved

There are other lesser reasons, observers here believe, including UN inexperience with handling power plays, limitations inherent in the UN Charter, shortsighted attitudes toward UN budget contributions, and misunderstanding of the functions of a UN peace force.

How these many elements are to be weighed depends primarily on the observer. That they all play a part few are prepared to dispute.

The Soviet Union, desperately seeking to extend its territorial control by every possible means, is, of course, losing no opportunity to focus major attention on Western ambitions. There is —and many observers add the word "unfortunately"—some basis in fact for the Soviet charge that Brussels, Paris, and Washington—the three are usually mentioned in that order—are "pulling the strings" and helping finance strongman Col. Joseph Mobutu, President Kasavubu, and Justin Bomboko, President of the College of Commissioners. Mr Hammarskjold himself hinted as much this week.

Facts Confused

Where fact ends and Communist propaganda begins, however, is the question hard to answer.

It is generally accepted as fact that both Communist and Western money has been spent in an effort to "buy up" members of the Congolese Parliament. This competition has tended to raise the going price of a vote from $200 or $300, as it reputedly was at one point, to more than twice that amount.

The West is determined, according to informants, to delay the convening of Parliament until this has been accomplished; to strengthen Colonel Mobutu in the meantime, and to frustrate Afro-Asian efforts on behalf of former Premier Patrice Lumumba.

The Afro-Asians and Communists are demanding that Mr. Lumumba be set free and restored to power. An early session of the Legislature might produce that result.

Mr. Lumumba is not popular with many UN diplomats. Even those who believe him entitled to the premiership do not always hold a brief for his capacity to govern. They argue that he is indispensable to a representative government because of his wide following, and that he has become a "symbol." To the West, he is indeed a symbol, but not of African nationalism; he represents cooperation with communism.

The UN command has been caught between Scylla and Charybdis. When Mr. Lumumba was in power, it balked him when he tried to plunge the country into civil war. This stand was interpreted as anti-Lumumba; Mr. Hammarskjold contended, and still contends, that it was pro-peace.

When Mr. Lumumba was ousted from power, the UN command protected him and long prevented his arrest. This stand was interpreted as pro-Lumumba; Mr. Hammarskjold contended that it, too, was impartial dedication to law and order.

Events Forced

In recent weeks, the West and its Congolese allies seized control of events, forced UN recognition of President Kasavubu, frustrated a pro-Lumumba conciliation commission, evicted the Ghana chargé d'affaires from the Congo—even though this meant firing on and killing UN troops—put Mr. Lumumba in jail, and threatened to cut off a key UN supply channel.

This, observers say, adds up to placing the West in a position very close to outright opposition to the UN command, to Mr. Hammarskjold, and to a large segment of the General Assembly. It is notable that Mr. Hammarskjold complained Dec. 7 of both Western and Soviet pressures.

Western diplomats insist that the end justifies the means; that keeping Communist influence out of Africa is a preeminent objective, necessitating violence, bribery, and other power-politics devices if it cannot be accomplished otherwise. Soviet methods are scarcely more delicate, they point out.

Mr. Hammarskjold, on the other hand, has all but said that these means will produce a quite different end: the discrediting of the UN, destruction of hopes for steady growth toward world order, and eventual chaos in the Congo. It could also produce world war, he has said.

The UN Security Council debated the problem until 1:10 a.m. Dec. 9, but did not appear much closer to resolving these fundamental problems.

Gordon N. Converse, Chief Photographer

Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold

He leads the United Nations on its delicate mission in the Congo

Who's on $5 Bill? 'The Box' Knows

The Christian Science Monitor Boston, Mass

By Harry C. Kenney

Staff Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

Mon. 11-28-60 New York

There is quite a thrill—to say nothing of qualms—about putting a $5 bill into the slot of an electronic "monster" and see it disappear with the hope and intent of getting back $5 in change.

For the first time, a machine which automatically identifies and accepts paper money of more than one denomination, as well as coins, is available for public use. One is now operating on trial here in the lobby of the general post office.

It is interesting to watch people who not only want to save time but to try the machine take a long look at even $1 before they put the machine and themselves to the test.

There is an instinctive resistance, a reluctant parting with, and a last long look at the bill. Then there is the sudden decision to go ahead—and behold out comes the right change—followed with a big grin and a "What do you know about that!"

There were those who hesitated to take a chance on "folding money," and trust the machine and used a quarter or half dollar. But the same thing followed—satisfied amazement in correct coin change.

The makers of the equipment —National Rejectors, Inc., won't tell all of its secrets but the machine rejects counterfeit bills, too. Perhaps there will be attempts to "trip" the equipment, but the Treasury Department has run 3,000 counterfeits through and all were rejected but one.

After a while you think about the machine itself. It is always making decisions, decisions, decisions. And what does it ask for in return? Maybe just a squirt of oil, but an occasional electronic ham sandwich would seem more appropriate.

U.S. and UN Caught In Congo Squeeze

The Christian Science Monitor
Boston, Mass.
Mon 11-28-60

By Courtney Sheldon
Staff Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor
Washington

Two African countries are openly attacking United States policy on Africa as the Kennedy administration prepares to grasp the reins in Washington.

The complaints of Guinea and Ghana are directed at the Congo situation. But they involve the broad spectrum of United States actions on African issues.

Will the Kennedy regime go along with Eisenhower administration ideas on how to handle problems arising with the emergence of a host of newly independent African states?

The advance indications are that President-elect Kennedy and his advisers are searching for means of dramatically impressing upon Africans that the United States has their best interests at heart.

Diplomats Wonder

Some European diplomats have wondered aloud if this won't mean siding with African nations against European colonial powers in the transition period.

The prospects, however, are that in actual practice the Kennedy administration will follow the Eisenhower policy of aligning itself more and more closely with United Nations actions in Africa.

President Sekou Touré of Guinea charged in a cablegram to President Eisenhower that the United States has been supporting "enemies of African emancipation."

The leader of this new African state has supported Patrice Lumumba as Premier of the Congo. His country very early in its existence accepted extensive aid from Communist-bloc countries, and Mr. Touré has toured the Soviet Union and Communist China.

Nkrumah Critical

The Touré blast was followed up by an accusation by President Nkrumah of Ghana. He said the United States, Britain, and France were supporting an attempt by Belgium to regain control over the Congo.

In replying to Mr. Touré, President Eisenhower declared that the United States has been "in the forefront of those nations who have favored emancipation of all peoples."

Associated Press Wirephoto Map

Shifts in Restless Continent

A new African alliance between Ghana, shown in black at lower right, and the Mali Republic (shaded area) was announced Sunday by Ghana President Nkrumah. Ghana is already linked with Guinea, also shown in black. Mr. Nkrumah said Ghana and Mali are to have a "common parliament." Meanwhile, Morocco, at top of map, proclaimed a day of mourning as the former French territory of Mauritania celebrated its independence Monday. Morocco claims Mauritania as part of its territory.

Nkrumah moves on several fronts: Page 10

"With specific reference to the Republic of the Congo, the United States warmly welcomed its independence. We have recognized and upheld its unity and territorial integrity through United Nations actions. We have refrained from unilateral intervention in its internal affairs," he said.

Not an Issue

The United States support of United Nations efforts in the Congo are not at all an issue between the incoming and outgoing administration.

During the campaign Mr. Kennedy confined his attacks on United States policy toward Africa to a criticism that we have been too slow in recognizing the trend of events in Africa.

He strongly urged full cooperation with United Nations economic and technical assistance programs. He asked for the establishment of a multination African educational development fund. He suggested that the United States stimulate private investment in Africa.

One clue to the thinking of a Kennedy administration is a statement by one of Mr. Kennedy's advisers on foreign policy during the campaign, Representative Chester Bowles of Connecticut.

Mr. Bowles, in an interview with this correspondent, said:

"Our task should be to help make the transition to independence as orderly as possible. We must work closely with the Africans, and yet be sensitive to the problems of European nations as they see their empires gradually come apart.

"We should associate ourselves with Africa's future, and do it imaginatively and constructively."

Police and Courts

There is the possibility that Mr. Kennedy would go further than Mr. Eisenhower in channeling United States aid through the United Nations and international agencies.

Mr. Bowles commented that "we might even agree, if the Soviets were to do likewise, to see that no American aid would go directly to these new countries except through some international or regional body."

Aside from encouraging United States young people to live in Africa for a term to help Africans, and establishment of programs to permit more Africans to study in this country, the Kennedy administration could be in the forefront of efforts to set up an all-African police force and a court system.

The latter could help settle boundary disputes which are already arising.

The present administration in recent months has been concentrating on strengthening the United States diplomatic corps in Africa. Mr. Kennedy has felt the United States has been unnecessarily slow in this effort in the past.

In any event, there will be many more opportunities to demonstrate United States interest in African states by prompt recognition and sending of diplomatic representatives quickly.

Competing Forces Undercut Effort

The Christian Science Monitor
Boston, Mass.
Mon. 11-28-60

By Mario Rossi
Special to The Christian Science Monitor
United Nations, N.Y.

High United Nations officials are privately expressing concern lest the world organization should before long be compelled to withdraw from the Congo.

The withdrawal—they say—may occur either because the United Nations command finds the situation in the former Belgian colony untenable or because of a specific request by the Congolese authorities.

This situation could result from:

- Deliberate but separate efforts by the Soviet Union and Belgium to terminate the UN Congo operation;
- Apparent unwillingness on the part of the United States to bring pressure to bear on Belgium to modify its current Congo policy;
- Deterioration in the internal situation in the Congo through efforts of the supporters of Patrice Lumumba to recover ground lost through the seating of President Kasavubu's delegation by the UN General Assembly.

Restraint Difficult

Belgium and the Soviet Union appear to be working toward the same objective of discrediting the United Nations in the Congo. High United Nations officials believe that Belgium can reassert its influence in its former colony only by reducing to a minimum the influence now being exercised by the United Nations.

The United States, they add, might find it impossible to restrain Belgium or to bring effective pressure to bear upon the regime of the Congolese Army leader, Col. Joseph Mobutu, now ruling the country with Belgian backing.

Meanwhile, United Nations officials believe that another serious crisis may be in the making in the area of Stanleyville. According to reliable information received here a great number of young intellectuals, supporters of deposed Premier Lumumba, have escaped to that area and are being actively organized by Communist elements.

There are also unconfirmed reports of clandestine Soviet arms shipments to the region.

"If you read in the papers that Lumumba has escaped to the Stanleyville area," a United Nations official said, "expect very serious trouble to develop."

[Reuters and the Associated Press reported from Leopoldville that Mr. Lumumba left there late Nov. 27 for Stanleyville. According to a statement from him released the next morning, he had gone there for only a few days on family affairs.]

U.S. Role Criticized

The role played by the United States in the General Assembly also is being viewed with disfavor by these UN officials. They feel that Washington has contributed to weakening the world organization's role in the Congo at a time when the United Nations was facing an extremely difficult task.

Some skepticism also is being voiced as to the role which the United Nations conciliation commission may be in a position to play, assuming that it will be able to leave for the Congo.

According to diplomatic circles here, President Kasavubu has promised to bring pressure to bear on his advisers in the Congo in order to make it possible for the commission to operate.

On the other hand, President Kasavubu's authority is based on the support he receives from the present military regime, which consequently he hardly dares antagonize, the sources say.

Colonel Mobutu represents, therefore, the key to the situation. But, according to high United Nations officials, he is dependent in turn upon Belgian support.

That is why these officials believe Belgium may succeed in having the last word in its former colony.

UNITED NATIONS
DR. RALPH J. BUNCHE

P. 1
Baltimore, Md.
Sat. 7-23-60
The Afro-Am

The Afro-American 8/6/60

COOLING OFF HOT SITUATION — Dr. Ralph Bunche, UN Undersecretary, who has been placed in command of UN forces in the Republic of Congo, reaches for a glass of water during a news conference in Leopoldville, the Congo capital. He told newsmen hated Belgian troops would be removed just as rapidly as UN soldiers arrive to replace them. (Story and more pictures on Congo on Page 9.)

Congo: Order—and New Order

Christian Science Monitor Boston, Mass. Fri. 7/15/60

Amid the dangers and confusion besetting Congolese transition to self-government, Dr. Ralph Bunche of the United Nations has struck what is at once the most hopeful and dramatic note in this whole strange epilogue of colonial rule. Late this week he announced in the Congo that UN troops would be in that new country within 48 hours.

This was good news to white people terrorized by mutinous Congolese soldiers.

It was good news for the new Congo Government. Congolese leaders faced a treacherous dilemma. On the one hand they were unable to cope with dissident elements within the country and on the other they feared that their lack of control might seem to justify foreign intervention inconsistent with Congolese independence, and possibly aimed at weakening the central authority and promoting provincial secession.

Among the most valuable aspects of the UN action is its promptness. How essential this is can be seen when the various aspects, both internal and external, of the Congolese crisis are put in one picture.

First, there are the complexities within the Congo itself. These are such that without some overriding controls on clashing interests, the Congo could become the scene of protracted internal struggle.

Advocates of strong central government, like Congo Premier Patrice Lumumba, are opposed by provincial leaders like Moise Tshombe of the copper-rich Katanga province. There is the further divisive influence of tribalism, which is strong in the Congo.

This situation becomes supercharged where Belgian conservative and industrial interests favor a loose federal system and strong provincial rule, as in Katanga, while many Belgian liberals stress Congo unity. And as Soviet and Chinese Communists advertise their support of the Lumumba regime.

Second, there is the cold-war aspect of the crisis.

Although Belgian troops were a needed security factor for terrorized white people, Moscow was quick to call the use of these troops aggression. It was quick also to assert that the United States was involved in an imperialist plot against Congo independence, while in fact the United States Government was obviously embarrassed by—and refused—what now appears to have been an unauthorized request from Congolese officials for American troops.

Chinese Communists got quickly on the ground with offers of support to Lumumba's government. But Ghanaian and other African leaders also moved to keep the crisis an African affair, by offering their own troops in the event of UN failure to act.

In the UN, where the Soviets joined instead of vetoing the Security Council move to provide an international force, the possibility that UN failure would lead Africans to appeal to the "Bandung nations," and thus enhance Chinese Communist influence in Africa, may have played a part in the Soviet decision.

Third and most hopeful of major developments is the UN move.

This not only applies benefits of the UN experience in Suez to the Congo. It puts precedent upon precedent toward establishing a UN enforcement agency despite long Soviet opposition to this hope.

It thus promises to convert Congo liabilities into new assets, favoring not only an orderly development as against hasty improvisation of self-government within the Congo but a notable advance in the building of international order.

First UN Troop Units Reach Léopoldville

Christian Science Monitor

Compiled from Associated Press and Reuters Dispatches

Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold has announced that four planeloads of troops from Tunisia and Ghana have arrived in Léopoldville as a start of the United Nations force in the Congo. The contingent was understood to number about 380 men.

The announcement of July 15 said the United States Air Force flew them in by an airlift that "will continue at a rapid pace over the weekend." Others are ready to depart, it added, in battalions offered by Tunisia, Ghana, Morocco, and Ethiopia in response to a request by Mr. Hammarskjold.

A United Nations spokesman said Sture Linner, a Swedish businessman, had reached Léopoldville to head an adminstrative task force as UN resident representative.

Twenty-two UN force officers and technicians to aid the troubled new African republic were on their way from Jerusalem.

While the UN worked with dispatch to forestall new acts of violence in the Congo republic Soviet Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev issued an inflammatory statement, warning of "decisive measures" the Soviet Union might take to put, as he phrased it, "an end to imperialist aggression."

Ghana, July 15, delivered the first token detachment for the international military force ordered by the UN Security Council.

Maj. Gen. Henry Alexander British commander of Ghana's small army, and a small detachment of his troops, set up headquarters in a downtown hotel to roars of approval from hundreds of Congolese gathered outside.

"All we are trying to do is to get everybody to put down their arms and not to do anything foolish or anything silly," A Ghanaian spokesman said.

Agreement Cited

He later told reporters he had reached agreement with Belgian and Congolese leaders on the division of their forces in the Leopoldville area.

The Briton indicated the Congo's native, mutiny-riddled Force Publique—now called the Congolese Army—had agreed to lay down its arms in this area "under certain conditions." General Alexander said he had "organized to keep the two apart—the Belgians and the Congolese—as a peace-making bid."

He said cautiously: "I am sure they will keep their word and there will be no clashes as long as there is no continuance of shooting and other incidents such as there were today.

General Alexander added he hoped to put the first UN troops into Belgian-held positions July 16.

He declared he had not been named UN commander "but there is no one else here to do the job at the moment." He said he would remain here "until some effective UN commander has arrived."

Katanga in Doubt

[The Belgian news agency Belga reported in Brussels July 15 that the Katanga Provincial Assembly July 14 ratified the provincial government decision to secede from the Congo and declare its independence.

[All "free world" countries were urged to recognize Katanga. However, reports said there was no quorum and no vote taken at the assembly session, which broke up in disorder as opposition assemblymen protested the manner of presenting the breakaway declaration. This left Katanga's constitutional position up in the air, observers said.]

Withdrawal Demanded

But Congolese representatives were reported to be insisting on the withdrawal of all Belgian troops before they give their weapons to the UN soldiers.

Belgian commander Gen. Roger Gheysen has declared that his troops will remain in the Congo until the United Nations can provide adequate protection for fleeing Belgian nationals and other whites.

With Belgian troops in virtual control of Léopoldville, Premier Patrice Lumumba and President Kasavubu left by plane July 14 for Stanleyville, 775 miles northeast of Léopoldville, amid speculation they were preparing to set up a new capital. But two hours from Léopoldville the Belgian plane crew said their radio had developed a "technical fault" and returned.

Angry Belgians set upon Lumumba and Kasavubu at the airport both before their departure and after their return. Refugees booed them and shook their fists. One European slapped at the Premier's glasses, but he remained impassive.

Message to Khrushchev

Messrs. Lumumba and Kasavubu had sent an appeal to Mr. Khrushchev, July 14 in which, according to a broadcast in the Moscow radio home service, they declared:

"Faced with the threat that is hanging over the neutrality of the Republic of Congo from Belgium and certain Western countries supporting Belgium's conspiracy against our independence we beg you to watch hourly over the development of the situation. It is possible that we may have to ask for the Soviet Union's intervention should the Western camp not stop its aggression against the sovereignty of the Republic of Congo. At present Congolese state territory is occupied by Belgian troops and the lives of the republic's President and Premier are in danger."

Support Promised

Mr. Khrushchev's message of July 15 promised full support to Messrs. Lumumba and Kasavubu. It said the Soviet Union condemns the "aggressors in the Congo" and calls for full sovereign rights for the Congolese people.

Mr. Khrushchev said that if the aggression continues the Soviet Union would find it necessary to consider more serious measures.

It added: "The Government of the Congo may be sure that the Soviet Government will accord to the Congo Republic the necessary help which may be needed for your just cause."

Moscow Skips Details

A Soviet Foreign Ministry spokesman did not say what "decisive measures" the Soviet Union might undertake or whether they might include troops or rocket warnings.

Mr. Khrushchev's message said if the aggression continued despite the United Nations resolution calling for the withdrawal of Belgian troops from the Congo the Soviets would take more decisive measures "both within the United Nations organization and with the states sympathizing with the cause of the Congo."

Mr. Khrushchev's message said the "imperialist intervention" in the Congo represented an attempt to "stop the process of complete liberation of Africa and, if possible, to reverse the process."

The message said the Belgians "for decades have been prattling about their civilizing mission in the Congo, but they did all they could to prevent even a single Congolese from getting a higher education or getting an officer's commission in the army."

The Soviet leader said the struggle of the Congolese was "the struggle of hundreds of millions of people in Africa, Asia, and Latin America, Indochina, Algeria, Suez, Guatemala, Jordan and Lebanon, Guinea and Cuba."

The official Communist Party newspaper Pravda said events in the Congo represented "preplanned and jointly prepared collective aggression by United States, British, French, West German, and Belgian colonialists, which they have undertaken to bolster the rule of the imperialist monopolies" in the Congo.

There was mounting speculation that Premier Lumumba's government was split between a moderate group, led by Foreign Minister Justin Bomboko and favoring closer collaboration with the Belgians, and extremists led by Lumumba, demanding a full break with the former colonial ruler.

Mr. Lumumba sent a sharp cable to Brussels July 14 breaking off diplomatic relations with Belgium, but the chief of the Congo Cabinet in Léopoldville later declared the break was not valid, "having failed to be properly deliberated by the government as a body."

The flight of Europeans from the Congo continued. More than 3,000 refugees arrived in Brussels in 28 planes July 14.

Food Airlift Starts

The United States consulate-general in Salisbury, Southern Rhodesia, said 371 Americans had been flown out to Rhodesia.

More than 3,000 refugees of all nationalities have reached Salisbury.

The United States Air Force has begun airlifting urgently needed food supplies from Wiesbaden, Germany, to the strife-torn Congo, July 15.

A Hercules C-130 took off from Chateauroux, France, with 15 tons of food.

A total of 1,800 tons of flour rice, and powdered milk will be airlifted to the Congo for distribution at the direction of UN Undersecretary Ralph Bunche the Air Force said. President Eisenhower, July 14, authorized the immediate shipment of 300 tons of flour from American stocks in Europe.

Six Tunisian police officers flew to the Congo July 14 as an advance party. They were led by Mongi Abdelkafi, chief commissioner of the Tunisian Police Force.

Britain Offers Aid

The British Government announced July 15 it is putting up £10,000 ($28,000) to provide emergency food supplies for the Congo. A Foreign Office announcement said this action was taken in response to an appeal by Dag Hammarskjold, Secretary-General of the United Nations.

The Foreign Office also announced that aerial evacuation of British refugees from the Stanleyville area has begun.

Meanwhile, King Mohammed of Morocco offered two battalions of Moroccan troops for the United Nations force and government sources in New Delhi said India would give sympathetic consideration to any UN request for troops.

UNITED NATIONS
DR. RALPH J. BUNCHE

UN Spurs Africa Missions

Christian Science Monitor 7/18/60

By William R. Frye
United Nations Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

United Nations, N.Y.

The United Nations is attempting to ease the often-explosive transition to nationhood of African people emerging from colonialism.

It is an effort which, UN officials readily acknowledge, falls far short of the need. Many African peoples lack nearly all the essentials for self-government: education, trained leaders, a sense of national coherence, the economic infrastructure on which to build a decent life.

The UN does not have the resources to meet such a massive challenge. Nevertheless, it is doing what it can.

For example:

¶ Dr. Ralph J. Bunche, one of Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold's top aides, has gone to the new Congo Republic (formerly the Belgian Congo), which is due to become independent June 30. He will stay at least two months and perhaps longer.

Congo in Turmoil

Officially, Dr. Bunche is there to plan UN programs of assistance. Unofficially, few would be surprised if Congo leaders sought out his advice on a wide range of political, economic, and administrative matters.

The Congo is in the midst of serious political turmoil. Roadblocks have been thrown up around the Legislature in Léopoldville, the capital, as rival tribes engage in knife and fist fights over positions of power. One faction has set up a rival provincial government. Under the circumstances, the Bunche mision is trouble shooting of the first order.

¶ Pier P. Spinelli, director of the European Office of the United Nations and hence also a high-ranking official, went to the Republic of Togo at the time it became independent (April, 1960) for similar assistance-planning. He is still engaged in the task, along with other duties.

¶ Adrian Pelt, Mr. Spinelli's predecessor in Geneva and a former UN high commissioner for Libya, went to Guinea in 19[illegible] again, according to an official announcement, to plan "a balanced program of assistance, including technical assistance, which the United Nations could give to Guinea on a long-term basis." Again, his activities in fact were somewhat broader in scope and importance.

Expert Aid

Associated Press

Dr. Ralph J. Bunche
UN trouble shooter

Landmark Personified

¶ Constantin A. Stavropoulos, top legal counsel to the Secretary-General, is on still another mission to Somalia. Somalia is engaged in a difficult legal dispute with Ethiopia over their mutual border.

A UN official, according to all accounts, is a distinct landmark in a country just emerging from colonialism. He has know-how, and unlike some of the former colonial administrators who may stay on to help, is universally regarded as disinterested. He is treated as a VIP.

Mr. Hammarskjold is attempting to build up a reservoir of administrative talent on which such countries may draw — not just for unofficial guidance and advice, but to step in and actually run a part of the new government. The program is known as Opex (Optional and Executive Personnel).

As of June 1, 18 Opex officers were on duty, and 4 more were about to begin service. Half of the 18 have posts in Africa.

The program is limited by lack of funds. Only $300,000 was available for 1960, Opex's second year. There have been no fewer than 176 requests from 39 countries for help. Only about one out of every 10 could be filled.

Mr. Hammarskjold is seeking a fund of at least $5,000,000 a year not merely for Opex but for many forms of assistance to Africa—including technical assistance (idea-sharing) and preinvestment planning of the type done by the UN Special Fund under Paul G. Hoffman.

Under UN Wing

Politically, the UN is taking new African countries under its wing as soon as they become independent. The Security Council recommended June 28 that the new Federation of Mali be admitted to membership.

Earlier this year, Togo and Cameroun also obtained Council endorsement. The Republic of Madagascar has applied, and the Congo Republic where Dr. Bunche is stationed—there are two countries in Africa by that name, the other being an adjoining French territory—is expected to do so this week. They are assured of approval.

The General Assembly, which meets Sept. 20, is expected to complete the formalities speedily as one of its very first acts. These four African countries then will swell the total UN membership to 86, and at least four others are also expected to be ready by September.

In the not-too-distant future, Mr. Hammarskjold has estimated, the UN may have 120 members. Most of the newcomers will be from Africa. It is safe to say that $5,000,000 will not long remain the sum sought for assistance to these new members of the world community.

18a 1960

ETHIOPIA

Son Ousts Selassie in Ethiopia

The Atlanta Constitution

Atlanta, Ga.

Thurs. 12-15-60

LONDON (AP)—A new Ethiopian government under Emperor Haile Selassie's son was formed Wednesday at Addis Ababa while the "King of Kings" was thousands of miles away on a state visit to Brazil.

Associated Press Wirephoto

"EMPTY PROMISES"

Crown Prince Wassan

The new regime has some of the earmarks of the nationalism and socialism prevalent in neighboring Egypt and Sudan. It was proclaimed by Crown Prince Asfa Wassan, 44, as a means to end "3,000 years of injustice," a date that would go back to pre-Christian times.

FUTURE IN DOUBT

The announcement broadcast from Addis Ababa left in doubt the future of Haile Selassie, 68, the bearded Coptic Christian who had Biblical forebears and has been known as "the Holy Lion of Judah" as well as "King of Kings." He mounted the throne 30 years ago, was driven into exile by Mussolini's Fascist legions, and returned to command in 1941 with British aid.

In Sao Paulo, Brazil, the Emperor cancelled a dinner engagement Wednesday night and reliable sources reported he was preparing to leave Brazil by air around midnight.

NO INDICATION

He had given no indication of cutting short his state visit to Brazil.

Selassie arrived in Brazil Monday and had planned to go on to Rio de Janeiro Thursday.

Addis Ababa radio said Parliament has been dissolved.

The radio quoted from a communique setting out aims of the new regime as raising the standard of living, advancing industry and training the nation's young men for responsible posts. It said foreign capital would remain untouched.

CLAIMS ARMY SUPPORT

The crown prince, eldest son of Selassie, said the new regime is backed by the army and the police. He did not give the precise composition of the new government but said it would include himself, the army and "educated Ethiopians."

The prince visited the United States and met President Eisenhower last year.

Much of the prince's brief radio announcement was devoted to claims that Ethiopians were being held back from achieving prosperity.

"The people of Ethiopia have

"PERFECTLY CALM"

Emperor Selassie

waited for a long time with patience in the hope that they will be free some day of oppression, poverty and ignorance," the crown prince said.

"But empty promises can no longer satisfy the people who now want concrete action, aimed at improving their standard of living.

"Development plans have not been executed in practice and the long strides being made by the newly independent African states have made the people of Ethiopia realize that these new nations are advancing pretty fast, leaving the people of Ethiopia behind.

"The laws and regulations of the country have been abused to deprive the common people of their rights and privileges in order to boost up the riches of the favored few."

To Selassie, the new leaders of Africa are upstarts. He traces his ancestry back to King Solomon and the Queen of Sheba. His country has been independent almost continuously since the 11th century B.C. Its people are Coptic Christians and the emperor's name is translated "Power of the Holy Trinity."

He was named Ras (prince) Tafari Makonen by his father, viceroy to the throne, and became governor of a province at 18, shortly after his father died. He was regent in the 1920s and had to fight and conspire to gain the throne. In 1928, he led troops that killed Empress Zauditu's husband, who was not of royal blood.

In 1930 he ascended to the throne after winning out over other feudal barons. He abolished slavery, gave his country a constitution and Parliament but declared his own power indisputable.

In 1936, when Mussolini attacked Ethiopia in an effort to build up an empire for Italy, Selassie emerged from obscurity and pleaded for action by the League of Nations.

"International morality is at stake," he warned.

The plight of the small king, slightly more than 5 feet tall, drew worldwide sympathy but the League of Nations did nothing to check the spread of fascism. Soon the world was on the way to World War II, and the league on its way to oblivion.

Selassie Ousted in Ethiopia

The Florida Times-Union

Thurs. 12-15-60

New Regime Headed by Son of 'Lion of Judah'

LONDON, Dec. 14 (AP)—A new Ethiopian government under Emperor Haile Selassie's son was formed today at Addis Ababa while the "king of kings" was thousands of miles away on a state visit to Brazil.

The new regime has some of the earmarks of the nationalism and socialism prevalent in neighboring Egypt and Sudan. It was proclaimed by Crown Prince Asfa Wassan, 44, as a means to end "3,000 years of injustice," a date that would go back to pre-Christian times.

The announcement broadcast rome Addis Ababa left in doubt the future of Haile Selassie, the bearded Coptic Christian who sprang from Biblical forebears and has been known as "the holy lion of Judah" as well as "king of kings." He mounted the throne 30 years ago, was driven into exile by Mussolini's Fascist legions, and returned to command in 1941 with British aid.

Selassie Calm

In Sao Paulo, Brazil, the emperor said he was "perfectly calm," and that everything was normal when he heard from home this morning. Later a spokesman there said:

"The emperor has decided to keep his schedule while awaiting information from official sources in Addis Ababa on this revolution."

Addis Ababa radio said parliament has been dissolved.

The radio quoted from a communique setting out aims of the new regime as raising the standard of living, advancing industry and training the nation's young men for responsible posts. It said foreign capital would remain untouched.

The crown prince, eldest son of 68-year-old Selassie, said the new regime is backed by the army and the police. He did not give the precise composition of the new government but said it would include himself, the army and "educated Ethiopians."

The prince visited the United States and met President Eisenhower last year.

Much of the Prince's brief radio announcement was devoted to claims that Ethiopians were being held back from achieving prosperity.

"The people of Ethiopia have waited for a long time with patience in the hope that they will be free some day of oppression, poverty and ignorance," the crown prince said.

Empty Promises

"But empty promises can no longer satisfy the people who now want concrete action, aimed at improving their standard of living.

"Development plans have not been executed in practice and the long strides being made by the newly independent African states have made the people of Ethiopia realize that these new nations are advancing pretty fast, leaving the people of Ethiopia behind . . .

"The laws and regulations of the country have been abused to deprive the common people of their rights and privileges in order to boost up the riches of the favored few."

To Selassie, the new leaders of Africa are upstarts. He traces his ancestry back to King Solomon and the Queen of Sheba. His country has been independent almost continuously since the 11th century B.C. Its people are Coptic Christians and the emperor's name is translated "power of the holy trinity."

Ethiopian Ruler Ousted By Son

The Commercial Appeal

Crown Prince Seizes Reins While Haile Selassie Visiting Brazil

By United Press International

Crown Prince Asfa Wassan of Ethiopia led a "pe[illegible] d'etat yesterday [illegible] sent father, Em[illegible] Selassie I, the [illegible] Lion of Judah, an Addis Ababa broadcast announced.

The Ethiopian Foreign Ministry reported the "peaceful change" while the 69-year-old Emperor was on a state visit to Brazil.

Selassie, reached in Sao Paulo, refused to comment on his downfall, but an aide said "everyone is surprised."

The coup by the crown prince ended 30 years of rule by Selassie, who governed like a feudal monarch from his palace in Addis Ababa.

A series of broadcasts made it clear the coup came about because the 44-year-old crown prince and his backers believed Selassie had failed to turn his kingdom into a modern nation.

Normal communications with Addis Ababa were out. First reports of the uprising came in coded dispatches from the American, British and French embassies which said the Imperial Household Guard of 6,000 elite troops had risen against the Emperor.

Selassie is a Coptic Christian who claims descent from Solomon and the Queen of Sheba.

He won world sympathy in 1935 when he went before the League of Nations in Geneva to appeal for aid against Italian dictator Benito Mussolini, then ready to invade Ethiopia.

He won sympathy but no support and the Italians marched in, capturing his kingdom after a long and drawn out fight with his ill-equipped troops. He fled to London in May, 1936, but returned when the British drove out the Italians four years later.

AFRICA: THE SEARCH FOR UNITY

The New York Times New York

Proposals for a Strong Union Run Into National Rivalries and Fears of a New 'Imperialism'

Sun, 6-26-60

By JAY WALZ

Special to The New York Times.

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia, June 25 — Representatives of a score of African states, either independent or hoping soon to be, have labored for solidarity here for the past two weeks. But they disclosed by their deliberations that unity, like independence, entails growing pains.

When their meetings ended Friday night the delegates had agreed unanimously on recommending strong sanctions against the Union of South Africa including cutting off diplomatic relations. But of the independent states represented at the conference only the United Arab Republic has diplomatic relations with South Africa.

It was easy to obtain virtually unanimous agreement on other resolutions. The delegates urged full material and moral support for the Algerian provisional government and they unanimously condemned France for exploding experimental nuclear devices in the Sahara. They unanimously urged collective and individual state efforts to eradicate colonization from Africa and recommended united efforts by the African states to improve economic conditions for Africans.

Diverse Voices

But the voices of emerging personalities and ambitions, individual and national rivalries seemed not always ready to yield to the cause of a yet-to-be-defined common good of all Africans.

Ghanaians, as is widely known, were eager for a United States of Africa — a strong union—as advocated by Kwame Nkrumah. But Maitima Sule, the chief delegate of Nigeria, advised the conference that plans for African union were premature and dangerous. Without naming names he said union now could permit the rise of an ambitious leader of the Hitler type who could subject the newly independent states to a new imperialism. Nigeria supports the idea of a loose association of states as proposed by President William V. Tubman of Liberia.

Other delegates such as Julius Nyerere, nationalist leader of British-ruled Tanganyika, were for regional alliances bringing together states with common political and economic interests and needs.

Mr. Nyerere, respected generally as a moderate nationalist, is among those who fear above all the emergence of a Balkanized Africa. He would like the prospective independent states to develop a little more stability first. He is said to be motivated in part by a desire to maintain the services of the British-controlled East African High Commission with headquarters in Nairobi, which administers communications, customs, excies and currencies for the territories of Tanganyika, Kanya, Uganda and Zanzibar.

Local Disputes

The conference never got down to discussions of the purely local disputes which almost all states have. The delegate from Somalia, which gains independence as does the Belgian Congo on June 30, urged "friendly and cooperative" settlement of boundary disputes which he said were faced "all over the continent." But out of respect for the Ethiopian hosts he refrained from mentioning the Ethiopian-Somali boundary dispute, settlement of which his new government will probably be pressing soon.

While the meeting revealed a common resolve to punish South Africa by diplomatic and economic boycott for its repression of natives, discussions made it just as clear that most states would be preoccupied for a long time with their own political and economic problems.

The United Arab Republic sought to use the conference as an instrument for advancing the "war" against Israel. Its chief delegate warned, in the name of "outcast" Palestine refugees, against infiltration by Israeli technicians and investors in under-developed countries. But many states south of the Sahara are benefiting from Israeli technical and economic help, and one delegate of a beneficiary government said: "We have no stomach for the Arab-Israeli dispute. We have enough troubles of our own and will take all the help from Israel we can get."

AFRICAN NATIONALIST CONFERENCE

Represented at conference:

Independent nations or those becoming independent this year — Other areas represented by African nationalists

182

Boycott of South Africa spreads over continent

The Afro-American Baltimore, Md.

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia — The 13 - member Conference of Independent African States voted unanimously Friday to boycott South African goods, ships and planes. 7-2-60

The unprecedented action, amounting to a political and economic boycott of the Verwoerd Government, was taken toward the end of the week-long conference of African states held here.

Lashing out at South Africa's policy of total racial segregation, the conference delegates also invited African states which are members of the British Commonwealth to take all steps to secure the exclusion of South Africa from the commonwealth.

Arab nations were asked to urge oil companies to prevent Arab oil from being sold to South Africa.

Nana Mahomo, a member of the National Executive Council of the Pan - Africanist Congress, presented the boycott proposal to the delegates in a memorandum, in which he said that the South African situation could precipitate "Another Algeria ... on a more horrible, more destructive, more bloody scale because of the . . . fanaticism of the South African Herrenvolk (master race.)

He urged to delegates to carry to the governmental level all economic and political sanctions proposed and voiced the hope that by the end of July "all African states will be acting collectively on- the boycott of South African goods."

Why Be Surprised?

The Afro-Am

(An Editorial)

Arthur L. Richards, a career diplomat in foreign service for 30 years has arrived in Addis Ababa as the new United States ambassador to Haile Selassie's empire.

Baltimore, Md.

He is one more in a long succession of white men the State Department has sent to this black African country. Not only have all of his predecessors been white, but so have their assistants. 7-2-60

The Point Four director in Ethiopia is white and all previous directors have been white. All officers of the U.S. Military are white. The director of the U.S. Information Service and all of his assistants are white.

No colored American has ever been assigned to an official position with any American organization operating in the land of the Lion of Judah.

Yet when Emperor Selassie, following a recent tour of Russia and her satellites, returned home with a Soviet loan of $100 million, the State Department expressed surprise, consternation and distress.

It shouldn't have.

World bank grants aid

The Afro-Am Baltimore, Md.

WASHINGTON

Ethiopian agriculture is being promoted by the World Bank through loans for the development of highways, bridges processing facilities, and a telephone system, reports a recent issue of "Foreign Agriculture," a U.S. Department of Agriculture publication. 6-10-60

As a result of new roads, Ethiopia's coffee exoprts have risen 75 percent. The country also exports grains, hides and skins and oilseeds.

Within the past 10 years, the World Bank has lent Ethiopia $23.1 million. The program of the World Bank for making credit available to under - developed countries will be enlarged soon through the establishment of the International Development Association as an affiliate of the bank.

Asks Congolese to Settle Differences

The Pittsburgh Courier — Pittsburgh, Pa

Selassie Denounces Racial Bigotry

Sat. 11-12-60

(Courier Press Service)

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia —A ringing denunciation of racial bigotry plus an appeal to Congolese leaders to settle their differences marked Emperor Haile Selassie's 30th anniversary address.

Keynoting the annual celebration of his coronation by over 20 million subjects, the "Lion of Judah" declared, "No African can rest content with the prospects of the future, unless, and until the horrible

HAILE SELASSIE

. . . "no African can rest" ract of racial discrimination has been wiped from the face of the globe."

The Emperor also urged a settlement of differences in the Congo between African leaders there, asserting that they should "lay aside personal differences and ambitions and work together for unity and stability in their nation."

■

AT 68 YEARS OF AGE, Emperor Haile is ruling over the oldest Christian nation in the world. He is the 225th in line of the oldest dynasty in history, tracing his descent back to the Queen of Sheba and Menelik, her son by King Solomon.

To his countrymen he is known as the "King of Kings," "Elect of God," and the "Conquering Lion of Judah."

Born Ras Tafari Makoennen, a grandson of Emperor Mehelik II, he was crowned Emperor on Nov. 2, 1930. The title Haile Selassie means "The Mighty of Trinity."

The Emperor also hailed aid given his nation by both the United States and the Soviet Union but emphasized, "Ethiopia continues to welcome foreign private investment despite past disappointments." He announced that he is planning to visit Latin America and West Africa in the near future.

The Emperor pointed out that "personal contacts among heads of state can contribute greatly to resolving the perplexing problems facing the world today."

The Afro-Am — Baltimore, Md.

Sat. 11-12-60 — Sat. 11-12-60

Ethiopia p. 9 18a

EMPEROR HAILE SELASSIE
Hits Racial Bigotry

Selassie denounces jim crow

The Afro-American — Baltimore, Md.

Sat. 11-12-60

p. 9 18a

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia — Emperor Haile Selassie observed the 30th anniversary of his coronation by soundly denouncing all aspects of racial discrimination.

In a speech opening Ethiopia's Parliament, the Emperor said:

"No African can rest content with the prospects of the future unless and until the horrible fact of racial discrimination has been wiped from the face of the globe."

The Emperior thanked the United States government for its recent offer to start building Ethiopia's first university.

The American offer was made after the Soviet Union had made an outright gift of a large technical school.

The Emperor also called upon leaders of the Congo to "lay aside personal differences and ambitions and work together for unity and stability in their nation."

To those who would thwart the Congolese struggle for freedom, the Emperor said:

"Do not seek to perpetuate in some different guise the old forms of economic and political exploitation and oppression. Africa needs and desires and welcomes help other than physical and moral but Africa must, nevertheless, be left to develop herself, people and resources as Africans determine."

'Inhuman Massacre' Reported In Ethiopia

The Courier-Journal

Embassy Says Support Rising For Selassie

Louisville Ky.

Tue 12-16-60

London, Dec. 15 (AP)—The Ethiopian radio reported Thursday night an "inhuman massacre" in Addis Ababa, where Crown Prince Asfa Wassan has been proclaimed King, replacing his father, deposed Emperor Haile Selassie. Several civilians were reported killed and many wounded.

The broadcast said "a group of bandits . . . opened fire on peaceful civilians demonstrating for the new representative people's government." It reported later that "the two fighting parties have settled their dispute" and agreed to work with the new regime.

But the Ethiopian Embassy in Paris, still loyal to the bearded 68-year-old "king of kings," said the fighting was between partisans of father and son. Claiming rising support for Selassie, the Embassy said fighting had also broken out in Asmara, a city of 90,000 between Addis Ababa and the Red Sea.

Two Called Traitors

The role of the military in the kingdom of northeast Africa was in doubt. But at least part of the army in the capital was known to be loyal to the new regime. Officials in London were told army units were guarding British, United States, and French embassies in Addis Ababa.

The Ethiopian radio declared those who attacked the demonstrators were "under the influence of two traitors."

These were named as General Kabeda Gabre, former commander in chief of the Ethiopian Army, and Merid Mengesha, who was Selassie's minister of state under the Defense Ministry. A spokesman at the Ethiopian Embassy in London said the two "seem to be supporters of the Emperor."

Associated Press Wirephoto Map

BATTLE SCENE . . . Cross marks Addis Ababa, capital of Ethiopia, where fighting reportedly broke out yesterday.

Prince 'Under Pressure'

While the fighting raged, Selassie headed home from Brazil for a showdown, cutting short a visit abroad. Apparently bent on keeping him from landing, the Ethiopian regime barred all flights in and out of the kingdom.

Selassie arrived late Thursday at Roberts Field, Liberia, after a transatlantic hop from Recife.

Three hours later, his Ethiopian airliner was reported to have started the 4,000-mile flight across Africa.

General Abiye Abebe, the Emperor's representative in Eritrea, on the Red Sea, cabled the Ethiopian Embassy in London insisting that the army air force, and the country at large were loyal to the Emperor. Abebe said the Crown Prince was "under pressure from certain elements of the imperial bodyguard and police." The implication was that these forces, not the army, were behind Wednesday coup.

Said To Be Neutral

The Ethiopian radio announced that Ras Imeru, 68, former ambassador to the United States, the Soviet Union, and India, is the new Premier under Wassan.

Imeru commanded Ethiopian forces fighting Mussolini's Italian invaders in the 1930's and was jailed in Italy in 1936 after the conquest of Ethiopia. He was assigned to Washington in 1949 and served four years.

The Ethiopian ambassador in Stockholm, a friend of the new Premier, said Selassie deliberately had kept Imeru in assignments abroad.

The Ambassador, Teferi Chareou, implied the 44-year-old Crown Prince will be pretty much of a figurehead, saying "he will not be a ruler in the same spirit as his father."

Chareou said the new Government will be non-Communist and neutral. Selassie has leaned to the West.

ETHIOPIAN REVOLT REPORTED BROKEN; SELASSIE HAILED

The New York Times

Envoys in U. S. and Britain Say Rebels Were Seized —Emperor in Asmara

New York

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 16 — The Ethiopian Embassy here reported today that the attempt by the Imperial Guard to overthrow Emperor Haile Selassie had "ended in complete failure early this morning."

Ambassador Mikael Imru issued a statement saying that the army and air force, which had remained loyal to the Emperor, had captured Addis Ababa, the capital, and "overpowered and seized" the "disgruntled officers" of the Imperial guard. The rebels had seized the city last Wednesday.

[The Emperor arrived at Asmara, Ethiopia, Friday after a hurried journey home from Brazil and was cheered by thousands of his subjects and notified of the reports that the rebllion had been crushed, according to Reuters.]

Post 12-17-60

Prince Not Mentioned

The rebel group was reported at first to have been led by the Emperor's son, Crown Prince Asfa-Wossen. Later reports suggested that the Crown Prince might have acted "under duress."

The Ambassador's statement this noon made no mention of the part played by the Crown Prince and threw no light on his fate or his whereabouts.

Nor did the Ambassador say anything about his father, Ras Imru, the 68-year-old cousin of the Emperor who was reported to have been appointed Premier of the government formed by the rebels.

The Ambassador stated that the loyal forces had been led by Maj. Gen. Merod Mengsha, Chief of Staff; Maj. Gen. Kebede Guebre, army commander, and Brig. Gen. Assefa Ayene, air force commander.

According to the Ambassador, the Emperor, who had been in São Paulo, Brazil, when the revolt occurred, had arrived back in Ethiopia.

General Sends Message

The Ambassador's account of the situation was based on a message from Gen. Abye Abebe, the Emperor's representative in Eritrea.

Meanwhile, the State Department reported that the United States Ambassador in Addis Ababa, Arthur L. Richards, had toured the city and found the fighting apparently had ended.

Ambassador Richards has informed the department that there were no known American casualties.

Loyalty to Emperor Reported

Special to The New York Times.

LONDON, Dec. 16—The Ethiopian Embassy here reported tonight that it had received a message from Gen. A. Abebe, the Emperor's son-in-law and the Governor of Eritrea, saying that loyal army and air force units were waiting to push toward Addis Ababa with the Emperor at their head.

The message also said that Addis Ababa had been recaptured from the rebel group.

Reports received at the United States Embassy and at the British Foreign Office told of scattered fighting in Addis Ababa this morning. But this was described as sporadic.

Diplomatic sources said the reports seemed to suggest that the rest of the country was quiet.

The 68-year-old Emperor was reported to have declared in Asmara that he could not believe that his son could have "indulged in such an affair."

"I have no doubt that his name was only used by the rebels," he said.

It was believed that some units of the Imperial Guard, the Emperor's personal troops, had led the uprising. Behind them was a group of young, Western-educated civil servants and Government officials who had become dissatisfied with the pace of the Emperor's program to modernize his primitive country.

A message from General Mengsha, the Chief of Staff, was broadcast in Ethiopia. He said that three of the revolutionary leaders had fled.

They were named as Maj. Gen. Menges Tou, Maj. Gen. Neway and Maj. Gen. Tsingue Debub.

Later, a broadcast was heard appealing to the population to remain faithful to the Emperor. It advised the insurgents to pray for his forgiveness.

The Emperor had been in Brazil on a state visit when the uprising began. He immediately started to return to Ethiopia in his personal airplane. He arrived at Fort Lamy, Chad, early today, but the aircraft developed engine trouble and another had to be flown to him from Asmara.

Asmara was said to have 10,000 soldiers and a complete air wing based there—all loyal to the Emperor.

Crowds Cheer Emperor

ASMARA, Dec. 16 (Reuters) —Emperor Haile Selassie I returned here today to the cheers of thousands amid reports that loyalist troops had crushed a rebellion in his capital, Addes Ababa.

Apparently cheerful and confident, he said the latest reports had been "very encouraging" and that he planned to leave for Addis Ababa shortly.

FATHER AND SON CONTESTING FOR ETHIOPIAN RULE

Radio Reports Addis Ababa Massacre; Crown Prince Proclaimed King

LONDON (AP)—The Ethiopian radio reported Thursday night an "inhuman massacre" in Addis Ababa, where Crown Prince Asfa Wassan has been proclaimed king replacing his father, Emperor Haile Selassie. Several civilians were reported killed and many wounded.

The broadcast said "a group of bandits" opened fire on "peaceful civilians demonstrating for the new representative people's government."

It reported later that "the two fighting parties have settled their dispute" and agreed to work with the new regime.

Loyal To King.

But the Ethiopian Embassy in Paris, still loyal to the bearded 68-year-old "King of Kings," said the fighting was between partisans of father and son. Claiming rising support for Selassie, the embassy said fighting also had broken out in Asmara, a city of 90,000 between Addis Ababa and the Red Sea.

The role of the military in the kingdom of northeast Africa was in doubt. But at least part of the army in the capital was known to be loyal to the new regime. Officials in London were told army units were guarding British, U.S., and French embassies in Addis Ababa.

The Ethiopian radio declared those who attacked the demonstrators were "under the influence of two traitors."

They were named as Gen. Kebeda Gabre, former commander in chief of the Ethiopian army, and Merid Mengesha, who was Selassie's minister of state under the Defense Ministry. A spokesman at the Ethiopian Embassy in London said the two "seem to be supporters of the emperor."

Heads For Home.

Selassie headed home from Brazil, cutting short a visit abroad. Apparently bent on keeping him from landing, the Ethiopian regime barred all flights in and out of the kingdom. But a Swedish charter plane with 54 Swedes aboard was allowed to land at Addis Ababa, a Cairo report said.

Gen. Abiye Abebe, the emperor's representative in Eritrea, on the Red Sea, cabled the Ethiopian Embassy in London insisting that the army, air force and the country at large were loyal to the emperor. Abebe said the crown prince was "under pressure from certain elements of the imperial bodyguard and police." The implication was that these forces, not the army, were behind Wednesday's coup.

The Ethiopian radio announced that Ras Imeru, 68, former ambassador to the United States, the Soviet Union and India, is the new premier under Wassan.

Imeru commanded Ethiopian forces fighting Mussolini's Italian invaders in the 1930s and was jailed in Italy in 1936 after the conquest of Ethiopia. He was assigned to Washington in 1949 and served four years.

The Ethiopian ambassador in Stockholm, a friend of the new premier, said Selassie deliberately had kept Imeru in assignments abroad. Other reports said Imeru once turned down the emperor's offer of the premiership because he felt it carried no real power under Selassie's tight rein.

The ambassador, Teferi Chareou, implied the 44-year-old crown prince will be pretty much of a figurehead, saying "he will not be a ruler in the same spirit as his father."

FIGHTING REPORTED IN ADDIS ABABA—Cross locates Addis Ababa, capital of Ethiopia (shaded portion of map), where fighting broke out yesterday following a coup in which Crown Prince Asfa Wassan was proclaimed king of the African nation in place of his father, Emperor Haile Selassie.

Haile Selassie calls for African unity

The Baltimore Sun

EMPEROR HAILE SELASSIE of Ethiopia last week called for a "second Bandung conference," aimed at the complete independence of all African peoples. The Emperor made the suggestion at a conference attended by more than 250 delegates from 20 African states and territories at Addis Ababa.

Sat. 6/25/60

ALBERT HERTZOG, South African Minister of Posts, reiterated the South African Government's refusal to establish a television network in the country. Introduction of TV, he said, "would spoil our youth for leadership by exposing them to kiet en donder (blood and thunder) entertainment."

* * *

JAMES DOUGLAS, a 39-year-old English resident of South Africa, won an appeal of a four-month prison sentence for violating South Africa's miscegnation laws when the South African Supreme Court accepted his contention that each time he had relations with Lydia Ndua, the African mother of his child, the couple drove nine miles into Rhodesia, where it is legal for white and non-white to live together.

* * *

PATRICE LUMUMBA, leader of the Congolese African Nationalist party, was granted additional time last week to form the first government of the Congo which is due to gain independence on June 30. Though the 34 year-old Lumumba won 35 seats out of 137 in the National Assembly in recent elections, he needs 34 more to form a majority. While he said he had guarantees of enough seats to form a majority, his initial efforts fell short of the mark.

CHIEF F. S. OKOTIE EBOH, Nigerian Minister of Finance, formally presented a license to operate in Nigeria to the Chase Manhattan Bank, one of the largest commercial banks in the world.

DR. E. G. MALHERBE, principal and vice-chancellor of Natal University (South Africa), last week described South Africa as "a land behind a corrugated iron curtain."

"As long as our children are being kraaled off into separate schools," he said, "all this talk of unity in (South Africa's) Jubilee Year will be idle chatter."

* * *

DAG HAMMARSKJOLD, United Nations Secretary General, said last week that he will visit Somalia and the Congo a few weeks after they become independent. He said Constanten Stavropoulos of Greece, UN legal counsel, would attend the independence celebration in Somalia and Ralph J. Bunche, UN Undersecretary, would attend the one in the Congo.

OSTRACISM ASKED FOR SOUTH AFRICA

The New York Times

Nationalists at Addis Ababa Talks Urge New States to Shun Diplomatic Ties

New York

By JAY WALZ

Special to The New York Times.

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia, June 20—Six African nationalist leaders from South Africa urged all African states today to refuse or sever diplomatic relations with their country as part of a general boycott of the Government of Prime Minister Hendrik F. Verwoerd.

The petition was presented to the special political committee of the conference of independent African states conference at a closed session. It was received "sympathetically," it was reported. Informed sources believed it had a good chance of being accepted by the fuel conference before its adjournment at the end of this week.

Cairo Maintains Ties

The United Arab Republic is the only African state maintaining diplomatic relations with South Africa. Its delegates declined comment, but Cairo spokesmen here have expressed general support for the African independence movement.

The consensus among observers was that the idea of a diplomatic boycott would make headway during the discussions here and would make normal relations between the dozen newly independent African states and South Africa remote.

The proposal was presented this afternoon by Nana Mahomo, a member of the National Executive Council of the Pan-Africanist Congres.

"The South African situation is fraught with all elements likely to precipitate another Algeria," Mr. Mahomo told the committee in a memorandum. "Perhaps an Algeria on a more horrible, more destructive, more bloody scale because of the unprecedented intransigence and fanaticism of the South African Herrenvolk [master race]."

Mr. Mahomo urged the delegates to carry to the governmental level all economic and political sanctions previously proposed against South Africa.

"We hope by the end of July all African states will be acting collectively on the boycott of South African goods," Mr. Mahomo said. He proposed that the sanctions should include the denial of landing facilities and repair services to South African planes.

Closed Sessions Under Way

Mr. Mahomo said trade unions acting in collaboration with governments could play on "effective role" in the boycott by refusing to load or unload cargoes bound to or from South Africa.

Closed meetings of several conference committee began today after five days of public sessions. The special political committee agreed this morning on an agenda including eradication of colonialization from Africa, the Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland, and eradication of racial discrimination.

S. O. Ayodo, speaking for Kenya, urged the committee to support the "immediate release" of Jomo Kenyatta. Mr. Kenyatta was convicted in 1953 of having ben the "manager" of the Mau Mau rebellion. He is now confined to a frontier district.

"The people of Kenya will not rest until Jomo Kenyatta is released," Mr. Ayodo declared.

The Kenya delegation has observer status here.

The Angola delegation, another observer group, said Africans there were suffering "repressions, assassinations and massacres" under Portuguese rule. It urged the conference to support a petition to the United Nations for a special mission to study the plight of Angola's Africans.

AFRICANS AT ODDS ON PLAN FOR UNITY

The New York Times

12-Nation Parley to Debate Issue of Alliance in Addis Ababa Session Today

New York

By JAY WALZ

Special to The New York Times.

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia, June 19 — The delegates of twelve independent African nations will turn tomorrow to the task of building a working union with their newly won freedom.

Morning Post

In their conference here that began last Tuesday, the delegates have expressed divergent views on the practical form that should be taken to achieve African unity. They will debate the issue in closed sessions starting tomorrow and hope to resolve it by the time the conference adjourns next week-end.

The delegation sent by Kwame Nkrumah, Prime Minister of Ghana, has strongly supported the establishment of a United States of Africa, presumably with Mr. Nkrumah as its leader.

However, the delegate from the young African state of Nigeria—Malama Maitama Sule, Minister of Mines and Power—has issued an oblique attack on that idea. Africans do not want a "messiah or a hitler type" leader, he has declared.

Besides Ghana and Nigeria, the African states represented at the parley here are Morocco, the United Arab Republic, Tunisia, Libya, Liberia, Guinea, Togo, Ethiopia, the Cameroons and the Sudan.

Ethiopia Seeks Role

Emperor Haile Selassie of Ethiopia has stated repeatedly that his nation should have a key role in the movement toward a union since Ethiopia has been "independent" for thousands of years.

Despite their differences on the pace and shape of an eventual African union, the delegates here were nearly unanimous on two other African issues after their public sessions last week. These are Algeria and the Union of South Africa's racial segregation policies. Algeria should be free from French authority and South African apartheid must be ended, the delegates have declared.

Hardly any speakers in the last five days failed to denounce France for holding Algeria under an "imperalist yoke" and for setting off nuclear blasts in the Sahara Desert. When the leader of the Algerian delegation, M'hammed Yazid, accused American bankers yesterday of financing French operations against the Algerian rebels, some delegates cried, "Shame on America."

However, observers believe the conference will not go all the way to endorse the rebel Algerian Provisional Government.

New Nation Stirs Dispute

Another issue for the new African state involves Somalia, which achieves freedom July 1. Haile Selassie, in his opening address here, had warm words for the aspirations of Africa's freedom-loving peoples. But it is known that Ethiopia is counting heavily on French support to prevent Somalia from forming Greater Somalia. This would absorb a large sector of Ethiopia occupied by Somali peoples. The Emperor is dead set against this plan. He has gained some comfort from the adamant stand of President de Gaulle of France against releasing French Somaliland, with its Red Sea port of Djibouti.

Arab leaders here would like to make this conference an instrument of their war against Israel. Libya's delegate, Dr. Whibi el Bouti, declared Friday that the expulsion of Palestine Arabs from their homeland was a "human tragedy" to be compared to the oppression of the Algerians by the French and the beating down of Africans in South Africa.

On the same day Hussein Zulfikar Sabri, Deputy Foreign Minister of the United Arab Republic, told the conference that Israel would "long ago have disappeared from history" if she had not received heavy foreign aid

COMMON POLICIES URGED FOR AFRICA

The Wash. Post

New York, N.Y.

Ethiopia Calls for Unity on Foreign Affairs Without Losing Outside Funds

June 6/19/60

Special to The New York Times.

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia, June 18—Ethiopia declared today that the nations of Africa must form a common African foreign policy based on African unity" but not precluding the attraction of foreign capital.

The call for a common foreign policy came from Menassie Lemma, the Ethiopian delegate to the conference here of eleven independent African states.

Although he urged the importation of foreign capital, Mr. Lemma warned the conference to "avoid entanglements" that could result in "political turmoil."

p. 4

He denounced what he called European designs of "changing Africa into a lucrative market."

Urges Ban on Atomic Tests

Mr. Lemma added his protest to those of other African nations against France's explosion of an atomic device in the Sahara Desert. He called on the conference to request the United Nations to draft a declaration banning all such tests.

The Ethiopian delegate advised the conference to be "vigilant" against the two major European trade blocs lest "political freedom in Africa be hampered by a new form of colonialism."

Algerian independence from France, he added, cannot continue to be denied. He called for a step-up of efforts to bring about the speedy solution of the Algerian problem.

Mr. Lemma also declared that pressure must be brought in the United Nations and elsewhere for solving the "tragic South-West African problem." The Union of South Africa has a mandate over South-West Africa.

Calls for Unity in Congo

Referring to what he called a "critical moment" in the Belgium Congo, Mr. Lemma appealed to Congolese political leaders to "forget and cast aside persona lambitions and unite in effective independence."

He also assailed Britain's rule over her colonies and territories in Africa as well as South Africa's racial segregation policies.

Mr. Lemma proposed pooling African airlines, and combining African funds for the establishment of an African bank for to finance projects on the continent. The Ethiopian delegation will introduce a resolution to this end, he said.

The conference recessed until Monday, when debates and the drafting of resolutions will begin in closed sessions.

Meeting in Ethiopia

The New York Times 18a

The second conference of independent African states, meeting at Addis Ababa, is significant in the mere roster of attending nations. Two of them, Cameroon and Togoland, are making their debut among their peers. The Belgian Congo, Somalia and Nigeria—all due to become free by Oct. 1—will participate without voting. An interesting possibility is the establishment of a community of African states, as suggested at a meeting in Liberia last year. And there is a historic footnote, in that 1960 marks the twenty-fifth anniversary of the invasion of the host country by Fascist Italy in the stroke that doomed the League of Nations. Emperor Haile Selassie, who survived his conquerors and their regime, opened the conference yesterday.

But the true importance of the meeting will lie in how it faces up to the bitter contemporary problems facing the continent. Algerian nationalists will be on hand as observers, thus serving to dramatize the principal clash in the north. The French are likely also to be involved to the extent of disapproval of their nuclear tests in the Sahara. Soviet-bloc penetration of Guinea may have ramifications at the conference; and the aggravated tensions in South Africa are sure to be considered. So is the situation in the mandated territory of South West Africa.

The Belgian Congo will achieve sovereignty on June 30; and the outlook is for a period of political turmoil. The internal situation in the Congo would not ordinarily figure in the agenda of such an international meeting. But if an example of statesmanship is set by the foreign ministers in attendance, the rivals for leadership in the Congo may benefit.

Sanctions Proposed Against South Africa

The New York Times New York, N.Y. 18a

By JAY WALZ

(Special to The New York Times)

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia, June 24—The conference of independent African states unanimously called on its members tonight to invoke strong trade sanctions against the Union of South Africa and urged that diplomatic relations be either severed or withheld.

In a final session of the fortnight of meetings here, the conference approved, in most cases unanimously, fifteen resolutions bearing on the question of ending colonialism in all Africa and on promoting the political and economic welfare of Africans.

Among major items, the delegates voted to continue "material and diplomatic" support of the Algerian nationalist cause, but they "welcomed" the recent offer of President de Gaulle of France to discuss an Algerian cease-fire immediately.

The resolution "invites" France and the Algerian Provisional Government to seek agreement on conditions for a "fair and sincere implementation of the right of self-determination of the Algerian people."

Thirteen African states belong to the conference, whose second meeting began ten days ago, but Congo and Togo failed to send delegations. Seven other territories that are to receive independence soon or that are working toward it attended the sessions as observers. The final plenary session was reported to have been delayed by an abortive effort by the United Arab Republic to win conference support for sanctions against Israel. A source said the Cairo delegation made strong representations, unsuccessfully, to obtain an anti-Israel vote before a closed meeting of the Steering Committee earlier in the day. A United Arab Republic delegate denied this; he said: "We just tried to caution them against Israeli political and economic infiltration in Africa."

Jussein Sabri, the United Arab Republic's chief delegate in a statement warned the states against Israeli trade and economic inroads. He declared that Israel had the financial backing of "imperialists."

The United Arab Republic is the only independent state in Africa now having diplomatic relations with the Union of South Africa. The delegation is reported to have argued against severing those relations, on the ground that the presence of a South African envoy in Cairo afforded an important means of obtaining information on developments in the Union and the British Commonwealth.

At the open meeting, the Egyptians raised no objection to the resolution on severing diplomatic relations with Pretoria and the future of the South African mission in Cairo was left uncertain.

Projected Boycott Outlined

After expressing "indignation" over the "shameful policy of racial discrimination" in South Africa, the conference urged on members a series of trade sanctions. These included the closing of member states' ports to all vessels flying the South African flag, prohibiting ships of the free states from entering South African ports; boycotting all South African goods and refusing landing and passage facilities and airspace rights to all South African aircraft.

African States Act Boycott Leveled At South Africa

Christian Science Monitor Boston, Mass. Sat. 6/25/60

By Reuters

Addis Ababa, Ethiopia

Hitting out at South African racial policies, the Conference of Independent African States has agreed unanimously that member countries should boycott South African goods and close their ports to vessels flying the South African flag.

The meeting here also decided that its 13 member states should refuse landing and passage facilities to South African planes and bar their air space to them.

The conference invited African states which are members of the British Commonwealth to take all possible steps to secure the exclusion of South Africa from the Commonwealth.

Arab nations were asked to approach oil companies with a view to preventing Arab oil from being sold to South Africa.

Angry Reaction

The boycott and allied moves constituted the latest angry reaction of Africans to the apartheid (racial segregation) policies of South Africa's all-white government and to the government's alleged suppression of Africans' rights in South Africa.

In another field the conference recommended the establishment of a "Council of African Eco- ic Cooperation" to promote mic cooperation among na- on the continent. One of irst tasks of the council l be to organize the es- ment of a joint African pment bank and a joint n commercial bank, the g decided.

r Resolutions

ther resolutions, the con- e:

Demanded that the Brit- vernment take immedi- s to dissolve the Central Federation of Northern Southern Rhodesia and and.

Decided to establish a l fund to aid "freedom " in Africa.

ondemn France's Sahara nuclear-weapons test.

commended the con- of material and diplo- pport for the Algerian

ed France to desist

ensive NATO ia."

d colonial powers to set up independence dates for all nonindependent countries.

The list of resolutions showed that Ethiopia and Liberia have signified their intention to institute proceedings at the International Court of Justice in The Hague, Netherlands, challenging South Africa's mandate in Southwest Africa.

Zulfikar Sabry, chief delegate of the United Arab Republic, said that the Suez Canal ports were exempted from the resolution to close ports to South African shipping.

Sanctions Sanctioned

He said Suez ports were Arab ports forming part of an international waterway with international obligations and would not be closed to South African vessels.

During the day Emperor Haile Selassie of Ethiopia gave his personal backing to sanctions against South Africa.

He told reporters here that sanctions were meant not only for "material effect but as a symbol of sympathy for those suffering racial discrimination in South Africa."

Reports said there was a prolonged struggle in the conference's private session to win unanimity on the sanctions question.

18a 1960

African Women Told How to Get Own Way

N.Y. Herald Tribune
New York, N.Y.

By Harriet Stix

When little children in the deep of the African forest hear an airplane pass overhead, they call up to it—"freedom now."

Dr. Dorothy B. Ferebee, back from a visit to six countries in Africa says:

It is always—Africa for the Africans—they don't want to hear anything else. Everywhere there is a mood of impatience."

Medical Director and Assistant Professor of Preventive Medicine at Howard University Dr. Ferebee is also a vice-chairman of the Women's Africa Committee of the African - American Institute. It was as the Committee's representative that she went to Africa, to attend a conference in Ghana. She also attended a women's conference in Nigeria, spoke to women's groups everywhere she went.

Dr. Dorothy Ferebee

Organization

"It was a delight and an amazement," she says. "All my previous illusions were shattered. And all for the better."

"For example, I expected the conference in Ibadin would be slow - moving, an almost elementary kind of session."

In fact she found the conference, called "The African Woman Designs Her Future," was excellently organized. The auditorium rivalled the UN in the extent of its equipment — earphones for simultaneous translation, a horse shoe meeting table — the lot.

"Generally speaking, the women in Africa have a very good grasp of the problems they face," she said. "The level of education is high. But the missing link is that they don't yet know how to translate their ideas into action. That is where we Americans can be helpful — we have the practical know-how."

Dr. Ferebee says that the women there are slowly realizing what we knew all along —the only way for a woman to get what she wants is for her to persuade some man to give it to her.

Education Stressed

She said: "In Nigeria, the women have decided that the best attack is to make the men realize the importance of education for women. But first they must educate the men to what women can do. Visual aids are very useful for this —films showing how women in other countries do things."

The problems varied tremendously. In Western and Eastern Nigeria she found the women progressive — "on the move, along with the men." In Northern Nigeria, on the other hand, the women are still in purdah, as it is a Moslem country. The problems there are how to build the strength of the family, and how to combat polygamy, which Dr. Ferebee found the educated women could no longer tolerante.

"The education level varies tremendously too," she said, "from very educated to illiterate to bush women. But even among the illiterates in the market place you would be amazed how they could transact business. Women are the traders of Africa. They handle the money. They manage the stalls and generally dominate the markets."

At the conference in Accra, which had as its theme "Progress and Challenge of Our Times," Dr. Ferebee gave a talk on "The Non-Governmental Organizations in the United States." And everywhere she went in Africa, she was "booked" by the United States Information Service to talk to various groups, usually on social service work and how to do it or on the political role of women.

Everywhere, Dr. Ferebee found a great interest in the ancient culture of Africa, a move to revive and appreciate it.

Dr. Ferebes thinks this is all to the good. Though she thinks some American know-how would be useful, and therefore approves of student exchanges and the like, she would not like to see the Africans become carbon copies of Americans, Europeans or anyone else. Trained leadership, with both ideas and practical knowledge is the greatest need she says.

Besides acting as vice-chairman of the Women's Africa Committee, Dr. Ferebes is a member of the national boards of the Y. W. C. A., A.C.T.I.O.N. and the Girl Scouts. She is a former president of Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority and the National Council of Negro Women. A graduate of Simmons College and of Tufts Medical School, she has a son who is studying to be a dentist and four grandchildren.

Dr. Ferebee reminisced cheerfully about some of her more hair-raising experiences —she was detained by the authorities for thirty hours in South Africa when she landed in Johannesburg to make a plane connection, attended the trial of four young intellectuals arrested as agitators in Salisbury.

In the quiet offices of the Women's Africa Committee it all seemed rather remote. . . .

Just half a block away is the U.N. where policemen seem to outnumber people two to one.

Ghana Opposition Chief Decries Police Action

Christian Science Monitor

By

Accra, Ghana

The national chairman of Ghana's opposition United Party, Solomon Odamtten, has announced his withdrawal from an important parliamentary by-election at the end of August because of "restrictive" police measures against his party.

Mr. Odamtten's withdrawal Aug. 25 followed a government order placing 13 persons, mostly members of the United Party, in preventive detention. They were accused of "acting in a manner prejudicial to the security of the state."

Boston, Mass

Mr. Odamtten was standing as a candidate in the Accra central constituency held by Kwame Nkrumah until his recent inauguration as President. Dr. Nkrumah then ceased to be a member of Parliament.

The by-election Aug. 30 was to have been a straight fight between Mr. Odamtten and the ruling Convention People's Party candidate, H. S. T. Provencal.

But Mr. Odamtten told reporters the police had refused to allow him to hold public political meetings or campaign with loud-speaker trucks.

He said his opponent was permitted to broadcast and hold meetings "during and outside permitted official hours with impunity."

Mr. Odamtten also charged that Ghana's "only independent newspaper, the Ashanti Pioneer, which presents the opposition point of view, is now muzzled."

On Aug. 23, Ghana's Parliament rushed through a censorship bill to restrict the distribution and import of publications "contrary to the public interest."

A leading opposition member, Joe Appiah, said the paper did not appear Aug. 25 because government censors had advised the paper to remove an editorial. The paper preferred not to appear at all than be censored, Mr. Appiah said.

Mr. Odamtten said he hoped his withdrawal from the by-election would serve "as an effective means of calling attention to and protesting against this shameless mockery of democracy in Ghana."

He said his position as a candidate was worsened by the arrests of his fellow party members.

GHANA THREATENS TO QUIT U. N. FORCE

Nkrumah Urges Free Hand for Lumumba—Sends Mission to Congo

New York

By Reuter

ACCRA, Ghana, Sept. 13 — President Kwame Nkrumah threatened today to withdraw Ghana's troops from the United Nations force in the Congo unless Patrice Lumumba received a free hand.

Mr. Nkrumah sent a message to Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold of the United Nations. He said that Ghana reserved the right to place its troops in the Congo entirely at the disposal of Mr. Lumumba.

Ghanaian soldiers in control of the Leopoldville radio station turned Mr. Lumumba away Sunday and Monday when he attempted to broadcast. Mr. Lumumba was discharged from the post of Premier by President Kasavubu but maintains that he still holds the office.

A special mission from Ghana left for Leopoldville today for discussions with Mr. Lumumba.

N. A. Welbeck, leader of the group, said that he planned to see repreesntatives of other independent African states to discuss the possibility of a "joint African attitude toward the illegal government" set up by President Joseph Kasavubu of the Congo.

Mr. Nkrumah's ultimatum followed the announcement by the United Arab Republic yesterday that its troops attached to the United Nations in the Congo would be withdrawn immediately because the United Nations had "deviated from its mission there."

Guinea's representative in the Congo last week announced that his nation's contingent was seeking authority from President Sékou Touré to withdraw from the United Nations force. The Guineans accused the United Nations of "flagrant interference in Congolese affairs."

Mr. Nkrumah's note to Mr. Hammarskjold said that Ghana would withdraw its troops if Mr. Lumumba was not allowed to "use his own radio station at Leopoldville."

INSIDE AFRICA:

Nkrumah of Ghana sets trip to U.S.

The Afro-American

Baltimore, Md

Sat. 9-17-60

ACCRA, Ghana — The Russians and the Chinese are beating Americans to the punch in Africa. They have planes, with two crews, at the disposal of African leaders.

A colored American working in Ghana quipped to newsmen: "During the airlift to the Congo, every three minutes a U.S. plan flew over my house. I went out and looked up with pride at the U.S. markings on them.

"I said, 'Here we are carrying the burden of the world—and yet we are getting kicked in the teeth. We are getting kicked because of our racial policies.' "

President Kwame Nkrumah is coming to the United Nations in the early sessions of the General Assembly meeting which starts on Sept. 20. He will not, however, head the Ghana delegation. Foreign Minister Ako Adjei will lead the Ghana delegation.

* * *

NDOLA, Northern Rhodesia — One day after the law giving Africans the right to enter restaurants, hotels and movies went into effect, racial violence broke loose.

Enraged whites here tried to use force to keep the natives from patronizing such business establishment. Despite the screams of their children and the begging of their wives, the men inisted on starting fights with Africans.

* * *

NAIROBI, Kenya — The four advisors from the United States who came here recently to supervise the African Students Air-lift, ran into a bit of trouble with the local people.

Local criticisms are:

The students selected had poor academic records.

The best students were going to the United States, taking them away from local institutions.

The American institutions that the Africans were attending were of poor academic standing.

The airlift program was a political scheme principally for the benefit of Tom Mboya, Kenya political leader, and

The students were inadequately financed and many of the 81 flown to the United States last year were "starving."

The British Embassy in Washington scotched the "starving" report, but noted some of the students are in financial trouble. It recommended that the Kenya Government help.

* * *

DAKAR, Senegal—A 53-year-old poet and statesman, Leopold S. Senghor, last week was elected the first president of the Senegalese Republic. The election followed Senegal's break with the Sudan.

Despite the break between the two countries, there is still harmony among the leaders of both nation.

JOHANNESBURG — Eric Louw, external affairs minister, charged last week that a former high-ranking U.S. State Department official was hired to advise the All-Africa Congress in Ethiopia on what actions could be taken against South African's segregation policies.

"It is not known," quipped Louw, "whether the former State Department official will also be consulted about recent anti-riots at Jacksonville and elsewhere in his own country."

* * *

BOKSBURG, South Africa—Some 11 gold miners were killed in a cave-in here last week. One was rescued but 16 others are still trapped in the tunnels 7,000 feet in the ground.

mining town s.ilh mT 'oses..3i

This mining town is some 13 miles east of Johannesburg.

The cave-in is expected to boost South Africa's mining accident toll to the 500 mark.

Ghana Leader Demands Europe Leave Africa

The Washington (D.C.) Post

Sat., 9-24-60

By Warren Unna
Staff Reporter

UNITED NATIONS, Sept. 23 President Kwame Nkrumah of Ghana, making himself the spokesman for the 230 million people of Africa, warned Europe's colonial powers today to get out of Africa immediately. He demanded that the United Nations keep the cold war away from his continent.

Nkrumah (whose full name is pronounced Kwah-meh en-kroo-mah) is the chief advocate of a pan-African federation of states, as contrasted with what he terms a "balkanization" of competing independents. He made a dramatic appearance before the U. N. General Assembly, wearing great flowing robes of yellow and brown at the high podium and speaking with a heavy British accent.

Like a bride carefully kept unseen before the ceremony, he had remained closeted in his Waldorf-Astoria Hotel suite ever since his arrival here from West Central Africa Wednesday. And his speeech, far more critical of the West than the East, came just after a confidential chat with President Eisenhower in the same hotel last night, and just before a long oration against the West by Soviet Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev, on the same General Assembly podium here this noon.

Nkrumah's speeech was so much in harmony with Khrushchev's appeal to the new African nations that, except for its delivery ahead of the Soviet leader's, it might have been interpreted as Ghana's agreeing response.

"Colonialism, imperialism and racialism are doomed in Africa, and the sooner the colonial powers recognize this fact the better it will be for them and the world," Nkrumah declared. "It is quite clear that a desperate attempt is being made to create confusion in the Congo, extend the cold war to Africa and involve Africa in the suicidal quarrels of foreign powers. The U. N. must not allow this to happen. We for our part will not allow this to happen."

Raps Belgium

He accused Belgium of applying "calculated political castration" to the Congo during a century of colonial "imperialism, exploitation and degradation."

And he accused the United Nations and, by implication, its Secretary General, Dag Hammarskjold, of running out on its mandate to preserve "law and order" in the Congo. He said the U. N. presumed to be "neutral" between ousted Premier Patrice Lumumba, representing the Congo's "legal authorities," and "the law breakers," who oppose Lumumba.

As his solution for the Congo, Nkrumah proposed that the U. N. disarm the Belgian forces still in the Congo and replace such European U. N. troops as the Swedes with an all-African force, composed of soldiers from such newly independent states as his own Ghana.

He also reiterated his backing of Lumumba and urged the U. N. to support him against "a colonel Joseph Mobutu who disregards the authority which appointed him and uses the troops under his own command for his own purposes." Without naming him, Nkrumah referred to Col. Mobutu as a "mutineer."

Nkrumah also scored the Union of South Africa's white minority government for "racial discrimination and persecution which in its essential inhumanity surpasses even the brutality of the Nazis against the Jews."

Nkrumah urged that the Union Africa be asked to surrender its mandate over South West Africa and that the territory be made a trusteeship under some of the newly independent African states. He noted that another way to deal with the Union of South Africa was to impose a boycott on its goods, such as Ghana began doing on August 1.

He also urged the West's NATO members to bring pressure on their colleague, Portugal, which he accused of encouraging "forced labor which is akin to slavery" in its African colonies of Angola, Mozambique, Portuguese Guinea and Cabinda.

Khrushchev Approves

As Nkrumah concluded, the General Assembly gave him a long and loud applause. Soviet Premier Khrushchev stood up for his handclapping and the cue was quickly picked up by the rest of the Communist Bloc leaders. Then, as Nkrumah went down the aisle to his delegation's seats, Khrushchev grabbed Nkrumah's robed arms in a hearty clasp.

Elsewhere in his long speech, Nkrumah urged:

- The U. N. charter be amended to provide permanent seats on the Security Council for Africa, Asia and the Middle East. At the moment, only Free China, Soviet Union, U. S., United Kingdom and France enjoy permanent seats on the Council. Six other seats are rotated.
- African states make no military alliances with foreign powers.
- All nuclear powers be prevented from possessing military bases in Africa and states, newly admitted to the U. N., be obliged to "register without any treaties they may have entered into with their former colonial powers."
- The nuclear powers should agree "to keep Africa out of their nuclear warfare plans" and be assisted in disarming by inspection teams composed of small neutral nations.
- France desist in further nuclear tests which purposely have been held in the Sahara as a form of "nuclear blackmail" to demonstrate to African states their political weakness."
- Communist China should be admitted to the U. N. so that the General Assembly's representation can become "more realistic and more effective and useful."
- General elections should be held in both divided Korea and divided Viet-Nam so that the Communist and non-Communist elements of these countries can be united "in the interests of world peace."
- The U. N. establish "machinery" to make it "impossible either for Israel to attack the Arab states or for the Arab states to attack Israel."

At the conclusion of Nkrumah's speech, Belgian Foreign Minister Pierre Wigny demanded the privilege to reply to the attacks against his country's policies in the Congo. When Wigny was given his chance, following the Khrushchev speech, the delegates of Ghana and Guinea, with whom Ghana is loosely federated, walked out of the assembly hall. Khrushchev however, remained to listen.

Although Nkrumah has come to look upon himself and his country as the spokesman for all of newly independent Africa, other African leaders periodically have indicated that they prefer to do their own speaking. One such leader, Sylvanus Olympio Prime Minister of Togo, anticipated Nkrumah has his own way of doing things.

African leaders, however, do not think that Nkrumah's ambitions for a non-aligned pan African federation necessarily thrust him into the Communist camp.

Ghana threatens S. African boycott

Afro American
Baltimore, Md.

ACCRA, Ghana (NNPA) — Dr. Kwame Nkrumah, Prime Minister of Ghana, said Thursday that if South African continued its present racial policy "Ghana will be called upon, in concert with all African states, to consider the initiation of a social, diplomatic and economic boycott of South Africa."

He declared that no Commonwealth member owed allegiance to another, and "it is in this spirit that we have agreed to remain in the Commonwealth."

Sat. 6-18-60

Referring to the racial policies of the South African Government, Dr. Nkrumah said Dr. Hendrik F. Verwoerd, the South African Prime Minister, and his associates should realize now that their policy was contrary to the multi - racial character of the Commonwealth.

p. 9

He said he personally regarded the present Union of South Africa Government as "an alien government."

Dr. Nkrumah said he felt that Dr. Verwoerd must be made to understand that no area of Africa belonged to the white man. He deplored a recent speech by Dr. Verwoerd to the effect that his Government would continue apartheid (rigid racial segregation).

He suggested that the United Nations should set up a committee among its members to discuss the matter of world peace with Britain, France, the United States and Russia. The committee, he said, should be drawn from all parts of the world, including Communist China.

the boycott movements against the racial policies of the Union of South African gained momentum.

Addressing the annual meeting in Johannesburg of the Federal Consultative Association, he said the Union "is facing the most difficult position it has had to face for the past 50 years."

There is a boycott movement against South Africa in almost every country in the world, he said. "We are already feeling the effect in a small way," he stated.

Schoeman said the outside world demanded full equality for non-whites. "Unless we accede to these demands, attacks on South Africa will continue," he said. "yet if the demand is met, it will mean that the white man in South Africa must commit racial suicide."

South Africa beginning to feel boycott

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (NNPA)—The South African Minister of Transport, Schoeman Tuesday warned his countrymen that they would have to "tighten their belts" if

FIRST AIR HOSTESS for Ghana is attractive Miss Johanna Ashrifie of Accra, shown beside one of the twin-engine planes on which she works. Ghanaian Airways now has 13 "ambassadors of the air" serving its passengers. Miss Ashrifie began work with the airline as a receptionist four years ago. (Authenticated News)

Ghana air hostess spreads African personality abroad

Baltimore, Md.
The Afro-Am
9-24-60

ACCRA — Ghana's rapid development into a land of progress has opened tremendous new vistas for her sons — and for her daughters, too.

Take attractive Johanna Ashrifie of Accra for instance. She is an air hostess.

First Ghanaian girl to break this romantic new ground, she joined the staff of the West African Airways Corporation as a receptionist and stewardess four years ago - and got her first insight into her new job when she flew as a passenger to Lagos, Nigeria, for training.

There, under a special tutor from the United Kingdom, she and five Nigerian girls underwent a two-month course of tuition, followed by three months of practical work before she returned to Accra. And later, like other Ghanaian staff with the Corporation, she transferred to Ghana Airways when it was established in 1958.

p. 9

Together with four more Ghanaian girls, Johanna went to the B.O.A.C's Catering Training School in London and for eight weeks tried to learn all there was to know about flying, cooking, passenger service and a multitude of other subjects which have to be at the finger tips of all air hostesses. They had lessons in deportment and in modes of addressing people from various countries. But it was worth it. Today, Johanna and her colleagues earn good money doing interesting work.

* * *

STARTING at five o'clock in the morning, Johanna's business day begins with the polishing of her brass buttons and shoes and the pressing of her uniform. Then, after breakfast she leaves for the airport, arriving well before the scheduled time for her flight so as to have time to prepare and to see to it that all she will need is sent aboard.

As the passengers embark she welcomes them, tells them how long the flight will take, inform them of the altitude at which they will fly and explains the emergency drills. As the plane takes off she plies them with sweets and, later, with breakfast, which she sometimes prepares herself.

During the flight she is constantly at the beck and call of every passenger, constantly concerned to make flying a pleasure for the traveller. And towards the end of the journey, she helps passengers with their immigration forms. She also assists passengers with passport details and currency problems and, on arrival at their destination, provides them with the correct local time and temperature.

This is almost always the routine for Johanna, who has served on flights to Britain, Spain, Libya, Italy, Ivory Coast, Liberia, Sierra Leone, Guinea, Senegal and Nigeria. She likes it, too.

"It's a fascinating job, and I love it", she says.

Johanna must be right, for for the number of Ghanaian air hostesses has increased. There are now 13. These "ambassadors of the air" not only add that touch of glamour which makes flying more enjoyable; they project the African personality to the many other parts of the world where Ghana Airways serves the sky ways.

KHRUSHCHEV MEETS GHANA DELEGATES

Coatless Soviet Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev chats with members of a Ghana government delegation as he vacations on the southern coast of the Crimea. The Africans are (left to right): J. Tettega, general secretary of the Ghana Congress of Trade Unions, and T. Adamafio, general secretary of the Peoples Party of Ghana. The others are unidentified.—AP Wirephoto.

JOSEPH WADELL
Thanked by the Ambassador of Ghana

18a

Nkrumah Urges 'Bold' Western Aid Plan for Africa

Associated Press

Oath of office is administered to Kwame Nkrumah, the first President of Ghana, during ceremony in Accra. The African nation became an independent republic last Friday.

The New York Times 7-6-60

ACCRA, Ghana, July 5 (Reuters)—President Kame Nkruman said today that the West—particularly the United States—had not "come out boldly enough" with a plan to assist under-developed countries in Africa.

If the West does not help, other countries might, he said at his first news conference since his inauguration as Ghana's first President last Friday.

"The West has a lot to contribute toward our development," he said. "We don't have the technical know-how and so son. But the assistance must come to us as equals and friends."

Special to The New York Times.

HONG KONG, July 5 — Communist China and Ghana have agreed to establish full diplomatic relations and to exchange ambassadors.

Ghana is the second African nation to recognize the Peiping government. The first was Guinea.

The Chinese Foreign Ministry announcement of the accord was reported here tonight by Hsinhua, the Chinese Communist press agency.

NKRUMAH TAKES PRESIDENCY POST

Becomes Ghana's First Chief of State Under Charter Establishing Republic

The New York Times 7-2-60

ACCRA, Ghana, July 1 (AP)—Kwame Nkrumah was sworn in today as the first President of Ghana, a new office that gives the African leader wide powers. Ghana's traditional tribal drums spread the news to the back country.

Mr. Nkrumah, who has run Ghana since 1957 when, as the Gold Coast, it was granted independence by Britain, stepped up from Prime Minister to President under a new Constitution approved in a national referendum.

The Constitution makes Ghana a republic within the British Commonwealth, similar in status to India and Pakistan. Queen Elizabeth II no longer is Ghana's ceremonial chief of state—Mr. Nkrumah has that post as well as almost all the political power. The Queen now is regarded in Ghana as Chief of the Commonwealth.

New laws also give President Nkrumah the power to veto all or part of bills passed by the National Assembly.

Propaganda trucks of Mr. Nkrumah's Peoples Party played music and women cheered almost incessantly to welcome Mr. Nkrumah to the state house for his inauguration.

After the ceremony several tribal chiefs, adorned with gold headdresses and rich robes, joined the women to dance to the drums.

Mr. Nkrumah, wearing a red and yellow cloak with black stripes, mounted a dais and stood there erect and motionless for about five minutes as a twenty-one-gun salute was fired.

A crowd estimated at 100,000 watched the ceremonies.

Nkrumah Names New Cabinet

ACCRA, July 1 (Reuters)—One of Kwame Nkrumah's first acts as President of Ghana was to name a new Cabinet. It showed no major changes from the old Cabinet, although there are now fifteen ministers compared to twenty-three under the parliamentary system.

President Nkrumah commuted all death sentences and ordered a year cut off jail sentences of nonpolitical prisoners serving terms of three or more years. There are about 100 political detainees in Ghana.

President Nkrumah moved into the State House today after the last Governor General, Lord Listowel, had left Accra.

President Sékou Touré of Guinea attended Ghana's ceremonies. The two heads of state are holding talks on a possible Ghana-Quinea union.

They appeared on the balcony of the State House after the inauguration. A twenty-one-gun salute roared and for the first time the President's standard was hoisted. It consists of a coat of arms on a blue background. A gold lion on the coat of arms symbolizes the continued link with the Commonwealth.

Soviet presents Nkrumah with gift of helicopter

The Afro-American

ACCRA, Ghana — The Soviet Ambassador to Ghana, Sytenka, said last week that the helicopter presented to President Kwame Nkrumah of Ghana by the Soviet Government is enroute to Ghana by boat.

Ambassador Sytenka made the announcement of the presentation during the celebration of the birth of the Ghana Republic.

Baltimore Md

The leader of the Czechoslovakian delegation to the Ghana celebrations, Joseph Vaalo, also made a presentation of a special flower vase to President Nkrumah.

FOUR VOLUMES of the autobiography of Abraham Lincoln were presented to the Ghanian Chief Executive by Palter Phillips, president of the board of trustees of American University, both because of the similarity of the life of Nkrumah to that of Lincoln and because Nkrumah had attended a University named after the Great Emancipator.

Det. 7-23-60

A Ghana news agency report stated that President Nkrumah has accepted an invitation to visit Communist China. No date has been fixed for the visit, the report added.

The Ministry announced also that Ghana has moved to establish diplomatic relations at Ambassadorial level with Communist China.

Atlanta Daily World

STAMP HONORS LEADER. A smiling likeness of Premier Kwame Nkrumah highlights this stamp issued by the Ghana Postal Department. The stamp will commemorate Republic Day, July 1, at Accra.

Ghana Minister Arrives Here

Dr. A. Gbedemah, Finance Minister of the Republic of Ghana, arrived at New York International Airport yesterday from London. He was on his way to Washington for talks with officials of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Developement on a hydro-electric project.

Howard coach tutors Ghana Olympic athletes

The Afro-American

Baltimore, Md.

ACCRA, Ghana—Dr. Thomas A. Hart, assistant professor of physical education at Howard University, Washington, D.C., will direct the Republic of Ghana's first national track and field team during the 1960 Olympic Games at Rome.

Dr. Hart, who is on leave from his position at Howard, has served since September as coordinator of physical education in the public schools of Ghana.

Sat. 8-6-60

Eleven athletes—10 men and a woman—will represent the West African nation at Rome. They will compete in the sprints, sprint relays, and 400 and 800-meter events.

p. 13

* * *

ACCORDING to Dr. Hart, the Ghana athletes have not developed to the point where they will be serious contenders for Olympic honors as yet.

"Their performances are subpar, according to our standards, but they are making rapid progress," Dr. Hart said. "This year the women have broken eight national records, while the men have broken 13. By 1964, Ghana will be a real threat, particularly in the sprints."

The Ghana team left Saturday for Tripoli where it will compete with the nation team of Libya and Egypt through August 9. The athletes arrive in Athens for more competition on August 10, and are scheduled to arrive in Rome August 22. Post-Olympic meets in East and West Germany and in Switzerland have been scheduled tentatively.

* * *

A NATIVE of Williamstown, Mass., Dr. Hart has been a member of the College of Liberal Arts faculty at Howard since 1948.

He holds the Bachelor of Science degree from New York University, where he was a quartermiler on the school's IC-4A championship track team the Master of Science from the University of Illinois, and the Doctor of Education from NYU. Prior to coming to Howard, he was a member of the faculty and coaching staff at Talladega (Ala.) College.

Dr. Hart will return to Howard in February.

GHANA THREATENS TO FIGHT BELGIANS

The New York Times

Nkrumah Says He Will Offer Troops to Katanga if U.N. Step Is Unsatisfactory

New York

Special to The New York Times.

ACCRA, Ghana, Aug. 6—President Kwame Nkrumah threatened today to order Ghanaian troops into Katanga Province to fight the Belgian forces if the United Nations failed to compel their withdrawal.

8-7-60

On Monday, Mr. Nkrumah will request a mandate of the National Assembly for complete mobilization of Ghana's armed forces and for a general mobilization of all Ghana for military action.

p. 30

The President made his threat at a news conference after learning that United Nations Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold had postponed the entry of United Nations troops in Katanga. Mr. Nkrumah declared:

"If no United Nations solution is forthcoming Ghana would lend such armed assistance as the Republic of Congo might request. Ghana would provide this assistance even though it meant Ghana and Congo had to fight alone against Belgian troops and other forces maintained and supplied from Belgium."

Mr. Nkrumah hinted that he would expect in such military action "aid and assistance from other countries which value as a principle the conception of African independence."

On Belgium's stand in Katanga, Mr. Nkrumah said:

"Despite various assurances, the Belgian troops remained in Katanga and are in fact responsible for denying entry to Katanga to United Nations forces. It is perfectly clear that since Belgian forces militarily control all airfields in the Katanga area, they could have prevented these airfields' being closed to United Nations forces."

Mr. Nkrumah then declared:

"The behavior of the Government of Belgium in regard to Katanga has in my opinion and that of my Government created a situation which, if not dealt with firmly and immediately, will constitute a major threat to world peace. If Ghana decided to give the Congo Government military aid, a break by Ghana of diplomatic relations with Belgium might precede such action."

The President made a possibly significant reference to a Soviet statement issued last night on the Congo. Mr. Nkrumah said:

"The Soviet Government seems to be telling the United Nations that if it cannot solve the Congo problem it should get out and let someone else do it. Some action must be taken and this is what I propose."

Of Ghana's 5,000 troops, 2,100 are in the Congo as United Nations forces.

Before Mr. Nkrumah's announcement, members of the Builders Brigade offered themselves for military service. The brigade of 12,000 is a youth corps, formed ostensibly for labor. But it is getting some military training.

Tshombe Reaction to Threat

ELISABETHVILLE, the Congo, Aug. 6 (AP)—Premier Moise Tshombe of Katanga Province, commenting on Ghana's threat to join forces with the Congo to force the Belgian troops to leave Katanga, said:

"This is an affair between Belgium and Ghana and it has nothing to do with Katanga really."

Premier Nkrumah of Ghana sent Mr. Tshombe a cablegram last week asking him to allow United Nations troops into Katanga. Mr. Tshombe said:

"I sent a cable to Mr. Nkrumah this morning telling him there is no need for United Nations troops intervening here."

AIR EXPERTS TO CONGO

U. N. Sending 2 Specialists to Regulate Traffic

Special to The New York Times.

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y., Aug. 6—The United Nations announced today that it was sending two air traffic experts to the Congo. They expected to leave for Leopoldville early tomorrow.

The experts are John Babin and Victor Legault, both of Montreal. They were recruited by the International Civil Aviation Organization, an agency of the United Nations, to assist in handling the increase in Congo air traffic that followed the United Nations forces' entry.

Mr. Babin, who has been in the Congo before, said he knew of four major airports in the republic and possibly dozens of smaller airstrips. He said special efforts would be needed to keep air traffic running smoothly in the wake of the heavy influx of troops and supplies.

Leader of Ghana Dreams Of U. S. Of Africa

p. 14

The Call

Kansas City, Mo.

Aug. 12, 1960

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — Mrs. Carlotta Stewart Watson of Memphis, an official representative at the Ghanian president's inauguration last month, reports that the United States of Africa, is a dream of Kwame Nkrumah-American educated president of Ghana and Americans can help him achieve it.

Mrs. CHARLOTTE WATSON

She says the British taught Ghanians much during their 116 year rule, which ended three years ago, but there was still a great and thrilling opportunity for any American Negro who would go to Africa today.

Mrs. Watson says she was treated royally.

NKRUMAH IS GIVEN POWER ON CONGO

N. Y. Times

N. Y. N. Y.

Parliament Votes Authority to Fight Belgians and to Mobilize Ghanaians

Aug. 8, 1960

ACCRA, Ghana, Aug. 10 (Reuters) — Parliament authorized the Government tonight to "commit Ghanaian troops to offensive military action against Belgian troops now in the Congo" and to mobilize Ghana's forces if necessary.

The authority was provided under a motion presented by the Government and approved, 55 to 11, after a two-day debate.

The motion said the Government could send Ghanaian troops to oppose Belgian forces in the Congo "in defiance of the unanimous resolution of the Security Council of the United Nations." It also gave the Government authority to take "all such other steps as may be necessary to mobilize the armed forces of Ghana for such a purpose."

A Government spokesman said the purpose of the motion was to let Ghana prepare for direct action in case the United Nations failed to solve the Katanga problem. Katanga has declared its independence from the Congo and has refused to let United Nations troops enter. Belgian troops are helping the province's regime keep order.

An Opposition amendment, defeated by 57 to 11, would, in effect, have rejected the Government motion.

It would have substituted another expressing "regret" over the situation in the Congo and authorizing the Government to "take all such steps, in concert with other independent African states, as may be necessary to carry out any decisions which may be taken by the United Nations organization for the settling of the crisis in the Congo."

Meanwhile, Britain denied reports that British officers in the Ghanaian Army would be withdraw if Ghanaian forces moved into the Congo without the authority of the United Nations.

A British Government spokesman said here that reports of the recall of Maj. Gen. Henry T. Alexander, British chief of Ghana's defense staff, and other British officers were "entirely untrue."

In another development, President Kwame Nkrumah invited Julius K. Nyerere, leader of the African National Union in Tangany, Ka, to discuss the Congo situation.

Mr. Nkrumah sent a telegram saying he would like an exchange of views with Mr. Nyerere as soon as possible. He said they should meet before the "summit conference" of independent African states scheduled to be held in the Congo capital of Leopoldville Aug. 25 to 30.

BRITISH AID ASKED IN FREEING AFRICA

Nkrumah Asks Macmillan to Help Campaign by Ghana —Says 'Time Is Short'

By HOMER BIGART

Special to The New York Times.

ACCRA, Ghana, Jan. 9 — Prime Minister Kwame Nkrumah urged Britain tonight to assist Ghana in the "liberation" of the remaining colonial territories in Africa.

Speaking at a state dinner in honor of Prime Minister Macmillan, he warned: "The time is short."

He also made a direct request for financial aid, especially in connection with the Volta River power project, an essential part of Ghana's second five-year development plan. Mr. Nkrumah said:

"We will leave no stone unturned to find the funds we need."

This was considered a hint that if help was not forthcoming from Britain, Ghana might turn to the Soviet Union.

Cites Interest in Project

Mr. Macmillan said Britain would follow the progress of the Volta River project "with sympathetic interest."

He told Mr. Nkrumah that there was a strong demand for capital from all over the world and that "the supply is nothing like adequate to the demand."

He said capital would flow to projects that were economically sound and "to those countries which set out to attract investments by creating confidence in their political efficiency and their economic stability."

He said the British "buy a lot of your cocoa and bananas and we could buy a lot of Volts aluminium."

Discussing Ghana's "preoccupation" with the liberation of the remaining African colonies, Mr. Nkrumah said he appreciated that Britain was "heavily involved in Africa."

He said he hoped the British would realize that Ghana, "which has been in the vanguard of the freedom movement, is also faced with equally great problems."

"I am glad to observe that the United Kingdom has been the first to show favorable reactions to the call for independence," he added.

"We hope sincerely, therefore," he said, "that it will be possible within the Commonwealth context to formulate policies and programs within which our two countries can work together in the best interests of the people of Africa, in full realization that in the face of the strong forces of nationalism that have been unleashed today time is short."

This morning Mr. Macmillan and Mr. Nkrumah were cheered by huge crowds as they drove through downtown Accra in an open car.

Perhaps the cheering was mostly for Mr. Nkrumah, but at least it was a promising change from the climate of the last two days, which was clouded by Mr. Nkrumah's repeated warnings that colonial powers were trying to "Balkanize" Africa.

Mr. Macmillan heard a few loud cries of "free Africa," but throngs lining the streets in the commercial section seemed friendly. Both he and Mr. Nkrumah were in good humor. There was nothing to indicate that their talks apparently had been unproductive: they had met for only two hours in private meetings and now the discussions were over.

British sources emphasized that Mr. Macmillan had not come to settle any issues but merely for a general exchange of views. If he had any hopes of persuading Mr. Nkrumah to tone down his attacks on "colonialism" and "imperialism," these hopes were futile. For Mr. Nkrumah, in his speech at a political rally yesterday, assailed colonial powers even more bitterly than before.

Macmillan Exhorts Leaders

ACCRA, Jan. 9 (AP)—Prime Minister Macmillan told Ghana's leaders gently today that they should use their positions of leadership not to gain personal advancement but for the benefit of their nation.

He spoke to several hundred students at Achmiota School with Prime Minister Kwame Nkrumah and Kofi Baako, Minister of Education and Information, at his side.

Macmillan Sees Differences

ACCRA, Jan. 9 (Reuters) Prime Minister Macmillan said tonight he "frankly" recognized the differences between Ghana and Britain over African affairs.

But Mr. Macmillan, speaking at a state banquet, said it was important that both countries understand the other's views during the "difficult period of change" on the continent.

Visit to Italy Scheduled

Special to The New York Times.

LONDON, Jan. 9 — Prime Minister Macmillan and Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd will visit Italy at the invitation of the Italian Government from March 22 to March 24, the Prime Minister's office announced tonight.

African Nationalist Released

LUSAKA, Northern Rhodesia, Jan. 9 (Reuters) — Kenneth Kaunda, former president of the banned Zambia African National Congress, was released from the Lusaka prison today.

Ghana Would Yield Rule to Africa Union

By HOMER BIGART

Special to The New York Times.

ACCRA, Ghana, Jan. 7— Prime Minister Kwame Nkrumah said today Ghana was willing to surrender her sovereignty and submerge herself in an African union to avoid the "Balkanization" of the continent.

Mr. Nkrumah, who had not received foreign newsmen in more than a year, said at a news conference that without such a union the African states emerging from colonial rule would be too weak to resist continued exploitation by the colonial powers.

He said Ghana's new republican constitution, now being prepared, would be unique in that it would allow for the surrender of sovereignty to a union of West and East African states.

West Africa, particularly, is split into too many fragments, Mr. Nkrumah said, adding that the rulers of these fragments tended to regard themselves as "tin gods."

Togoland Premier Cited

These rulers are the greatest stumbling block to union, he declared. He promptly identified one such ruler as his former friend, Sylvanus E. Olympio, Premier of neighboring Togoland. That French trusteeship achieves independence April 27.

Mr. Nkrumah's dispute with Premier Olympio is over the division of the intelligent and large Ewe (pronounced evvy) tribe, which is split almost evenly between Togoland and Ghana. While both men favor the unification of the Ewe, Premier Olympio does not want Togoland to become the "seventh region" of Ghana as Mr. Nkrumah proposes.

At today's news conference Mr. Nkrumah also made the following points:

¶He had urged Prime Minister Macmillan in the first of their talks here last night to publish a "firm timetable" for the independence of the remaining British possessions in East Africa.

¶He opposed the attendance of Nigeria at the Commonwealth Prime Ministers' conference in London in May. Mr. Nkrumah contended Nigeria was still a British colony and would not be independent until Oct. 1. Admit Nigeria and you would have to admit Singapore, he argued.

¶He insisted that Commonwealth membership be restricted to "completely free and independent countries." He complained that the British press failed to distinguish between the Empire and the Commonwealth. The latter is a free association of independent states.

¶He announced that he would summon a conference of all African political groups "sincerely interested in African redemption and unity." The conference, to be held in Accra late this year, will try to achieve a united front by "linking up our programs and policies."

¶He predicted the start of actual construction of the Volta River hydroelectric project by late 1961.

¶He conceded that union talks with Guinea had struck a snag over currency. Guinea is in the franc zone, he explained, so achieving a unified currency presents knotty problems. Language is no obstacle, he said, because Guinea is making English compulsory in her schools.

¶He said he would introduce Mr. Macmillan to nationalist leaders from British possessions at a garden party Saturday afternoon. These nationalists, some exiled by their Governments, should give Mr. Macmillan a fresh slant on African problems, he explained.

¶He indicated Ghana would refuse to recognize the Cameroon republic. Ghana contends that the Government of Premier Ahmadu Ahidjo in Cameroon is not representative and is a stooge of France.

The New York Times

Kwame Nkrumah

Newsmen arriving at Flagstaff House, Mr. Nkrumah's plain white residence, were greeted by a large, friendly Labrador Retriever, Mr. Nkrumah has been assailed as a dictator by some critics and he likes to watch the reaction of visiting diplomats when he introduces the Labrador. Its name is Black Caesar.

Prime Minister Nkrumah seemed relaxed and confident. He brushed aside the inevitable question about Ghana's Preventative Detention Act under which two leaders of the Opposition in Parliament have been jailed without trial.

"I don't like it," he said of the act, "but if we did not nave it this country would have broken down long ago. I'm sure this temporary thing will soon be over."

His statement of willingness to surrender Ghana's sovereignty for Agrican union went beyond his previous appeals for federation. Observers believe ne feels Ghana is so far ahead of the rest of West Africa that it could dominate any federation.

Talks Are Resumed

After the news conference Mr. Nkrumah resumed his talks with Mr. Macmillan.

This morning Mr. Macmillan went for a ride in a surf boat, then visited Accra's steamy, smelly market, where hundreds of women traders shrilled, "Akwaaba" (welcome).

The women showered Mr. Macmillan with gifts, including two beer mugs imported from Czechoslovakia, glass flower pots and glass butter dishes.

When the Prime Minister perspired visibly one woman gave him a handkerchief.

A moment later he pleased the women by mounting a memorial and shouting in Ga dialect, "Omanye aha nye," which he had been told meant "Good luck to you all."

GHANA'S PREMIER TIGHTENS HIS RULE

Nkrumah Assumes Direction of Chief Party to Battle 'Devil of Colonialism'

By HOMER BIGART

Special to The New York Times.

ACCRA, Ghana, Jan. 8— Prime Minister Kwame Nkrumah tightened his one-man rule over Ghana today. He said he acted because Africa faced a new onslaught by "the devil of colonialism."

He told a political rally that the Ghana Government was "only an agent" of his Convention People's party. He then announced that he was assuming the executive direction of party activities by becoming Secretary of the Central Committee.

The Prime Minister accused the colonial powers of a plot to "Balkanize" Africa. He said Ghana must be the vanguard of a struggle for a union of independent African states. He called for a convention of all nationalist parties of Africa late this year to form a united front against colonialism.

Hailed as a Messiah

A cheering crowd of 6,000, which jammed a local stadium, hailed Mr. Nkrumah as "the messiah of African redemption."

Earlier in the day Mr. Nkrumah showed Prime Minister Macmillan of Britain Ghana's Volta River development project.

Mr. Nkrumah believes this hydroelectric and aluminum smelting project will make Ghana the industrial giant of West Africa. Thus Ghana could dominate an African union even though such partners as Nigeria would dwarf her in area and population.

Prime Minister Nkrumah wants a loan of £30,000,000 ($84,000,000) from Britain to help build the dam.

Critics warn that Mr. Nkrumah will turn to the Soviet Union if he is denied a loan from Western sources.

The talks between Mr. Macmillan and Mr. Nkrumah have ended. There were two private meetings lasting a total of two hours. No other conferences are planned although Mr. Macmillan does not depart for Nigeria until Monday.

No rift has developed, British sources said, suggesting that the two men had simply run out of things to say.

Warns of Rivalries

In his talk at the stadium Mr. Nkrumah said the purpose of the conference he had proposed was to prevent Africa from being divided into small states that would dissipate their energies in fruitless rivalries.

He expressed misgivings over newly independent nations of the French Community being admitted to the United Nations. These weak countries could still be easily controlled by the colonial powers, he said, and this would interfere with his dream of a union of African states.

At the site of the Volta Dam, seventy miles northeast of Accra, Prime Ministers Nkrumah and Macmillan had luncheon on a high spur overlooking the rive, the Volta is one of the great rivers of Africa, draining most of Ghana, part of French Togoland and the Voltaic Republic.

The proposed dam would create a lake 250 miles long and 3,300 square miles in area. This area will be served by the port of Tema which, when completed, will be one of the largest artificial ports in the world. Tema, eighteen miles east of Accra, is already a bustling city. There are few deepwater ports along the coast here and cargo handling at Accra is still dependent of primitive surf boats.

The Tema harbor, which Mr. Macmillan visited enroute to the Volta River, is nearing completion. Protected from the swells of the Atlantic by a main breakwater one and one-half miles long and sixteen feet high, the water area of the harbor is about 5,000 acres.

Prime Minister Nkrumah believes the Tema harbor will have a powerful econoomic pull

The New York Times Jan. 9, 1960

DEVELOPMENT SCHEME: The Volta River power project (cross) north of Ajena is an important factor in Ghana's industrial plan.

on the interior of French Togoland, which attains independence in April. Mr. Nkrumah wants Togoland to join Ghana but he is meeting opposition from Togoland's Premier Sylvanus E. Olympio.

Talk With Macmillan Asked

Special to The New York Times.

SALISBURY, Southern Rhodesia, Jan. 8—Northern Rhodesian nationalists leaders whose homes were raided Wednesday by the police are demanding to see Prime Minister Macmillan when he visits Lusaka, Northern Rhodesia's capital.

The United National Independence party, which they lead, is regarded as the caretaker organizatioon for the Nationalist leader, Kenneth Kaunda. He is being released from jail this week-end after serving a nine-month sentence on charges of coonspiracy and holding an unlawful meeting.

The Government has banned meetings between representatives of political groups outside the Legislative Council and Mr. Macmillan.

"If African members of the Legislative Council are the only Africans Mr. Macmillan is going to meet, then he will go back to Britain with wrong notions about the dangerous political situation in this country," Nalamino Mundia, deputy secretary-general of the party, said tonight.

The belief grew here that Dr. Hastings K. Banda, Nyasaland nationalist leader, would soon be released.

C. W. F. Footman, chief secretary of the Nyasaland Government, arrived here today for talks with Sir Roy Welensky, Prime Minister of the Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland.

Mr. Footman is believed to have reported to Sir Roy on conversations with Dr. Banda and other detainees earlier this week.

S OF NKRUMAH AWAIT MACMILLAN

Times p. 7

Ghana Opposition Will Air Grievances in Discussion With British Leader

New York

By HOMER BIGART

Special to The New York Times.

ACCA, Ghana, Jan. 5—Political foes of Prime Minister Kwame Nkrumah assembled in Accra tonight to discuss their grievances with Prime Minister Macmillan. The British leader arrives tomorrow on a fact-finding African tour.

Dr. Joseph B. Danquah, long a fighter for Ghanaian independence, who lost control of the chief nationalist party to Mr. Nkrumah in 1949, said he realized it was useless to appeal to Mr. Macmillan for help against what he called the "Communist dictatorship" of Prime Minister Nkrumah.

"We know Macmillan can't interfere in dominion affairs," said Dr. Danquah, "but there are matters of common interest that can be usefully discussed.

Nkrumah Said to Meddle

"One is the attempt by Nkrumah to subvert other African countries. He has been interfering in the internal affairs of Kenya and Nyasaland. He wants to dominate the whole of Africa. He wants to seize French Togoland and part of the Ivory Coast.

"We can also warn Macmillan about the international implications of the Volta River hydroelectric project. Nkrumah says if he can't get financing from the West he'll get help elsewhere and he means Soviet Russia."

Last week the Opposition in the Ghanian National Assembly, teh United party, issued a "blue paper" replying to a Government accusation of revolutionary conspiracy. (Two leading parliamentary members of the United party were among those jailed last week on charges of conspiring to assassinate Mr. Nkrumah.)

Government Asks Evidence

The Government retorted today that the blue paper implied that the conspiracy was directed at Togoland rather than Ghana. It called upon the United party executive committee to furnish the police with evidence of the "possibility of such a conspiracy agains ta friendly neighboring state."

"This Government is mad, mad," cried Dr. Danquah. "There was no such implication in the blue paper. But the Government says we must submit evidence or go to jail for two years."

The impending arrival of Mr. Macmillan has drawn little attention in the Government press.

Today's Evening News, organ of Prime Minister Nkrumah's party, splashed a front-page attack on "Western imperialists," who are charged with attempting to cause friction between

The New York Times

AWAITS VISITS: Dr. Joseph B. Danquah, political leader in Ghana. He is looking forward to the coming talks with British Prime Minister Harold Macmillan.

the emerging African republics. Any British or American publications that mention a possible rivalry for African leadership between Mr. Nkrumah and President Gamal Abdel Nasser of the United Arab Republic or between Mr. Nkrumah and Nigerian leaders are immediately labeled the "imperialist press."

Of the domestic Opposition, the Evening News suggested today:

"Get rid of these political twerps and if need be detain them in the interest of the peace-loving people of free Ghana, Africa and the world at large."

GHANA MONARCHY URGED

New York Times

Opposition Party Is Opposed to Plan for Republic

Special to The New York Times.

ACCRA, Ghana, Feb. 15—The Opposition United party, Ghana's second major party, has rejected the Government's proposal that Ghana become a republic. Instead it has proposed an "elective monarchy."

The party's national executive issued a statement today saying that instead of a President Ghana should have one of Ghana's traditional paramount chiefs as a ceremonial head. All powers would remain with the Prime Minister, who would attend the conferences of the Prime Ministers of the British Commonwealth.

The United party has sixteen seats in Ghana's 104-member Parliament.

GHANA BEGINS WORK ON JET FIGHTER BASE

Chicago Sunday Tribune

Britain to Help Train 32 Plane Unit

Chicago Ill

Sun. 2-21-60

[N. Y. Times-Chicago Tribune Service]

ACCRA, Ghana, Feb. 20 — Work is under way on the Ghana air force, which will deploy two jet fighter squadrons of 16 planes each.

The plan, estimated to cost about 20 million dollars, involves the conversion of 6 square miles of wasteland, 20 miles from Accra, into a modern fighter station containing a 6,000 foot runway, 40 technical buildings, and barracks for 1,000 airmen.

The project has top priority. September, 1961, is the target date.

Britain to Help

A preliminary survey of design and construction of the air station is being undertaken by Taylor Woodrow, British engineering and construction company.

A team of engineers working on the site is led by E. D. Pendington, former royal air force squadron leader and an expert on design and layout of fighter air fields, and guided missile bases in Britain; and Robert Taylor, air field specialist engineer who was prominent in the design and construction of London airport.

Has 9 Battalions

A government spokesman said the air force would be run with the assistance of officers and men from friendly countries, especially Britain. Provision is being made to train Ghanaians to take over as soon as practicable.

The plan is part of Prime Minister Kwame Nkrumah's program to establish Ghana as the greatest military power in Africa—perhaps second only to the Union of South Africa.

Ghana already has nine battalions of ground forces. The nucleus of a navy was launched last month with the purchase of two minesweepers.

Nkrumah Tells Rally in Harlem Negroes Form U.S.-Africa Bond

The New York Times

Says American Leaders Are Becoming Aware of 'Tremendous Advantage' —Ghanaian Chief Off for Accra

New York, N.Y.

By FOSTER HAILEY

President Kwame Nkrumah of Ghana declared at a rally in Harlem yesterday afternoon that the 20,000,000 Americans of African ancestry constituted the "strongest link between the people of North America and the people of Africa."

"I am informed that American leaders are beginning to grasp the tremendous advantage that is conferred on the United States by their presence in this country," he told the cheering crowd.

The rally was called by a group of Harlem leaders that included almost every political and religious grouping in the area. It was held in front of the Theresa Hotel on Seventh Avenue between 125th and 124th Streets. The street was closed to southbound traffic while the rally was in progress from 4:35 to 5:15 P. M. The police estimated the crowd at 1,000 persons.

Last Official Activity

The rally was the last official activity here of the African leader on his visit to the United Nations General Assembly. He had a quiet dinner in his hotel before leaving by chartered Pan American jet airliner for Accra, his capital.

Previously, he attended the morning session of the Assembly, at which he spoke in favor of the five-power resolution introduced by himself, President Tito of Yugoslavia, President Gamal Abdel Nasser of the United Arab Republic, President Sukarno of Indonesia and Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru of India. The resolution called for a meeting between President Eisenhower and Premier Khrushchev.

He also was a guest of The New York Times at luncheon in the Times building at 229 West Forty-third Street.

President Nkrumah lived in Harlem for a time when he was in the United States to study. He knew many of the Harlem leaders who welcomed him yesterday.

Moderate Speech

President Nkrumah's speech was moderate in tone throughout in contrast to those of most of the other speakers.

The rally had a highly racialist tinge, led by a group of seventy-five to 100 persons with placards which read "Welcome Nkrumah," "Welcome Lumumba (Patrice Lumumba, ousted Premier of the Congo)" and "This Demonstration is for African Nationalism."

The placard-bearers heckled every speaker who used the word "Negro" and frequently interrupted with approving shouts all mention of the intent of Africans to "throw out the white colonialists and imperialists of Europe."

Among the speakers were Hope R. Stevens, prominent insurance executive, who was chairman of the committee that sponsored the rally; Representative Adam Clayton Powell, Jr., Malcolm X, leader of a Negro Moslem movement in New York City; Carlos Cook, head of the African Nationalist Movement and Hulan E. Jack, self-suspended Borough President of Manhattan.

Mr. Powell denounced Washington officials for not having paid more attention to the African leaders at the General Assembly. He said that he had attended four receptions given by African delegations one night last week "and the only representative of the American Government there was myself."

Some day, he continued, unless this is remedied, the United States will be in trouble.

"America without Africa is going to be a second-class power," he warned.

P. 3

Sat. 10-1-60

182

ENTER AFRICA—Members of the Ghana delegation enter UN grounds en route to the historic sessions which marked the entry of 13 new African nations to the General Assembly.

The Pittsburgh Courier Pittsburgh, Pa.

GHANA PUSHES BID TO FREE COLONIES

The New York Times

U. N. Delegate Particularly Urges Portugal and Spain to Liberate African Areas

New York

By THOMAS J. HAMILTON

Special to The New York Times.

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y., Nov. 29—Ghana urged Portugal and Spain today to grant immediate independence to their African colonies.

Alex Quaison-Sackey, the Ghanaian representative, urged the General Assembly to adopt unanimously an African-Asian resolution calling on the colonial powers to take "immediate steps" for the grant of independence to the remaining non-self-governing and trust territories of the world.

Mr. Quaison-Sackey said that if the colonial powers heeded the colonial declaration, "all of Africa" would be free by 1962. He said it was urgent to grant freedom to Kenya, Uganda, Northern and Southern Rhodesia, Ruanda-Urundi, South-West Africa, Malta and Algeria, as well as to the 11,500,000 Africans in South Africa.

However, Mr. Quaison-Sackey gave special emphasis to his statement expressing the hope that Portugal would take immediate steps to grant independence to Angola and Mozambique and that Spain would take the same action regarding Spanish Sahara and the tiny colony of Ifni, also on the Atlantic coast.

Ending of 'Fiction' Urged

Meanwhile, he urged both Spain and Portugal to abandon the "juridical fiction" that these territories were "overseas provinces" and hence not colonies. Although Spain has given ground, Portugal has become a favorite target of the anti-colonial delegates at this session of the Assembly because of her refusal to submit reports to it on her overseas possessions.

Mr. Quaison-Sackey gave a warm endorsement to a paragraph in the African-Asian resolution stating that "inadequacy of political, economic, social or educational preparedness should never serve as a pretext for delaying independence." He remarked that "complete independence, with danger" was to be preferred to "servitude with tranquility."

The Ghanian delegate added that, as a "logical follow-up" to the African-Asian resolution, the Assembly should take steps to set up a United Nations capital development fund to help the newly independent states.

He remarked that if the "rich countries" contributed 1 per cent of their national revenues to suc ha fund, this would help avoid East-West competition to wi nallies.

Dr. Mario Amadeo of Argentina, the first Latin-American delegate to speak since the debate began yesterday, gave his endorsement to the African-Asian resolution "in principle."

GHANA TELLS U.S. SHE IS A NEUTRAL

The N.Y. Times

Nkrumah Assures Envoy in Accra His Nation Leans Neither East Nor West

New York Herald Tribune

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 20—President Kwame Nkrumah of Ghana has made a special effort to reassure the West that his country is "neutral and non-aligned."

Herald 11-21-60

He apparently took the step to counter the widespread belief here and in other Western capitals that Ghana has been siding with the Soviet Union, at least on the issues of colonialism and the Congo.

Mr. Nkhumah gave his assurances Wednesday at a private luncheon in Accra for Wilson C. Flake, who is retiring as United States Ambassador to Ghana. The luncheon was given at Mr. Nkrumah's residence.

Reports of Mr. Nkrumah's remarks appeared in Accra newspapers hTursday, but their substance was not made public by the Ghanaian Embassy here until today.

"We are for Ghana, for Africa, for Africans," Mr. Nkrumah declared. "As I have stated publicly before, Ghana faces neither East nor West but forward."

Warns on Colonialism

At the same time, Nkrumah said, "we are ever wary of colonialism in any form and we are vigilant in seeing that it is eradicated from Africa."

He mentioned the proposed investment of $180,000,000 by the Volta Aluminum Company in developing Ghana's resources. He and his country, he said, welcome this kind of capital from abroad.

"We cannot afford that kind of capital unless we have stable policies," he said. "It is the best road for Ghana to follow."

Volta Aluminum represents a group of North American interests, including the Kaiser Aluminum Company. Mr. Flake was reported greatly pleased by Mr. Nkrumah's remarks.

The New York Times

REAFFIRMS POSITION: President Kwame Nkrumah of Ghana. He has made a special effort to reassure the West that his country is "neutral and non-aligned."

The New York Times Wide World Photo

JUST A BIT AWED: The 5-year-old daughter of the envoy of Ghana to London listens to a word from the Duke of Edinburgh. The child was waiting to take his picture when he arrived last week for dinner with her father.

Ghana Details Republic Plans

The Washington Post

By Horace Castell

Reuters

ACCRA, Ghana, March 6 Prime Minister Kwame Nkrumah today published a draft constitution to turn Ghana into a republic—and give Parliament power to vote the country into a larger union of African states.

An African union has been Nkrumah's long-standing goal.

The draft constitution refers to "the confident expectation of an early surrender of sovereignty to a union of African states and territories."

The constitution made no mention of Ghana's membership in the British Commonwealth, but Nkrumah said if a republic were approved he would seek continued Commonwealth membership.

Two other republics—India and Pakistan—are in the Commonwealth.

Details of the constitution were explained in a broadcast by Nkrumah tonight.

A government report accompanying the 16-page draft said African frontiers "were drawn merely to suit the convenience of the colonial powers who divided Africa between them during the last century."

The constitution goes to a plebiscite in April. If approved, this West African country of 5 million—known as the Gold Coast until it received its independence from Britain three years ago today—will become a republic July 1.

Under the constitution, Ghana would have a president with executive power, a cabinet appointed by the president and a national assembly of a speaker and at least 104 members meeting annually. Judicial power would be vested in a supreme court.

The president and assembly would be elected by universal adult suffrage every five years. Unlike the United States system, the president normally would be the leader of the party holding power in the assembly.

"It is the government's view that it is essential in the interests of strong and efficient government that the president and the assembly should work as one," the accompanying report said.

The first president would be elected by the people. Candidates could be nominated by any 10 members of parliament.

The people would elect the president in April's plebsicite when they vote for or against the proposed constitution. Nkrumah is considered a certainty for the post.

The president, who must be over 35, would have veto power over any bill passed by the assembly. He would be commander-in-chief of the armed forces and "fount of honor" who provides decorations and awards.

On taking office the president would have to swear to strive to attain or preserve African union and uphold freedom and justice, racial, religious and tribal tolerance, property rights and economic justice.

In his broadcast to the nation tonight, Nkrumah said the keynote of the proposed constitution was "one man," one vote," and the unity of Africa.

His party and the government believed, he said, "that the people of Africa will never be truly great, happy or prosperous while they remain divided into a number of small states."

"So deep is our faith in African unity," he added, "that we have declared our preparedness to surrender the sovereignty of Ghana in whole or in part in the interests of the union of African states and territories."

Ghana's opposition United Party already has rejected the idea of a republic and proposed instead an elective monarchy with regional paramount chiefs rotating from 4-or 5-year terms as head of state.

But the government's proposed constitution, with possibly minor amendments, is expected to be approved.

GHANA GETS PLAN TO BE A REPUBLIC

The New York Times

Nkrumah Offers Proposals to Change Status on July 1 Under New Constitution

Special to The New York Times.

ACCRA, Ghana, March 6—Prime Minister Kwame Nkrumah presented tonight his Government's proposals for a Constitution under which Ghana would become a republic but remain in the British Commonwealth.

In a broadcast speech he said the keynote of the new constitution was "one man, one vote and the unity of Africa, namely the political union of African countries."

A plebiscite will be held next month to obtain approval for the Constitution, according to a White Paper published wtih the draft of the document today. If the vote is favorable, it said, Dr. Nkrumah will inform the Commonwealth Prime Ministers at their conference in London in May that Ghana will become a republic but wishes to remain in the Commonwealth, like India and Pakistan.

Ghana has been a self-governing Commonwealth nation with Queen Elizabeth II as her sovereign since she was granted independence three years ago. As a republic, Ghana would recognize the Queen only as head of the Commonwealth.

Change Planned for July 1

It is planned to bring the republic into being July 1. At the same time the nation's first President would be inaugurated. urated.

The new Constitution provides for government by the President and Parliament, with the President having all executive powers.

Candidates for Parliament will declare their choice for President before a general election. Those elected will then select the President. Under the draft Constitution, the President can at any time dissolve Parliament, which has a maximum life of five years, but then he himself must be re-elected. The President must convene the National Assembly at least once a year.

The President will be commander in chief of the armed forces. He will have the power to appoint Cabinet ministers, to approve or veto legislation adopted by the National Assembly, to appoint judges, the attorney general and the auditor general and to appoint, dismiss or discipline civil servants.

It is assumed that Dr. Nkrumah will continue to exercise the chief political power here after the change in the form of government.

Certain entrenched clauses in the Constitution couldl be changed only after a referendum. These includes the provisions concerning universal adult suffrage, the Presidency and the legislative powers of Parliament.

Also in this category is a declaration that the President must make on assuming office. This must include a statement that:

"The powers of government spring from the will of the people and should be exercised in accordance therewith, that freedom and justice should be honored and maintained, that the union of Africa should be striven for by every lawful means, that no person should suffer discrimination on grounds of sex, race, tribe, religion or political belief, that chieftaincy should be guaranteed and preserved" and the freedom of speech, religion and assembly must be safeguarded.

The New York Times March 7, 1960

REPUBLIC IS PLANNED: Ghana (diagonal shading) would retain her seat in the British Commonwealth.

The White Paper says the Constitution does not copy that of any other country. It rejects any copying of the Presidential system of the United States, where "there is a division of authority between the executive part of the government and the legislative part of the government."

"Under the United States form of government," the White Paper says, "Cabinet ministers do not sit in Parliament and the members of Parliament are elected quite separately from the President, so that it is always possible that Parliament may be of one political complexion and the President another.

"When there is a disagreement between the President and Parliament, there is no machinery for an appeal to the people," it asserts.

Accra Crowd Jeers Nkrumah's Opponent

The New York Times

Dr. Joseph B. Danquah

Special to The New York Times.

ACCRA, Ghana, March 18—Dr. Joseph B. Donquah, Prime Minister Kwame Nkrumah's opponent in next month's Presidential election, was jeered by crowds today as he left the Parliament building.

In contrast, Mr. Nkrumah was greeted with songs of praise as he emerged from the building after having been nominated. Some youths lifting the Prime Minister to their shoulders.

Mr. Nkrumah's supporters chanted: "Here comes the man Nkrumah and Danquah takes to his heels."

Even wilder scenes occurred in Parliament. The uproar began as the Speaker announced the nominees. Governmental and Opposition members screamed catcalls across the floor. Cabinet ministers joined back-benchers in carrying Mr. Nkrumah on their shoulders.

Dr. Danquah said he was running to oppose the proposed Republican Constitution for Ghana.

NKRUMAH ASSAILS NON-AFRICA PACTS

He Calls Defense Alliances Threat to Independence —Again Urges Union

Special to The New York Times.

ACCRA, Ghana, March 14—Prime Minister Kwame Nkrumah warned African independent states today against defense pacts with powers outside Africa. Such pacts, he said, would compromise and undermine the of African states.

Mr. Nkrumah issued his warning in a speech to Parliament during a debate on the Government's draft constitution for a republic. Africa, he said, must be free of defense and political commitments "not entirely African in complexion."

"Entanglement in military politics with foreign powers is danger to African unity," he said. "It will bring the cold war to Africa."

One of the clauses in the proposed constitution enjoins the Government to work for a union of African states.

Observers here believe Mr. Nkrumah's remarks were aimed at Ghana's neighbor, Togoland, due to become independent next month.

Togoland was reported recently to be contemplating a defense pact with France after independence as a precaution against Ghana's expansionist policies and a threat by Mr. Nkrumah to integrate Togoland as a province of Ghana.

Mr. Nkrumah said integration, which he termed as the removal of barriers between two countries, would be pursued "by all legitimate means available to us, including negotiation."

Mr. Nkrumah restated his plans to save Africa from imperialism and from the holding of nuclear tests on African soil.

"The African peoples will never forgive France for any repetition of atomic tests in the Sahara," he said.

He told the cheering members of Parliament to plan a conference for positive action "to mobilize world opinion against the horrors of French tests n Africa."

"Ghana," he said, "has a duty to speak for Africa."

Special to The New York Times.

ACCRA, Ghana, March 14—The opposition United party withdrew its objection today to Ghana's becoming a republic.

S. D. Dombo, the party's leader, told Parliament, however, he still opposed the draft constitution announced by the Government a week ago.

He indicated that the Opposition would no longer press for Ghana to be an "elective monarchy" headed in rotation by the country's six senior paramount chiefs.

He said the United party insisted that the post of President be ceremonial and that the President not be the leader of the Government.

Mr. Dombo was the opening speaker for the Opposition in a debate on Prime Minister Kwame Nkrumah's constitutional proposals.

Mr. Dombo said that if the Opposition's new proposals were rejected it would campaign for a "no" vote in the April plebiscite on the republican constitution.

He said the United party would not contest the presidential election. He said the party believed that the choice of a first President in the election on the constitution was premature.

Mr. Dombo offered an amendment asking Parliament to appoint a constitutional reform commission to ascertain the people's wishes as a first step in producing a new constitution.

In the debate Prime Minister Nkrumah said he had notified the Privy Council in London, of which he is a member, that after June 30 it would no longer hear appeals from Ghanaian courts. Ghana becomes a republic July 1.

ISSUES PACT WARNING: Kwame Nkrumah, Prime Minister of Ghana. He warned the African independent states against making defense pacts with powers outside of Africa.

Ghana Republic Set To Keep British Ties

ACCRA, Ghana, Mar. 7 (AP).—Ghana will become a republic in July of this year and will remain within the British Commonwealth, Premier Kwame Nkrumah said last night.

In a broadcast statement. he told the people of Ghana he will formally announce his government's decisions at the Commonwealth Premiers' Conference in London in May.

Mr. Nkrumah also outlined proposals for a republican constitution for the new nation. It read in part:

"The constitution recognizes that ultimately, all powers of state come from the people, and it will be for the people, not the constituent assembly, to determine the form of constitution. . . ."

The preface said the draft constitution has been designed to "meet the particular needs of Ghana and to express the realities of Ghana's constitutional position."

Leader to Have Powers

The draft proposes the actual head of the Ghanian government after July 1 this year should be the President of the republic. He will be chosen in a way to make him at the same time leader of the majority party in the National Assembly.

The President will exercise all powers now held by the governor general and the Premier.

The President will not be a member of the National Assembly but will be entitled to address the assembly occasionally and send messages to Parliament when he so desires.

His term of office will be identical with that of the National Assembly, unless he dies or resigns.

Retaining Cabinet

Concerning the cabinet, the draft proposals recommend that:

The President is to have a cabinet of at least eight ministers, who must all be members of a National Assembly of at least 104 members.

Subject to the general powers of the President, the cabinet will control the government of the country in the same way as it has under the existing constitution.

Until March 6, 1957, Ghana was the British colony of the Gold Coast. It was notorious in the slave trade of the last century.

When the British granted freedom in 1957, Mr. Nkrumah already was on record as a staunch advocate of total liberation of the African continent.

Ghana Names New Cabinet

ACCRA (ANP)—Members of President Kwame Nkrumah's cabinet under the new republican form of government—consists mainly of holdovers from the former parliamentary government.

Retaining the selfsame posts which they formerly held were Ministers K. A. Gbedemah, finance and presidential affairs; Kojo Botsio agriculture and parliamentary affairs; A. E. A. Ofori-Atta, justice; Ako Adjei, foreign affairs; Krobi Edusei, transport, communications and ceremonies; Kofi Baako, establishment and presidential matters in Parliament.

Other members are Ministers A. E. Inkumsah, interior; E. K. Bensah works and housing; P. K. K. Quaidoo, social welfare; C. de Graft Dickson, defense; F. K. D. Goka, trade; R. O. Amoa-Ko-Atta, labor and cooperatives; A. J. Dowuona Hammond, education, and Kwaku Boatng, information and broadcasting.

The New York Times New York Mar 3-20-60

European

TRANSFORMATION BEGINS: A lesson in walking is on curriculum at London models school for two of the eight girls sent from Ghana for training as receptionists for Ghana Airways. The two-month stay also includes traffic study at London Airport and experience in cabin service.

12 NKRUMAH FOES HUNTED BY GHANA

The New York Times New York

Regime Orders the Arrest of Advocates of Togoland Unity—14 Already Held

Mar 3-20-60

Special to The New York Times.

ACCRA, Ghana, March 19—Prime Minister Kwame Nkrumah ordered today the arrest of twelve more of his political opponents. They included an Opposition member of Parliament, the Rev. Francis Ametowobla.

Home Secretary Emmanuel Inkumsah has issued the detention orders. If found by the police, the twelve can be jailed up to five years without trial.

All twelve are of Ewe tribal stock and have homes near the Togoland border. Fourteen other opponents of the Government from the same area were arrested early this week and are now in jail.

The Ewe people want the unification of French and British Togoland. The British section has been integrated into Ghana and the French section is to become independent in eight days.

Intervention Feared

According to Mr. Inkumsah, the Opposition members are being arrested for "conspiracy to break down civil administration through organized widespread violence and civil disturbances as excuse for seeking foreign intervention."

Dr. Nkrumah says he has discovered a plot for an armed attack on Ghana being prepared in French Togoland.

The Prime Minister is accusing Premier Sylvanus Olympio of Togoland of complicity in the plot. M. Olympio has denied the charge.

A Ghanaian Government statement today said conspiratorial meetings had been held since January in Ghana and in Togoland.

At one meeting the formation of an underground army and possible sources of arms were said to have been discussed. At another, men were selected for para-military training in Togoland, according to the Government. It cited as evidence the building of a bridge and the making of tracks in the bush to facilitate the passage of insurgents from Togoland to Ghana.

Refuge Sought in Togoland

The Government said it had information that the twelve men now being sought had plotted to organize transportation into Ghana of persons training in Togoland. The twelve, except Father Ametowobla, have taken refuge in French Togoland.

Premier Olympio told a reporter that he had sent an investigator to look into the allegation of bridge building and track making.

"He saw that small Ewe communities on both sides of the frontier were throwing logs into the river and improving the bush track to facilitate inter-village frontier trade," Mr. Olympio related. "Anyone who believes it would facilitate an attack on Ghana more than other frontier bridges has a Boy Scout's conception of military strategy."

GHANA OFFERS EVIDENCE

The New York Times

Publishes Document to Back Charge of Togoland Plot

Special to The New York Times.

ACCRA, Ghana, April 4—Excerpts from a document described as a "draft constitution for Togoland," depicting large areas of Ghana as part of French Togoland, were published here today by the Ghanaian Government.

Foreign Minister Ako Adjei has handed a note to the French Ambassador to Accra, Louis de Guirangaud, maintaining that the document is genuine.

The Ghanaian Government contends the document is proof of a plot to annex Ghanaian territory by force to Togoland, the French-administered United Nations trust territory east of Ghana. The territory is to become independent April 27.

Three weeks ago Ghana asked France to investigate the allegations.

Africans Demand Vote, Nkrumah Tells Parley

The Washington Post Washington, D.C. P. A6

Reuter

ACCRA, Ghana, April 7—Prime Minister Kwame Nkrumah warned today that as long as Africans were denied the privilege of "one-man, one-vote," then insecurity, resentment and revolt will prevail.

Nkrumah castigated recent events in South Africa as "a brutal massacre" and the French Sahara nuclear tests as "an act of stubborn and inhuman defiance."

His attack came before 300 delegates and observers from governments and political parties from 16 countries or dependencies in Africa attending an "emergency" 3-day "positive action" conference for peace and security in Africa.

The beginning of 1960, he said, saw "ruthless outrages on the peace-loving people of our continent."

2 Swords of Damocles

There were "two threatening swords of Damocles hanging over our continent and we must remove them"—South Africa's racial segregation policy and French atomic tests.

Nkrumah said African union was not a dream and added that "I for one am prepared to serve under any African leader who is able to offer the proper guidance in this great issue."

He called for an end to the war in Algeria, adding: "Africa for the Africans" did not mean that other races were excluded from the continent but that Africans should and must govern themselves.

Africans faced neither East nor West, but forward, he said.

On the Sahara tests, Nkrumah suggested that future positive direct action against French nuclear tests might be taken by a "mass non-violent attempt to proceed toward the testing area." Hundreds of persons marching in this way, he said, would be a protest that the people of France and the world could not ignore.

Questions Church Stand

Dealing with South Africa, Nkrumah said: "The civilized world stands aghast at the brutal massacre of unarmed South Africans in South Africa. Yet this wanton outrage is hardly more terrible than the French atomic tests in the Sahara.

"It is ironical," he went on, "that the rulers of South Africa call themselves Christians. . . . What are the churches of the Christian world doing about these very contradictions of Christianity?"

Nkrumah called for the setting up among independent African states of a common market in industrial products and better communciations between neighboring states.

It is the third major pan-African meeting to be called in Accra since Ghana became independent three years ago.

Nkrumah Will Get $28,000 Salary

Atlanta Daily World

ACCRA, Ghana — (NNPA)—When Dr. Kwame Nkrumah became President of Ghana Friday, he began receiving an annual tax-free income of $28,000, of which $21,000 is salary and the remainder basic allowance. His salary as Prime Minister was $19,600.

The Finance Minister moved in the House Tuesday for the approval of this scale and new income structures for Ministers, regional commissioners, parliamentary secretaries and ordinary members of Parliament. These persons' income will not be exempt from income tax.

Mar 7-3-60

Ministers will receive $8,400 plus a basic allowance of $4,200 and $1680 housing allowance. Regional commissioners are to have $8,400, with $2,100 basic allowance and $1,680 table allowance.

Nkrumah becomes first President of Ghana

The Afro-American p.19

Baltimore Md.

ACCRA, Ghana — President - elect Kwame Nkrumah was inaugurated here Friday in a colorful ceremony climaxing a four - day celebration of the transformation of Ghana into a republic.

An estimated million persons to observe the birth of the republic. Natives dancing to throbbing drums swirled up streets decked with flowers and flags.

The change in government marks the realization of a life long dream of American-educated Nkrumah.

Officially, Ghana wes transformed into a republic at midnight June 30.

Sat. 7-9-60

SPEAKING AT the final session of Parliament under the old form of government, Nkrumah said he hoped Ghana would be "a source of inspiration and guidance to African states still under foreign domination.

Three years ago, the former colony became a self - governing dominion within the British Commonwealth. It joins India and Pakistan as republics in the Commonwealth.

Queen Elizabeth, in a message, said:

"I rejoice to note the great strides in the development of education and social services which have taken place in since independence."

Nkrumah replied that the change in Ghana's constitution was not through any lack of affection for the Queen but to "truly interpret the aspirations and hopes of the people of Ghana and give full expression to our African personality."

As President of Ghana, Dr. Nkrumah began receiving an annual tax - free income of $28,000, of which $21,000 is salary and the remainder basic allowance. His salary as Prime Minister was $19,600.

The Afro-American Sat. 7-9-60 p.19

FACE OF A LEADER — A smiling likeness of Premier Kwame Nkrumah highlights this new stamp issued by the Ghana postal department. The stamp, commemorating Republic Day, was issued on July 1.

Ghana Becomes Republic July 1

Atlanta Daily World

Atlanta Ga. Duplicate

ACCRA, Ghana — (ANP) — In the hurly-burly of Africa's current political climate, July First is a significant date. That is the day, Ghana becomes a republic.

Sun. 6-26-60

There will be no immediate change discernible in Ghanian life. Though the six-million-plus citizens of Ghana will take time out to celebrate the holiday properly, they will not linger long over the celebration. Instead they will quickly return to the daily routine of building up the strength and substance of their young and dynamic nation.

p.1

But the changeover to a republican form of government will have far-reaching effects on Ghana, Africa, and the rest of the world. For this is the next step in the democratization of Ghana.

NKRUMAH HEADS NATION

The major difference that will occur in Ghana during the four-day celebration — from July 1 to 4 — is that Kwame Nkrumah displaces Queen Elizabeth II of England as head of the Ghanian nation. In becoming a republic, Ghana follows the path blazed in the British Commonwealth family by India and Pakistan.

Thus republicanism for Ghana and the establishment of an African as the chief of state is a natural evolutionary result of Ghanian nationalism and the basic African desire to depart from the tradition of European colonialism. And since Ghana will retain its membership in the British Commonwealth, its leaders will still recognize the Queen as head of the Commonwealth, but not of Ghana.

p.4

In essence, Ghana has achieved sovereignty in fact and theory with a bloodless revolution that has kept Great Britain friendly to Ghana in a turbulent time when bitterness could so easily have been generated

Coincidentally, the July 1-4 celebration of the emergence of Ghana as a republic falls precisely on the 184th anniversary of America's Declaration of Independence from British sovereign rule. This Declaration of Independence on July 4, 1776 was part of a bloody war which gave birth to 13 loosely- coordinated states that later fused together and became the present United States of America.

African 3d World Force Urged By Ghana Chief

The Courier-Journal

By The Associated Press

Accra, Ghana, July 4.—President Kwame Nkrumah in an impassioned speech to Parliament Monday urged the creation of a bloc of independent African states as a first step toward "a nonnuclear world third force."

He said the bloc would be independent of East or West and all uncommitted African territories would be invited to join.

Addressing Parliament only three days after Ghana became a republic, Nkrumah declared:

"In 12 years from the fateful days of 1948 . . . we have started a movement that has set the whole of Africa ablaze and which aims to blast the last bastions of colonialism, imperialism, and racialism from the face of the African Contenint."

To Support Banned Groups

Nkrumah pledged Ghana's support for the banned nationalist organizations in South Africa, exponent of racial separation. He hinted that Ghana may leave the British Commonwealth if South Africa remains a member. He declared:

"It will be extremely embarrassing to Ghana to remain indefinitely in the Commonwealth with a Government that recognizes and practises apartheid and racial discrimination."

Most of the 114 members of Parliament wore traditional clothes for their opening session. A 21-gun salute, followed by the beating of drums and the sounding of African horns, heralded Nkrumah's arrival in the chamber for his speech.

Ghana Urges Non-Nuclear African Bloc

Washington Post

Tues. 7-5-60

ACCRA, Ghana, July 4 (AP) President Kwame Nkrumah in an impassioned speech to Parliament today urged the creation of a bloc of Independent African States as a first step toward "a non-nuclear world third force."

p.14

He said the bloc would be independent of East or West and all uncommitted African territories would be invited to join.

Addressing Parliament only three days after Ghana became a republic, Nkrumah declared:

"In twelve years from the fateful days of 1948 . . . we have started a movement that has set the whole of Africa ablaze and which aims to blast the last bastions of colonialism, imperialism and racialism from the face of the African continent."

Nkhumah pledged Ghana's support for the banned Nationalist organizations in South African, exponent of racial separation. He hinted that Ghana may leave the British Commonwealth if South Africa remained a member.

"It will be extremely embarrassing to Ghana to remain indefinitely in the Commonwealth with a government that recognizes and practises Apartheid and racial discrimination," he declared.

A 21 gun salute, followed by the beating of drums, and the sounding of African horns, heralded Nkrumah's arrival in the chamber for his speech.

W. Q. M. Halm, the Ambassador of Ghana (right), greets Nicaraguan Ambassador Sevilla-Sacassa, dean of Washington Diplomatic Corp, as the latter arrives to attend the third anniversary celebrations of Ghana's independence. In the center is Miss Lucy Halm, the host's daughter.

Ghana Envoy Host

Washington Star

Ambassador W. Q. M. Halm of Ghana was host at a party last evening in celebration of the third anniversary of his country's independence.

Five hundred members of Washington society and the diplomatic corps braved snow flurries and chilly weather to be at the function held at the Ambassador's residence, 2929 Benton place N.W.

Under a green and white marquee, the guests admired a three-tiered pink-and-white birthday cake with three golden candles upon it, each one representing a year of the country's revival after its obliteration as an entity in the 13th century.

Near it was the Ghana national emblem done in green leaves. Overshadowing the emblem were two golden pigeons of peace, and a black, golden-edged star atop them, symbolizing the rise of modern Ghana.

The Black Star of Ghana pinpointed the "Freedom and Justice" motto on the emblem, while two ancient talking-drums were placed on either side of it, as if to say, the message was for all the world.

Adding color to the scene were the graceful toga-like costumes of the Ghana ladies. These robes of woven cotton and silk were in a variety of designs, each design having a meaning of its own.

Thus, for instance, the design on the robe worn by Miss Lucy Helm, the Ambassador's daughter, meant "gold dust." (The natural resources caused the British to give the name Gold Coast to modern Ghana.)

Miss Halm who, in the absence of her mother, was the official hostess, received her education in England. Currently she is studying beauty culture here.

The Afghan Ambassador's presence gave Mme. Menshikov, wife of the Soviet Ambassador, a chance to ask: "How is your Russian coming along?"

Guests ate a buffet spread of feast proportions, and wished Ghana "freedom and justice" and peace in the years to come.

The diplomatic corps was headed by its dean, Nicaraguan Ambassador Sevilla-Sacassa. Included were Ambassador Caccia of Great Britain, as well as ambassadors or representatives from all Commonwealth and most Asian and African countries.

In addition there were Mr. and Mrs. Robert Hennomeyer, Ghana desk officer, Department of State; Francis O. Wilcox, Assistant Secretary of State, International Organization Affairs; Joseph Satterthwaite, Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs; John N. Hayes, deputy director of International Education Exchange Service, and Mr. and Mrs. William H. Lewis, of the USIA African desk.

Nkrumah pushes Republic of Ghana

The Afro-American

ACCRA, Ghana — Prime Minister Kwame Nkrumah has released a draft constitution designed to turn Ghana into a Republic and give Parliament power to vote the country into a larger union of African states.

The Preamble to the Constitution says:

"We the people of Ghana, by our Representatives gathered in this our Constituent Assembly, in exercise of our undoubted right to appoint for ourselves the means whereby we shall be governed, in sympathy with and loyalty to our fellow-countrymen of Africa, in the hope that we may by our actions this day help to further the development of a Union of African States, and in a spirit of friendship and peace with all other peoples of the world, do hereby enact and give to ourselves this Constitution."

PART I of the Constitution says the powers of the state derive from the people and goes on to establish the principle that the people are entitled to elect members of Parliament and to exercise the powers reserved to them by the Constitution on a basis of One Man — One Vote.

The theme of African unity, mentioned in Article 2, authorizes the Parliament ti surrender the sovereignty of Ghana to bring about a union of African states and territories.

Details of the constitution were explained in a broadcast by Nkrumah on March 6. The constitution will be voted on in April. If approved, this West African country of five million —known as the Gold Coast until it received its independence from Britian three years ago— will become a republic July 1.

Under the constitution, Ghana would have a president with executive power, a cabinent appointed by the president and national assembly of a speaker and at least 104 members meeting annually. Judicial power would be invested in a supreme court.

* * *

THE PRESIDENT and assembly would be elected by universal adult suffrage every five years. Unlike the United States system, the president normally would be the leader of the party holding power over the assembly.

The president, who must be over 35, would have veto power over any bill passed by the assembly. He would be commander-in-chief of the armed forces and "fount of honor" who provides decorations and awards.

On taking office the president would have to swear to strive to attain or preserve African union and uphold freedom and justice, racial, religious and tribal tolerance, property rights and economic justice.

U.S. Police Irritate Ghana Scribe

The Miami Herald

DENVER — (UPI) — A journalist from Ghana Thursday accused Denver police of arresting him without reason, threatening him, and spoiling the film in his camera. Miami, Fla.

Kafi Badu, sports editor of The Ghana Times in Accra, said the incident occurred while he was photographing the arrest of a drunk at Union Station. Badu is in the United States as an official guest of the State Department. Sun. 5-6-60

Police Capt. Lee Raedel said Badu interfered with officers in the performance of their duty by getting in their way with his camera. P. 13

Badu wrote an account of the affair in the Scripps-Howard Rocky Mountain News. He said that an officer called him over to a patrol car and told him he had no right to take pictures on private property.

Another officer grabbed his camera, he said, and three patrolmen shoved him into a patrol car. He said he was taken to police headquarters and asked "who in the hell I was and why should I be poking my nose into the police affair."

After a warning to stay out of police affairs or be jailed, he said he was released and discovered his camera had been opened and the film, including shots of the Air Force Academy at Colorado Springs, had been ruined.

Ghana Celebrating Birth of Republic

Washington Post, D.C.

Sun. 7/1/60 P. 12A

Reuters

ACCRA, Ghana, June 3 — An estimated million people swelled the capital's population tonight for the transformation of Ghana into a republic at midnight.

Natives dancing to throbbing drums swirled up streets decked with flowers and flags as the four - day celebration began.

Parliament will meet Monday under a new republican constitution. At its final session today president - elect Kwame Nkrumah, who will be inaugurated Friday, said he hoped Ghana would be "a source of inspiration and guidance to African states still under foreign domination . . ."

The 50-year-old leader of the ruling Convention People's Party will have wide powers as the chief executive and the new head of state.

Three years ago, the former colony became a self-governing dominion within the British Commonwealth. It joins India and Pakistan as republics in the Commonwealth.

In a message, Queen Elizabeth said: "I rejoice to note the great strides in the development of education and social services which have taken place in Ghana since independence."

Nkrumah replied that the change in Ghana's constitution was not through any lack of affection for the Queen but to "truly interpret the aspirations and hopes of the people of Ghana and give full expression to our African personality."

The Pittsburgh Courier Pittsburgh, Pa.

Sat. 4/2/60 P. 11

GHANA STEWARDESSES TRAIN—Four of five girls from Ghana who are spending eight weeks at London Airport training to be air stewardesses with Ghana Airways are shown inside a mock-up of a passenger aircraft, learning how to serve passengers, under the guidance of British Overseas Airways Corporation stewardess Jeannie Lardner (center) from Glasgow, Scotland. Left to right: Gloria Wilhelmina Johnson from Axim, Ghana; Mary Grace Okwabi from Accra, Starr Annan ("Miss Ghana 1959" in the "Miss World" beauty contest) from Accra, and Miss Janet Snowdon, also from Accra. The fifth girl is Miss Victoria Boafo from Kibi.

The New York Times

ASKS VOTE DELAY: Dr. Joseph B. Danquah, Opposition leader in Ghana. He requested postponement of plebiscite, charging campaign of "terror and intimidation" against followers.

GHANA OPPOSITION ASKS VOTE DELAY

Says Ruling Party Is Waging 'Campaign of Terror'—Arrests Are Reported

Special to The New York Times.

KUMASI, Ghana, April 22—Dr. Joseph B. Danquah, Presidential candidate of the Oppositino United party, said today he had formally requested the postponement of tomorrow's voting in this area because of a "widespread campaign of terror and intimidation" against his followers.

Dr. Danquah led a delegation to police headquarters or the Ashanti region to appeal for protection against strong-arm tactics ascribed to Prime Minister Kwame Nkrumah's Convention People's party.

Ghana is in the midst of a protracted Presidential election, with the country voting by sections on different days. As of yesterday, Mr. Nhrumah was leading Dr. Danquah, 58,936 to 19,378, in this election.

At the same time the country is holding a plebiscite on a Government proposal to make the Country a republic. Up to yesterday the vote stood at 58,266 for and 20,446 opposed to the proposed constitution.

"We Are Not Reassured"

In discussing the request for postponement, Dr. Danquah said:

"The police said they had enough men to give the protection we require, but we are not reassured, so we made a formal request that tomorrow's vote be postponed for at least four days to given time to bring about stable conditions and let things cool down a bit."

Visiting the police with Dr. Danquah were four Ashanti members of the United party, including Joseph Appiah, whose wife, Peggy, is the daughter of the late Sir Stafford Cripps, Chancellor of the Exchequer in the British Labor Government after World War II.

The Opposition leaders decided to call on the police for assurances after a meeting in Mr. Appiah's home yesterday to consider whether to carry out their threat to boycott the voting unless the "campaign of terror" was called off.

Meeting with Mr. Appiah and Dr. Danquah were other members of the party's executive committee, including three Ashanti Members of Parliament, Robert Otchere, B. F. Kusi and Victor Owusu.

Reports 100 Arrested

Mr. Otchere reported at the meeting that about 100 United party members had been arrested in his district, Amansie West, and sent to prison for a week, or until after the election.

The other Opposition leaders reported on arrests and incidents of violence in their districts.

As they spoke, about 100 of their supporters were milling aroound in Mr. Appiah's courtyard. Most said they were refugees from surrounding villages and had come to press for the United party to boycott tomorrow's vote. This would affect voting in fourteen constituencies for which there are 332,000 registered voters.

Bekwai Incident Noted

Three correspondents drove today to Bekwai, a cocoa-farming center where an Opposition motor vehicle was burned yesterday. The Opposition charged that its supporters were attacked near the education offices of the Convention People's party.

S. B. Boating, district education officer who is acting as electoral returns officer, said; "I was away in Kumasi when the incident took place."

At Bekwai Hospital a medical attendant said: "Five people were brought to hospital. They were suffering from contusions, swollen eyes and cuts across the back. Knives were used. We treated them."

The regional police chief in Kumasi said he was unable to comment on the incident until he received a report from Bekwai.

AFRICAN FREEDOM ON PARLEY AGENDA

Conakry Meeting to Weigh Demand for Continent's Independence by 1962

Special to The New York Times.

GHANA, April 11—A conference of 300 delegates from fifty African and Asian countries opened today in Conakry, the capital of Guinea. It will be asked to consider a resolution demanding independence for all African lands by 1962, a conference spokesman said.

African independence by 1962 is being called for under a major item of the conference's agenda, "the accelerated liquidation of neo-colonialism" and "imperialism" in Africa and Asia.

The conference program envisages establishment of a fund for the fight for freedom, the formation of an Institute of African-Asian Studies and the establishmen of an African-Asian common market. It also foresees the initiation of measures to increase economic and political cooperation between African and Asian countries and Latin America.

The conference will be asked to approve plans to hold a meeting of African, Asian and Latin-American countries early next year.

Parley Called Neutralist

Conference officials are stressing that the Conakry parley is not under Communist domination. It is neutralist in orientation, they say, and not subservient to East or West.

Delegates were still arriving today. Among the largest delegations were those from the Soviet Union and Communist China.

In a report of the activities of the conference's permanent secretariat in Cairo, the Secretary General, Yousef Sebai, proposed action on these issues: a campaign to win independence for the Portuguese colonies in Africa and Asia, a stepped-up boycott of South African goods and a conference of independent African states to consider sanctions against South Africa.

Mr. Sebai also called for increased support of the Algerian rebels, including sanctions against France and the raising of a volunteer army. Action to stop further French atomic tests in the Sahara was also urged in Mr. SSebai's report.

15 Hurt in Hong Kong Fire

HONG KONG, April 11 (Reuters)—Nearly 1,500 persons were made homeless today when a fire swept a waterfront industrial district. Fifteen persons were seriously hurt in the five-hour blaze.

NIGERIA SEEN IN BID FOR BORDER PEACE

Special to The New York Times.

ACCRA, Ghana, April 11—A Nigerian move to win West African support for effective guarantees of the area's borders was forecast here today by Anthony Enahoro, the Nigerian Opposition's spokesman on foreign affairs.

Mr. Enahoro said an all-party motion was scheduled to be presented soon to Nigeria's Federal House of Representatives, requesting that the Government call an immediate conference of all West African countries, including members of the French community. The conference would consider the establishment of effective border guarantees.

If the conference fails to achieve its purpose, Mr. Enahoro said, the Nigerian Government will be asked to guarantee unilaterally the frontiers of the Ivory Coast Republic and Togoland.

Mr. Enahoro is the Action Group member of Nigeria's all-party Parliamentary delegation to Prime Minister Kwame Nkrumah's Anti-Nuclear Positive Action Conference here.

He first hinted at the plan for border guarantees in a speech at a party given by the Nigerian delegation yesterday.

"As imperialism recedes, new dangers and threats striking the very foundations of new states and the very roots of newly won freedoms are arising, particularly here in West Africa," he warned.

Mr. Enahoro confirmed later that by "dangers and threats" he had alluded to the border disputes embittering relations between Ghana and Togoland on the one hand and Ghana and the Ivory Coast on the other.

Ghana Refugees Stream Across Togoland Border

By George H. Pipal

LOME, Togoland, April 9 (UPI)—More than 3000 political refugees from Ghana have crossed the frontier into Togoland since March 18 and the daily flow is increasing, the head of a newly formed refuge committee said today.

The Rev. Francis R. Methowobla, 50, a self-exiled member of Ghana's opposition United Party, said more than 200 person's a day, including entire families, were fleeing from former British Togoland, now part of Ghana, to escape arrest or political victimization.

Formation of a Togoland refugee committee, with Methowobla as chairman, was announced today. He said aid in feeding and housing the refugees has been promised by Kaiser Bruce, Togoland's director of social welfare.

Methowobla, a Presbyterian pastor, said "most of these people are united party members whose homes were broken into."

He said refugees told him that the district commissioner at Ho near the border promised members of Ghana's ruling Convention Peoples Party that the homes of any United Party members remaining in the district would be broken into and looted, and families driven into French territory.

The pastor said refugees started coming over in numbers after a series of "preventive detentions" of United Party leaders, starting with the arrest of M. P. Emmanuel Dumoga on March 14.

One of the refugees who escaped arrest because he was in French territory was Methowobla himself. He came to Lome last October.

Methowobla's wife and children are still in Ghana. He said his wife had been warned she would be arrested if she tried to leave Ghana to join him.

Ghana Becomes Republic July 1

Birmingham World, Birmingham, Ala. Wed. 6/29/60

ACCRA, Ghana — (ANP) — In the hurly-burly of Africa's current political climate, July First is a significant date. That is the day, Ghana becomes a republic.

There will be no immediate change discernible in Ghanian life. Though the six-million-plus citizens of Ghana will take time out to celebrate the holiday properly, they will not linger long over the celebration. Instead they will quickly return to the daily routine of building up the strength and substance of their young and dynamic nation.

But the changeover to a republican form of government will have far-reaching effects on Ghana, Africa, and the rest of the world. For this is the next step in the democratization of Ghana.

NKRUMAH HEADS NATION

The major difference that will occur in Ghana during the four-day celebration — from July 1 to 4 — is that Kwame Nkrumah displaces Queen Elizabeth II of England as head of the Ghanian nation. In becoming a republic, Ghana follows the path blazed in the British Commonwealth family by India and Pakistan.

Thus republicanism for Ghana and the establishment of an African as the chief of state is a natural evolutionary result of Ghanian nationalism and the basic African desire to depart from the tradition of European colonialism. And since Ghana will retain its membership in the British Commonwealth, its leaders will still recognize the Queen as head of the Commonwealth, but not of Ghana.

In essence, Ghana has achieved sovereignty in fact and theory with a bloodless revolution that has kept Great Britain friendly to Ghana in a turbulent time when bitterness could so easily have been generated.

Coincidentally, the July 1-4 celebration of the emergence of Ghana as a republic falls precisely on the 184th anniversary of America's Declaration of Independence from British sovereign rule. This Declaration of Independence on July 4, 1776 was part of a bloody war which gave birth to 13 loosely-coordinated states that later fused together and became the present United States of America.

Policemen Apologize to Ghana Scribe

The Pittsburgh Courier 6/25/60

DENVER, Colo. — Police Chief James Childers reprimanded a captain and reassigned him to sub-station duty for the way he treated an African newspaperman and trade union official who had not violated the law.

Kofi Badu of Ghana and a State Department guest had been arrested for taking pictures which probably showed officers subduing a prisoner at Union Station.

He said his camera was "grabbed" from him by police officers who pushed him into a paddy wagon with three drunks and hauled him to jail.

■

COMMENTING on the case, Police Captain Lee Raedel told reporters: "It was some n—— r with a goatee beard. He was brought in for interfering in police business . . ."

After his release and a full-scale investigation headed by manager of safety, John M. Schooley, Badu received an apology. Schooley said he also sent a written apology to the Ghana Embassy in Washington.

Childers also reprimanded and reassigned to lesser posts the four officers who had Badu taken to police headquarters.

Radio Personality Goes To Ghana for Inauguration

The Pittsburgh Courier 6/25/60

MEMPHIS — When Dr. Kwame Nkrumah is inaugurated as first president of the new republic of Ghana July 1, Memphis Radio Station WDIA will have a representative on hand.

Mrs. Carlotta Stewart Watson — known as "Aunt Carrie" to WDIA listeners — will also represent the City of Memphis at ceremonies in the capital, Accra. She has been promised an airport reception by Steve Okonor, Ghanian government worker, who arranged for Mrs. Watson's visit.

"AUNT CARRIE"

Young Okonor read about Mrs. Watson in an American Negro magazine, in an article that told about her activities at WDIA. As "Aunt Carrie," Mrs. Watson gives daily advice to the lovelorn.

In his first letter, Okonor wrote: "I observed that you worked at WDIA radio station and was fascinated by the type of work you were doing. I chose to write you, since I have never had the opportunity to enjoy the love of a mother. I am sure I will enjoy the friendship of one who seems to be so motherly and kind to everyone." In subsequent letters, the broadcaster's new-found pen pal arranged for an official invitation to the inauguration.

Mrs. Watson will be received by President Nkrumah, who is a member of Phi Beta Sigma, brother organization to Mrs. Watson's sorority, Zeta Phi Beta. From Ghana, she will be driven to Liberia, where she plans a visit with President William V. S. Tubman and Mrs. Tubman, a sorority sister. While in Africa, Mrs. Watson will also visit Nigeria.

Her African junket will not be the first overseas sojourn for "Aunt Carrie." She has toured Europe and South America. In 1952, after a pilgrimage to the Holy Land, she returned with water from the River Jordan, which was used to baptize 50 babies at her home church in Memphis (Mt. Pisgah CME).

Nkrumah confers with 2 American professors

The Afro-American Baltimore, Md.

ACCRA, Ghana — Just three days after Ghana became a republic, and Dr. Kwame Nkrumah was inaugurated as its first president, he set up a conference with two American scholars — Dr. St. Clair Drake and Dr. L. D. Reddick.

Dr. Drake, on leave from Roosevelt University, Chicago, is serving as head of the Department of Sociology at the University College of Ghana.

Dr. Reddick was invited to Ghana as an all-expenses-paid guest of the government when that the Governor of Alabama had fired the professor without granting him a hearing.

Sat. 7-30-60

THE GHANA president asked Dr. Drake and Dr. Reddick to bring him up-to-date on the latest phases of the civil rights struggle in the U.S.A.

He was particularly interested in the student sit-in movement which, he felt, is similar to his own program of non-violent positive action.

The President's dream of a United States of Africa, the Americans felt, is similar to the dream of a strong federal union for the U.S.A. during the dark days of confederation.

* * *

"JUST AS America solved the problem of union, so will Africa. Perhaps a United States of West Africa may come first," declared Dr. Reddick.

Dr. Drake will remain at the University College of Ghana for another year.

Just three Dr. Reddick said that he could not accept an invitation to remain in Africa just now because he must go back and finish the fight for academic freedom in Alabama; and also, he must complete the book that he is writing on the sit-in movement.

L. D. REDDICK

Nkrumah Brands All of Ghana With the Stamp of His Authority

The New York Times
New York, N. Y.

President's Image and Name Mark Nation Struggling for Economic Gains

By A. M. ROSENTHAL

Special to The New York Times.

ACCRA, Ghana, Oct. 16—There is a fine new fountain in Accra at a traffic roundabout where a neon sign flashes "Kwame Nkrumah Circle" through the night.

Kwame Nkrumah Avenue leads into the circle and Kwame Nkrumah Road is near by. The fountain was dedicated by Kwame Nkrumah.

A couple of miles away, in front of a red-tiled Parliament building that looks like a Howard Johnson roadside restaurant, Kwame Nkrumah—by official title "Victorious Leader, the President of the Republic of Ghana"—stands in bronze.

His words are chiseled into the pedestal: "Seek ye first the political kingdom and everything else shall be added unto you."

Everywhere in this gay and jostling tropical capital on the Gulf of Guinea there is the presence of Kwame Nkrumah. He peers down from billboards, he is engraved on stamps and coins, and he stares out from the masthead of a newspaper. Praise of him blares from radios and is chanted at political rallies almost every day.

After three years of independence this former British colony of the Gold Coast is the personal political fiefdom of the nationalist who once walked Harlem's streets in hunger.

The dream that inspired him from youth—the dream of African unity—remains far from a reality. But Mr. Nkrumah has as his base a country he shaped himself and that greets him with love and laughter almost everywhere he goes.

The state of Ghana is authoritarian and the authority is Mr. Nkrumah. He has followed the classic modern pattern — the creation of a personally controlled party that reaches into every village and directs every aspect of social and political life.

The New York Times
Kwame Nkrumah

In the once revolutionary Convention Peoples party Mr. Nkruham has centralized control over unions, farmers, business men, the press, youth organizations, women's organizations and social welfare. In Ghana, if a man wants a job or a push forward economically or politically, the starting point is a C. P. P. card.

All effective opposition was eliminated. It did not take much—a Preventive Detention Act, under which just about anybody the Government dislikes or fears can be clapped into jail without trial, and a news censorship bill that was passed by Parliament in fifteen minutes.

About 100 of Mr. Nkrumah's opponents are now in jail. The so-called opposition paper prints through a censor's muzzle and the Government newspaper is filled with angled news and great headlines of praise for "Osagyefo"—"Victorious Leader."

Opposition Is Bullied

Officials of the nominal opposition group, the United party, are either bullied out of holding meetings or are too frightened to call them. Enemies of the Government generally are not jailed, but they find it harder and harder to make a living.

Still, this is not a grim land of silence ruled by a feared man with a whip. In Ghana, Mr. Nkrumah is beloved, perhaps not by so many people as he says he is, but by a majority, even according to his opponents.

His enemies can talk against him, but not in public. His opponents do fear him, but the city is busy trading and building and there is music in the streets and a great deal of laughter.

Ghanaians smile a great deal and the outdoor dance halls are filled with people shuffling to the quick beat of the "High Life" dance; these things may not be politically significant but they do affect the tone of life in the city.

Nobody denies Mr. Nkrumah's one-man rule. "But you have to understand conditions and not judge by Western standards," say the Ghanaians and foreigners who are embarrassed by the worship with which Mr. Nkrumah is surrounded and the power with which he has armored himself.

The argument is that when Mr. Nkrumah took power he found not a united country but four chunks of territory divided by custom, tribe and language. It was a geographic entity only by grace of British colonial decision. It was his job as he saw it to weld these bits into a whole and to do it he had to break the feudal power of the Ashanti tribal chiefs in the North. The chiefs were broken and Mr. Nkrumah increased his power.

His Followers Explain

His followers offer this explanation: Unity was too new to stand on its own and anyway Mr. Nkrumah's next job was to push the country forward economically. Parliamentary tradition was weak, they say, and authority was what was needed.

There is another argument put forward for Mr. Nkrumah and it runs this way:

"You come from the West and you may be startled by what looks like a tough dictatorship. But the people in this country are involved in a moral and political battle against colonialism and Nkrumah is their leader."

His toughness does not mean much to them when they think of prison camps in South Africa or police shootings in Rhodesia.

"He has brought benefits: you can't take that away from him," is a statement heard often in Accra.

Foreign economists here say readily that Mr. Nkrumah has supplied a push that has indeed brought benefits. The number of children in schools has been tripled and with new roads and airlines the Ghanaians are for the first time moving easily about their own country.

The individual income in Ghana of about $170 a year was the highest in Africa when he took over and it has risen slowly but steadily at a rate of 1 per cent a year. The cost of living has gone up at about the same rate, but part of the reason is that consumption has increased and broadened. A worker who once was content with yams may now buy tinned fish.

The British may have created the base for this advance, but Ghanaians and many foreigners believe that it would not have taken place so rapidly without independence and Mr. Nkrumah.

The benefits of independence do not change the fact that among many of the educated here there is a bitterness toward Mr. Nkrumah for having wiped out real political freedom. His opponents concede he is popular, but they do not think popularity excuses oppression.

"That party of his is an octopus but it is also a fraternal society," one of them said. "It knows how to make people feel good. He gives people a feeling of being lifted up.

"If you are a party member in a village and you die, why, a big man comes from Accra and makes a speech and brings flowers and everybody says Nkrumah loves even the lowliest."

Another political opponent of Mr. Nkrumah said:

"Even now if he meets me he puts his arm around me. Yes he is a charmer. But he had me sacked from my job.

"That man, he makes people feel like somebody, but if you are against him, watch out, you become nobody."

Satchmo Is New 'Weapon'

The Pittsburgh Courier
Pittsburgh, Pa.
Sat. 10-22-60

Pepsi-Cola Wars With Coca-Cola For Ghana Market

ACCRA, Ghana—The Pepsi-Cola Company has found a new weapon to fight the "cold pop" war in Africa—Louis (Satchmo) Armstrong.

The war, according to a marketing expert, is between Pepsi-Cola and Coca-Cola for the prized African market.

Armstrong, according to the expert, has caused the following slogan to prevail in Ghana "You like Satchmo. Pepsi brings you Satchmo. Therefore you like Pepsi."

Louis Armstrong

To help him spread the goodwill, Pepsi-Cola has invested $300,000, part of which it hopes to recover in ticket sales from Armstrong concerts.

■

ARMSTRONG is filling his role well. As he arrived in Accra more than 2,000 fans mobbed the trumpet star.

Police had to force a way for him through the crowd and escorted him to a press conference in the airport lounge.

Satch wiped the perspiration from his face and said, "It's a thrill to be back in Accra after four years."

The campaign apparently will not be without its hazards. In Lagos, Nigeria, where Armstrong will travel later, a Briton, acting as an advance man for Pepsi-Cola, was thrown into jail and his ticket booths were removed from the streets by authorities.

Pepsi officials later arranged for his release.

Ambassador Of Ghana To Visit Florida A&M

TALLAHASSEE — A major address, a visit with Gov. LeRoy Collins, a reception, attendance at a football game, and a press conference are among the highlights of activities scheduled for His Excellency William M. Q. Halm, Ghana ambassador to the United States, when he visits the Florida A&M University campus, Nov. 10-12.

Tentatively, Governor Collins will receive the ambassador in his Capitol Building executive offices at 3 p.m. on Thursday, Nov. 10. University President George W. Gore Jr. will accompany Ambassador Halm.

A complete listing of the tentative schedule follows: Nov. 10, 11 a.m., convocation, Lee Auditorium, President Gore, presiding; 12:30 p.m. luncheon, Dr. and Mrs. Gore; 3 p.m., campus tour guided, Dr. H. Manning Efferson; 7 p.m., motion picture of Ghana's independence, Lee Auditorium; 8 p.m., informal chat with members of the Student Congress and the students who toured Africa, William Larkins, Student Government Assn., President, Dean B. L. Perry, and Dean Edna M. Calhoun, assisted by dormmitory personnel, will be in charge.

Nov. 11, 10 a.m., tour of Tallahassee and view of Armistice Day parade, guide C. J. Smith IIII, 3 p.m., visit to meet the governor (time tentative), Dr. Gore, 4:30 p.m. press conference, Charles Winter Wood Theater, C. J. Smith III, 8 p.m., reception by the Cabinet at Sunshine Manor, Dr. H. Manning Efferson in charge.

Nov. 12, 10 a.m., second showing of films from Ghana, Charles Winter Wood Theater, comments by the ambassador, John Riley, presiding (classes in political science, history, geography and graduate school are assigned to attend and other are invited); 11 a.m., meeting with class in political science 407, contemporary Africa, Dr. W. E. H. Howard; 2:30 p.m., football game, Bragg Stadium, special band program,

AMBASSADOR HALM

Dr. William P. Foster, director; 7 p.m., dinner at the home of Dr. and Mrs. Edmonds, and 8 p.m., informal social in the Africa Room of the Edmonds' residence, Dr. and Mrs. Edmonds in charge.

Harlem Told Of New Africa By Nkrumah

'Afro-Americans' Are 'Welcome Back'

President Kwame Nkrumah of Ghana yesterday told a cheering Harlem crowd that "once imperialism and colonialihm have been eliminated from Africa, then all Afro-Americans iwll be able to come back as free citizens. All artisans, doctors, scientists — —those of you who want to come are welcome back."

"The fire of nationalism is burning fiercely in Africa," he added. The crowd of about 2,500 persons shouted back encouragement.

President Nkrumah continued:

"We recognize the African ancestry of the 20,000,000 Afro-Americans who were originally from Ghana and the area surrounding it. Americans of African descent have a responsibility. The American leaders are beginning to recognize that the 20,000,000 Afro-Americans are the strongest bond between Africa and America."

U. S. Freedom Cited

Decrying "colonialism and imperialism," the African leader declared that the United States would "not be where it is today if America were still under the colonialism and imperialism of Britain. It was after America smashed the chains of bondage that it has been able within these 175 years to make this phenomenal progress. . . . In the same manner we in Africa hope that after the destruction and liquidation of colonialism and imperialism, economic and industrial development will come to fight against poverty, disease and illiteracy and raise the living standards of our peoples."

President Nkrumah spoke on a platform erected near the front of the Hotel Theresa and shared by Rep. Adam Clayton Powell, Harlem Democrat and Hulan E. Jack, self-suspended Manhattan Borough President.

Mr. Jack spoke first and was followed by Rep. Powell, who whipped the crowd into a near frenzy by telling them:

"Today I overheard some one saying that Dr. Nkrumah should stay in his Rolls-Royce. Harlem might not be safe for him. Nkrumah is safe here. Maybe it is the security forces that aren't safe. This is your (President Nkrumah's) home."

An earlier speaker had referred to "American Negroes" and Rep. Powell retorted that the phrase should be "Afro-Americans, not American Negroes."

The crowd took up the chant, thundering "Yet, Afro-Americans, not American Negroes."

The rally, for which southbound traffic on Seventh Ave. had been halted, broke up after the Ghana President's address, which followed Rep. Powell's.

GHANAIANS BACK SOVIET-BLOC TIES

Nkrumah Regime Says Aim Is Marxist Socialism, Not a Communist State

By A. M. ROSENTHAL

Special to The New York Times.

ACCRA, Ghana, Oct. 17—"Of course the Communists are gaining in Ghana," the Ghanaian teacher said with a smile that showed more anger than mirth. "After all, they have all of the West working for them."

The city of Accra, capital of a small African country with large African hopes, is jammed these days with foreigners. Most of them spend a good deal of their time trying to find out from each other and the Ghanaians the answer to one question: Is Ghana going Communist?

The question evokes a tinge of resentment here, especially since the comments of Secretary of State Christian A. Herter and Senator John F. Kennedy that Ghana was following the Communist line. It has been given urgency by President Kwame Nkrumah's determined campaign for African leadership and his day-to-day involvement in the Congo crisis on the side of Patrice Lumumba, a man feared by the West.

Question of Three Parts

But the question existed before the Americans' comments and before the Congo crisis. The answer, as best as it can be pieced together from Ghanaians and foreigners, has three parts:

1. Soviet-bloc propaganda and influence is growing. This is not so much a result of the eager activities of Russians, Poles, East Germans and Chinese Communists in the city. It is more because in Ghana, as in other countries of Africa, the detested colonial masters were Westerners and the enemies of the day are still Westerners—the white South Africans, the British in the Rhodesias, Portuguese in Angola and French in Algeria.
2. The Ghanaian leaders are convinced Marxists but they are also convinced they can develop their form of socialism without becoming a satellite of the Soviet Union. In that sense Mr. Nkrumah and most of the men around him have no intention of "going Communist."
3. The final answer may not be Mr. Nkrumah's to decide, despite the near-religious worship of himself that he has cultivated and despite his power in Ghana. On his road to socialism and complete power he has built a centralized society with a powerful party that could be turned ready-made to Communist purposes.

Soviet Bloc Seen Ally

The Ghanaians see the Soviet bloc as an ally in their fight against colonialism and are not interested in the warnings about their being gobbled up by a new colonialism. One result is that Ghanaian neutralism has a decided anti-Western flavor.

The indicated aim of the Soviet Union here is not to create a new Communist party, but to indoctrinate and influence enough leaders of Mr. Nkrumah's Convention People's party so that a takeover of the existing authoritarian political machinery becomes relatively easy.

An important reason why the Soviet bloc has found the muggy Ghanaian climate so politically attractive stems from Africa's hopes and fears.

"Life is not yesterday, it is today," said a Ghanaian newspaperman. In that sentence, he provided a revealing clue.

To Ghanaians, Western talk of Soviet imperialism in Europe and elsewhere is flat and meaningless. To them, today is what counts and when they look around they believe that their enemy is in the West. A foreigner put it this way:

Courses in Marxism

"Telling Ghanaians to beware of Communists is like telling a man in a burning house not to go outside because it may start to snow."

The Convention People's party gives members compulsory courses in Marxism. The chief text, on sale for a few pennies everywhere, is "the A.B.C. of Socialism" written in 1953 by an American, Leo Huberman. It is full of dire statements about life in the Unitde States and praise for the Soviet Union.

Mr. Nkrumah, like other African and Asian leaders, makes capital out of his neutralist position. But his supporters, like the supporters of other neutralist leaders, are upset by questions about the possibility of a Communist takeover.

They feel that at last they have their destiny in their hands and are angered by suggestions that they may lose control of it again. Westerners in Accra are in the unhappy position of crying alarm against a danger unacknowledged.

Why All The Double-Talk?

U. S. SECRETARY of State Christian Herter has defied the Western diplomatic tradition of refusing to call a spade a spade, and now there's heck to pay, it seems.

During the Communist-created chaos of the current United Nations meeting, Herter, commenting on a talk made before the General Assembly by Ghana's President Kwame Nkrumah, observed, before the press, that Nkrumah "had marked himself as leaning very definitely toward the Soviet bloc."

A more accurate statement could hardly be conceived. As an observation of Nkrumah's political activities, in Ghana, in Africa and in the halls of the United Nations, it qualifies for a prize for understatment.

But what horrified reaction is created. The Canadian minister for external affairs clucked his tongue loudly. Other Western diplomatic officials stated that they could read nothing like that in Nkrumah's address. The Ghana leader himself, evidently depending on diplomatic courtesies to maintain for him the fallacious mask of neutralism, expressed pained surprise that the U. S. secretary could come to such a conclusion, and then, presumably, have the gall to say so publicly.

Whatever the elements of Nkrumah's eech before the United Nations may have been, his policies and actions definitely stamp him as a tool of Moscow. He had been a warm partisan of Communist stooge Patrice Lumumba in the ex-postal clerk's mad political gyrations in neighboring Congo, even advising Lumumba as to methods of double-crossing the United Nations and grabbing unchallengable control of the Congo.

The flooding of the Congo with Communist "technicians" and advisers by Lumumba was hardly accomplished without Nkrumah's knowledge, and possibly was done with Nkrumah's active support. Ghana's UN troop levy is now dedicated to the task of guarding Lumumba and keeping him alive politically.

Secretary Herter's frank comment on Nkrumah may have violated diplomatic tradition of courteously modulated double-talk in international dealings. But, possibly, we could use profitably a lot more blunt language in the international rough-house into which we have been pushed by Khrushchev and his Communist hoodlums.

Nkrumah . . . Pained Surprise

GHANA REASSURES PRIVATE BUSINESS

Nkrumah Denies His Regime Intends to Nationalize Foreign Companies

By A. M. ROSENTHAL

Special to The New York Times.

ACCRA, Ghana, Oct. 9—Ghana's Government, uneasily watched by the West for signs of a swing toward the Soviet bloc, issued an unusual statement today to emphasize that private foreign capital was needed and welcomed in Ghana.

President Kwame Nkrumah went on the radio to denounce reports that Ghana intended to nationalize all foreign business concerns. He said the reports were "pernicious, wicked and deliberately calculated to damage the reputation and good faith which Ghana has built up."

Speaking about the Congo, Mr. Nkrumah said that Ghanaian troops should not be removed from Leopoldville. This was a change from his advance text, which said Ghanaian troops should not be removed from the Congo.

Change Stirts Interest

The change in wording aroused interest because the United Nations has announced that Ghanaian troops were being sent to the secessionist state of South Kasai to replace Tunisians. Ghanaian officials were not available tonight to explain the President's change.

Mr. Nkrumah, who calls himself a "nondenominational Christian and a Marxist socialist," said Ghana would find here own way to socialism. Yet he read his countrymen a little lecture on the benefits of foreign private investment.

The demand for foreign capital, he said, is greater than the supply. It thus tends to go "where it feels welcome."

He said Ghana received $1.12 in taxes out of every $2.80 in profit made by foreign and local companies—"a 40 per cent nonvoting shareholding for which the Government invests no capital."

The New York Times

WANTS FOREIGN FUNDS: President Kwame Nkrumah of Ghana, who emphasized that private foreign capital was needed and welcome.

Mr. Nkrumah, whose face peers down from billboards all over the city and is on every coin, said that his Government had protected itself against the possibility of domination by foreign capital but that foreign capital was entitled to the concessions that would guarantee a reasonable profit.

President Nkrumah's speech was to have been devoted to foreign affairs, but the reports of impending nationalization had become so wirespread that he had to make the denial of the reports his keynote. Most of the trading business in Ghana is in British hands and last night foreigners were trading rumors.

The rumors were given urgency by the fact that for the last two months many foreigners here have felt that the Nkrumah Government was drifting toward the Soviet bloc. While Mr. Nkrumah is not considered a Communist, there is speculation that his ambitions for a united Africa are tempting him to try to use the Soviet bloc in his international maneuvers.

Mixed Economy Favored

Mr. Nkrumah made it clear that he was clinging to his concept of a mixed bag of economic ownership — state-owned industries in public utilities and other fields, joint state-private enterprises where private capital was "unwilling or unable" to act on its own, private industry and an expanding cooperative sector.

President Nkrumah said that the Government intended to foster cooperatives in wholesale and retail trade but that there would be no restrictions aimed at crippling private trading.

Harlem Welcomes African Leader

The Courier
Pittsburgh, Pa.
Sat. 10/15/60

'Ghana Welcomes Negro Technicians' - Nkrumah

NEW YORK—The role of Africa in future world affairs was dramatized by Ghana's President Kwame Nkrumah last week when he said: "The wind now blowing in Africa is not an ordinary wind—it's a hurricane; and countries like the U. S. should look on Africa as a big man, no longer as a little brother."

Addressing a 2,500 crowd welcome rally in front of the Hotel Theresa, he invited American Negroes to come to Ghana to work.

- He said that the dignity of the African nations will have an effect on the dignity of people of African descent all over the world.
- He said Ghana would welcome all persons of African descent who wished to go to that country.

His invitations was specially beamed at doctors, engineers, scientists, technicians and others who could play a part in building up the economy and social services of his country.

■

MR. NKRUMAH was greeted by a large turnout of African nationalists from various Harlem groups. They waved placards bearing his pictures and those of Lumumba and other African leaders.

Throughout his speech he was greeted with shouts of "Long Live Nkrumah."

Congressman Adam C. Powell took the opportunity to criticize the lax attitude of the U. S. State Department towards the new African nations.

He said he had been the only federal official present at three recent receptions given by the Government of Ghana, Ethiopia and Nigeria.

■

HE CONSIDERED it unfortunate discourtesy on the part of the Government.

Shortly before the commencement of the meeting there were expressions of dissatisfaction on the part of Mr. Lawson and some of the nationalists present over the arrangement of the rostrum in front of the Theresa Hotel with a huge billboard in the background advertising the candidacy of Senator John F. Kennedy.

DR. KWAME NKRUMAH ... cheered in Harlem

NKRUMAH IN HARLEM — Ghana President Kwame Nkrumah addresses crowd in front of Theresa Hotel in Harlem. The rally was the last public appearance in the U.S. before he ... plane for home.

Billy Graham lays egg in Africa by silence on atom bomb testing

Los Angeles Tribune

Los Angeles, Calif.

Billy Graham hit as he refuses to take stand on Sahara "hell test"

Oct. 29-60

ACCRA, Ghana — Billy Graham's brand of 'Negro sinner come to salvation', revivalism, which exempts discrimination-practising white people from duty on the mourners' bench, hasn't set well with the newly independent country of Ghana, which is on the verge of becoming a republic, and Graham has all but been told to go home during his evangelical tour here.

Attendance at Graham's rallies fell sharply here this week and he has been severely criticized after literally 'laying an egg' by refusing to take a stand on the planned atomic blast in the Sahara desert by the French government.

Ghana, through Prime Minister Kwame Nkrumah and its delegation to the United Nations, has been the leading spokesman against the French plan to try out their atom bomb in the Sahara desert in order to qualify among the countries which have the bomb.

A Harmattan wind, the haze from which obscured the moon Monday night when Graham opened his revival meetings here, will bring radioactive dust from the Sahara explosion to Ghana and other African countries, Ghana spokesmen told Graham. The wind blows from the North and is always laden with dust and sand.

Immediately upon his arrival in Accra from Liberia, the heavily American-subsidized first republic in Africa, where Graham's fervent religiousity met an enthusiastic response, he was questioned by the Ghana press about his stand on the dropping of the bomb which has been an issue before the United Nations and discussed in France, England, Russia, the free African countries, and, literally, all over the world.

ISSUE TOO POLITICAL

Graham told reporters he would not comment on atomic weapon tests because of the political connotations.

The effect of his position was like an atomic explosion itself.

Newspaper reporters all over Accra heralded the news, "Graham mum on French hell test!"

The Accra Evening News called Graham's "excuse that this is a political year in the United States . . ludicrous."

The official paper of the Convention People's Party, which sustained Dr. Nkrumah's struggle to free Ghana and put him into office, said sharply:

"Not a few (Africans) have been disappointed, actually stunned, by Dr. Graham's attitude toward the intention of Christian France to detonate an atom bomb in the Sahara, the evil effects of which will not spare any African Christians."

Although Ghana, a member of the British Commonwealth, is a Christian nation, many of its people are Mohammedans and pagan.

Ghana is the most rugged independent and politically-forthright of the 13 independent African nations and through its leader, Prime Minister Nkrumah, who was elected to office while he was imprisoned for his political activity by the British, is considered to be the most pervasive force for self-determination in all of Africa.

It becomes a republic on July 1 of this year although it will still remain a member of the British community of nations.

ENTHUSIASTIC RECEPTION IN LIBERIA

Graham, fast-talking North Carolina-born religionist who has employed the talents of entertainer Ethel Waters to sing for him in selling himself as the foremost revivalist, and sent a Negro "associate evangelist", Howard Jones, ahead of him to prepare the way for his 16-city, 9-country "Safari for Souls" through Africa, expected the same reception in Ghana that he got in Liberia, where the President, William V. S. Tubman, now in his fourth term, is a preacher of the Methodist church.

Graham's press secretary, Tom McMahan, religious editor of a daily paper in Columbia, South Carolina, one of the most prejudiced cities and states in the U.S., reported from Monrovia last week that Graham's tour of Africa, judging by his reception in Liberia, was "nearer an official project of the national government than any other campaign the globetrotting evangelist has ever held."

McHahan said Liberia is "probably the most Christian nation in the world, officially speaking, from the Protestant point of view.

"Many high officials double as ministers," and Liberia's declaration of independence was addressed to the "nations of Christendom.

However, McMahan noted that "Animism (a belief that all objects have souls) is still prevalent in the interior and it is estimated that up to 25 percent of the population is Mohammedan."

Nonetheless, the Graham party was domiciled in a government rest house as guests of President Tubman.

Graham was given a luncheon by Tubman at the Executive Mansion, where the Order of African Redemption, Liberia's second highest honor, was conferred upon the former North Carolina farm boy.

McMahan claimed that Graham spoke to a first night audience of 8,500 and converted 500.

But after Liberia, Graham is expected to run into more of the same type of reception he got in Ghana, excepting possibly in Nigeria which will not be independent until October and where the British are still a restraining influence.

He is expected to cut his tour of Ghana short and go on to Kenya, where his failure to take stands on such issues as atom bomb testing and independence will doubtless cause the native population to make short shrift of him, also Tanganyika, and Ethiopia, where fierce old Emperor Haile Selassie is also expected to take a dim view of the religionist's expediency and failure to speak out against color discrimination, second class citizenship, and atomic explosions in Africa.

Macmillan Hails Ghana As Free of Racial Bias

The Washington Post Washington, D.C.

Mon. 1-11-60

ACCRA, Ghana, Jan. 10 (UPI)—British Prime Minister Harold Macmillan said here today that he found Ghana to be "a very happy country" in which Africans and Europeans lived harmoniously with no racial troubles.

P. 5

Macmillan, winding up a 5-day visit, said he would travel on to African territories with "difficult" racial problems, having been "very much encouraged by what I have seen here."

The Prime Minister, who flies to Nigeria Monday on the second leg of a 17,000-mile African tour, denied that the politicians and people of Ghana had given him a cool reception. He said the exact opposite was true.

"I was given a warm reception in every sense of the word," Macmillan told a news conference. "Of course, the airfield here is a long way out."

When Macmillan arrived here Wednesday, he was met by only a few hundred persons at the airport. The 8-mile route into the city was deserted.

(In Lagos, Nigeria, political observers said today that Macmillan's reception there might be even cooler. The Lagos Daily Telegraph, calling for a reception "worthy of a British Prime Minister," expressed concern that only a few Nigerians knew or cared that Macmillan is arriving Monday.)

Bow Essay Proposes Colonial Independence

Reuters

LONDON, Jan. 10—A prize-winning essay published today in Crossbow, quarterly journal of the Bow Group of young Conservatives, calls for a planned policy for turning Britain's colonies into self-governing countries.

Under the title "One Man, One Vote," the essay was written by Iain C. Jarvie, research student at the London School of Economics, and member of the group.

Jarvie asked what would happen if the responsibility for carrying through the agitation of the population of Nyasaland were delegated to an interim administration headed by Hastings Banda, Nyasaland African leader now in prison.

"My guess," he said, "is that such an intelligent man would throw all his zeal into making a success of that to show that Nyasalanders are capable of running their own affairs."

Last week other members of the Bow Group called for the release of Banda and the announcement of a program for independence in some African territories.

MANY SPLENDORS OF DEMOCRACY

Life Chicago, Ill.

A VILLAGE LESSON IN LITERACY IS IMPARTED BY LAMPLIGHT IN GHANA

Mon. 1-18-60

Reasonable if sometimes madcap, moral if often maddening, democracy is the world's most enduring political system. This week we portray it in rich profusion. With half the world stirring to a new freedom, we begin an important series about the struggles of diverse nations on four continents —some new, some old—to turn themselves into modern democracies. Our report on democracy's birth pangs in Ghana (pp. 78-91) suggests why the outcome of this political effort is crucial.

Visiting Ghanaians would find the whole of U.S. society an object lesson in democracy at work, but we could hardly blame them if some of the lesson seemed confusing. Take politics. This year we elect a new President in a most dramatic test of any democratic system. But few things are so important in politics as cheerful confidence. On pages 24, 25 we show leaders of each party looking as jaunty as if the elections were already past and won—Ike delivering his confident State of the Union speech while Democratic presidential rivals exchanged hearty smiles on the sidelines.

To most Americans democracy goes deeper than politics to the simple expressions of free cooperation. We can think of no more stirring example of this than our story on pages 16-23. It tells how the whole community around Mt. Kisco, N.Y. joined to help the families victimized by a dreadful auto accident. This spirit of charity is an essential part of freedom.

The U.S. also has its own home-grown antidotes to any misconception that democracy has to be stuffy. The season's top Broadway musical, Fiorello! (pp. 55-61), commemorates the cocky little man who made himself into a legend for New York and the whole U.S. Our wish for Ghana, as for other new democracies, is that they try to cultivate their own home-grown Little Flowers.

BIG CITY LESSON IN POLITICS IS GIVEN BY "FIORELLO" ON BROADWAY

GHANAIAN DROPS SELF-RULE STAND

The New York Times

Danquah, Trailing Nkrumah at Polls, Declares People Are Not Fit to Govern

New York

Special to The New York Times.

ACCRA, Ghana, April 20—Dr. J. B. Danquah, who is running behind Prime Minister Awame Nkrumah in the race for the Presidency, lapsed today into severe self-criticism.

"I am beginning to feel ashamed," he said at a meeting with correspondents in his shabby Accra home," of having said in the past that we were fit to govern ourselves. I was wrong."

Times 4-21-60

When Dr. Danquah began campaigning against the British for Ghana home rule, Mr. Nkrumah was an unknown student for the priesthood in a Roman Catholic seminary.

For the last fortnight Dr. Danquah has been campaigning around the country against tremendous odds for "no" vote against Mr. Nkrumah's constitutional proposals and offering himself as alternative for the Presidency.

P. 3

Dr. Danquah, who is leader of the Opposition United party, maintains that the proposed republican constitution is far different from what the people expected. He says it is being forced on Ghana and that the plebiscite was not a "clean fair fight."

Assails Rivals' Tactics

His party is fighting against the whole machinery of the Government, he said. He charged that regional and district commissioners and Government agents paid from public funds were openly campaigning in favor Mr. Nkrumah and that the country's radio was being used for Mr. Nkrumah. The people had one month to consider the present draft of a constitution, he said, whereas Britain took two years to formulate a transitional constitution in 1948.

"I am beginning to feel ashamed of things that are being done in the name of democracy here," he said, "I am beginning to get worried because people think this thing being done in Ghana is by Africans. Evidence is beginning to show that power is being flagrantly abused."

Nkrumah Far Ahead

Dr. Danquah spoke as he was reading early results in yesterday's vote, the first round in the plebiscite. They showed that in ten constituencies two out of every three voters backed Mr. Nkrumah and five out of every seven favored the draft republican constitution.

The second stage of the plebiscite, involving the central and eastern regions, takes place Saturday.

The Prime Minister polled 7,013 votes and Dr. Danquah received 4,692. In the constitution vote there were 6,980 in favor and 4,768 against.

Ghana Lass Finishes Study

Miss Ernestine Jantuah of 5210 Woodlawn, Chicago, came to America four years ago "to broaden her educational outlook."

On July 29, she will have fulfilled her ambition when she receives her diploma from Mundelein College, after having studied at two American colleges and one state university and traveled throughout 35 American states.

Miss Jantuah is a foreign student from Ghana and a sister of J. E. Jantuah, that country's ambassador to France. She will return to her native land next year, after completing her internship as a dietitian at Good Samaritan Hospital in Cincinnati. She plans to continue work as a foods and nutrition specialist at a hospital in her home town of Kumasi, Ghana.

"I grew up in a Christian home," she began, "in an environment where education and its importance was always emphasized. I saw the social and political changes taking place in my country . . . and realized in order to contribute to these changes, I needed to broaden my educational outlook."

TAUGHT SCHOOL

Miss Jantuah completed high school work in Ghana and taught a number of subjects at St. Theresa's Boarding School there, which is comparable to the junior high school in the U. S.

Shortly before Ghana became an independent country in 1957, 19-year-old Ernestine set out to achieve her goal. She was one of 4,000 persons to apply for the Ghana Cocoa Marketing Board Scholarships, established by the government. She was called in for an interview and finally chosen as one of the 800 recipients. Of this number, 275 came to the U. S. to study, including only 11 women.

"In preparing for its independence," she explained, "Ghana's government took stock of the country's future needs, which would include more engineers, lawyers, nurses and nutritionists.

"It was decided to send prospective nutritionists to study in America, since the foods of Ghana are more comparable to those common in the southern states than to those of Europe."

ARRIVES HERE

When she arrived in the United States in 1956. Ernestine began study at St. Mary's College, Notre Dame, Ind. She transferred to Indiana State university, Bloomington, and finished her sophomore and junior years there, after which she came to Mundelein in Chicago for her senior work.

Last May, she participated in a home economics symposium at Mundelein in which she demonstrated the use of different foods in her native land.

"I am not the only one who will carry foreign study back to Ghana," she said. "Two of my brothers recently finished study in England—one was a law student at London University and the other an engineering student in Manchester." She also has a niece who is studying nursing in England.

Their zest for education and leadership was inspired in them by their father, who was a chief in Ghana, a country of 6,000,000, until his death in 1946.

FIVE SISTERS

In spite of the fact that Ernestine has five sisters, all married and living in Ghana, Mrs. Jantuah had some reservations about her daughter's going off to study.

"I am last born and my mother didn't want me to leave for a strange land at first. But my brother encouraged her and now she feels fine about it. But she is quite anxious for me to return."

Ernestine likes Chicago. "There is so much to do and see — museums and concerts. But one must be careful at night!"

However, she likes Ghana even better and began to discuss the advantages of her native land as well as to discredit some notions about that part of Africa commonly held by many Americans.

MILD TEMPERATURE

"When I tell people I am from African, someimes they don't even believe me," she exclaimed. "Actually, Ghana is a very nice part of Africa—the temperature ranges from about 60 to 82 degrees, with little humidity except during the rainy season.

"It was 90 degrees there once when I was a little girl," she continued, "and that's as hot as it's ever been."

Furthermore Ghana really is not over-run by large animals, Ernestine explained. There are wolves, lions and other such wildlife in the north, but most common throughout the country is the snake, of which there are all kinds.

"In fact, the first elephant I ever saw was in a zoo in England." she laughed.

MISS ERNESTINE JANTUAH of 5210 Woodlawn, foreign student from Ghana, glances with pride at the diploma she received July 29 from Mundelein College. She came to the United States in 1956 on a foreign study scholarship established by the government of the new independent Ghana "to broaden her educational outlook." She studied foods and nutrition and will return to Ghana after a year's internship in Cincinnati.

South Africa Race Hate Hit By Harriman

Reuters

ACCRA, Ghana, Sept. 3 Averill Harriman, special envoy of presidential candidate John Kennedy, said here today most Americans were "shocked and offended" by South Africa's apartheid (racial segregation) policy.

The former New York Governor, now touring Africa on a fact-finding mission for Kennedy, said he was personally opposed to South Africa's racial policies and added: "I think an overwhelming majority of people in the United States are of the same opinion."

Harriman was answering a question at a press conference after talks with Ghana's President Kwame Nkrumah.

Harriman said Nkrumah was looked on in the United States as "one of the outstanding and dynamic leaders of the New Africa who will certainly play a great part in the development of Africa's future unity."

He said Nkrumah's plan for a federation of independent African states "is certainly an objective to which we in the United States would give our best wishes."

Both men agreed economic cooperation between African states should be expanded as rapidly as possible. They also agreed the cold war should be kept out of Africa.

Commenting on American aid to Ghana, Harriman said the only condition the United States would apply to its aid would be that it be used to improve conditions for the people.

Harriman was expected to leave Accra Sunday for Nigeria and the Congo Republic. He already has visited Senegal, Guinea and Liberia.

Ghana and Somalia Celebrate

By Reuters

Mogadishu, Somalia

As yet another new independent nation—Somalia—emerged in Africa July 1, away on the other side of the continent Ghana was becoming a republic still within the British Commonwealth.

First President of the Republic of Ghana is Kwame Nkrumah, hitherto Ghana's Prime Minister, who received best wishes from the former head of state, Britain's Queen Elizabeth.

Dr. Nkrumah was formally inaugurated July 1 as the country's first President in one of the final steps in Ghana's changeover from a self-governing dominion of the British Commonwealth to a republic.

One million persons gathered in Accra for festivities marking the change, and Queen Elizabeth sent a message asking God's blessing for this West African nation.

A two-man American delegation headed by Deputy Undersecretary of State Raymond A. Hare was present for the festivities. Lord Hailsham, a senior Cabinet member, represented Britain.

The Queen's message said: "I pray the blessing of Almighty God may guide the destiny of the new republic and secure happiness for its peoples."

Throbbing Drums

The citizens of Accra jumped the gun on republic celebrations, which will continue through July 4. Outgoing Governor-General Lord Listowel boarded a plane following a floodlit airport ceremony at 10 p.m., June 30.

After warmly shaking hands with Dr. Nkrumah, Lord Listowel mounted the ramp to the plane, turned and waved to the watching crowd. A sea of hands waved back and there were cries of "good-by" and "come back again."

As Lord Listowel's plane took off, Africans began dancing to throbbing drums along streets decked with flowers and flags.

The controversial Dr. Nkrumah was jailed 10 years ago after agitating for independence for the Gold Coast colony, as Ghana was then known.

Three years ago the former British colony became a self-governing dominion within the British Commonwealth. Now it has joined India and Pakistan as a republic within the Commonwealth—Ghana now only recognizes Queen Elizabeth as head of the Commonwealth, not head of state.

Women Elected

When the Legislature convenes again July 4, 10 women will be seated on government benches. They have just been elected by male members as an expedient to get them into Parliament before Republic Day. In the future, women will be elected by the people.

Meanwhile, in Somalia the United Nations Trusteeship (administered by Italy) has come to and end. And immediately plans were made to unite the territory with Somaliland, a smaller adjoining territory,

Kwame Nkrumah
First President of Ghana

which was granted independence by Britain June 26. Once united, Somalia and Somaliland will be known as the Somali Republic. Its population will be about 2,000,000.

First provisional President of the new Somali Republic was expected to be Aden Abdullah, a former general trader.

Power Struggle

There was a behind-the-scenes power struggle for the post of Premier, with strong support in some quarters for Abdullahi Issa, Somalia's Premier.

But the need to cement ties with Somaliland may result in selection of Mohammed Haji Ibrahim Egal, regarded as a moderate, for the Premier's post, observers said.

At midnight June 30 cannons thundered in salute and fireworks cracked and blossomed in the skies as the republic's flag—blue with white stars—was hoisted with full military honors.

Earlier, delegates from 72 nations attended a glittering reception.

Numerous problems confronted leaders of the united countries, topped by the question of a unified national army command.

Britain's aid to its former territory of Somaliland specified that Britain does not want a unified army command at this stage. The agreement with Britain said Somaliland troops would remain under British officers for six months.

The British aid is intended for the Somaliland region alone.

GHANA OFFERED AMERICAN LOAN

$30 Million Available for Volta River Project

WASHINGTON (AP)—The United States has told Ghana that 30 million dollars from U.S. sources will be available toward financing the 170-million-dollar Volta River industrial project in that African country.

Announcing this Thursday, the State Department said the loan will be provided when the Ghana government reaches a satisfactory arrangement with the group of private aluminum companies for the construction of an aluminum smelter.

The Volta project includes a major hydroelectric installation to produce power for the smelting of aluminum and for other industrial and private uses.

The American offer of a loan was reported to have been made because Ghana considered the interest rate charged by the World Bank to be too high. The bank currently is charging 5¾ per cent. Only six weeks ago the Soviet Union offered to finance the bulk of the Volta River project for 2½ per cent interest on a long-term loan. The Moscow bid which would involve the use of Soviet technicians still is under consideration by the Ghana government.

GHANA BACKS U. N., NKRUMAH AFFIRMS

But Organization Must Aid Congo's Unity, He Says—May Visit Katanga

ACCRA, Ghana, Aug. 17 (Reuters) — President Kwame Nkrumah reaffirmed before Parliament today his Government's faith in the United Nations.

He outlined three broad principles on which Ghana's Congo policy was based, making his second statement on the subject to the National Assembly in ten days.

¶The Ghana Government believes it is the duty of the United Nations to "assist the Government of the Congo in the maintenance of an ordered administration and to preserve the unity and territorial integrity of the Republic of the Congo."

¶The United Nations force in the Congo should be made up mainly of African troops. "Only in this way can the people of the Congo be given tangible proof that their colonialism is over and only thus can the Congo be isolated from the conflicts of the 'cold war'."

¶There is a great danger of colonialism reestablishing itself in the Congo if there is no early settlement and it is the duty of the United Nations to "assist in preventing this occurring."

Mr. Nkrumah also said he is considering an invitation from President Moise Tshombe of the Katanga provincial regime to visit Katanga.

"I shall accept it if I consider that by so doing I could contribute to a solution of the problems of the Congo," Mr. Nkrumah said.

U.N. Receives the Statement

Special to The New York Times.

UNITED NOTIONS, N.Y., Aug. 17 — President Nkrumah's statement in Accra today of his willingness to go to Katanga Province if the visit would help solve the Congo's new crisis was circulated here bythe Ghanian delegation.

The declaration fell short of an open offer to serve as mediator betweeen Premier Patrice Lumumba of the Congo's central government and President Tshombe of Katanga, who favorsthe secession of the province off a loose federal set-up is not established. Diplomatic observers noted moreover that there were obstacles to Mr. Nkrumah taking the role of mediator.

The new declaration by President Nkrumah continued the support he has given Premier Lumumba on certain controversial issues. Chief among these was Mr. Lumumba's demand that the United Nations should help unify the Congo—meaning restore the republic's authority in Katanga.

Mr. Nkrumah has reiterated his pledge to do nothing to impair United Nations authority, but to work for a compromise.

He said that Ghana, along with the other African states, was consulting on drawing up a common African policy.

A SPLIT DEVELOPS IN AFRICAN PARLEY

Independent Lands Absent as Mboya-Led Territorial Bloc Addresses Meeting

Special to The New York Times.

ACCRA, Ghana, April 9 — A conference of twenty African states and territories that had been called to consider "positive action for peace and security in Africa" seemed today to have split into two conferences.

In one were delegates from the independent states of Ghana, Guinea, Libya, Morocco, Tunisia, the Sundan, the United Arab Republic and Liberia. Also included were delegates from Nigeria, Togoland, the Belgian Congo, Cameroon and Somalia, all states nearing independence, and from the Algerian Provisional Government.

In the other conference were Tom Mboya from Kenya and other delegates from dependent African territories, organized into the Pan-African Freedom Movement of East and Central Africa. In addition to Kenya, this group represents Uganda, Tanganyika and the Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland.

Originally neither Mr. Mboya nor any other delegate of this group was scheduled to speak at the conference or participate in its committees, in which the real work was going on.

But yesterday the Kenyan African leader headed a delegation to Prime Minister Kwame Nkrumah of Ghana to protest this and ask that delegates from dependent states be put on the conference's working committee. As a result, the conference was rearranged to give these delegates a chance to speak. They were also given five seats on the working committee.

Today, however, speakers from Nigeria, Kenya, Uganda and Cameroon made impassioned pleas for action before an audience from which representatives of the independent states were conspicuuosly absent. At the same time, resolutions to be presented to the conference tomorrow were being framed in private by committees of the independent states.

The indications are that the resolutions will include a call for an Africa-wide boycott of South African and possibly French goods to protest South Africa's race segregation measures and France's recent atomic tests in the Sahara.

Bonn threat doesn't worry Touré

(Special To AFRO)

CONAKRY, Guinea, West Africa — As the West German government in Bonn angrily debated over whether to withdraw recognition of Guinea, Prime Minister Sekou Touré calmly went about the business of developing his country.

He had been given an ultimatum by Bonn — either sever his diplomatic relations with East Germany or lose its connection with Bonn. The relation in the past had netted Guinea a $400,000 loan and the promise of $1,500,000 credit.

(In 1958, Guinea got $28 million from the new Republic of Ghana.)

West Germany had also provided agricultural and technical advisors to Guinea after the French pulled out in a huff when Touré said Guineans would rather be free in poverty than a French satellite in luxury.

CONTRASTED WITH the less than $2 million from West Germany is the $35 million credit promised by the Russians. The West Germans feel that this promise pressured Guinea into recognizing East Germany.

Touré and his ambassadors evade the question of whether Guinea has established diplomatic relations with the East.

(On the other hand, Moscow makes no secret of its recognition of East Germany — yet West Germany "recognizes" Moscow.)

Although Touré gave no indication of his position in the current controversy, it can easily be inferred from his previous statements.

On a visit to Moscow last year, the youthful African leader (called a "Marxist" by Time Magazine) declared:

"We want to cooperate with all nations. There is a place in our country for all who want to help us."

* * *

IN AMERICA the same year, he declared that Guinea believes in a liberty which knows no division of color or nationality but which "considers man for man's sake and which grants him respect and dignity."

In his own country, earlier in the same year, he declared:

"We judge our relations with other countries on the basis of their attitude and political concepts toward Africa as a whole, toward colonialism, the right to self-determination and economic development.

"There can be no middle way, no compromise policy between colonial interest and African interest, which are contradictory by nature and by definition.

"Africa," he concluded, "is moving quite naturally toward independence and unity and it is up to the older nations to become conscious of this."

* * *

OBSERVERS IN the East and West should not have had to wait for Touré's statements to know that this lean, intense thinker was both the fountain head and the symbol of his countrymen's deep desire for freedom.

In 1958 when deGaulle offered French territories the choice of complete independence, autonomy within the French Community, or status as a Department of France, Guineans rolled up a 95 per cent vote for complete independence.

In a huff, deGaulle withdrew all French aid and government functionaries. Guinea survived. It soon became evident that if the new nation was not to have aid from the West, it could get it from the East.

Now, both sides are assiduously courting the tiny Republic — one of the key new African nations.

* * *

WHAT BONN does concerning diplomatic recognition could very well tip the scales. Observers opine that the time has passed when white nations can control non-white nations at the drop of an ultimatum.

In their opinion, it would be far better for Bonn and the rest of the Western world to prove that they can beat the East in helping new nations gain a foothold.

The case in Guinea is not hopeless. Despite his friendliness to Moscow (as well as Washington) Touré organized his country's labor unions in a strictly non-communist pattern.

SEKOU TOURE

His very independence of thought and statement overrule the possibility of communist domination.

Other African nations are watching to see if the West, as exemplified by Bonn, is committed to a new "diplomatic colonialism" to replace the outmoded variety.

CONAKRY PARLEY SCORES APARTHEID

African-Asian Meeting Calls for 'Total Isolation' of South African Regime

CONAKRY, Guinea, April 15 (Reuters)—The fifty-nation African-Asian Solidarity Conference here called on African and Asian countries to campaign for the "total isolation" of South Africa, beginning with a boycott of her goods.

A resolution adopted by the conference also urged African and Asian governments to "examine the question of breaking diplomatic relations" with South Africa in protest over her racial policies.

The resolution was one of a series approved at the last session of the five-day conference, attended by more than 300 delegates, including representatives from the Soviet Union and Communist China. The parley was arranged by the Asian Solidarity Committee, a group organized under the auspices of the Soviet-sponsored World Peace Council.

Apartheid Condemned

The conference condemned South Africa's apartheid (racial segregation) policies and the "savage massacre of unarmed African demonstrators" at Sharpeville March 21. The police killed seventy-two Africans at Sharpeville.

The resolution said the events in South Africa were a "serious threat to peace in Africa and throughout the world."

It "insisted" that the South African problem should be placed on the agenda of the next summit conference.

It recommended June 27 as South Africa Independence Day and called for demonstrations and protests against apartheid on that day.

Another resolution condemned the recently signed United States-Japanese treaty, which, it said, "aimed at reviving Japanese militarism and installing nuclear bases in Japan."

A resolution on Algeria recommended that all African and Asian states recognize the rebel Provisional Government of Algeria.

The first African-Asian conference was held in Cairo in 1958 and about 500 delegates attended.

It condemned as "colonialist" the policy of France in the "war of extermination" in Algeria. It denounced the "diplomatic, financial and military support given to France by the imperialist powers."

Withdrawal of Africans Urged

A message addressed to the heads of African governments in the French Community called on them to withdraw any African troops fighting "in the ranks of France's colonialist army" in Algeria.

Another resolution called for the withdrawal of all French and British troops operating in the new state of Cameroon and the cessation of United States aid to the French Government.

The conference recommended the holding in the near future of a second African conference patterned after the one held in Bandung, Indonesia, in 1955.

The conference would seek to establish a common African-Asian "liberation front," to set up a volunteer corps to aid all African-Asian peoples fighting for their freedom and to start an anti-imperialist "solidarity fund."

Nkrumah Sees Crucial Fight

ACCRA, Ghana, April 15 (Reuters) — Prime Minister Kwame Nkrumah said in a radio broadcast here that "the struggle for freedom and independence of the African peoples is now at the crucial stage."

Broadcasting last night on the eve of Africa Freedom Day, he said that "as long as a single inch of our African territory is under any form of colonialism we are not free."

"That is why we in Ghana must continue to be in the thick of the fight side by side with our brothers who are still under foreign domination, until they, too, are free and independent," he added.

Selassie Assails Racialism

Special to The New York Times.

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia, April 15—Emperor Haile Selassie, in an African Day radio broadcast today, denounced racialism and called for freeing Africa from imperialism.

"Despite outraged world opinion, blood still flows on African soil in the cause of freedom and racial equality," the Emperor said. "All African peoples must insure that the unspeakable racial aggression against Africans which occurred during this year must never again be perpetrated."

Israeli Envoy to Protest

LAWRENCE FELLOWS

Special to The New York Times.

JERUSALEM (Israeli Sector), April 15—The Israeli Foreign Ministry acknowledged today that its Ambassador in Guinea has been instructed to register with President Sékou Touré his displeasure over being asked to leave the African-Asian conference yesterday.

Although there have been other minor diplomatic setbacks this week, the Israeli Government is giving none more than a sidewise glance in its pursuit of friends among the emerging nations of Asia and Africa.

The Israeli diplomat, Shlomo Hillel, went to the opening session of the conference yesterday as an observer. He told his superiors here that he had been invited to attend by the Guinean Government, as had everyone in Conakry's diplomatic community.

Arabs Raise Objections

However, the Arab delegates did not take kindly to his presence. Mr. Hillel took even less kindly to their suggestions that he leave. He did so only when the Guinean chairman sent him a polite note advising him to leave so that the meeting might get started in harmony.

Whatever assurances Mr. Hillel might receive from President Touré, the attitude among Foreign Ministry officials here is that the incident is a blemish of little significance in Israel's grand design to overreach the barrier of hostile Arabs states on her frontiers.

Israelis displayed the same calm assurance in explaining away an incident in Tel Aviv last week involving George Reeves, the young Liberian chargé d'affaires.

Mr. Reeves was easing his car into a parking spot, apparently with more determination than skill, when a passing truck driver called him, other things, a kushi. The literal translation of this Hebrew word is "African," but it has a connotation Mr. Reeves did not like. He pulled a pistol and shot the tires of the truck.

Good Relations Stressed

The Israeli Foreign Ministry took this opportunity to remark about the good relations that exist between Israel and Liberia and expressed the belief that Mr. Reeves would be recalled by the Liberian Government on its own initiative.

Little notice was taken here of the fact that Israel was not invited to an observance by Africans at the United Nations next Monday of Africa Freedom Day.

Israelis feel their influence is growing among African states south of the Sahara and that such rebuffs will soon be forgotten.

Israel has embassies in Ghana, Liberia and Guinea and consulates in Ethiopio, Nigeria and the Mali Federation of Senegal and Sudan. She had just appointed a diplomatic envoy to the Belgian Congo and is expected soon to appoint an envoy to the Malagasy Republic (Madagascar).

There is almost unbounded confidence here that Israel is breaking out of the isolation that still harasses her at the United Nations and at conference tables around the world. There is a feeling that Asian and African states will make increasing use of Israel's experience in settling and developing her country to do the same in their own countries. For Israel this means new friends, new markets and added strength in her day-to-day tasks of diplomatic bargaining.

Prayer on South Africa Asked

Special to The New York Times.

LONDON, April 15—William Cardinal Godfrey, Roman Catholic Archbishop of Westminster, asked in a statement today for prayers that justice and charity would prevail in South Africa. All Christians must pray, he said, "that there will be a radical change in the thinking of those in power so that the rights and dignity of the human person may be recognized in all men, no matter what the color of their skin."

Guinea Chief Accuses French Officers of Plot

The New York Times

President Sékou Touré

CONAKRY, Guinea, July 29 (Reuters) — President Sékou Touré said today that French Army officers were in the British Colony of Gambia and Portuguese Guinea making contacts as part of a plot against Guinea's independence.

He said in an interview that the French moves were another phase of earlier plots against Guinea.

"We are kept well informed of everything that is happening," he said. "Our 4,300 village committees of the Guinea Democratic party are sufficient to insure our security. The last plot was defeated not by the Government or the police but by the people."

Earlier this year three persons were sentenced to death and others to long terms of imprisonment on charges of taking part in a plot to cause armed disturbances in Guinea.

United Press International Radiophoto

GUEST OF COMMUNIST CHINA: Sékou Touré, left, President of Guinea, being greeted Saturday by Liu Shao-chi, chairman of the Chinese Peoples Republic, after his arrival in Peiping for a state visit. President Touré is first African head of state to visit Communist China. Photograph was released by an official Chinese source.

Mississippi Negro Is Going To Guinea

LONDON, Sept. 30 (AP)—Mississippi-born LaFlorya Levy, the first Negro girl to receive fashion and model training at a London school, will leave soon for Guinea to show women there how to combine traditional African dress with the latest Paris fashions.

Mrs. Levy, a journalist by profession, said: "There will also be a lot of public relations work connected with my new job." She added that she had taken the fashion courses at the special request of President Serou Toure, whom she met in London when he was last here.

"Guinea is desperately anxious for people to help in building up this country," she said. "I thought I could help."

LaFlorya is married to London teacher Eric Levy, who is white. They met and married in the United States, but decided to live in England, she said, "because people over here are so much more tolerant of mixed marriages."

Levy will go with his wife and hopes to get a job teaching.

Mrs. Levy was born and reared in Mound Bayou, Miss. Her maiden name was LaFlorya Young.

Guinea's President Arrives for U. N.

Pan American World Airways

President Sékou Touré of Guinea arrives at Idlewild.

President Sekou Touré of Guinea declined to say yesterday whether or not he would seek to have his troops removed from the United Nations forces in the Congo.

"I will have the opportunity later to define the position of my Government on the Congo," Mr. Touré said. "This is a most important problem bearing upon the very life of the African continent."

President Touré arrived at 1 P. M. at New York International Airport, Idlewild, Queens, to head Guinea's delegation to the United Nations General Asssembly. He is staying at a private residence in Riverdale, the Bronx.

"The United Nations is not in such a degree of perfection that we can say that new conditions are not required," he said in rply to a question whether he favored changing the structure of the organization.

"The adaption of the United Nations to the new needs does not mean that we have a negative attitude toward it."

The Washington Post Washington, D.C.

By Bob Burchette, Staff Photographer

SCHOOL BELLS RING — Guinea's Ambassador, Telli Boubacar Diallo (second, right) got six answers to his wish "Teachers for Guinea Schools." Six Americans who were interviewed at the embassy will report to their new duties before Oct. 1. On the far left is Larry Selinker. Next in line is Phyllis Namm. On the far right is Thelma Sowley. Fri. 9-16-60 P. C3

Teacher-Recruits

Modern Pioneers Sign for Guinea

WHAT HAS HAPPENED to the good old American pioneer spirit? Nothing. It was very much alive, yesterday. Washington, D.C.

On Tuesday, Ambassador Telli Boubacar Diallo notified the African-American Institute that Guinea urgently needed 35 teachers ready to report for duty before Oct. 1.

By yesterday afternoon, the Institute produced 12 interested applicants. They interviewed and were interviewed by Ambassador Diallo. And within an hour, six had signed up and another three thought they would enlist "after thinking it over a couple of days."

The teachers are leaving America without knowing the salary they will receive or without definite arrangements for housing. But, as Ambassador Diallo said, "Without a little bit of risk, life is without salt."

In his briefing, the Ambassador explained that salaries would be determined by an education commissioner after the teachers arrived in Guinea. Fri. 9-16-60

Everyone will get rent-free housing, but size of apartment or house will be decided by the commissioner. Salaries are a bit lower than those in the United States and each teacher will pay a five per cent income tax to Guinea. P. C3

TWENTY-TWO-YEAR-OLD Thelma Sowley asked whether her small knowledge of French would handicap her in teaching English. Not at all, the Ambassador assured the young New Yorker who later said she wanted to go but must finish her summer job before she can take off.

German-born U. S. citizen Jules Keller asked about the weather. He was assured it is "less hot" than Washington. The 36-year-old father of three children—ages 7, 4 and 3—said he is ready to go at once. "I was in North Africa and I liked it," he said.

Maine-born Harold Amrhein Jr.—who is 27 and bilingual—asked several questions, evidently liked the answers. He's going right away.

"It's a new nation, the people want to learn," said 25-year-old Virginia teacher Eli Mayo. "Here people don't care." Mayo's on his way "as soon" as he can get a passport.

Also on the list to go is American University graduate Larry Selinker. Sitting at his side and giving her enthusiastic consent was Phylis Namm who will be Mrs. Larry Selinker "before time to go."

WHY DO Larry and Phyllis want to go to Guinea? "This is what I've studied for," explained Larry. "And, there are many, many more reasons," added Phyllis. She didn't elaborate.

KENYA'S AT THE CROSSROADS

The Atlanta Constitution

By CHARLES P. ARNOT

NAIROBI, Kenya (NANA)—Kenya's "boy wonder," Tom Mboya, stands today at a critical political crossroads as this British East African colony rocks along the edge of a dangerous precipice.

Atlanta Ga.

Some experienced observers believe that the immediate future of this restive land may be determined by Mboya's next moves in attempting to survive his present political crisis.

Atlanta Ga. 6-5-60

After suddenly rocketing into the spotight as the leading native African champion of an independent Kenya, the 29-year-old labor leader and politician now finds himself fighting desperately for his political survival.

* * *

IT ALL happened almost overnight—the way things do in this mercurial part of awakening Africa.

Only two-and-one-half months ago the brilliant articulate Mboya returned from the London conference on Kenya's political future as the darling of the black masses.

Then the freeze set in.

Mboya's envious older rivals for local political glory began accusing him—both openly and in a sinister whispering campaign—of "selling out to the white man" by agreeing to follow a moderate and patient course toward complete independence.

Mboya struck back by "climbing aboard the Kenyatta bandwagon," as they call it here.

* * *

IGNORING his earlier appeals for patience and moderation, he delivered what amounted to an ultimatum for the release of convicted Mau Mau leader Jomo Kenyatta now being held in political exile in the north Kenyan desert, 120 miles from the nearest town.

"Release Kenyatta within three months or there will be a mass campaign of civil disobedience," Mboya told the white-dominated government.

Kenya's stocky bespectacled British governor, Sir Patrick Renison, personally rose to the challenge.

To release the 67-year-old Moscow-educated Kenyatta now would be a "security disaster," Sir Patrick declared in an iron-fist statement. Such a move, he added, would encourage those who fought on the side of the Mau Mau terrorist organization and demoralize those who for more than six years aided the forces of law and order against the terrorists.

* * *

IN HIS latest statement, Mboya declared "we will not be able to hold the people back" if the government refuses to release Kenyatta.

The Kenya moderates — both whites and some blacks—accuse Mboya of "playing a dangerous, reckless game" for his "own selfish political ends."

"To his own amazement," one white moderate reported, "Tom Mboya suddenly found himself unpopular in his own country. He seized on the Kenyatta issue like all the others to prove to the African population that he, too, was not going to be soft. The tragedy of all this pro-Kenyatta propaganda is that none of these leaders really wants Kenyatta released. The big danger now is that this whole thing may get out of control in the political scramble among Mboya and his rivals."

* * *

JAMES GICHURU is considered Mboya's chief rival for political power in any future self-governing Kenya. His other top competitor is outspoken independence-now champion, Oginga Odinga, who has been flirting with the Communist dominated Afro-Asian Peoples Solidarity Group with headquarters in Cairo.

When three new native African ministers and one deputy minister were about to be named in the Kenya cabinet following the London conferences, the moderate group tried to persuade Mboya to accept one of the key ministries. But he refused and countered with his Kenyatta ultimatum.

Amid all this political jockeying, a new semimilitant group has emerged among the Kiyuku tribe, Kenya's largest. It calls itself the "Mutangiri" or "The Guardians of Those Still Inside." About 260 Africans are still detained as security risks, including Kenyatta.

Members are remnants of former terrorists gangs, and many wear black shirts—or strips of black tape on their shirts—in mourning for Kenyatta's detention.

Kenyatta was found guilty of "managing" the Mau Mau in 1953 and sentenced to seven years in prison. Since December he has been held in remote political exile as a security risk.

British officials deny native African reports that he is a sick man. They say he is in excellent health.

Associated Press Wirephoto

TOM MBOYA

African Independence Leader

Gichuru Seen as New Power

The Pittsburgh Courier

Has Tom Mboya's Star Declined With Kenyans?

Pittsburgh, Pa. Sat. 7-9-60

By HAROLD L. KEITH

(The Courier Managing Editor)

Some of the lustre of Tom Mboya's popularity was dulled in Nairobi, Kenya, last week by boos tossed in the direction of the General Secretary of the Kenya Federation of Labor.

• Most significant were the accusations hurled at Mr. Mboya which accused him of using funds from American labor to help his personal career as an up-and-coming political power.

It is generally known that beneath the facade of black unity against the domination of white settlers there is an intense struggle for power now going on within nationalist ranks.

■

IT IS CERTAIN that the Kikuya nation, by far the most numerous of indigenous blacks in Kenya, want to see their own leaders in key spots in the African-dominated government foreseen for the future.

• But, it is quite possible that the hostility directed at the sincere and dedicated Mr. Mboya stemmed from the basic distrust of most Africans with any leader who seems to be in too close consultation with the whites.

Unfortunately, Mr. Mboya's opposition seems to feel that he is somewhat influenced by money sent his way from white Americans and some have accused him of a "sell out" in the recent conferences held in London.

■

IT IS NOW clear that the magical name of Mboya can no longer be regarded as being a standard by which the aspirations of Kenya's Negroes can be judged.

One must now regard very highly the opinions of James Gichuru, chairman of the newly-organized Kenya African National Union political party, and Dr. Mungai Njeroge, a U. S. educated man, who was chosen as secretary of the new party.

• And, of course, the opinions of Dr. Gikonyo Kiano and Ronald Ngala must not be taken lightly.

It is indeed significant that both Messrs. Gichuru and Njeroge are of Kikuyu parentage. This could mean that the demands for Kenya freedom will be directed in the future by the wishes of the Kikuyu majority.

It is definitely certain that Mboya's star no longer sits as high in the heavens over Kenya, as it once did, notwithstanding the young man's tremendous popularity throughout the continent.

AFRICAN DOCTOR FIGHTS DISEASE

The Times-Picayune

Operates Tiny Clinic for Hundreds of Patients

New Orleans La.

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP)—With his ammunition supply stacked to the ceiling in a small back room—crates and crates of U.S. food concentrates and vitamins—an African doctor is waging single handed war on disease.

For six months American-trained Dr. Mungai Njeroge has been fighting the three main enemies of his people—malnutrition, respiratory and intestinal diseases—in a tiny clinic in the crowded Kiambu reserve about 30 miles north of Nairobi. Hundreds of patients daily crowd into the four-room converted store.

A new $50,000 clinic will be financed by MEDICO—the international organization founded by Dr. Tom Dooley, former U. S. Navy officer, which is dedicated to providing medical clinics in underdeveloped parts of the world.

DOCTOR ARRIVES

Dr. Omar John Fareed of Beverly Hills, Calif., whom Dr. Njeroge met while studying medicine in the United States, has arrived to help set up a medical laboratory at the clinic.

Dr. Njeroge started the present tiny clinic last November with the aid of U. S. drugs and surgical equipment manufacturers through MEDICO.

A visitor found the clinic waiting room crowded to overflowing. Most of the patients were women and children, many of them dressed in the traditional Kikuyu blanket knotted over one shoulder and with their ears laden with clusters of beaded earrings.

100-MILE TREK

Many of the patients walk up to 100 miles to the clinic. Nearly 200 of them pass through Dr. Njeroge's office every day.

Only about half the patients pay for treatment and drugs, and those who do pay only a token fee.

Without gift drugs from MEDICO and occasional money from friends in the United States, Dr. Njeroge says he would be unable to continue.

He works a 12-hour day, six days a week, and relaxes on the seventh day by addressing political meetings and helping plan for an independent Kenya.

He hopes for early independence, for he believes the present transitional period and its uncertainties are harmful to whites and Africans alike.

Kenyatta Is Blamed For Maumau Terror In Corfield Report

Kenya's Survey Of Revolt Issued As Africans Press For His Release

Nairobi, Kenya, May 31 —Jomo Kenyatta, who is seeking a political comeback, was described in detail in a long report published here today as having been the organized of Kenya's Mau Mau rebellion.

The Mau Mau uprising led to the declaration of a state of emergency in Kenya from October, 1952, to January of this year. More than 13,000 Africans and ninety-five white persons lost their lives in what amounted to a civil war.

The author, Frank D. Corfield, former Governor of Khartoum Province in what used to be the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan, concludes that the basic responsibility of governments faced with the demands of African nationalism is to maintain law and order. His report, prepared at the request of the Kenya Government says:

"It was the failure of the Government of Kenya . . . to appreciate the importance of this very foundation of good government . . which was the basic cause of the outbreak of violence."

Report Took Two Years

The 321-page Corfield report, entitled "The Origins and Growth of the Mau Mau—An Historical Survey," has been in preparation two years. Its publication comes at a time when heavy pressure is being exerted by African nationalists for the release of the aging Mr. Kenyatta, whose confinement to Kenya's northern frontier district prevents his active participation in politics.

Mr. Kenyatta was convicted in 1953 of having been the "manager" of the Mau Mau rebellion. He was elected president a few weeks ago of a new African political party, the Kenya African National Union.

Mr. Corfield traces Mr. Kenyatta's political activity over the last 40 years — his visits to Britain and the Soviet Union and his rise in the late Nineteen Forties as a virtual dictator of the Kikuyu tribe, the largest in Kenya.

Stresses Are Noted

Describing the development of Mau Mau as "African nationalism run riot," Mr. Corfield says it was "the culmination of a long period of political unrest among the Kikuyu people." This unrest, he said, arose from stresses and strains felt by tribal Africans brought suddenly into contact with highly organized civilization. The report says:

" . . . without freedom afforded them by a liberal Government, Jomo Kenyatta and his associates would have been unable to preach their calculated hymn of hate."

Mr. Corfield warns that uncritical support of African nationalist movements may encourage those who seek their political ends violently.

Commenting on the grant of independence to Ghana and the Sudan and to other African territories in the future, he says:

"The grant of independence in these countries, as elsewhere, has given a great and enthusiastic impetus to all government and social activities and, provided law and order is maintained, there is little doubt that perhaps not unreasonable African governments will evolve, although they are likely to bear little inner semblance to a democracy as we know it for some time to come.

"But the ferment of freedom has been let loose and this will no doubt insure that eventually the forms of government to be evolved in these countries will have to take a reasonable account of individual liberty."

KENYA SETTLERS PONDER FUTURE

Whites in Fertile Farm Area Face the Coming of African Rule With Uncertainty

THOMSON'S FALLS, Kenya, June 9—British explorers in the last century discovered this fertile part of Africa. British settlers in this century have made it a bit of England on the Equator.

Political developments in recent months that will ultimately bring an African government to Kenya have made life uncertain for the white settlers. Most of them are reluctant to give up their farms and their gardens. They will stay if the Africans will let them.

Between here and Nakuru, the nearest large town about forty miles south, are a series of green valleys whose farms might easily be in Britain instead of Africa. The Equator is within a few miles but an altitude of about 7,000 feet and abundant rainfall provide a temperate climate. The raising of cattle and sheep are the principal occupations.

Settlers Chat in Pub

The local pub in Thomson's Falls is Bary's Hotel. It might be in Yorkshire if one did not know he was in Africa. One can hear the roar of the 243-foot falls a few steps away. The town takes its name from the falls.

Over a pint of beer in the evening the settlers talk about their problems. "I don't mind living under an African government," one said. "I just want it to be a reasonable and responsible one and not to go wild, that's all. Most Africans aret pretty decent people. They do most of the work on our farms and some of them are bloody good farmers. It's the political agitators that stir them up we have to worry about."

"I've been here too long to leave," said another who came to Kenya after World War I. "What worries me is that we'll give away too much too soon."

"And what will happen after that?" a stranger inquired.

"Can you say it will be wet or dry next year?" was the reply.

Maj. Harry B. Sharpe, white-haired and elderly, came to Kenya forty-eight yaers ago and stayed. He served as an officer with the King's African Rifles and as a government administrator. He lives alone in retirement near Thomson's Falls and takes a keep interest in events in Kenya.

Says "Africans Need Us"

"I don't think we'll be forced to leave," he said, "because the Africans need us as much as we need them. But you must speak very straight to the Africans. You can't shilly-shally. The Government at home talks to them as though they were Londoners or Americans, but you can't do that."

Mrs. Angela Christopher, a leader of the conservative United party in Thomson's Falls whose husband runs a 4,000-acre farm, had a gloomier view. "This is our home and we want to stay, but I think the Africans will chuck us out the first chance they get," she said.

"Our whole lives are at stake, ours as well as the mass of Africans," she added, explaining that if Kenya became an independent African-governed state, "I think there will be the most horrible internecine war between the tribes."

Mrs. Christopher contended that most Africans "do not understand what is going on." She said they were "misled by people who are determined to have power at any cost."

"There's only one answer," she declared. "The Africans must be told before it's too late that they cannot have self-government because they aren't ready for it."

KENYA ADVANCES NEW LAND POLICY

Details Published for Plan to Open All-White Area to African Farmers

Special to The New York Times.

NAIROBI, Kenya, June 15—Kenya's land problem moved a step nearer solution today.

The Government published details of its plan to open to African farmers an area of more than 12,000 square miles of arable land that is now restricted to whites. The area known as the "White Highlands," includes some of most fertile land in this British colony.

African nationalist leaders have long contended that too much of it was lying fallow while Africans were going land-hungry.

The Government's proposals are designed to provide a basis for settling the land controversy that has threatened to become a major obstacle in Kenya's progress toward self-government and independence.

Advisory Board Proposed

In a White Paper submitted to the Legislative Council, the Government declared again that its objective was "the progressive disappearance of racial and tribal land barriers. "It proposed that a start be made with the White Highlands, which lie near the Equator, northwest of Nairobi, at altitudes ranging from 5,000 to 10,000 feet.

Under the plan a multi-racial Central Land Advisory Board would be established to advise the Governor on land policy. The board would be composed of six Africans, six Asians and six whites, with the Minister of Lands as chairman and the Commissioner of Lands as deputy chairman.

One of the board's chief responsibilities would be to advise the Governor in cases where a ruling is sought from him on land transactions involving persons of different races.

Racial Bars a Target

The board also would advise on the removal of racial bars on all of Kenya's land. These include restrictions that prohibit Africans from residing in certain parts of Nairobi, the capital of Kenya.

The Government proposals also would provide freehold title to land regardless of race.

Kenya, which is about the size of Texas, has an economy that is based almost exclusively on agriculture. Nearly half of the country is arid. The efficient farming of virtually every inch of available arable land has become a national goal for Kenya's growing population.

The present population is estimated at more than 6,000,000 Africans, nearly 200,000 Asians and 65,000 whites.

One is a misunderstanding among Africans of the meaning of self-rule, which they know as "uhuru." This is the Swahili word for freedom.

The other cause for concern is friction between members of the Kikuyu tribe who were loyal to the Government during the Mau Mau uprising and former Mau Mau members who were released from detention after the seven-year state of emergency in Kenya ended earlier this year.

Exaggerated Promises Made

The misunderstandings about self-rule was reported by Government representatives in Kenya's Central and Rift Valley Provinces, two of the most heavily populated of the colony's six provinces. Many Africans in these rural areas are uneducated and primitive.

"They know that uhuru means they will be running things all right, but they also think that when that time comes they can quit work and sit around," an official said. "Their attitude results from exaggerated promises being made by African politicians, and one of our big jobs is going to be to put them right."

Some Africans were reported to be discussing how to divide among themselves farms owned by whites. They are said to believe that when independence comes they will not only be given ownership of the land but that the whites will be made to work for them.

New Curbs Imposed

Ill-feeling between former Mau Mau members and Africans who remained loyal to the Government has led to the imposition of curfews and the restriction of movement of Africans in the Nyeri district of Central Province, about 100 miles north of Nairobi.

Officials there report that efforts have been made to intimidate farmers not to cooperate in agricultural improvement programs. Some violence has occurred.

There have also been isolated signs of the resurgence of anti-white, anti-government, Mau Mau-type secret societies.

"They have begun to smolder and could flare up if we do not keep rigid control," one administrator said.

The situation is attributed to the release in the last few months of more than 3,000 Africans who had been confined during the emergency.

KENYA'S NATIONALISTS DEMAND FREEDOM NOW

Britain Must Satisfy Africans and Try to Protect Settlers' Rights

By WALTER WAGGONER

Special to The New York Times.

LONDON, Feb. 6—The Times of London printed an advertisement a week ago by the manager of a Kenya coffee plantation, an Englishman, seeking a similar job anywhere else in the world. This week's Punch printed a somber cartoon of a chess board with massive, brooding black pieces overshadowing the white ones. It is captioned: "African problem—move to white."

The two items suggest the dilemma facing Britain as she struggles with the task of guiding another of her colonies into the community of self-governing, independent nations. Enlightened Albion, who has shed colonies before, must find a pace fast enough to satisfy the impatient Africans, yet moderate enough to assure stability and a decent retreat for the whites who have helped bring the territory from tribal anarchy to economic viability.

Coming Soon

The gestation period of freedom varies, and there is no certainty when the idea of an independent Kenya was conceived. But it is apparent at Lancaster House here, where the Kenya constitutional conference is going on, that Africa is about to give birth to another nation governed by Africans.

It could come in 1960, as Tom Mboya and his African delegation demand, or in a year or two. With slower steps, proposed by others, independence might emerge gradually over a period of five years or ten, although the Africans are not willing to wait that long. But whatever the timetable, Iain Macleod, who is regarded as one of Britain's most progressive colonial secretaries, knows the day of a Kenya controlled by its African majority is not far off.

Kenya was not among the earliest of the African territories to demand independence, but it is now caught up in the tide that is sweeping the continent. Its immediate neighbors are independent or on their way, and Mr. Mboya, the aggressive 30-year-old African leader, has served notice that Kenya cannot remain an island of colonialism.

The underlying force for Kenya's independence is not economic, as it has been in some countries, although economic factors play a part. Colonial experts here who understand and sympathize with the Africans' aspirations believe that the primary motivations are social and psychological.

"We are growing up," is the way one African has put it. "We are being treated as adolescents instead of adults."

'ON HIS OWN'

Crook in Newsday, L. I.

Wealthy Outsiders

Another complaint holds that only the Europeans and the Asians are wealthy; it is argued, in fact, that not a single European is seen who is not well-off. The white answer is to acknowledge the fact, with the explanation that the poor and indigent are not allowed into the country.

Finally, many Africans feel they received a "pushing around" during the seven-year state of emergency that was imposed to control the terrorists of the Mau Mau.

Those are the basic factors on which African demands for self-government and independence now are believed to rest. They add up to the conviction, shared by moderate and extremist alike, that the 6,000,000 Kenya Africans are treated as inferiors in their own land by 65,000 whites.

But there are secondary elements, closer to the daily life of the Kenya Africans, that feed the dissatisfaction. There is serious overcrowding in the northern and central provinces, where over-population has complicated even tribal life. Poverty exists in areas where farming is primitive, the soil growing sterile, and the land fragmented by traditional practices of handing down parcels to succeeding generations.

In painful contrast to those conditions are the wealth and productivity of the 12,000 square miles of the White Highlands. This fertile and temperate land is reserved for white settlers. The Colonial Government itself has already taken steps to end the exclusivity of the reserve but the Africans want it done their way.

Out of Reach

They see the Highlands as a great plum just out of reach, a symbol of their enforced and artificial inferiority. Rather than wait for it to fall into their hands, they will chop the tree down if necessary. The Kenya Africans have an affinity for the land, and this affinity is frustrated by the white reserve.

In the opinion of close and sympathetic observers of the Kenya scene, the issue of "status" is the root of most of the African demands. As long as the black man is made to feel inferior to the white, it is said, so long will he be vulnerable to the extremists of his own race and a liability to all Kenya.

It is the hope of moderates like Michael Blundell that the gnawing problem of "status" can be eliminated by opening up opportunities to Africans that are now closed to them, by educating them to responsibility and roles of leadership and wiping out such reminders of exclusion as the fence around the White Highlands.

Mr. Blundell likens the surge for independence now sweeping across Africa to a great flood of water pouring down a valley to a dam not capable of holding it.

"You can sit tight and wait for the dam to be smashed," he says. "You can knock the dam down. Or you can open the sluice gates and try to harness some of the energy pouring through."

What he and his followers want to do is "harness the energy" of awakening Africa for the benefit of Africans and of Kenya.

There is no dispute between the African leaders like Tom Mboya and the moderates like Mr. Blundell on general aims. But Mboya Africans are in a hurry. If the Colonial Secretary can persuade Mr. Mboya to concede a mite toward gradualism and the moderates to accept a faster pace, a solution could emerge from the conference.

The fear, however, is that moderates of both races are the prisoners of their extremists. Mr. Blundell could go under politically if Group Captain Llewellyn R. Briggs, leader of the Right-wing United party, convinces the white settlers they have been the victims of a "sell-out."

Mr. Mboya himself is on the extreme or "independence-now-and-no-nonsense" wing of his own people, but even he is inhibited from making concessions that might be turned against him. The thirty-year-old trade unionist is a political being with a sense of destiny and a taste for power. He is not likely, by an act of compromise, to allow his followers to question his leadership or his ability to stand up to the white man.

There is no question but that the Africans have the power to take their independence on virtually their own terms. But it is hoped in official quarters that they will enable Britain to withdraw as colonial ruler with a minimum of disorder and a maximum of goodwill on both sides.

KENYA: LAND AND LEADERS

Tom Mboya, spokesman for independent Kenya.

European

Michael Blundell, spokesman for white moderates.

Associated Press

DEMONSTRATOR ARRESTED IN KENYA: A woman continues to display her sign as she is taken into custody at Nairobi airport. She was seized while demonstrating at the return from London of Capt. Llewellyn Briggs, leader of the United party, an all-white organization.

Africans Pick Own Advisers

British Take Low In Mboya Talks

LONDON, England—The universal Kenya voting conference at Lancaster House, London, was on again this week after a boycott by Africans had established two important principles that have wide significance for the British in Africa.

The first is that Africans have the right to decide for themselves whom they wish to choose to act as their leaders and advisers, however unwise their choice may be considered by others.

The second is that today the pace and nature of political change in Africa can only be determined with the free consent of the Africans themselves: other settlements are meaningless.

The boycott arose over whether Peter Koinange, considered by some of the white settler-delegates to be a proxy for Jomo Kenyatta, who is still under detention for the Mau Mau Rebellion, could act as one of the close-proximity advisers to the Africans.

■

THE AFRICANS refused to confer unless Koinange, who is free in England but might not be so if he returned to Kenya, would be allowed to be nearby to advise them. The boycott was joined by a Briton, E. L. Howard-Williams, a coffee farmer, author and an independent member of the European legislative delegation.

After several days, not only was Koinange permitted to serve as adviser to the African delegation, but Atty. Thurgood Marshall of U. S. NAACP fame was permitted to join him in advising the group.

To open the talks, Michael Blundell, had of the moderate, multi-racial New Kenya Group, indicated the direction the debate will take by urging caution and gradualism. Ronald Ngala, speaking for the Africans, demanded independence now on a one-man, one-vote franchise.

■

AT ISSUE is the fear of the settlers that they will become an almost meaningless minority.

RONALD NGALA
. . . engaged in Kenya talks

Ninety-five per cent of the population of Kenya is African.

Ibrahim Nathoo, an Asian Minister of Works in the Kenya government, stated that he did not think a new constitution could be imposed on Kenya over the objections of the Africans. Mr. Mboya concurred in this and said it was "a big departure from the Blundell line and a very big departure from the group line."

Mr. Nathoo appealed to the Africans to do thier best to instill confidence among the Europeans and Asians that they can live in Kenya in security and peace.

■

DR. OKONYA KIANA, the first African lecturere at the Royal Technical College of East Africa in Nairobi, told the meeting that the Africans will prepare a bill of rights guaranteeing equal constitutional treatment of all persons who are citizens of Kenya.

Mr. Mboya remarked: "We would have to eliminate those with one foot in Kenya and another foot in Bombay or India. Dual loyalties will be excluded. The bill of rights is for those who have made their choice. Asians will have to forget Asia. Others will have to forget Scotland and Wales."

Asked whether tribal loyalties would have to be sacrificed, Mr. Mboya said they would. Ronald Ngala, chairman of the African delegation, however, remarked that nothing would infringe on the customs, traditions or religious convictions of the Kenyans.

Mr. Mboya said that under the proposed constitution, a court of law, not the Kenya Parliament, would be supreme in protecting rights of the individual and interpreting the constitution.

FUTURE EMMY WINNERS? — When these African tribesmen met television producer Helen Jean Rogers with Mount Kilimanjaro in the background, it could have been a contribution to an Emmy Award (TV's Oscar) next fall. The program, "The Dark and the Light," was presented Sunday night and made a strong bid for one of the year's top documentary efforts.

TV brings African conflict into homes of America

NEW YORK — Kenya will be ruled by Africans in five years time or there will be "a lot of trouble," Tom Mboya, head of Kenya's largest political party, warned Sunday night on TV.

Mr. Mboya, whose party demands independence from Britain this year and political equality for all races on a "one man, one vote" basis, made the statement in a filmed interview seen on ABC-TV's "The Dark and the Light," a special ABC News report on the rising tides of nationalism in three areas of Africa—Kenya, Tanganyika and the Union of South Africa.

At the same time, Julius Nyerere charged that the U.S. does not have a positive foreign policy toward Africa.

* * *

THROUGH THE length and breadth of Africa—the second largest of continents—millions are demanding political and economic power.

Some are demanding that the white man leave and turn back to the natives the land they believe is theirs. Millions of whites, taking credit for developing Africa's riches, want to stay and maintain the position they have created.

Caught between the two groups are the Asians, mostly Indian, in larger number than the whites. They are merchants shopkeepers and businessmen —vocations they wish to retain.

* * *

THIS IS the situation, given in its simplest terms, that has produced an Africa afire and has focused worldwide attention on the once dark continent.

And it is this situation, as it pertains to East and South Africa, that was appraised by John Daly on "The Dark and the Light," the special hour-long ABC News documentary on the rising tides of African nationalism, telecast Sunday, from 6-7 p.m. (EST).

* * *

THE REPORT, filmed in Africa, purported to show how three areas—Kenya, the Union of South Africa, and Tanganyika—are dealing with the situation in three different ways, ranging from integration to absolute segregation. Interviews with leaders holding each point of view were presented.

In the rich farm country of Kenya, scene of the recent Mau Mau terrors, the pro[illegible] is steadily mounting as natives demand a greater voice in the government.

* * *

THERE IS probably no other area on earth where segregation is more strictly conceived and more stringently enforced than in the Union of South Africa, the second of the three areas visited.

Living under the power of white nationalists, the natives demand more rights and privileges while the government tightens enforcement of its total segregation policies.

* * *

A THIRD and different approach—peaceful and optimistic in its implications — is found in Tanganyika.

Here in the shadow of Mount Kilimanjaro, the political party standing for absolute equality has swept the recent elections. Whites, Africans and Asians are governing jointly in a single legislature and the country, a British protectorate, will eventually become a free African nation.

While Kenya, with problems more complex than those of Tanganyika, is searching for a peaceful solution, in the Union the situation is, in the opinion of a mission priest, hopeless. What happens in these three areas may effect not only Africa's future, but the future of the world.

Mboya at Helm In Kenya Union

NAIROBI, Kenya—Speculation as to the future political status of Tom Mboya was squashed last Friday when Jomo Kenyatta, exiled political leader, was elected president of the Kenya African National Union and Mboya was elected secretary general of the Union.

Mboya thus becomes the operating director of the union and the symbolic representative of the followers of Kenyatta as well as his own.

Dispute on Kenyatta's Future Stirs Bitter Feelings in Kenya

Africans Urge End of Curbs on Mau-Mau Leader—Whites Fear His Return to Politics

By LEONARD INGALLS

Special to The New York Times.

NAIROBI, Kenya, May 29—One of the most troublesome issues in East Africa is approaching a climax. The issue is that of 66-year-old Jomo Kenyatta.

Kenyatta, a political leader of great popularity, was convicted in 1954 of having been the "manager" of the Mau Mau rebellion in Kenya and was sentenced to seven years in prison. He was released last year, but is restricted by government order to the northern frontier district.

He lives with his wife at Lodwar, a remote town 350 miles northwest of Nairobi, near Lake Rudolf.

A report that is expected to have a strong bearing on Kenyatta's case is scheduled to be published this week in Nairobi and London. It deals with the origin, growth and methods of the Mau Mau and was prepared over a two-year period at the request of Sir Evelyn Baring, who retired last year as Governor of Kenya.

End of Restrictions Sought

The author is Frank D. Corfield, a former Governor of Khartoum Province in the Sudan.

Sentiment has been growing among Africans for removal of the restrictions on Kenyatta. He is a member of the Kikuyu tribe, the largest tribal group in Kenya, but is regarded as a national leader by thousands of Kenya Africans. One African said of Kenyatta: He is a father figure to us, as President Eisenhower has been to many Americans."

The Kenyatta case has stirred bitter emotions in Kenya, particularly among white settlers, for whom Kenyatta personifies all the tragedy and brutality of the Mau Mau uprising. In letters published in recent weeks in local newspapers, these whites have asserted that his return to Kenya's political life would be a betrayal of all who fought against the Mau Mau.

But many Africans and some whites have long had misgivings about Kenyatta's trial. It was conducted in Kapenguria, a village in the middle of a wilderness. There was a shortage of court reporters and interpreters able to translate from Kikuyu into English, and there were other inconveniences.

Even some conservative Africans are not concerned today with Kenyatta's guilt or innocence. They say that he has served his sentence, that Kenya's future progress toward self-government and independence is important now, not the past, and that they want Kenyatta with them.

Governor Sees 'Danger'

However, Sir Patrick Renison, Governor of Kenya, declared recently he was determined to "help Kenya show the world that darkness is behind us and that we are capable of going forward together to an independent government in which every community can play its part."

Noting that he regarded Kenyatta as "a danger to security," he said: "I have at present no evidence that Jomo Kenyatta will help Kenya in these aims. I have much evidence to the contrary."

The registration by the Government of a new African political organization, the Kenya African National Union, has been delayed because Kenyatta was elected its president. Meanwhile, Africans in the Kenya Government and Legislative Council have threatened to resign unless they are permitted at least to consult with Kenyatta.

Tension High As S. Africans Await The Rise Of A New 'Dictator'

Wed. 5-4-60

BY ROBERT C. RUARK

Special to Scripps-Howard Newspapers

NAIROBI, Kenya, May 3—Refugees from apartheid in South Africa are momentarily awaiting news such as occurred on the day the Reichstag was burned in Germany to get rid of old records and start afresh with a new dictator.

In the new fascist state of South Africa whether the dictator will be Justice Minister Francois Erasmus or External Affairs Minister Eric Louw is still a question.

The outside horse in the race is Minister of Lands Paul Sauer, the gent who declared for a "new deal" with a revised policy of tenderness toward the black African — only to get stomped down by Erasmus and Louw.

The latter two declared that the policies implemented by Prime Minister Hendrik Verwoerd (the father of apartheid) remain stiffly in effect.

Sauer took advantage of Verwoerd's lying in a hospital with a head full of lead from the gun of David Pratt, who has been unheard from since he was collared in the act.

Bid To Ease Tension

Sauer's idea was that some relaxation of the segregation strictness against the blacks, and particularly the coloreds (those of mixed blood), would make better co-operation among the races. Also that it would ease the type of tension responsible for the bloody riots in Durban, Johannesburg and Capetown—and soften the sudden world animosity toward the South African government.

At the same time it was a cold bid for power while the wounded giant, Verwoerd, slept.

Sauer figured that a great many white South Africans were just as sick of the tension and strife as was the outside world. But he failed to reckon with the toughness of Erasmus and Louw, each of whom has his eye cocked to the main job.

Whereupon a reign of terror started with new restrictions enforced on white, black and colored alike. Promptly the police started raids on East London, a Johannesburg suburb, and have arrested some 1200 Africans. The charge was they failed to carry passbooks since Erasmus and Louw revoked the temporary suspension of the passbook rule to appease world anger and disgust with the police killings.

The raids were described as "intended to round up the lawless elements." No weapons were discovered and the operations were described as "orderly." Earlier some 200 police raided Capetown's Nyanga, another strife scene, and arrested 57. In two other towns 158 Africans were seized.

'Not Enough Jails'

The question now is where to hold all these arrested people, since South Africa hasn't got enough jails, or even intention of formally trying the prisoners. Up to now there has been no seeming intent to try white suspects of Communist affiliation, sedition, etc. And Erasmus is stating that lawyers should be screened before being admitted to practice.

I know a couple of lawyers involved in efforts to free jailed whites. One has a brother in jail and the other is always looking nervously over his shoulder.

Individual white arrests are made at nighttime, Nazi fashion, with the "detainee" hustled out of bed and lugged to the clink. The number of white arrests is unknown, as no information is available, but it could be as many as 200 and possibly more.

African arrests are simpler now as native villages are cordoned off with troops while the police enter and make arrests under the soldiers' covering guns.

The excuse is that the towns and outskirts are loaded with "Tsotsis," corresponding to our young hoodlums in America.

The commonest method of murder of an African by an African is to stick a man in the heart with a sharpened bicycle wheelspoke aboard a jampacked commuter train. The press of bodies holds the corpse upright until the train unloads when the victim falls flat and the murderer vanishes in the crowds getting off.

Trains and stations are the sites of many cruel beatings and stabbings. Native hospitals are jammed, I am reliably told, with paraplegics because some Tsostis are adept in anatomy and have developed perfection in finding the vertebra with a knife—after first telling the victim that he is going to be paralyzed for life if he persists in staying on his job.

With state troops mustered and rooms wiretapped, South Africa lacks only an official Gestapo to be a complete police state. The whites seem just as terrified as the blacks and the most common question is "what do you think will happen next?"

Censorship is now carried to such ridiculous extremes that you can't mention the names of "detainees" in newspapers or identify specific location of industries without clearance.

N. A. N. A.

Jomo Kenyatta

Kenya Gets Ready For Mixed Schools

The Pittsburgh Courier Pittsburgh Pa.

Sat 7-8-60

NAIROBI, Kenya — "Children must be brought up together. They cannot meet at the university level; they have formed their ideas about race by that time," schoolmaster Masinde Muliro said in summing up the African attitude on school integration in Kenya.

Still preparations are being made to integrate the schools racially. Initially African, Asian, and white students are to study together in secondary schools. Plans for introducing integrated classes at this level next year are being worked out by the Department of Education.

Reginald S. Alexander, who represents Nairobi in the Kenya Legislative Council, and who is for integration, said, "We have heard it often said that we want other races to attain our (European) standards and learn to behave as we do before they can be given responsibility.

"Yet when opportunities come forward these same people say 'we want you to attain our standards but do not come near us to learn them.' We cannot have it both ways, and if we try we are in danger of being classified hypocrites."

■

BOTH AFRICANS and Asians are in favor of integration in all schools, which incidentally, is the official policy of the neighboring British-administered trust territory of Tanganyika.

Mulion added that Africans and whites should grow up together. African children, he explained, should probably receive their early education in the tribal tongues they learn at home and join children of other races after a few years.

100 Suspected Mau Mau Aides Seized in Kenya as Oath-Givers

The New York Times

New York

Special to The New York Times.

NAIROBI, Kenya, July 8—More than 500 policemen began a round-up today of Africans administering oaths like those sworn by adherents of the Mau Mau. About 100 suspects were arrested. 7-9-60

The purpose of the police operation is to eradicate fear and intimidation over an area of almost 2,000 square miles. Reports of oath-taking in Kenya's Central and Rift Valley Provinces have been widespread recently.

The original Mau Mau terrorist outbreak began in 1952 among the Kikuku tribe. Thousands of Mau Mau supporters were killed before the terrorists were brought under control in 1956. The state of mergency was ended only last January.

A statement issued today by Sir Patrick Renison, Governor of Kenya, said: "Increasing uneasiness has been felt over the growing incidence of subversive activities reminiscent of Mau Mau and African leaders have joined with the Government in deploring this development and urging their people to help stamp it out."

He said "constitutional advance must take place in conditions of personal security and freedom from fear." Such conditions, he said, "are being threatened by certain Kikuyu in the Central and Rift Valley provinces and in Nairobi."

Thursday night by the light of a full moon the police quietly awakened and arrested Africans suspected of administering oaths either for financial gain or to spread fear for political purposes. The usual fee to an oath-taker is 10 shililngs, or about $1.40.

Within two hours the major part of the operation had been completed in Nairobi and the provincial towns of Nyeri, Fort Hall and Nakuru. The men were held in police stations and prisons for transfer to the remote Lamu District on Kenya's north coast. The Government will restrict them there.

Walter Coutts, Chief Secretary, said the oath ceremonies had been sporadic. Most were similar to the first Mau Mau oath, which swore its taker to secrecy and to civil disobedience. One case of an oath to kill was also reported.

Mr. Coutts said the vast majority of Kikuyu were disturbed and apprehensive over the developments and were looking to their leaders and the Government for protection.

Tribunals to which persons ordered into restricted residence may appeal will be set up and every case will be reviewed annually.

Other measures taken under a public security ordinance empowered authorities to impose curfews, close markets and shops and restrict population and vehicle movements.

Defense Minister Anthony Swann said he expected some persons now being held would be released in the light of later information.

Among the many grievances the Africans held against the Europeans in 1952, when the Mau Mau rebellion in the British colony turned to violence, none was cited more often than the lack of land for Africans.

At that time, 1,060,000 Kikuyu tribes people lived primarily in three native preserves totaling not much over 2,000 square miles. They looked ruefully at the 12,000 square miles the Europeans had settled for farming.

The Mau Mau movement is believed to have started in the early nineteen forties. Its early converts were made among the landless and among young men who had lived in Nairobi and had become exasperated with the contrast between European and African standards of life there.

Oaths of obedience to the movement were taken under an arch of two stout uprights of banana wood and some light brushwood. The instruments of magic included a sheep's eye impaled at one end of a banana stem.

The oaths included promises to obey leaders unquestioningly and to chase Europeans from Kenya. The Mau Mau methods included murder, beatings, pillaging and arson.

NEW AFRICA:

Roots of Terror

Mau Mau—the gruesome revolt of Kenya's Kikuyu tribe which took 13,423 black and 95 white lives*—rose up again last week to darken Kenya's future. Even as the colony prepared for self-government, and Kenya's leading African politicians were calling for the release of exiled Kikuyu leader Jomo Kenyatta, an official 321-page report on the origins and growth of Mau Mau made some shocking accusations.

Mau Mau, said the report prepared by senior civil servant Frank Corfield, could be blamed on:

1—Jomo Kenyatta, for preaching a "calculated hymn of hate and . . . perverted witchcraft."

2—The Colonial Government, for failing to evaluate properly the "mass of intelligence reports" predicting Mau Mau.

3—The British left, for openly embracing Kenya African nationalism without understanding its aims or methods.

The report raised a storm in both London and Nairobi, and on both sides of the political fence.

In London, Tory M.P.'s blasted "irresponsible Laborite do-gooders who have carried their woolly-minded Marxism into the Colonial Empire with disastrous results." One angry Tory even told NEWSWEEK that the report had been censored "to remove references to near-treason by some of these damn lefties."

In Nairobi, most whites saw the report as a reminder of the dangers of government indecision and a conclusive argument against Kenyatta's release. Most prominent black Africans, including leading nationalist Tom Mboya, attempted to downgrade the report. Kenyatta's release, Mboya proclaimed, would continue to be his No. 1 item of business.

▶With election results nearly complete, Patrice Lumumba emerged last week as the indisputably strongest single leader in the Belgian Congo. He won 35 seats in the new national assembly while his rival, Joseph Kasavubu, was capturing a mere twelve. For Congolese, it meant that Lumumba had to be included in the new government and would probably be its leader. For Belgians in the Congo, it meant nervous days of pondering Lumumba's latest pronouncement: "After independence June 30, good Belgians can stay. Bad Belgians must go."

NEW DRUG FIGHTS CANCER IN KENYA

U.S. and British Physicians Further the Use of Methotrexate in Africa

Special to The New York Times.

NAIROBI, Kenya, July 12—American and British research workers will be sent to Kenya in August for intensive work on a new anti-cancer drug—methotrexate.

The work will be financed by the African Research Foundation and the Sloan-Kettering Institute of New York. Early this year the institute sent a team to Kenya, led by Dr. R. Sullivan, for experimental work.

Dr. Michael Wood, a British plastic surgeon, said in Nairobi today that in three months of experiments with the American team many of the forty-one patients who had been considered past surgical treatment had been saved. He said the drug appeared to be effective in the treatment of cancer of the face, nasal sinuses and cancer of the cervix.

"Particularly in the cases of cervix, the drug has had a remarkable effect," Mr. Wood said. "Large, craggy growths have disappeared completely in about ten days."

Drug Used as Last Resort

So far, all trials of the drug have been on African patients who have not been helped by other treatment, such as radiotherapy. Cases of cancer of the liver have not responded to the drug.

The new treatment consists of introducing Methotrexate intra-arterially. This requires surgery to introduce a catheter into the artery to supply the drug to the area of the growth.

A technique has been developed by Dr. Wood and Dr. John Duff of Nairobi's King George VII Hospital for an operation to introduce the catheters. The drug is pumped from bottles into the artery at a controlled rate to give the area of growth a huge dose of the anti-cancer drug.

A different drug is introduced intramuscularly to buffer the anti-cancer drug as it enters the bloodstream. The second drug prevents damage to bone marrow and body tissues.

Methotrexate has a shrinking effect. In successful cases the treated growths were all said to have regressed.

"We are of course following up the cases which have been treated successfully because we wouldn't like to say yet that this is a cure," Dr. Wood said. "The drug obviously has great potentialities now that we know what type of drug has this effect and the chemists who are working on it may be able to get a more selective drug."

African patients are being taken from many parts of East Africa to two hospitals in Nairobi, where research work will continue in August.

Drug to be Used 2 Years

Scientists of the Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center here have made plans to use Methotrexate for two years in African.

The drug, a produce of Lederle Laboratories, was formerly known by the trade name Amethopterin. In Africa a rotating team of American physicians will try the compound for the continuous treatment of cancerous growths that are confined to small body areas.

The treatment, as it has been tried here, is regarded as an "exciting therapy" for localized cancers. Methotrexate has been used here for some time and has been widely tested in leukemia

Kenya Leader Injured In Crash

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP)—Tom Mboya, young nationalist leader in this British colony, was seriously injured Saturday night in an automobile accident while on a political barnstorming tour of southeast Kenya.

There was no indication of how long Mboya will be out of the political arena recovering from his injuries, which come at a critical time in Kenya's development toward more self-rule.

The accident happened at Voi 200 miles from Nairobi. Police declined to give details pending further investigation.

Belgujm Kept Congolese Under Yoke Too Long

(Editor's note: The following is an article based on the personal experiences of Mr. Amram Onyndo, a native of Kisumu in the eastern section of Kenya, Africa. Mr. Onyndo, a former teacher in his native Kenya, is currently in Louisville working to finance his studies at Tuskegee Institute).

by Amram Onyndo

Too much happiness always results into danger. This is the event that is now happening in Congo. The Congolese have been underyoked too much by the Belgians that when they were left free eleven days ago they have realized how it is good to be free.

They think freedom is everything. It is better to be free but to keep peace with any friends that would like to obey all your rules and regulations. For if it is your country your rules predominate, and anybody who does not want them should live as quiet as the rules might have not affected him.

Nationalism

New Nationalism came to Congo as the coming of the Holy Ghost, of course they have been waiting for Independence with all their hearts and now that they have got it they should show the world that they are able to rule themselves.

Avenge. if it was to revenge the Belgians for the cruel treatment they exercised on the Congelese, I think it is right to do it to them and their Government and not to the innocent people who should be left to stay, provided they abide with the country's rules.

Fear is the thing that is troubling the Congolese, for they think that if the whites stay in the country then they may be like the South Africa whites who are brutal to the African tribes, and therefore to get rid of them early may appear better than waiting until it is too late. "Strike the Iron while it is hot".

To add to the confusion and the difficulties is the work of the white council. They have attempted in any way they can to hinder the progress of the Negroes. This is the reason why there are not many professional and technologist in Congo at this time. Well this is just like giving a child a hoe and he does not know how to use it because you have not shown him what to do with it.

I would choose to describe the situation in Congo in two words: "Intense and Dynamic". It is intense in the Negroes desire for freedom and equality in the white mans' hatred, it is dynamic because the main concern in the troubles is human beings, who by merely being alive are active and thus add dynamism to the situation.

What the Congelese are showing the world, may be said to be hatred and the apartheid that is found in South Africa. And I would say that hatred hurts pride, retards development, crushes manhood, and robs society of the disadvantaged person's contribution to Society.

Futrhermore if one is hated because of poverty, one would work and improve his economic status. And if one is hated because of uncleanliness he would bathe and become acceptable. But if one is hated and stigmatized because of his race he is penalized for something that he cannot change.

There are two ways of improving our human nature. One is through formal and informal education, which was hidden away from the Congolese by the Belgians. And instead of educating the natives to the best standards they were instead kept undeveloped. The second is through religion which was used as the poison to the minds of the natives.

The complexities between the religions divided the families and confused the natives as to one is right. That is to say that even the Belgian was hurting himself and he misused the creative potential of the Negroes (the Natives) as he misdirected his own energy into keeping the Negroes from expressing himself, he put in double jeopardy any chance for international unity, political justice, and the realization of the authentic christian purpose.

KENNEDY MEETS MBOYA—After meeting at his Hyannisport, Mass., home with Tom Mboya (right), 29-year-old African nationalist leader of Kenya, Senator John F. Kennedy, Democratic presidential candidate, called for increased U.S. attention to African needs, especially in education.

Practical Aid to Africa

An opportunity for the kind of practical aid that the United States can offer emergent African (and other) nations is knocking at the door right now. It was emphasized recently by Tom Mboya, general secretary of the Kenya Federation of Labor and one of Africa's top leaders, when he was visiting the United States.

Mr. Mboya stated he was seeking some $80,000 or $90,000 from the African-American Students Foundation for the purpose of transporting 250 or 300 African students to this country this fall. The plan began last year when Mr. Mboya arranged for 81 students to come to this country for education, most of whom made their own arrangements for tuition and living expenses.

One of the most desperate needs in the newly formed Republic of Congo, after the current state of near anarchy is replaced with internal order, will be for men and women educated in the ways of democratic self-government. It is now too late to despair over the fact that after decades of Belgian control the Congo has less than a score of college-educated native African citizens.

But it is not too late to make available to as many Africans as are ready for it the kind of training that will best enable them to help bring their continent up out of poverty and ignorance. In few ways could Americans better advance the philosophy that the best charity is to prevent a man from having to accept charity.

WHITE SETTLERS BACK KENYA PARTY

Coalition Leader, Who Wins Support, Assails New Multi-Racial Group

Special to The New York Times.

NAIROBI, Kenya, Oct. 7—Delegates from all of Kenya's white settlers associations voted today, 38 to 4, to support candidates of Sir Ferdinand Cavendish-Bentinck's Kenya coalition in next year's general election.

The decision was made at a convention of the associations after Sir Ferdinand had made a bitter attack on Michael Blundell, leader of the multi-racial New Kenya Group. Sir Ferdinand accused him of assisting the British Government in what he called its attempts to keep Kenya's European settlers divided among themselves.

4nwzQF F FD DDR F WWFW

Mr. Blundell, who attended the meeting, told a hostile audience that the convention was a forum for all political views and that its support of one political party would be harmful after the election.

Britain Is Criticized

Sir Ferdinand resigned as Speaker of the Kenya Legislative Council and formed the coalition following the London constitutional conference this year in an attempt to improve the position of European farmers, who he said had been betrayed by Britain.

He said today that Britain was afraid of criticism of her colonial policy from the United States, the European powers and her dominions.

The convention, attended by most European members of the Legislative Council, also accused Britain of failing to provide an adequate land-price stabilization plan to cover the period before and after independence.

Legislator Asks Fund

Nzoia R. Maxwell, a European-elected member of the Legislative Council, declared: "We want a stabilization fund. I have lived here too long under British rule to have my way of life dominated by an African Government.

"We want this stabilization fund to give those of us who don't wish to remain an opportunity to get our peacefully."

Other speakers said that if Britain set up an adequate fund of this nature it would give farmers an opportunity to sell their land at a reasonable price for subdivision among Africans and would also encourage new investment.

Associated Press

KENYA DEADLOCK CONTINUES: Ronald Ngala, left, and A. Oginga Odinga, African members of Kenya Legislative Council, telling London reporters Monday why they boycotted start of Kenya constitutional conference. An effort at comproise stalled yesterday.

LONDON DEADLOCK ON KENYA STANDS

White Groups Reject Plan for Role of African Adviser at Charter Conference

By WALTER H. WAGGONER

Special to The New York Times.

LONDON, Jan. 19—Deadlock in the Kenya constitutional conference here continued today.

A compromise that had been accepted by Colonial Secretary Iain Macleod and the fourteen African elected members of the Kenya Legislative Council was rejected by Michael Blundell, leader of the multiracial New Kenya Group and Group Capt. Llewellyn R. Briggs, head of the Right-Wing United party.

The Africans, who are led by Tom Mboya and Ronald Ngala, boycotted the opening meeting yesterday morning when they were told their second special adviser, Peter Mbiyu Koinange, was unacceptable to the British Government and could not attend the conference. Their other adviser is Thurgood Marshall of New York, chief counsel of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Mr. Macleod has been in almost continuous discussions with the three groups, seeking a formula by which Mr. Koinange could be a special adviser without attending the general meetings.

A solution seemed to have been found when Mr. Ngala and his associates agreed that special advisers would remain in separate committee rooms in Lancaster House, used for consultation by the delegations, but would not be present at the conference proper.

The proposal was rejected by the Blundell and Briggs groups during talks with the Colonial Secretary this morning. They said the compromise implied recognition of Mr. Koinange, who was described by Mr. Macleod yesterday as one of the two men outside Kenya responsible for the Mau Mau uprising in 1952.

Another suggestion was discussed by Mr. Macleod and the Ngala group late this afternoon and evening. It proposed that only full members of the conference be allowed in Lancaster House and that arrangements be made outside the building for advisers.

The African elected members are understood to be considering their reply to this formula.

The conference schedule has broken down as a result of the dispute. Mr. Ngala insisted tonight, however, that the African members "are no longer boycotting the conference."

Later, a Colonial Office spokesman said that discussions between Mr. Macleod and the separate groups and their leaders had gone on throughout the day.

Kenya Self-Government Asked by Mboya for '60

Reuters

LONDON, Jan. 16—African Nationalist leader Tom Mboya flew into London today and staked a claim to self-government in Kenya this year.

Mboya, 29, is one of 50 Kenya delegates to a 3-week conference opening here Monday on the British East African colony's future constitution.

On arrival at London airport, Mboya declared:

"Kenya is ready for self-government now. We put forward a demand for responsible government in Kenya in 1960. We want a legislative council (legislature) with representatives elected on the basis of one man, one vote."

On the same plane was a Kenya leader of the opposite end of the political pole—British Group Capt. L. R. Briggs, leader of the all-white United Party.

Briggs told reporters at the airport that the idea of one man, one vote could lead to "African dictatorship."

Democracy on the British parliamentary pattern, he declared, has failed "in other newly-independent territories in Africa—we want to find an alternative policy which will allow self-determination with safeguards for minorities."

The delegates, all members of the colonial legislature, agree that Kenya should get a new constitution, but are split on the amount of representation to be given for the colony's 6,000,000 Africans, 170,000 Asians and 66,000 whites.

At present, the legislative council is composed of 91 members—only 36 of them directly elected. Of the 36, 14 are whites, 14 Africans, six Asians and two Arabs.

Most of the remainder of the legislators are selected by Kenya's British governor and are chiefly white.

In the middle political group is the new Kenya Party, which wants the colony to develop on a non-racial basis although it concedes Africans eventually will predominate in the government.

LIMITS ON VOTING URGED FOR KENYA

White Settler Says Africans Need Education Before Receiving Franchise

By WALTER H. WAGGONER

Special to The New York Times.

LONDON, Jan. 29—A white member of the multiracial New Kenya Group cautioned today against turning the Government of Kenya over to "an uneducated electorate."

The Kenya constitutional conference ended its second week with calls for moderation, harmony and understanding.

Nevertheless, a speech by George Usher, an Oxford University graduate who settled in the British colony forty years ago, indicated that, on the issue of voting rights, a wide gap remained between the African position and that of even middle-of-the-road Kenyans of European origin.

Mr. Usher cited the words of a former Colonial Secretary, the late L. S. Amery, who said democracy required not only able and experienced legislators and executives but also knowledgeable people with "an inbred sense of civic responsibility."

Training of Africans Urged

Mr. Usher urged that Kenya's African leaders be given the "opportunity for training and experience in the art of government" and that the voters be educated before the franchise is widened.

The African nationalists, however, show no willingness to wait. They are demanding universal adult suffrage and independence now.

James Maxwell, a member of the all-white United party, said disaster would follow if universal suffrage was instituted in Kenya.

"Kenya is not an African country in the sense that it belongs to those with a black skin," he declared.

Without the Asian and European, he continued, there would have been no such thing as African education and development.

"For a very long time to come," he concluded, "the economy and therefore the progress of the African peoples must rest on the minority groups."

